In my opinion, we are very wrong to focus on the flags, the eloquent speakers, the refined writers
They often talk just to hear themselves talk.
...In science, and I am a great admirer of the In science, and in logic too, the ideal is to say no to a
-in a literary style, but the best and most brief way possible, which is what we want to demonstrate.

- The shortest demonstration is often the - better; the thinker doesn't get there right away.
I hold you dear. I will express sincere conviction, the good faith, the selflessness with which I defend my ideas; the haste with which I was to finish and deliver to the printer, before the upcoming elections, these notes thrown about haphazardly, thinking — illusion, perhaps — to be — to do a service for a few,

Jo ne mo suis donc pas donner l'avoir remettre on the construction site and to correct many passages which would deserve the etro.

I even neglected two chapters due to lack of time.
One on strikes, the other on political parties,
which were supposed to be part of this book.

I ask for your indulgence regarding the form.

In Drumont.

I wanted to dedicate this book to a great orator, who has dedicated himself to "the emancipation of the human mind", of the “justice of truth”, all the talent and everything. the energy that one can mettro to “summer the idea with both hands (1)”.
I could have dedicated it to one of our most learned men.
Sociologists, Mr. Yves Guyot. For years, he leads the campaign against socialism (2).
But having conceived it in a fighting spirit
And to perform an act of patriotism, I like to... men will be used to beat these insults with all their might-Frenchmen who have retained the ideal of freedom and of brotherhood; these traitors who, through their polianti-French sentiment, to the point of wanting to raise against the fatherland, this daughter of France, Algeria; pushing here towards civil war, by inciting hatred in a number of French and by hindering all the forces of superstition stirred up the desire for light and generosity which should be the halo of the perc modern.

It is because, aided by your servants, you Sow insults in my hands, Drumont; because

(1) As the days go by. Clemenceau, (3) Socialist Tyranny. M. Delagrave, publisher.

XA DRUMONT `

that you tried your hand at socialism, you flirted with his bosses, supported candidates who cheered the Commune and the revolution social, armed revolt, as at the fort Chabrol, to whom I dedicate this first page.

JULES GUÉRIN.

To the disillusioned Republicans... na

And screw the army commander, the surgeon, and the man H politics. The right eye, the decisive spirit,
- otherwise they run the risk of losing the battle,
-to intervene unnecessarily, to make bad decisions
. politics. — There are turning movements,
- complications in the battle that need to be seen and even planning ahead, without which we are bad at gene-
A clumsy surgeon, a pathetic politician.
If we take a look at the situation In current politics we can see movements signs that are emerging, hearing clamor who rise up: All men cry out for justice; Y: But their ideas about it are far from identical.

A people born in the light, who emanate, ————

He who learns is like a child who grows up, he needs guides, tutors; our politicians of The Republic neglects this point of view too much.

Under the pretext of universal suffrage and the people

— As sovereigns, they defer to public opinion.

However, public opinion is often shaped by... newspapers, full of contradictions. — .
In the administration of "public affairs" > p It is not enough to respect the national will,
We still need to know how to give him advice, the - guide. Both are things extremely delicate, because in the midst of all these contradictory opinions, tossed about, agitated by The waves, how to recognize the truth.

Similarly, with a patient suffering from a | anthrax, which tends to invade neighboring organs and running the risk of overcoming it, surgery is necessary sari against this particular affection; but the Pain can also be a symptom of an illness general information that needs to be discovered.
The current political situation is for the past few years, it has been absolutely similar to that of this sick man who has committed some excesses, who was prodigal, but also that old sor-The women teased incessantly, "Maybe it's the
The reason for this anthrax, perhaps it is also suffering from a general illness.
There was Boulange, the Dreyfus affair, the national-nationalism and meanwhile a gaping wound, socialism. Great surgeons, Messrs. Cons-tans, Brisson, Waldeck-Rousseau have extirpated the
the first three while they thought it useful to allow the wound to suppurate.
Well, let's question our patient. It's here.
a social organization comprising millions of in-individuals who, as in La Fontaine's fable, They pull in all directions. There is certainly a sense of unease.
In general, but the customs understand it in a certain way, the others of another kind. How does the idea of justice Isn't it the same for everyone? This oddity already needs a cure, I don't refuse, he jump to the point, we need more cohesion and... coordination in the thinking brain of this organnism.

If you listen to the taxpayers, they will will say they are overtaxed; the com-merchants, whose businesses are no longer thriving; those who hold liberal professions, that they are countless and that they can no longer live, the employees, that they are not paid enough; Employers, let them be taken by the throat.
pay too much. They all agree that he a swarm of civil servants, veritable parasites that tease them and relentlessly drink their blood. E d
The damage is extensive, the situation is embarrassing-health; hence the bakery, the Dreyfus affair, the national-nationalism. But we would be wrong, armed with our scalpel, focusing only on the lesion external, ct following the old empirical method to let the socialist wound fester. We must over-Everything must be addressed at the root cause. The illness may be In general, any type of diabetes on the pathogenesis which scientists can discuss;
However, it is necessary to order a regimen.

The continuous suppuration, the weakening socialismblit, infects the sick person, there is no doubt, all Commerce, the whole of industry complains about it; com-Let us begin by employing new anti-replies.
The patient will feel much better, -

Taxes are certainly reasonable; we work without

(XIV TO THE DISAWARE REPUBLICANS)
Relaxing to diminish them; and the gallows for the fools who, under one pretext or another, increase them They lie more and more each day.
Social parasites are countless; hey,
Insecticide powder, merciless, we slash,
_ Let's crush them, our man will finally be able to... |
and sleep.
A little less alcohol will make a big difference.
better. Your patient must have cirrhosis and if Tonn, beware, delirium tremens will lead him At Sainte-Anne. "The Academy of Medicine does not she noted, in a noteworthy report from Dr. Lancereaux, five years ago, than in seven years, that is to say from 1885 to 1892, consumption absinthe and similar drinks. It raised, for Paris alone, by fifty-seven

one thousand hectolitres to one hundred and twenty-nine thousand?
And since then, the consumption of these ye Augmento constantly. y
Read the article by the deist on this subject.
Bonapartist, Paul de Cassagnac, commenting (February 16, 1901) the excellent amendment of the atheist Revolutionary communist Vaillant thus conceived:
"The government will prohibit, by decree, the manufacturecation, circulation and sale of all essence recognized as dangerous and declared as such by the aca-"Demic of medicine." (One defends this idea at the name of the Fatherland, the other for the idea he finds - superior to humanity, they are therefore not so Far from it, to hear, they wanted it.

TO THE REPUBLICANS of the 15th

E in the interest of both united, of the Fatherland and of humanity), -

Then let us order the exercise, the open air; co composed of nitrogen and oxygen from the attics, of small streets of large cities is vició; & la in the countryside, he will find healthy food and abundant.

There you go, I believe in a good doctor in the current state of our knowledge.

However, I have seen and heard everywhere...
People are worried about the patient's condition, some believing him lost, they ordered his coffin;

friends were abandoning him; relatives who had brought into the world, who perhaps had pampered him too much giving him treats that are detrimental to his health encouraged our man to resignation; all only further excited the patient who he was getting angry, he was lamenting,

This, as described by a doctor, is the political situation.

Tick present.

...Cease, then, my friends, your agitations. This This being is still full of life; how many others Countries that don't complain are in a worse state. health. Be confident, but know how to recognize

If you make mistakes, change your approach.

Certainly, it is regrettable, even unpleasant,
When you wanted to pamper someone, you got them.
loved dearly, to hear someone say one day that We were clumsy and the work done is not
| not THE tits 8

XVI TO THE DISWISED REPUBLICANS

'He is | however, of a fine character, of a fine
The spirit of knowing how to recognize one's mistakes.
What do you care about this nationalism! for-Why would you be so relentless, scalpel in hand, against Yes, if we know that it is only a symptom.
On the contrary, let us rejoice, for he has guided us.
...in our research... — Let's note that he reacted against the socialist plagiarism in Paris and in many other places places; that in Roubaix, socialism is in deronte (1). 2
— This is a case of accepting an epithet that does not want nothing to say; because except for the internationalists (and even then) we are all nationalists; all children
The people of France love their homeland, which is the most beautiful.
Ja more free, the most pet and Ja dam gén-reuse of the world.
We want to defend it with a young army.
vigorous, loved, in the case where one | would attack her.

(1) In the same vein, one can cite creation, to . Paris, d'uno secondo boursn du travail, ruc des Vertus, ayant In principle: "Lo Capital-labor and the Capilal-Argeunt, are the two factors essential to social life, One completes Fautro; the two make each other live, The duty of ccs

The goal for two collaborators is therefore to find an amicable solution, in good faith.

faith, and in all circumstances, the point of meeting of the concessions. reciprocal obligations that they owe to each other.” (D. LA P. L. are the two initials of an energetic man, Paul - Leno r, the secretary general, Dorette Bourso,

The following passage from a speech he gave last - Mont indicates the goal pursued, "Free in your actions, conscious" of your rights and also of your duties, we have discovered the game Lyranníiquo el we are freed from the constraints that were Weighing on your conscience, the frameworks of the political unions in Lk s which most of you had s'és: mbrigader, attracted by the enticing promises.

TO THE REPUBLICANS, SSABUSÉS, 3 DATES

We want it to be rich, flourishing, and for that If you need to listen to the grievances of commerce, — dod industry, promote agriculture, facilitate the relationships. - dares —.. So the [^ redoviehidea. — in the
The world, illuminating others like a torch nations, on the path of truth.
This book, all certainly can, must
: participate. | The Republic, as its name indicates, is not to no one, and some men would not know how to —
To maintain by force and oppression. Let us be Let us be noble and generous, great ones. We must not... to see everywhere, as Clemenceau said, quoting Michelet, that "cowards came to stab her"
"In the back," you have to see men who love Ja France ct In “public thing”, which is also at them and since they know perfectly well that at The regime of one man is now over.
Let us proclaim amnesty, let us extend our hands and Let us all work together in solidarity for the education of E

Our race contributes to the greatness of the Fatherland.
| SE 8 greyhound 102.

p, S. —: I will tell the Republicans there today—— Today, the danger does not lie in "Nationalism". The `

The Republic is not playing games, the crisis is painful.

has passed. Read the revolutionary newspapers carefully.
. lutionaries, the declarations. that in a congress `
. socialist, under the republican banner. (Small Republic. to D, "A /, elc , March Ma of men

sen ` TO THE PUBLICANS — |

P.S. certainly insane, put on a palatable diet to speak for power, But very intelligent and very eloquent people dared = to bring to an essentially bourgeois country

...and small landlord and fear that this beautiful _ country is not swayed by fatal eloquence,

I had rather, do not return for fear of excesses, that
"I've already seen it happen, with the worst possible reactions."

I will tell the sons, new from the old parties monarchical ar: despite the good gods that your

Your fathers and mothers have made you invoke during - Given your young age, it's likely you have some.
shaken off the superstitious yoke and you have a

8. A more modern conception of society.

You are no doubt aware that there is a Roger Bacon, Descartes himself, a Claude Bernard who threw - in the sciences, the foundations of the experimental method-`rimental. Renounce empiricism and if you = want current society not to succumb to violence. Listen to these revolutionary voices that

- threaten you; without ulterior motive and without res-= Triction, enlist under the noble flag of the Republic.

Your furious attacks against [OM social] that the Revolution brought forth are absurd and irre- -

. bend; you force them to agree, in a com- -

| — . a defense against a return to the past, of — — — men of good sense and those who dream of follies to _ come and it's you | who pays for the broken pots,

March ID, |

PREFACE

In choosing the title of this book, I don't believe commit the heresy committed by Mr. Ferdinand Bru.melière, proclaiming the "Bankruptcy of Science." Evi-

Indeed, science has not failed anyone, and can we
To argue that men have failed him?

Socialism is no longer the same, love solidarity with others is as old as the world;
These feelings exist even in some animals.
- Socialism failed from the day men...
wanted to exploit it for their own personal gain. - |
Who better than Jesus Christ said: Love one another?
. each other. But the priests came, priests |
...ancient and modern, promising paradises, you-~ consciously or unconsciously exploiting the , noblest sentiments, the most natural desires in distorting them. Nowadays, these beautiful sentiments -

...have been used by ambitious rhetoricians to their advantage, like the priests of old and today (OD

(1) Then came the priests of another religion and two

- the teaching was this one.
You are suffering and are —» from life. You must x take to Ja society and the way it is organized. But "We will destroy this organization, we will found a..."

An anthropological society that will bring happiness to all. There will no longer be B

NX -. l _ PREFACE

This exploitation of others was all the easier to our socialists that the sciences which deal with the "human mind," philosophical and biological,
had made little progress since antiquity, since Aristotle. We will see later what no one will deny that sociology is the daughter of biology. If the - Biology didn't exist, how could science...

Could she have existed? | I

The knowledge and experience of the ——— same s s ac-accumulating in encyclopedias, could not guide a constantly renewed humanity, constantly having an education, a new experience to be had.
This is how the brain of a man who has reached the top knowledge is already in decline at the end of life and tends to disappear traitor, replaced by that of a presumptuous young man; his experience is so little, that some

"Neither rich nor poor; social inequalities will disappear,"
"E each will have the same level of well-being," |

And as i) the meadow must always be alive from the altar, los pontiffs of the new religion have in turn quetó, not for the souls in purgatory, which no longer exist, -but for They themselves asked for pens: of deputies and of chofs | departure |

Now you understand why we feel bad "rg when we come to say:
|. "Don't bother with all this nonsense, don't count | than about yourselves. You are being deceived when you are told that a general upheaval will bring happiness to all and the first biêlre. There is no secret to establishing a society in which all men will live on the same footing and receivevronl equal pay, whatever the type of work that they accomplish,

He who is only capable of turning the crank of a machine, will never receive the same salary as the man who has invented cello machine or who possesses the art, without surrendering to any manual labor, from which he was provided useful work, intended for his labor | form in bánéflecs.

e Il. Hapus, Le Matin, September 15, 1001. »

They might deny it; he will have burned his wings in many ways circumstances and will be cured of many defects; but It is in vain that he will give advice to his son.
This one, in his quest for experience, will do crazy things. (recdi-) both those of his ancestors.
Ilen is and will remain so of social life, as long as the companies will not have gone into detail and will not be aware of the biological and sociological laws that govern them; they will sail without a pilot and without Houssole amidst the chaos, the transformations, etc.

revolutions, at the mercy of agitators and pro– Creators of paradise.
– Science, for its part, is in possession of a “vüdihade” whose disciples gave the laws; she has temples where they are taught, no one is proclaimed Master, no one teaches or aspires to teach, if he does not
. acquired sufficient knowledge. |
But in this immense labyrinth that is the social media landscape,
There is no order or method, only the loudest one wins.
is the most listened to; no need for competition, for diploma, no need to have done an internship in a any pharmacy, for having handled, broken boxes before achieving a satisfactory result, of having overworked himself for long hours searching attractive theorems. You are young. without experience– Rence, pretentious, you have the gift of the gab of a Gascon.
Or, you Marseillais, you shout, you climb onto the ene you play the clown properly and The aerobat, you exclaim: Long live the Commune! Long live the Social! And these fateful words replace all of you.
science; yesterday hairdresser, shoemaker, groom, tomorrow representative of the people, a title which means that you you need to know history, geography, law, the

nm PREFACE

inedible, letters, sciences, arts; to be in a word deg

Encyclopedic in nature.
What social progress can be achieved with a

such a method, since it suffices to be: a clog-making citizen or shoemaker, singing the Internationale or the Carma–

to get elected as a member of parliament.
Bankruptcy, obviously, is the inevitable outcome of such a system– |
theme. "ELE

Perhaps he acquired, for example, a book that highlights this phrase from Proudhon: "I seeks the laws of Justice, goodness, and truth,” which | aspires to justice, dreams of a better future, otherwise of an ideal society, where everyone would be happy, does not claim to be a socialist, since he | is absolutely included in its definition.

The reason is simple: although socialism, Theoretically speaking, it consists of loving one's next, an aspiration towards justice, the dream of a
a better future, the plan for an ideal society; well that the great socialist philosophers sought _and perhaps are sincerely seeking the means to achieve this goal, it is nonetheless true that they have - went astray in many respects, that they sinned through ignorance and begging the question, and that the app-
The application of their theories cannot lead to a realizationpractical information.

We could have, one might say, been edifying - a society
ideally, on a scientific basis, keep Tënt for him, thesis of a socialist and to claim that she was the only one,
.] True? No! By acting this way, we would have allowed Confusion. Socialism, as we shall say,

. has become the emblem of a party that is increasingly tending towards no longer confining oneself to a formula: "Collectivism where communism" eliminates the bourgeoisie, the boss, capital, private property, all things modified-reliable, it is true, but to which we find a function having a greater or lesser utility ` which |.
preaches class struggle, internationalism, what we Let's blame them. We could have then put ourselves in the same clan, we confuse ourselves with the previous ones, and It has been a great nuisance for us to be rejected without reading us, by those who are anti-socialist without reasons, preconceived ideas; or else we could have to be claimed by others, who would have found ours.
sound ideas, the socialist idea and making it benefit as well as those we are fighting. 2

For all these reasons, noting that the sociallism failed in its conclusions among the theorists citizens and politicians, we prefer to throw this epithet overboard and declare ourselves anti-social-list. There is no confusion about this.
possible.

knock.
Your DH d D D - "ai
7 r

Socialist, does socialist work. - P

The goal of the society is the well-being of its members.

Irene),

THE FAMILY OF SOCIALISM

pm

The company is obligated to make life convenient for DE df | S ted

The goal of the B society is communal happiness.

(Deletion of human rights, art. 1).

The goal of the revolution is to destroy the inevitability here established common happiness.

| Conspírai ion babuuviste, buses of the Republic

ten ons, Art, 195.
The general principle to which all the rules of the practices should conform, is none other than the happiness of humankind and all sentient beings,

J.-S. Mut

Society must be organized in such a way that...
(This is not often the case today, unfortunately.) that the happiness of some does not originate in the ruin of others, the ultimate goal that each individual finds his good in that of the community, the good of the community resulting from freezing. Kegel vice versa, of the individual-vidu, ` |

(L. Bûcxen. l'orce et matilei e).

The greatest happiness "m"T large number by science, justice, goodness, perimetry

In terms of morality, one could not find anything more expansive and more humane ethical motive. R^ Benoit Mao”, 3Saelalüsane integral).

| The pure ideal would be that the entirety of = ttres became a conscious, united, happy society.

Alfred Fovintrs. Critique of systems of contemporary morality, 8, eap, Kei

[to establish a social environment that ensures for each |

d: S | SML E Toc se – om e "D Ge – F | t] | a E individual touis ia suu turese cu INEST AGGE Pub s epuqae. d ii shouts as ie cH KRIER

Gel EE m c. Amos A – | E
dE Le réit BN EG LEET Af, CN E e

Socialisie, with donations Gi cgo itin NEE, ment vast, íróp vast De! yu Sn TEIAS ent.
to give birth to the cqinions of Lime: IIl gr Thlot tt of and state of Am: Also Kinnen reset of the Tribunal guj iater eguit events TER

p

to say: e But dree OVE OMAR EDGE Fuse lisias”.

E

– ds M" d "e £ey Xs » EWEN DE
This word has too much in Gastirits, can Xeon have " + to^ FB eng , Se" e weg DS e – – political party. el $1 dc 34 ed > Read a AIX SETS
e * * ` : | i | – Mh explain it precisely, save SE ui
gp ex | » –

desires to abuse o» —: serene eR Cap Sí.
At the point of Ye pe tque dl green 15s EE

The word is therefore bad: ve? in ALL 3 AVICLS considered in CE SDS. WE OF oni that to proclaim his faith. — s

So. to: ut man d

ER piis en NAE
socialist; every person has sen idoal s xiu prefers to another: also Count Mun.
Abbot Lemire, Jaurésct Gues ie the Pope 3 NIU or the German emperor. (This is a separate, unrelated comment)
claim socialist E

But it has been of this meaning too <

*-

which everyone can saffühicr. H en cst une another which by custom and practice tends to be saidmiter from phis to n ci véi csi one idea. Gët

. fear the honest understanding of men and of < things, it is better to have a weapon whose ecrtaizs se

6 THE SOCIALISM FAMILY

related to gloriolo among their peers, does not have such a general meaning and applies more specifically to certain people.

That's how it is in France, and here I'm not concerned.
than in France, the different parties have . given adjectives which may perhaps be modified-
will be noticeably different, but if they have been well Those chosen will have to remain more or less what they were.
Among these different parties, there is one that is more that others claimed the title of socialist;
he formed a group at the Chamber with a a well-defined program, from which all other social systems; he organized his congresses,

his propaganda machine, summer, summer; in short,
it is a very well-defined, if not well-defined, party;
and although other men, other parties so They call for socialism, A is better for to avoid confusion, let them renounce it, and let this the title is increasingly applied to the group which, at

The House has recently accepted the o collectivist-communist program and to all those who, directly or indirectly, voters and elected officials have supported it.
This delimitation is absolutely necessary to the demonstration we want to make. E

Moreover, we are not alone in our opinion, and all those who have dealt specifically with this questions, they think that way.
— Socialism is the state replacing freedom individual and Her enant the most dreadful of tyrants.
| (rone. Roux. — September 12, 184 8.)

ei

Yves Guyot produced a volume entitled "La tysocialist regime" or he demonstrates that our sociallists are moving towards social regression.

Mr. Paul Leroy-Beaulieu said:

Today the situation is quite different. Thanks to From large industry, socialism became more precise, more methodical and more haughty; he imagines himself Being a scientific system, it requires its application-Von intégrale and he found a new formula: the collectivism... current socialism is collectivisme; that is to say, "the appropriation by the State and the implementation by him of all means of production tion. » ,.. State socialism, socialism of the chair, Christian socialism, all these varieties unconscious or by-pocritical of pure socialism and simply, all these accomplices or precursors of the colLectivism must be fought relentlessly.
by all those who value civilization, that is to say-to say, not only to a valuable set of goods material, but to intellectual and moral freedom.

There is no room for compromise with socialism, there is no than to repel it. By Kai (Where does socialism lead? Preface.)
The great philosopher Alfred Fouillée said: "From
On the one hand, we stick to a metaphysics.
abstract that establishes either society or the individual; on both sides, we end up misunderstanding
the laws of social science, which are an application natural laws of life. Some are for the revolutions, the others for pure conservation and simple of all that exists, while the true principle is: evolution and progress. BM
In a thousand ways, socialists misunderstand

" | THE EAILLITY OF SOCIALISUE `

this principle. MT Aug o they attribute to fa human will and social organization.

responsibility for all our evils, past and present;

By doing so, they attribute to the will of man and the social system the power to produce

"All the good things one could dream of for the future..."
"Hence an important consequence, what is a?"

| first condemnation of socialist utopias, »

Spencer is no less distant than Stuart Mill.
of a narrow economic orthodoxy and heresies

| socialists, >»

(Alfred Fouiluer, Social Property)
(And democracy, Wachette.)

Finally, I recommend to the reader, if he wants to have a good time, to laugh a little at the expense collectivist socialists, communists, revolutionaries

tionnaires, the little book of the German patriot,

Eugene Richter — Where does socialism lead, journal

from a worker (Paris, H. le Sondes bookstore:

17th, Boulevard St-Germain) — to understand that in Germany the danger of socialism perhaps bigger than ours; than, over there and in all countries, cc litre has taken on a meaning-

a very particular cation.
However, we must not assume that the
The French are quick to get carried away, that's what they are.

|. country of Bordeaux and Champagne, which excites,
It irritates and goes to one's head, the primary cause, can to be, of the "French passion"; that we

let's sacrifice odee to fashion and that's enough here

WHAT IS SOCIALISM? —

Unfortunately, due to an easterly wind or an accident to sweep everything away in a night of silence.

EEE ne FÉ 3 mg
: 2 A

ti

It is important not to Got A Indre Socia-Sociology with sociology. Sociology implies not a science, or even a method,

Sociology, on the contrary, is the science that aims to study biological and psycho- laws logics that govern societies.

Its purpose is the study of phenomena of all kinds.
nature which concerns the individual organism and the social superorganism.

| (Guillaume de Greer, Production to Sociology.)

Sociology is the study of the laws of society.
in social phenomena themselves.
| A. Core.

Sociology is the actual study of societies.
their functioning and their mentality.

(By ANTE, Précis de hat dé to

It might be possible for thinkers: who would take into account the laws and phenomena which govern individuals and societies, that is to say—to say of the sociological method, to indicate the goal towards which aspirations might tend | human, without thereby giving away their system ideally, as the solution to the social problem;
these men would be sociologists and not $ socialists.

wë "Gu BANKRUPTCY pu SOCIALISM

Sociology being a science, it observes and studies.

x discusses the fails, drawing conclusions, and
: consequences – whatever they may be – that have not
...that one goal, the Truth, consequences. which may.

KILLING means going against desires.

The duty of socialism, in order to be scientific,

It would therefore be a matter of conforming to these truths.

"to establish a social militia" that is not m in

In contradiction with them.

Sociology, admittedly quite young, : 80 däre e

Loppera. We hope so for the happiness of El La.
` good understanding between men and companies, |

| CHAPTER D |

E La a Biologio o ost le corollary »indispen- - |
K sand to the Sociology

What is Man?

`
"`
m H
H
` [
H
D
` ,
d D
. `
H -
']
H
, D
1 D ` z
' 2
e H
D
D
`
DP
'
a `
to D ME

^

HAS

e

biology. is the indispensable corollary E to sociology - |
Is this Phomme?

| NE: let's come; to say: | A cb is that `

Se selen nee, which aims to study biological laws 7 and psychological. They govern men in company. GLO.

(The first question that arises is therefore: Ch

E What is man, from a physical point of view, |

Physiological and psychological? That's the question.

preliminary and necessary to properly resolve the social problem; because if we want to discuss laws that can or will govern men _in society, it is quite obvious that we need ` start by knowing who they are physically, | Physiologically and psychologically. He is.
There's no need to insist on making it clear that the social theories that will suit a being —

| considered a demigod, a reasonable being but, like Dien, will not be able to resemble -

those that will have to govern an animal more or less intelligent product of evolution and selection W beings. MN KEE ENP

IA ` THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM

= lis 'it is therefore a question of knowing which conception we

we have of man, or rather what biology teaches us about this. It is forgetfulness or ignorance rance of this corollary which means that all these cons-Builders of social housing, work nearby. on I'm quicksand, or rather, foundations.
The necessary things are missing, we will see that clearly.

During this study, this will become immediately apparent.

We will only have to mention it in passing.
How many of these theoretical socialists who attend public meetings, congresses socialists write newspaper articles, brochures, etc., in short, direct or try to direct public opinion, thinking they are in the truth; how many are there who have asked themselves this question question conscientiously. This sentence from Guesde, whom I chose at random, and whom we Let us quote a little further on, ut to make comto take advantage of their ignorance on this subject. Also, already,
We sense the failure of their theories.
Where do we come from? Indeed, the first Theories of socialism? From a more or less less distant where man was completely unaware of himself.
Throughout Christendom, the great predecessor of our current socialists, including the most radical ones memes are not afraid to claim ownership, is without _couteste Jesus. |
With Proudhon, Jesus “appears to us, in the compact section of his book, like an innovator socialist, entirely enamored not of ideals, but of the island of justice which he blends with that of charity, enemy of the priests, Pharisees, and scribes, carrying in his brain an entire plan for purification social”. (Jesus, page 3. Letter from LEpraix.

Qt

Since then, everyone who has approached this subject have more or less copied. Some, whom we believe the most distant, and who pride themselves on feelings
The most anti-religious are perhaps the most get closer. Now, we don't think that Jesus was a great anatomist, a great physiologist: that he had known about universal gravitation. the Earth's position in the vastness of space and its rank among the other planets. We assume that it had read neither Lamarck nor Darwin. And we can to say that, like him, the great socialists Modern thinkers ignored Lamarck and Darwin. The selectionAion and evolution, the diversity of instincts and temperaments as well as intellectual capacity brain tutelage.

(What's so surprising since Guesde dares to repeat from nowadays, immeasurably ignorant: (Free (Word, October 23, 1900) You will never make me to believe that not all men are the same blables and that the race has a Pope rebuke which. conch.

However, we do not claim to to say that it cannot exist among certain philosophers, ignorant of anatomy and physiology, beautiful and good sociological ideas. But as in the past... old apothecaries applied a remedy without to be well acquainted with its nature and properties, to diseases they only knew from their: symptoms, ignoring the cause, and could to relieve and heal, however, that of ignorant and empirical people and their knowledge not yet being a science; likewise some philosophers were able to make beautiful and good social theories, without being bioLogisticians, nor students of social science. Conversely, it is certain that nowadays, scholars are unaware of the first word of sociology, perhaps due to a lack of aptitude, perhaps out of disgust for the charlatans who have chosen these questions as a pedestal. In my opinion, it's a great bad, because it allows a number of people posing as masters, scholars, and to found a science alongside it: whereas, on the contrary, sociology should be a cold, cold science and peacefully built upon biology. In this regard, let us quote the following passage: Oé (public, February 25, 1991).

"Manual workers who have the very legitimatetime desire to improve their condition, do not know not generally how to go about it, because they have no leisure to study or reflect; if they follow bad shepherds, that's what good ones do They fail to do so out of selfishness or ignorance.

“The masses,” said Mr. Skarzinski, “do not get along well to discern the means that could improve their fate. It is up to the elite to discover them.

for her; this is part of her mission in this world. (Social progress at the end of the 12th century, Félix Alcan, publisher), |

Unfortunately, instruction and education social elite generally leave a lot to be desired. Scholars and learned men have a tendency almost irresistible to specialize, to confine oneself- to be born in a small area where the trees prevent to see the force, EE EE

Such a scholar incessantly — on his tests- | Veltes is unaware of what is happening in the workshops, and knows almost nothing about the lives of workers and bosses. If he gives his opinion on a so-called issue — he risks getting lost and leading others astray following him into all the thickets of error.

The educated are no less confined than the scholars in a small, chosen corner; they cn- ferment in their ivory tower, and when they are cautious, they were eager to get out of there to- to teach others what they did not teach me.

When it comes to social problems, such as- complicated and so complex, the will and the good intentions are not enough, we must add to them what- What's more: competence, experience and knowledge.

Where to find this necessary equipment? In the in- Octavo of economists? But reading the ou- Excessively large rages require leisure and sharing. at times a fearlessness that most lack our contemporaries. From most books devoted to political economy or social economy ciale, we unfortunately say it's sometimes unfair-what Voltaire said about sacred poems Lefranc de Pompignan: "They are sacred, because "Nobody touches it."

As we can see, the field is open to lawyers and journalists who, even less than Our scholars are knowledgeable about social issues.
by competence, experience, and knowledge. But entire-advertising executives, lured by the promise of a seat of MPs, like priests promising paradise, They flatter, they promise everything that passions popular desires.
= It's no longer the principle of the dd ` u Love-you one another” which serves to give birth to their
"These theories" are bias, jealousy, hatred, All human passions. All desires.
unfulfilled whether they feel or hear cla-sea in public meetings, which they bring into being if necessary, — (the class struggle) — which: serve to their construction: social.

What is a role-playing man?

H ^ T
aie e dr za ee to minm * pe atr- Mà L

n" nva not very long that. we can | To discuss this topic in a scientific manner. Mal-despite the famous ancient precept "know thyself"
"Meme," the man didn't know himself at all. D
"eighorait.- even absolutely, almost to all the | points of view, anatomical, psychological, on of its origin, it is not the marvelous intuitiontion and logic more. admirable | still more Grees, who could replace a sejenec who
It didn't exist, it's not your place to remind us.
how anatomical science grew step by step,
From his origin, man knew nothing and he is inte in these very last years. since I. amark and Darwin, who began to glimpse its origins.
ancestral gins, |
It is only through scholars, our. z eontem-poraina, that we begin to vonnailre sufli4 Animate man: prehistoric for in p `nv a scientific certainty.
What is certain is that our JK anedires

only savages, living in caves `like wild beasts, before you fight Day

d

| enemies by the Russians, or else to try to ter-

. to satisfy by force; that modern man if - However backward he may be, he cannot give us any idea of this primitive and that it will take us many years | of studies, of long meditations, for the com© to take and glimpse it as it is | to be at this era. - ` |

| u It was during the Quaternary period, the last of the major geological epochs, which man ap-

~: appears on earth.

The Quaternary period: is divided into two periods |

SE periods Of —

The first, called diluvian, is characterized by a regime of abundant rainfall which has for

as a consequence the formation of large rivers ct immense glaciers. The temperature, however - was quite gentle and the same at large distances. Plants, animals, distributed ac-actually between the various zones coexisted

B in our latitudes. i

“During the diluvial period (ti la EZ)” which was mistakenly called an icehouse. It is marked in

In effect, not through extension, but through limitation of glaciers. LEE

"The duration of geological epochs is not — to be fixed. We will therefore never know how many hundred-thousands of centuries ago

works of human industry buried in a jumbled mess with prehistoric bones. Man, in quest for a material hard enough for tools and

He used whatever weapons he had at hand.
He began by carving stone, then bones and The antlers of the animals, archaeologists have classified these objects fall into several categories, called _ each one according to one of the stations that supplied it - its principal specimens. They thus composed "series or types are ranked according to their relative perfection, in an order that one can of a In general, consider as chronological-
gic. We will not, however, forget the inequalities possibilities in the development of the different » social groups. To measure the seniority of our oldest populations, the state of their toolslage therefore offers us only an insufficient criterion.
sant. The geological level where it was exhumed, the fauna and flora that accompany it make us rebleigner plus sûr.

"The first humanity, contemporary with the
The diluvial period is represented on our soil.
by the objects collected in the alluvial deposits of the the Seine, the Marne, the Yonne, the Oise, of . the Somme, and in particular in the depots of Saint-Acheul, near Amiens, near Menchecourt, near = from Abbeville, Le Pecq and Chelles, near Paris.
Most Chellean tools are hand-crafted in the flint. What predominates amidst the knives, punches, scrapers, that's the axe, called the Saint-Acheul, an instrument of amygdaloid shape, of varying dimensions, with an average of eleven to thirteen centimeters long by seven centimeters wide,

TTT ane AS GP Dr nr ere An À PARE idea. td
Lj

with angular and sharp edges, with faces swollen towards the middle and worked with large chips.

It is likely that its primary purpose was to split wood, the ordinary weapon of the savage being rather the club.

"There's the 'Mousterian Dy' type who holds his name of the Moustier cave, in the Dordogne, “The “Solutréan” type (village of Solutré, in (around Mâcon) shows marked progress on the two previous ones.

"The 'Magdalenian' series (Madeleine cavewool (similar to that of Moustier) is distinguished essentially through the implementation of the bones of animals, deer antlers, ivory. The Pierre is not abandoned, but it is reserved for the manufacture of the most rude.

"The age of the reindeer is also the age of caves." Undoubtedly, there is no age that can be qualified exclusively as such. The underground dwellingRaine is as vicious as humanity, and we know that the practice has continued to this day in certain parts of France.

— The “life” of these Troglodytes was miserable. leftovers from meals, broken bones, putrefied meatFilth of all kinds was piled up on the ground, in a repulsive state of filth. Yet these same men had a taste for the adornment. They wore seashells, teeth pierced in the form of pendants. And we saw that an art was born in this barbarity.

– (LAVISSE, New History of France. – Hatchet).

This primitive man, Mr. de Quatrefarges, a spiritualist and a deist, an opponent of the theory of evolution.
said of him: "We do not know the man primitive; we would only encounter it, for lack of information, it would be impossible to recognize him– to be born. Everything that current science allows -
The only thing to say about him is that, by all appearances, he must have had a certain prognathism
He had neither a dark complexion nor woolly hair...
Everything ultimately leads one to believe that the language of our first ancestors was a monosyllable more or less pronounced",

Darwin, also a deist, said: "The first ancestors of man, were probably covered of hair; both sexes wore beards; Their ears were pointed and mobile; they had a tail served by muscles Their own, their limbs and their bodies were under the action of numerous muscles, which do not reappear today only incidentally among men, are still normal in quadruplicates drumanes...., The foot, judging by the condition of the fetus, should then be graspable and our ancestors usually lived in trees in some hot country covered with forests; the males had large canine teeth which "They served as formidable weapons."

But this opposition of the big toe, to which | The ancient anthropologists attached such a of great importance, that they wanted to make it a a distinctive sign of humanity, we find it again among many peoples.

Finally, according to Hacckel, "our closest neighbors– Sins are anthropoid apes or monkeys tailless caterpillars, such as the orang, the Chimpanzee, gibbon. Man and anthropoids are related to the type of catarrhine monkeys to tail, like the langur, ir. monkey, the macaque, the cyvocephalus, summer. These in turn would have come from the Prosinians represented by the maki, the lori, etc... who themselves would descend marsupials.

“We would not go down online right of the anthropoid apes: between them and man would have existed through an intermediary, man-ape or pithecoid man. This being, purely hypothetically, he would have had neither articulate speech, nor the intellectual development that characterizes To be human properly speaking (1).

It has been a number of years since ees lines have been written; also since then it has been done discoveries that would seem to confirm this assumption. .-

We now know that at the time udi

---

(1) Brens, The Human Races; Ir Vgerneau, that is to say a few hundred or a few thousand centuries before the Quaternary period, lived a being of whom some traces have been found and that The scientists believe it to be the precursor of Quaternary man.

"We are therefore forced to admit a pre-man's cursor.

"It was at the Lyon meeting of the Association" French Society for the Advancement of Science, in 1873, that G. de Mortillet posed for the first time The question of the precursor of man; Abel Hovelacque came to support his proposal on behalf of of linguistics. Both established that he

During the Tertiary period, there existed an intermediate being dialogue between man and anthropoid apes current; more advanced than the latter, it had not yet reached intellectual BEEN of man (1).»

In a memoir published in 1894, a Dutchman, Mr. Eugène Dubois, described under the name of Pithe-Canthropus erectus, a being whose... he rediscovered bones, in excavations in Java, and that he assumes an intermediary between anthropoid apes weight and man.

These bones —"in red teeth, second and third molars; a complete femur;
a skull.
= "The conditions of the deposit. The circumstances excavations lead to the conclusion that the different-

{1} Prehistory, by G. and H., de Morrirrgr, p. 97, EM dt.

rents and coins found by Mr. Dubois are true-the same individual, contemporary with the field Pliocene Tertiary, belonging to a species intermediate bipedal anthropoid between apes known anthropoids and the human species, precursors sister of this one and could have come from the genre gibbon.

"As an intermediate form between man and Monkeys, it's hard to imagine anything "More striking than the Java skull." "For seriously invalidate the legitimate and plausible In Mr. Dubois's thesis, it would be necessary to show that The Java skull is a simple monstrosity without ethnological significance: a myocephaly who had exaggerated not only the volume teeth in relation to the skull; but also the absolute volume of teeth beyond the maximum ethnic.
— Two hypotheses are therefore present: _“In the Pliocene era, a race lived in Java intermediate human beings between the lowest classes known breeds and anthropoid monkeys; "2° During the Pliocene epoch, a race lived in Java anthropoid possessing bipedal walking, and intermedian, through its cerebral development between the highest of the known monkeys and the species human. (1) »

"Surrounded by fearsome animals, the savage

---

(1) Mueren, Scientific Review. — Cited by Clemenceau, ship: addi

'tertiary, with the rudimentary weapons that we what we just saw in his hands was certainly not in a position to kill a large number of them; they were so the small animals that were supposed to enter oneverything in his diet. Yet he is not It is unacceptable that he has, in some cases, pursued with his spear large animals, We We know of modern tribes, who with rudimentary devices are not afraid to attack "to hunt ferocious beasts."

The rather frail nature of man, like that The fox developed its cunning and intelligence. One thing seems clear, which is that these Primitive families established a domicile — around the great lakes which at that time covered immense areas, and they made their food animal remains that came to run aground on the shore (this is what seems to prove the hewn stones and bones bearing the mark of these crude tools, which are found on the shores of these vanished lakes), thus by — (Pouancé, Abbot DELAuNAY). |

Captain Grey, quoted by J. Lubbock, nate He did not see any tribes in Australia who, after Having rubbed themselves with grease all over their bodies, they open a passage with their stone weapon through the ` Fat from a cetacean stranded on the shore. "The friends warned by fires that we took care of to light, they arrive in a crowd near the beast; their The jaws are working well. In the EN

LL

and you see them climbing here and there, on the (00 stinking carcass, in search of the finest pieces, »-

And these facts cited by Alfred Marche (0: "The 2 Adouma killed a tortoise; despite the high price.

that I offered, it was impossible for me to get any the shell. All these blacks are of a voracious nature

It's surprising, especially when it comes to meat. We don't have -

No dogs to eat our leftover meals:
But our Okanda no one lets anything go to waste, and they gnaw away

...down to the bone. We're forcing them to eat today.

the remains of a buffalo killed eight days ago, and whose

the air is foul; otherwise, they would keep this be carrion even longer. During the day, |
In the middle of a rapid, I feel a strong jolt;

I turn around: four of my men are coming

. to jump into the water, and swim towards a corpse | of an animal that is drifting. They report it; it is a |
. anomalurus (a species of flying squirrel), which has reached |

. 6 complete state of putrefaction, to such an extent that during- f

= when they took it out of the water, the hair came off with it | x the epidermis me. This did not prevent them, in the evening, from to enjoy it to the fullest without wasting any

| a plot of land. »

The explorers' accounts are filled with facts. of similar kinds.

E f 1) (Three trips to West Africa. — Paris, Ila- | Rachette, page Fh: | "uu |

79.9 kën

We have found very little trace of the pithe- Tertiary canthropus, but far from being an argument against the law of evolution, this lack of CORSA This is rather proof of that, the quaternary in front to be, so to speak, civilized in relation to the ter- Liaire, or, if the quaternary man had not... for tools, like a few rare cut stones, it is quite evident that its more deprived ancestor still, in every respect, had none. All.

But few — for the purpose of our discussion — sion presents, that the Pithecanthropus or that Tertiary gorilla-man, be they our distant ancestors, or beings who disappeared because they were less well-suited to the "struggle for life"; the only scientifically proven fact of Quaternary man and living as we have said above, indicates which path we have taken; but also how slowly we traveled through it.

Sound logic, therefore, teaches men to common sense that this slow evolution will continue slowly ly, and that it is madness to believe, and above human forces wanting to hasten the mou- through revolution or violence.

Furthermore, the selection, a starting point or a Different evolutions have produced the multiplicity of human races. It is also commonplace and sad to be forced to tell some that the Australian natives links or Congolese, to name just a few, do not are not at the same point as the French people;

Theoretically and practically, it is therefore ab-
"Surface of this word 'Internationalism'."

It turns out that, contrary to what was thought Spinoza, according to Bebel and Guesde, men do not have one and the same nature, man it's not just what society did just as individual personalities differ, so too communities are gatherings of individuals.

Such a social system that may be suitable for a nation, community with its own characteristics, a selection and inheritance of several centuries does not will not be suitable for another composition of individuals dualities having different characteristics. Co who will suit Arabs may not suit Chinese, which will suit Hindus, will be able to not suitable for the Russians. Closer to home, The interest of the Belgians and the very prolific Italians will not be the same as that of the dien wl inféconds. ` z Much better in the same country, the interests and Needs may differ depending on the environment.
(I do not mean "middle" here in the absurd sense of the so-(Cialism, class struggle). The miner's social ideal will not be the same as that of the farmer;
the inhabitant of Montmartre will not think like that of the banks of the Loire; also from what the a system of collective ownership could be to protect minors, it does not follow that it is necessary

. impose this system on the rest of humanity.

Here's what our socialists haven't taken the trouble to see, to study, to understand.

In summary: "Man, the result of slow transformations and countless subsequent modifications
"Cossives that go back to the origin of beings, is
"a mammal occupying the top of the scale"
"animal."
"Its most immediate known precursor is the

"Pithecanthropus erectus do Java, which has do "great affinities with gibbons, monkeys and-

"Southern and Asian thropoides."

"The main characteristic of man is "a great development of intelligence and by
"Brain continuation."
"This intelligence is a special force that
"to come into play in nature and manifest itself in a "
"in an increasingly brilliant manner as it
"as we move forward in time (1)."
Here is the answer to our question: What is it?
than man? However, something is missing from it.
thing. We just said: the characteristic of man is a great development of the in-intelligence.

What is intelligence? It is the totality of psychic phenomena, thought, consciousness, will. Unable to elaborate further on this topic, which we will discuss in more detail in - our sociology, we refer the reader to our _ book, the different manifestations of Thought.
We will only emphasize a few points for

(I) De Moser, Le Prehistorique, p. 127.)

well put in. evidently, among socialists, tou-
The same mistakes every day, the kid failed.
^ Oh human misery, it will be said that you "got out-Not bad. Men who claim to be new,
a new parliament, and they want to revolutionize the
. world, they speak and gesticulate without knowing, ct
if they know they create an incommen- vicious circle
sure. | |
As science begins to see and to establish-to understand the origins of man, to understand this that he is physiologically and psychologically, that is to say, a veritable animal rag, that is the moment they choose to claim accato counter power and impose their theories, supporting stating that men are equal and free.
"Being nothing by themselves and only this "Society made them."
Having only one and the same nature.
Equal TE - E

While anthropology proclaimed diversity 2
. of races and individuals, of aptitudes, of ` Temperaments, customs. That anatomy weighs human brains of 1,200 to 1,800 and 2,000 grams, having more or less convolutions sinucuses, a thick grey cortical layer-quite varied, that is to say, varying in the-finished, and that physiology and psychology mon- - thirty intellectual faculties in relation to
"Quantity and quality with these different characteristics.
Free? Gees 2

WHAT IS MAN? E | 34

Mors que d'Holbach, one of the predecessors of
— |The Great Revolution said in its “we stem”
of nature: » — | "
“Man is not free in any of the moments” its duration. He is not master of his ideas or and changes in his brain that are dukes
_"to causes which, despite him and without his knowledge, act"
"Continuously on him. He is not master of to dislike or dislike what he finds lovable or desirable. 1l is not master of not ` « deliberate when uncertain of the effects quo
"Objects will produce effects upon him; he is not master." _“not to choose what he believes to be the most advanced-

t.

Sh
m

— “tagcux. It's not wrong to act otherwise — that which he does not do at the moment when his will is determined

-undermined by his choice. At what point, the man —— —

"Is he therefore the master or free to act as he chooses?"

And that contemporary philosophers seem -to be increasingly in agreement on this point that Man is not "free to determine his own path."

As clinical observation and pathology demonstrate –

S peremptorily. Suggestion, self-suggestion?

. dens. hypnotism and in the context of hypnosis, -

the state of temporary nervous overexcitability

| permanent intoxication under the influence of various - brain poisons, teas, coffees, alcohols, u | essences, opium, hashish, etc.
That this nervous excitability which suggests `

...more or less bizarre ideas, leading to acts
: more or less violent, even more so. Than `

LEE ae ant dus ses es ES

i "
ad Pl enti Jee? zapen ut cb ea 8, nn

COR TA BANKRUPT DU | SOCIALISNE i

^ The various poisons are mostly absorbed through the canopy "Environments that it is pointless to name."

We will not cite the thousands of examples.

which are found in the books of Patoto and clinical? E

Those that we find in the days recounted

| in newspapers can serve as demonstration |

"a message to the reader who understands."
Such as this one, which chance placed before my eyes: 3
up TWELVE ASTER ATTACK

From Clermont-Ferrand to | Petit Parisien (D):
The commune of Isserteaux had been for some time

time under the influence of a profound emotion pro-` evoked by repeated arson attacks, lit without Without a doubt, by criminal hands.

On Monday morning, in fact, a fire broke out in the barn.

` from Mr. l'ontbastier, in the hamlet of Glagne. Now, the

. that same evening, as an investigation was being conducted into ` the causes of the disaster, a new fire broke out

| o at the same owner's.

Ten residents of the town, armed with rifles,

then decided to stand guard around |
The house. A little girl insisted on staying with them.

twelve-year-old Mélanie Prun, a ward of the Assis- -

| public office, employed by Mr. Fontbastier and - who, in the morning, had been employed with great-d bes d activity à combat les flammes,

D (Second half of January men.

However, suspicions fell on her, and The very next day she was subjected to an interrogation-story. Mélanie Pruu, initially denied, then, press-Sick with questions, she finally confessed what it was
It was she who had lit the sinister light.

She further stated that last August-denier, the day of the village festival of Fayet, ello had set fire to a hangar belonging to Mr. Dos-

seigno and that previously ello had gone coupalo d'un autre incendie volontairo chez un proowner of Coudat-les-Monttboissier, his former boss. a | JEN

These various facts have been recognized as accurate and the child criminal, taken away last night In Clermont, he renewed his confession to the prosecutor | of the Republic. She was scoured at home. stop.

Let us add that Ada's father: Prun, orè- The Lot region is currently a "prison." Samother, originally from Cantal, esl dais. a maisen centi ale. |

What is certain, established in an irrefutable way | It's that race, heredity, education, the miplaces, the chance of circumstances, the action of cerebral poisons, the excitation of ideas by the reading, through the discourses of others, can be powerful man to act in a way completely different from* his their own interests; this is what too many forget: this

A ne my ve move ` ares

+

that most men who believe

new.

At certain times, the ideas — by oratorical or epistolary exhortations are so 'imperative, that sound and just ideas do not can counterbalance them, man is no longer free to react and commits mistakes and acts of violence.

These questions should be studied and understood.
men who embark on socialism;
of those who go to public places

exhorting the people, public blasphemy-They lie and condemn society. Words You might say, words; no, a thousand times no, these Ideas sown in fertile ground will become vi-

-. Vacancies, transforming into severely cha-tiés (1).

While the speaker, the journalist, author genuine strike or attack, calm-

sitting by his fire, he will worry greatly Dou of this vague humanity whose ideas suggest managed have led to the act and will coldly prepare

(1) When I went, a few years ago, to interview the doctor

-Goupil, regarding Emilia Henry, he replied to me: "It's the word
"Eloquent and charming by Sébastien Faure, who lost this child."

He added: "I remember a lecture given there, all at

. side at the Paris theatre (now Sarah-Dernhardt theatre)

by the great orator Berryer; the chosen subject was Corneille,

we felt the empire was collapsing; at one point, l2

The room was so electrified, so enthusiastic about the words warm and engaging from the great lawyer that, if anyone had shouted, "To the Élysée Palace!" The entire room leapt as one.

man ",

furiously new speeches that contract-will cause new crimes (1).

(i) Proof: Just in recent days at the Bourse du Travail,

After being excited by the speeches, the unemployed so rush into the street shouting "Like in Barcelona" and he
The ensuing skirmish, as we know, was the result. (It is probable that in the (There were agents provocateurs.)

I"

A CHAPTER M ` evolution or Revolution

1
'
HAS
i
'
E
- n
i
E 1

i
r
H
i
r Li '
D i 1
»
e -

'
"D
D
`
H DH
Dad

Hi LI
DD
D
D
D *
Lal
in t

be ` ei

m

'
^ D
'
`
z: .
'
'
has PI L! š '
L b E
`
. '
"T g Z e
'
− m
` +
− r
" i
` " ' '
bone
D LI 9 . " DD e CET En

m i "E

'
'
i
D
B
" "
1 D

'

,
'

D
'

€
DH g
of the ze
. r
` i .
` i `
m
P.
'
if
" '
A 3 on e " dE, reo y WÉI

D
`
1
`

Evolution or Revolution

To Mr. Elisde Reclus

We have just seen, by studying man and his
the origin that the law which governs humanity is evolution—slow lion.

"How is it that at every moment we We heard the Revolution being acclaimed, which implies of more or less abrupt changes in —
"The facts... the abominable revolution that is escaping"
"Suddenly, spirits erupted in the streets"
"sometimes accompanied by the shouts of the crowd"

and the clash of arms.” (RecLus).
_ That we see the socialists stirring up the ` strikes and all possible forms of unrest, such as — in Chalon, in Montceau, in Calais, in Marseille, in — the goal of bringing it forth, adorning itself with the title of ` revolutionaries, to secure a mandate from deputy.

-There must be a lack of logic in that, a lack of conscientious observation, —— |

A few years ago, the chance of circumstances-These circumstances led me to Mr. Paul Reclus, surgeon-

has:

gien des teg member of the Academy of medicine. S

I had discovered a wonderful fairy who was supposed to to bring happiness to humanity; I was transported of joy, a sublime, exhilarating joy, which leads-
. had all sleep and obsessed me. 1l would be enough that societies were introduced to this discovery in order to that they immediately became friends, from enemies that they were. Men were going to become generous and selfless, universal peace would be proclaimed, the age-old struggles that the reli-
The gions who had given birth would suddenly calm down.
...the man would become aware of himself,
knowing the phenomena of his thought.

I was a new Christ, bringing to humanity universal happiness; but as I myself I felt faint, overwhelmed by insomnia, I needed find someone to confide in about my discovery.

I thought of a great, selfless man,
Elisée Reclus, but as he was in Belgium,
I thought of his younger brother.

He listened to me calmly, but seeing With tears in my voice, he told me: "It's not not the social revolution that brings you here, because You see, the Revolution leads to nothing.
"Well," as I told him no, saying to him that it was "Human Thought" that had been the Because of my insomnia, he gave me the advice to go and find D'Ettinger, his neighbor, who 3 was specifically concerned with psychology.

I went there, I explained my anxiety to him and my agitation; he congratulated me on my work, then he advised me to go and rest, which-

. that time in the countryside and to take a chloral to sleep and calm myself down.

I mention this story to show how much man at certain times makes himself illusory

siones; how his thought can glimpse either the "Good- "Humanity's hour," or "Universal Pain," while nothing changes around him. He believes to the power of certain words, to the magic of certain ideas, which do not acquire this intensity and they only seem achievable to him because of his A sick and hypnotized brain.
These illusions of thought are very good described by Proudhon in his book "On Creation- "The restoration of order in humanity." "The principle philosophical illusions is this kind of transport, sometimes. passenger, often durable and obstinate, which follows the sudden perception of a High truth, or unforeseen reports. This mental illness..., has not been reported by the ` psychologists, perhaps because they are attentive Most of them couldn't recognize her... He It is not uncommon to see men of great sagacity, exquisite judgment, superior reason-laughing, pursued by an idea which, similar to a A sudden flash of insight crossed their minds. and produces the most singular imaginations there. Oh, the people I'm talking about are neither crazy, nor

e
E.

EN but, if it is for EN faculties has intel-— --- readings a hallucination analogous to that of _ sensory faculties, I would say that they are. true- I "mentally. hallucinating." (pages 46, 47). E That's why chloral syrup (ti mervéillo.-

LT “However, I haven’t forgotten Paul’s words Ess Reclus: : the Revolution leads to "nothing."

Why these words which, for me, YOUR “Protest against his brother’s opinions? The

...the time has come to resolve this issue.

The preceding lines will be of a certain taine's usefulness for our conclusions. In What does E. Reclus say? Evolution is the soft-infinite movement of all that exists, the transformation-the ceaseless process of the universe and all its parts
.ties since the eternal origins and during Pin- -

"The end of ages"... "In comparison to this fact (the primordial stage of evolution and eternal life, what are all these little events called as-

2. Tronomical, geological and political? 2. Thus

Science sees no opposition between them
— two words, evolution and revolution. »... e Far away ` to see in them facts of the same order differing only by the scale of the movement, the timid men that every change fills them with dread, affect them with to give the two terms an absolutely

...opposite. Evolution is synonymous with development

...gradual, continuous in ideas and customs is presented as if it were the opposite of - this terrifying thing, the KW Revolution implies |

EVOLUTION OR REVOLUTION Year more or less changes The in the facts DO |

“We are evolutionists in all things.”
also revolutionary in every way"... "One can Thus, to say that evolution and revolution are the two successive acts of the same phenomenon, Pé– evolution preceding the revolution and the latter preceding - within a new evolution, the mother of revolutions futures. Can change happen without to cause sudden shifts in balance

"in life? Shouldn't the Revolution necessarily–"

to succeed in the evolution as well as Does the act follow the will to act?

In the infinity of worlds and in "T we Let's accept that Evolution and Revolution are somewhat similar.
synonyms for evolution preceding revolution
lution and this one a new period of evolution.
But in the infinity of worlds and times,
man is completely foreign to the lake-- ties that make an appearance in spaces without boundary, which elongate and dissolve during millions and billions of centuries.

Reclus also plays on words to to demonstrate that being an evolutionist is to be revolutionary These expressions, however, do not have the same meaning in the French language, as he first acknowledged. Which he proves Well, that's because he is "evolutionary in all things", but not at all revolutionary, since he explains that the Revolution cannot take place without a

| 406 — D BANKRUPTCY or SOCIALISM -

enee, SC
He does indeed acknowledge, Gd, mocking two formulas good. Nature doesn't make leaps that than in a regressive sense.

: RAPID evolution p- 58. Consequently, the day when evolution will have taken place in brains ct
...in people's hearts, the revolution will no longer have its reason

its being, since social transformations |

d necessary se seront faites LR à LES sans vio_ proverbial, that Linnaeus's formula is the Revolutions are not necessarily a

| progress, the fluctuations of the crowd are pro- |
| duisant also often in the direction of E

The question, therefore, is whether the Revolution such that our revolutionary socialists understand it, would be progress or a step backward; if it would promote —

'Forward movement, or rather reaction. It does not

It's not enough to shout: Revolution, Revolution, for that we should immediately follow the one who knows to train. "No doubt, it is not obvious that Pignorant followed his instinct: the panicked bull...

"4 rushes onto a red cloth, and the people tu-oppressed days rush furiously upon the first

. came when he was designated. Nowadays, the "qua-
"Triumph of state," forgetting the peasants, isn't it running away?
. the risk of seeing oneself as a distinct class_ tincture and to work, not for humanity, but |
| for his own particular interests. »

Ines is not here acting as ME on a Top- diet pressure; we said from the beginning of this book

YOUR EVOLUTION OR REVOLUTION MEE VE

that we were taking care of France, whose
The current system may very well favor, and not harming evolution, without which we would all be

Okay, and we would proclaim it loudly with Reclus: “Any revolution has always 8

It's a good thing when it happens against a diet!

...of oppression, but if it is to give rise to a new —

despotism, one might wonder if he didn't have E © It would have been better to manage it differently. » p. 44.

And we applaud Paul Bert who says in T his civics instruction manual: And what is it - ;

What would need to be done if a man wanted to recommend...
| start what Louis—N spileoa—Donapartoa committed -
December 2, 1851? E

“— Every citizen should take up their rifle, 4

that everyone rose up and that we stopped the | | wretched to have him judged » PX
Unien has no reason, in elven, for if a B. Déroulède or some Jules Guérin who wanted —to impose oneself or impose by force a baker on - an entire people, another Jules Guérin, not a hoist.

cannon right into his apartment to get off E ` of his horse, the new oppressor; it is an eas —

. of reciprocity or self—defense. In a ` evolutionary regime, it is therefore by no means 8

—the need for revolution. Revolution is not the inevitable consequence of an evolution. — SZ Pon will tell me: but a minority, some -:

Individuals can be oppressed by a ES majority. LL they then try to become ma-

` œ E

Pe

o 48 PNE. “THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM” To the authorities, because as minorities, their revolts will be repressed and probably useless; it is not
"not that we preach resignation like that

|. of the Armenians vis-à-vis the Turks. The Turks, he
-that's true, they do not live in an evolutionary state.

'However, there are oppressions that one cannot

- to support; but one must be wise in revolt,
You have to choose your moment, you shouldn't just...

the idea of doing good, doing evil, and that we . ocecasione une oppression encore à même grands de an entire category of citizens.

Moreover, who are those who proclaim the-

A social revolution is necessary; they are on time.
'to b acid, more or less the masters. - | |

eoutons Reclus: page 71. e And - eng |

| those who rush towards power to replace
. this elite by birth or fortune by a

A new elite, supposedly of intelligence? What?

These politicians are skilled at flattering no longer the kings, but what about the crowd? One of the opponents of the social-Dame, a defender of what are called the "good"

"Principles," Mr. Leroy-Deaulieu will speak to us.
-of this new aristocracy in terms which, coming

` from an anarchist, will appear far too violent.

and truly unjust. "Contemporary politicians - porains at all levels, he said, from the municipal councilors of cities down to the smallest levels -

very, represent, taken as a whole, and the share made = with a few exceptions, one of the most ` classes EZ viles. and the most narrow-minded sycophants and

“EVOLUTION ov REVOLUTION E

, courtiers that humanity has ever known, Their `
The sole aim is to flatter basely and to develop -

all the popular prejudices that they share IN vaguely for the most part, having never devoted - a moment. of their lives at Gebees and at ës | Walloon. AD |

Also, with such laws, I believe that one cannot can only do bad work, so it is _useful to continue evolving while waiting for something better, and the
The first duty of good men is to seek-dear to instruct and educate, to spread ideas of truth and justice. Some heroic deaths.

| are among the great events of history, -

. but how much more important was the role of the exis_tendences devoted to the public good » s
So we still have a long way to go.

browse, for thus Ko proclaims it | the Internatio-final:

The emancipation of workers will be managed by NM

"The workers themselves." "This statement is..."
true in its broadest sense. If it is certain ` | p of so-called providential men" have claimed E
to bring happiness to the people, it is no less -

_ proven that all human progress has been achieved - | folds thanks to the initiative of revolts or of _ citizens already free. It is therefore up to ourselves - that it is incumbent upon us to liberate ourselves, all of us who we feel oppressed in any way -

"and who remain in solidarity with all wronged men - of suffering people in all parts of the world.

SH 50 e PAILLITE pu SOCIALISM P

But to fight, one must know. It does not follow not to throw oneself furiously into the battle like Cimbri and Teutons, bellowing

...under his shield or in an auroclis horn.
The first condition for triumph is to be angry
-~ rid of our ignorance: we need `
"to know all the prejudices i to destroy", page 78.

"It is in minds and in hearts that the transformations must be accomplished before tending

But all of this is evolution and foreome;t

. the muscles and to change into his- phenomena torics", page 63.

slow evolution. The day when humanity will thus |

The Revolution will have evolved and become useless, because it there will no longer be a Bastille to demolish, nor any more morphos to be destroyed. - 1 1-

"The primary objective of all evolutionists"

— conscientious and active, possessing in-depth knowledge
The surrounding society that they are reforming in their thought," (page 119), their duty is not to = to let the simplistic crowd believe that they are for the revolution, while they proclaim | the necessity
...of the prior evolution. Because, if they recognized '. that human progress has been slow,
It would be heresy to suggest... managing that all of a sudden under the influence of a fairy © magic, the. Revolution could give: a Ihe

. manitas, ideal happiness. EE

This is where the main problem lies, not with the evolutions—. nisles, but the revolutionaries, because in socio-

IN

EVOLUTION OR REVOLUTION o 5l

As conscientious bloggers, we must know the human nature, knowing that communities like

Individuals are impressionable, over-tables, suggestible, that they can let themselves leading to violence through rhetoric actions contrary to their interests.

We must therefore take great care with these illusions of our senses, of these suggestions, of our thoughts, of these frenzies, and man, true-deeply devoted to justice and truth, especially when -

He wants to talk to her, should only give wise advice.
advice to the crowd.

We need to think before we depict the Revolution like a marvelous fairy who, everything -

This will suddenly bring about ideal happiness; to do men who were "neither good nor bad"
so many little saints; neither selfish nor selfless.
Ses, so many generous men.
If he only talked to her about science and laws biological and sociological factors, if he sought to...
to teach the principles of justice, goodness, and truth,
That would be perfect; but if he pronounces terms which for her are synonymous with violence, that he beware, for in just retribution he may-

would be the first to notice.

Thus says Reclus, pp. 49-50: “In a few days, within hours, the turmoil of events

draws the same crowd to the demonstrations more opposites of apotheosis or curse.
Those of us who fought for the Com:

SR ER TR ET AU AI OUR) cry HD PURI APRI Ron *

mune are familiar with these frightening ressaes of the A human swell. Departing for the outposts.
We were followed by touching greetings, Tears of admiration shone in the eyes of those who were cheering us on, the women waved their tenderly handkerchiefs. But the welcome was ccli yesterday's heroes who, after having escaped to the massacre, returned as prisoners between ` Two lines of soldiers! In many quarters, the popular consisted of the same individuals;
but what an absolute contrast in his feelings
And his attitude! What a display of shouting and fuss.

Dictions! What ferocity in the words of Hatred. "Death! Death! To the machine gun!"

To the guillotine!
_ And these men and women were right, | they had believed the promisers of paradise (of (perhaps hallucinating); they had worshipped the goddess marvelous one who, with a wave of her wand, transwould form society and the first moments of it- - illusion, past hallucinations, they become again themselves, that is to say, koia, not koia demigods. - |

The wise man, truly filled with feelings
Therefore, a generous person is one who is content to simply observe.
to learn and to teach, who tries to com
. to take these unknown laws that govern the collections.
activities such as individualities and does not think that, like demigods, men can change the natural course of things.

What is, must be; the people have the system
m for which it is ripe; but we can To foresee, to prepare for the future, not to destroy, to violate.
the present; for if we fight oppression, This is not for us "p" by force and the violence.

In summary, evolution is the natural law and logic of beings.

From a suggestive point of view, the term is
must be banned to prevent senseless crimes.
useless and harmful to this same evolution.

In summary, evolution is the natural order of things.
logic of beings. |

From a suggestive point of view, the term revolution
must be banned to prevent senseless crimes.
useless cL n uisibles to a that leads to evolution.

: ". - 2 DE if ` 7 Dn d - E - to . = - d to - ' PR Ge >sx SD - * : t : Ss s
" ` - ' DEI ; ' zx H . $ i E v3 . - DH S VS dn K - in DH - ` .
$ EDA: 1 PER NP z E. . - E š S Ba ` Ce? -vk`S

1 ia Mm 8 Lou soy ` z . - D --: em - - ' S xsk fi P ; - Dä di - ` ^ NM ' - - H WÉI - ` HHE -
; 4 "E Ve ' "t ` . Ve Wi E: - * H $ - E k S , E LR " ` pa Shan ES i 4. E [ . - 8 ` Eu - - a š S & ch ^ : : H
K ak: as td E 3 xd - - M 3

The different socialist schools

In defining socialism, we said that it was an "aspiration towards justice, the dream a better future, the plan for an ideal society or everyone would be happy."

We were forced to limit this definition too general for a specific party, and of same as all the writers who have dealt with this As we said, we think above, citing other authors, that the term of socialists must apply especially to "Men who want to change the constitution" fundamental to society, by substituting the pro- common or collective or social property belonging to the individual property. Hence the various names that one can . to give them communists or collectivists” (1).

HP Mermeix in "La France socialiste", 1880, continues to This topic: "So socialists are revolutionaries, Jatrane" seat, with whom it is pointless to even consider entering into a coalition They want everything, no concession will disarm them. It is true that concessions never give up, they weaken- They bless those who grant them and strengthen those who obtain them.

“When candidates, even the most radical, say, in

"They don't understand at all their professions of faith, these socialists." revolutionary socialism of the collectivists or communists,

Co who proves it well again, that's what Viviani “Wrote on February 23, 1901 in La Lanterne: "Tomorrow, the mines, the railways, credit, The refineries, to begin with, will be in the hands . from the state which, at least, if it continues to pay, will benefit the profit that goes straight into the pockets of party-cultural. Certainly, it will not be socialism,

not even what we called a perversion In economic terms, state socialism. This will be, respecting capitalist property, a capi-State-sponsored thalism. We welcome the first step.
In this chapter, we will study something special.
Their theories lie. What strikes us most First, it's about seeing that these men are claiming the science of science; we find at each instantly under their pen "scientific socialism" that probably meant in their brain
"design of a theoretical system, which can be to support with an appearance of logic”, outside From this definition, it is impossible to understand this scientific term, their theories, being in blatant contradiction with science, which is
"The poster-based socialism of the radical bourgeoisie is not revolutionary, these citizens would gladly provide funds retirement for workers; they would support associations female workers; they would limit the length of the workday if necessary work, but they would recoil in horror if they heard that Socialism means the abolition of private property. However, the
The word socialism has no other meaning; all the reforms that we will do so in today's society, without altering its fundamental principle.
mental, which excludes individual property, will be reforms

| philanthropic, economic; cene will be pes des &ctes socid« lists » 9 »,

`

here based on "observation" "by no means theoretical- - risk therefore”, basis of all sciences biological and therefore sociological.
Without going into all the systems that have been issued over the past century, we will limit ourselves to the analysis of anarchic communism and of the commun-collectivist nism, which are the only ones at the moment - present, so that we can discuss.

B. Anarchy

In all times and places,
The human species has had ambitious men,
authoritarians who wanted to impose their ideas,

even by force, and others of the "liberals",
"Libertarians" who support "laissez-faire"
"Let it pass," which are generally good,
were content to speak and lead by example,
to give advice, without wanting to impose it.

We find these two temperaments everywhere in higher animals and in the man.

We have known Themistoclo and others Aristide, Robespierre, and Danton.

This contrast in temperaments led to a social system called "Communism" two different forms: One, e-Collectivism imposing itself through a central power, claiming of an authority, had as its great apostle the Jew German Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, Lassalle and all their current proselytes Liebknecht (deceased) Bebel, Guesde, Jaurès, summer. z
The other, Vanarchy, no longer recognizes any authority, no power had such popularizations the Russian Mikhail Bakunin, currently KroPotkine, E. Reclus, S. Faure.

Anarchy, says Mr. Kropotkin (1), comes from Greek

Ta 25/5) which means "no power" co -
The word made its appearance within the International, of what a part, under the leadership of Bakunine wanting to fight the papacy of Karl Marx, denied the authority within the association itself, revolted both against authority in all its forms. This the party, initially taking the name of anti- federalist elatist, anti-authoritarian; but the Marxists hurled at their adversaries the epithet that was to be their to remain "to sow confusion" and clearly prove to the people. by this word which is synonymous with disorder is the sole ambition of the anarchists
"is to create disorder and chaos, without thinking to the result.
They, moreover, accepted this epithet without difficulty, finding in the Greek etymology
a meaning in agreement with their principles, initially contenting himself with writing it in two words, separated by a hyphen; "but soon they

they accepted it as it was, without giving any work useless to proofreaders, nor to lessons of Greek to the readers.

But what they didn't want was "power" They did not aspire to disorder for that reason; On the contrary, their desire was order, freedom, the

(1) Words of a reyolté,

Se RR

justice, the destruction of all autocracy —

(still despicable) — in societies cons- confident in themselves.

It was: "[to establish a Didi environment that ensures to each individual the entire sum of happiness

| adequate, at any time. to the pro- mop progressive of humanity {1}. » The great fault of anarchy, is that Wang had accepted as a name a term which in the everyday language did not represent the ideas of its main theorists; if we revolutionize enough Perhaps governments can easily, but it is not

= not so easy to revolutionize a people for = the simple meaning of a word. Now, we can-we will see every day how much the significance-

The choice of words is important; go to a of these small towns in the West, where never an

An Israelite did not penetrate, and ask a -- _any idiot what they think of a Jew, to s

Your answer will help you understand the influence of words.
This name for the Bakunin party, Reclus, Kropotkin, Sébastien Faure, etc.

was so bad that all the attacks, which could "create disorder and chaos, without

"Thinking about the result," although blamed very certainly by these men, were put to account of the anarchists. Much better, the word étart

now accepted without hesitation — given

= gon elasticity — Kropotkin and Louise Michel se

(1; “ébastien FAURE,

were obliged to defend all the bandits who they claimed to be.
First absurdity.
Secondly, it is committing a "second"
It is a very serious mistake to want, contrary to the French language, to make the word revolution the synonymous with evolution; and when one is evolving-peaceful ist like Mr. Reclus and that we demonstrate so that the law of evolution dominates all things, to make people believe that one is, to want to give oneself as an example of a revolutionary, and to indicate to young people always ready to get carried away revolution as an ideal. LEE $1 these men, on the contrary, had been obstinate to retain the title of "federalists", by adding-both those of autonomists, individualists, in trying to demonstrate that their ideas were, perhaps in the law of evolution and that they improve- - They would no longer be possible, order, freedom, the justice; if they had repudiated all violence, In keeping with the evolution, their party would have made of great recruits, intelligent and enlightened.

...Because ultimately, "no power" reduces authority
In its simplest form, there are not only the - Kropotkin and the Recluses who think this way.
This wonderful orator, Clemenceau, in "A superb flight of fancy!" he exclaimed, to thunderous applause.
from an entire intellectual elite:
Do we need a master? Humanity has them all.
.tried: the legitimate master imposed by God, then

0. Ts

D ra FAAITE pu SOCIALISM |
I, Caesar, who understand the homeland as a summit-first, then the anonymous, irresponsible master

a thousand heads: the people who do not want 'knowledge, "who cannot" know, (Applause-“ ments.)

. “And all appeared wicked and unjust ct the |
The truth seems to be: no malt at all.
That man himself be free, good one bad, big or small, stingy or prodigal, with _its flaws or its qualities, but that it be Ini-

| even, that an oppressor should not come and impose upon him -

| . to expose his wickedness, his pettiness, his greed. » c

— As for Henri Maret, he has repeated many times (1).
that the ideal of government was the least S of A possible government.

"Governments do not simply cease to exist;
embarrassed. - That's why you need to have for - They will show some leniency. Whatever they do, they will always be in the wrong; for their fate is to satisfy men who will never know to be content, by that alone. That they are — men..... There is hardly anyone but me who | governments would have Le on je les sup e ba eg prime. »

Bakunin said no more: What follows from this?
...that Jo rejects all authority? Far be it from me to do so - _ thought, When it comes to boots, I refer to 3
. the authority of the shoemakers; if it is a may- - E of a canal or railway, I consult I

0 Radical, 47 November 101, that of the architect or the engineer. For such -special science, I am addressing myself to such and such a scholar.

but I will not let myself be forced into either the shoemaker or Neither the architect nor the scientist. I accept them freely and with all due respect that their intellect deserves—_age, their character, their knowledge, while reserving However, my undeniable right to write. and "
control. "

Eu adds (D: x , What is it. that authority 2
Is this the inevitable power of natural laws?
which manifest themselves in the sequence and in the fatal succession of phenomena of the physical world — music and the social world? Indeed, against these laws -

- the revolt is not only defended, but also 2
| is still impossible. » EA |
- a With regard to natural laws, there is no — man has only one possible freedom: that of recognize them and always apply them forward lage, in accordance with the goal of emancipation or of collective or individual humanization qa it

S continues. » CH
When things are said so well, one is not – more revolutionary and anarchist Ke Clémen-
. water and II. Maret. mE We explained ourselves regarding the Revolution in a special chapter; however, Bakunine, Kropotkin being Slavs coming from i the empire of the tsars, we can explain their revolutionary TUN!; but since they

God and the State.

| 66. | THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM |

ET Bund the council to rely on Hbrement to — the authority of certain specialists, adding that — Humanity is subject to natural laws, vis.

. in relation to which man had "only a freedom
. possible: that of recognizing them and applying them-

Pure logic would dictate studying these laws.
natural laws, which here are sociological laws, and -if these laws advise having an administration
any. In societies, it will be necessary |. to comply with it freely.

. . But, for our part, we know idi ile and It's difficult to recognize oneself in the garret of this Sociology. Still in childhood, it's like us we don't yet have schools or faculties — except

. in Bordeaux where a chair was recently created |

. of sociology — where it is taught, we understand-
We don't really know how men and their...
Societies, ignoring natural laws, are still plunged into chaos, disorder and anarchy,

But little by little, we hope, men will understand these sociological laws, and societies more self-aware, will delegate freely
. ment to the administration of "public affairs", `those who have studied and explored them in depth and due their fellow citizens Kent the most WS d

Ke the most worthy.

We're not there yet, you poor thing.
mountain | How far we still have to go!
E run, Z | EUER. ue E fo ds

OLANARCHY ` | 061

Ultimately, there is nothing in "the An-`
"Archie" which cannot be supported: – apart certain blatant contradictions with the theory herself – by the republicans who remained loyal to the republican ideal and the very etymology of republicblique. `

Because "establishing an environment – which ensures to each individual possesses the entire sum of happiness.
suitable for any era, for pro- development
"The progressive decline of humanity."

What man is even slightly intelligent, | at current of the slightest notion of sociology, which does not wish to claim this formula. –

Recognize and increasingly apply the laws

natural and to freely conform to them, isn't that right?
to study and delve deeper into sociological laws, and _try to conform to it more and more by following
-]A law of evolution of which Bakunin and Reclus demand,

The only contradictions are therefore: "Revo"lution synonymous with violence," but one must not be a senior clerk to see immediately that this word, of which one wanted to create a right or a duty for anyone wants to claim it, is in contradiction with the

. the very theory of "no authority", no power-see; for to impose oneself on others by force, by the violence is falling back into the formula of those which impose themselves by authority"; it is wanting

. to violate the natural laws "which do not make

"jumps," violate the very expression of An-archy.

68 of THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM

In short, the anarchy of violence such as Some have tried to make her understand, but she cannot - not exist, or would only exist under a regime authoritarian who would impose on others and by Consequently, it would not be Anarchy.

| On this subject

We will see how the former prefect of Vie, Andrieux, abusing his position and... "a theoretical contradictions of Anarchy, suggested Ts certain attack, ct nl co dde to other p" K

gi ares gut suivirent. |

If I fought, I planned to...
In fact, I have at least facilitated disclosure. If i of their doctrines through the press, and I

I have no reason to withdraw any further. We E

| time for their recognition. H |
"The companions were looking for a landlord of funds; but the infamous capital. put no |

eagerness to respond to their call.

I pushed the infamous capital by the shoulders and I managed to persuade him that it was in his interest to promote the publication of an anarchist newspaper.

Louise Michel was the star of my editorial stafftion. I don't need to say that the great — | The citizen was unaware of the role being assigned to her d joner el I do not admit without some confusion the _ trap we had set for the innocence of some companions of both sexes" (DE

D ANDRIEUX Memories of a police prefect. |

Brof, after having reviewed the Palais BourOkay, Franco's bank, the Élysée Palace, the prefecture of the police, the Ministry of the Interior, Andrieux suggestsgóra to attack the statue of Thiers, which had just to be inaugurated in Saint-Gormain. And it was professional. bably Mr. Andricux, himself (by his faithful representative), who filed the famous "box to sardines, filled with fulmi-cotton and carefully wrapped in a handkerchief » enter the me of chair where Thiers is sitting.

SiM. Andrieux was a little stronger on psyin ology and in psycho-sociology, it would include quo it was probably him who suggested the Words spoken by Louise Michel, on May 1, 1881. which is criminal, because some acts, do little Dangerous as they were in 1881, they were able to become very dangerous later on.

We suggest the famous sardine box filled with...
of fulmi-cotton and we find it again later, Oh! How curious, incredible, what a coincidence!

deepen by who will be able to do the fair, between Emile Henry's hands, at the Terminus café.

The psycho-sociology of these incidents begins with Andrieux, in 1881, – for co was, I believe the first attack, – and ended with the dagger

Caserio; there is a chain of events there, a suggestion management, which it would be absurd to deny.

Whether those who are present or in the future,
fulfill the role of police prefects, either Therefore, educated sociologists and psychologists

ON THIS SUBJECT n and they will find that there are pro- agents among their agents evocative of roles that are absolutely dangerous for the company that p.ve them, and also probably A lot of savings can be made.

–

Embarked on a bad path, the anarchists-

The schists found themselves and felt obliged to defend or to execute in the name of their principles all those who, criminals through their attacks, spread the fear and horror.

All these contradictions, all this chaos and co Disorder in the ideas of a party, have made what Almost everyone didn't understand anything.
They didn't even try to understand the ideas des Reclus, Kropotkine, Bakounine, cte.

Thus we find in socialist France:
"We can still imagine a collectivist society where,
Capital being common property, each will have to contribute to its implementation in the mesuro of collective bosoin, But anarchy is the in-understandable.

"Anarchists proceed, whatever they may say,
of the individualistic principle. It goes against the grain.
that they proclaim themselves communists. Some nobles spirits saw anarchy in a dream. Messrs. Eli-Reclus and Kropotkin are great visionaries naires. They are the ones who serve as the party's emblem.
Anarchists. They are his representatives.

e A ; wen Jon RAPI Mei Etib Eg WB FER IRIS A Vaai A WM Roi Rit P jn iioi) active EN Ma ac egene À c cpm artt ti pU UPON UIS cri Mr rs RII state BUG AP PADS UAE EQUO TU tare ai OP
: *
* : e
THERE
+

Collectivism-Communism

Collectivism is not a fiefdom that some men can monopolize, to make a Soen pedestal, modifying it according to their fancy of the day. The theory is defined, if you will To appreciate it, one must study it down to its forced consequences, which would become reality lors do sa miso en pratiquo.

Collectivism eliminates individual property.

dual ownership and replaces it with collective ownership.

individual production, through collective production your ss X ox e 3 ww om^ wok A It socializes (expropriates) for the benefit of the community.
the soils, subsoils, factories, machines and general-element, all industrial and commercial equipment agricolo.
. “This constituted the ultimate goal pursued by the Socialismo is the collective appropriation of means of production and exchange, the organization social aspects of labor, the distribution of surplus value between the workers, deducting the quan-necessary to satisfy needs generals of the company.

“Therefore, under a collectivist regime integral – assuming, as we prejudge not, what regime should I realize one day – there terro, factories, industrial establishments, credit instruments, means of circulation and transport would belong to the community...

“Collective capital,” says Schaefllo, “should be…” assigned and appropriated, once and for all, to different groups Jo, us and professionals, ot to their subdivisions, by special bodies of the community: administrative authorities established in under the law, to popular leaders exercising. one 'Purely moral authority.' These same bodies would have to provide for the renewal and the increasementation of the means of production, Cotte diroc- - lion and this economic administration would be done public and centralized matter, and not the work of competing capital, » | From now on... the social revolution is underway. marcho: all the movement of the capital production talisto, in the sense of the socialization of work prepares ot requires socialization do the pro- privacy.

First, here is the pure theory.

Then our collectivists will try to prove that they agree with sociological laws.

"It mattered very little, in fact, that our distribution principles should be more equitable. that the currently accepted principles, if their application- This change was expected to lead to a retreat, or even a halt. in the expansion of productive forms.

"The fundamental observation that emerges throughout the entire economic history of the world, it is that a production system – whatever it may be the injustices it causes, the protests it suscito, the revolts he provokes – do not disappear never except in the face of a superior regime, no only at the point of view of abstract justice, but even more so, and especially from the point of view of pro- - social life.

c. . all the sentimental considerations that one can invoke in favor of socialism, not would not be enough to determine his emancipation real, if collectivism was not intended to
to prevail over the capitalist system because of its SUPERIOR PRODUCTIVITY (1).

“On the contrary, the entire Marxist conception is based on this fundamental idea that the trans-training on personal property ownership capitalist and capitalist property in pro-Sovialo privé, has as its determining factor the supéproductivist riorító of capitalism on the small production, of socialism on capital production:
list,

"If the autonomous producers, the mailers artisans, peasant landowners, we have a word all those who work for themselves, without to share the fruits of their labor with no one.
tend to disappear, primarily because "that

---

(1) VANDERVEI, DE. — Lo Colloctivismo et |' industrial evolution trielle, |

their energy at work is not enough to compensate the advantages of socialized work, »

How will individual property work?
transform into collective ownership? Here are four forms of land appropriation exposed in the Book by Benoit Malon — Presentation of the Schools socialists — under the article: International Collectivism national.

"4° The land could belong to collections" restricted activities or agricultural associations, such as Some factories belong to associations of industrial workers, in short, would be the generalization of corporate pro- societies duetion in the field of agriculture, including the associations in Norfolk, England, by Assington's example represents us from today the type. These associations are gónérareading, becoming the rule instead of the exception that they are currently tending towards so-

Dariser, could distribute the land rent do in order to level the conditions for each of them of exploitation. (Here, among these English farmers, Collective work therefore precedes ownership.
collective.)

_“2 As the conditions for good cultivation require that the operation have at least one extent of a square league (see Fournier as well as (Proudhon in his new theory of property), we can predict that the system of associations agricultural practices would lead to the pooling of resources

ne non mit UP ptt AD diti ee nt head E Mete rro MOLAR "geben Sueno AERA rp UA e RR MORIR
has

lands of the commune. Each rural commune could therefore constitute only one association.
tion agricolo (without doubt more or less indus.
(trielle at the same time) and the ground so find pro.
The collective property of the municipality. The municipality Russo offers us today a typo do this forma of collective property, bion that often culture is not developed there through association, but by family. (Here, therefore, in the Slavic commune, the Collective ownership precedes collective culture.

"30 Lo sol could be collective property"
of all agricultural groups in a nation or a confederation of nations, with the high centralized territorial management into the hands of a council, appointed by the various groups of farmers. This state of affairs would offer great ease for the execution of major drainage works, including land clearing, of reforestation, irrigation. It's towards this state quo was obviously tending Proudhon in 1858, when he proposed, by a law, that when through the accumulation of annuities, the owner would be returned to the value of his building, increased of a 20 percent bonus as an indemnity, the property reverted to the Central Agricultural Society culture responsible for centralizing the exploitation of territory, power to provide, through the creation of local agricultural companies, to the organization of Agriculture. (See revolutionary ideas.)

"4° Finally, arable land could be the property"

national, as are today a large number of forests; but by the federation of peoples, whose international association is lo prelude and. the embryo, this. nationalization of the land, as the English say, would in fact the collective appropriation of the land by the grandee a hardworking and civilized society (we mean this word in its true sense, not in the meaning given to it by the phalansterians), would be what Robert du Var calls socialization of land ownership. Certainly, strictly speaking-Reusemont, co no would not yet be the property collective from the soil to humanity, since so much peoples still, especially in Asia, Africa and in Oceania, are outside the civilizing movement-a reformer who is sweeping Europe along New World; but one must not be a prophet to dare to claim that these peoples will either disappear by way of extinction in the face of vital competition better-endowed peoples, or else those will enter-even in the current of European civilization Americano: in both cases, the land, collectively owned by society, becomes from humanitarian property.........

"Let's say then that, if we place ourselves outsidesively from the point of view of a slow evolution and progressive, the first three forms of approach-collective prayer of the ground seems to us to be a gradual preparation, a path towards the fourth form, the most general and the last;

But let us hasten to add that we, who admit. tons of intervention in social phenomena

do cot element quo l'Egalité de Genèvo o appelle :
"The considered will of organized workers"
that we have apologized the Social Revolution, we are rather inclined (when we see how everything is rushing us towards a cataely sine of which the Paris Commune was only the prelude) to to think that we will not go through these various phases, but which will be established plainly.
system of social collective ownership by a liquidation proceeding by way of appropriation for public utility, with compensation, without any No doubt, for small, hardworking landowners, but perhaps without compensation towards the rich idle rentiers and the high barons of modern land feudalism (1).

It is also by placing oneself in the point of view of the higher yield, produced with the minimum d:
work and toil, which will be installed the hearts national sines.

“Lo Teinps, after explaining that only one of the stoves in question... to produce up to ninety million rations per year, pro clamo that therein lies salvation for dela- stomachs brethren of our contemporaries. Removal of the in-intermediaries, division of labor, purchase of dent-wholesale, minimizing costs
— manipulation and cooking.” — This communism

— (4) French Socialist Schools, B. Matos, p. 203, food has all the advantages, even time that it alone allows to finish with an empi-a rism as deadly as it is ruinous, yet to be tackled scientifically. — (it has been established that it was necessary to average for an adult and per day 100 to 120 grams of albumin, 30 to 60 grams of fat and 500 to 600 grams of hydrated carbon), — the serious problem with human nutrition to the point from the perspective of general health, the race, its strength and its yield.

“The resulting superior yield for the ma-human China of a more hygienic diet and more substantial, naturally had to be included among the foremost considerations that have been who ultimately bourgeois individualism at this transformation of food preparation into general service in the same way as education.....

“But whatever the mother cantile motive of the conversion of Time ct of its caste.

e In'en reste pas moins acquis, do l'aveu mêmo of the most ardent anti-communists:

"1? That the domestic hearth, as such boil-their pot, is condemned like a mod inferior ct insufficient repairs of the forces humans;

e 2? That the communal stove which gives rise to the controls, disinfects the enlarged dwelling, and crec

to humanity, leisure time is always better used either to personal hygiene or to reading, 1

either to physical exercises, is not alone.
the future, but the beautiful and lovely present;

"3* That the much-hated communists, that one referred to Sparta and its black broth, were,
on this point as on all others, prices.
eursours, having known how to clear the way YR lutive of their time.

_“And that’s enough for you for now.”

"Captain Wat's public kitchens to the social cuisine we are calling for, there is no that one step, which he will not fail to take the next workers' revolution (1). »

It is also interesting to know how to use-

will function the national kitchens.
_“It is a truly admirable thing that at:
Today... a thousand national cuisines, nourishing
ehaeuno more than a thousand people. could have said, open at the same time. To be honest, the one who he imagined he would be fed in those kitchens national as well as at the Grand's guest tables Hotel in the time when a voluptuous bourgeoisie
The killer stuffed herself with delicacies, must have to find disappointed. Naturally, there is also no:
in the kitchens of our socialized society, of boys in black suits, not dressed to the nines, | neither do word cards longuc d'uno auno ni au-
very small things. — |

"Everything is regulated there, even in its most per detail; no one is favored in the least

(Jules Gursne. — Socialism Day by Day, p. 370 cts)

world Qux depends on others, We don't naturally-there is no choice between the various cuisines; each one has the right to eat what in the district or is located in his new home. The main meal-Cipal goes out from noon to six o'clock in the evening, Each registers at their respective kitchen, either through the inter-
-valle do repos which is granted to him in the middle of his work, or for the time when his work is finished.
Unfortunately, on Sundays, I can't eating with my wife as usual for twenty-five years, because our working hours are completely different.

"Upon entering the dining room, you do detach from your passbook by the accountant a cou-A pon of food and you receive one in exchange
The number that designates your series. As soon as... seats are located at the tables and it's your turn Come on, you'll take your portion from the bullet.

"Originally," our neighbor told us, "the kitchen."
nière, we wanted to offer a choice in each kitchen sino, various words, such that the choice gradually became restricted for the latter,
niers arrived, as the dishes ran out.
But we soon became convinced that it would be a injustice towards those who could not come that late at the restaurant because their time of work would occupy the previous hours (1).

The day when the buildings of large cities and
The little ones will be socialized; we will have to take care of them.

A Qi 1 mèno The So: ialism (loc, cil.).

to distribute justice and equality as best as possible; - Richter shows us this distribution at ` the day after the social revolution.

We will also be attending the big move.
and Richter showed us how the furniture that The wealthy cluttered their homes.
right up to the rooftops, how is this overproduction which produces the congestion of stores (1), so well highlighted by the collectivists in their speech (listen to Zévaës) no sullisisant pas, on en is reduced, to everyone's great disappointment, to check what the great socialist Bebel had always said it was written:

"The household will be reduced to the bare minimum."

So what good is the Social Revolution, damn it?
collectivism, if we are reduced "to "strictest necessary"; today we have at least the freedom to work or to do nothing and the one who wants to work more has at least the hope of benefiting from it, but with collectivism Not at all, we'll only give you one medal as a reward to the children of schools. — So, what's the point of working, if you don't give of the pain; as good as sharing the house if prithe myth of Corsican shepherds or sleeping under the . tent of the nomadic Arabs and "sleep with your head on a stone for the candor of silvery nights.

(1) We particularly recommend reading c Ricuten's book, Where leads lo socialismo, Paris, IH L bookstore:
Soudier, 175, boulevard Saint-Germain,

Collectivism is the regime of idleness, – It's a reward for laziness; at the top, it's the famino, the hideous famine.

The only exclamation one could utter to the complete and summarized exhibition of their documents – Arines, by comparing the forced consequences of their theories, with the current state of societies modern, with the look of the grand boulevards in “ordinary time, and the Champs-Elysées one day What is a grand prize?

These people are crazy!!

We have developed quite clearly, I lo think about it, the dm system, it's about relay.

The absurdity of their ideas is immediately apparent: but Finally, there might be some kind of optical illusion. since men to whom one cannot deny All intelligence has been taken in by it; since `

smooth talkers, passing for great dialectLieiens accept these ideas as truths – shown and try to spread them; it is not enough

Not to proclaim them absurd, one must demonstrate more fully than they are.

The questions that arise are these: |

Are human aspirations in favor of — Collectivism? Zu

Is the evolution of property in this PO direction

Would production be higher as | They claim so?

–. "First of all, although our socialists declare

i that social transformations should not to be of a sentimental nature (where do they take that the feeling should have nothing to do with evolution i
. of peoples). EE + E
The question is whether the islands PERSA RENTAL are heading more towards the collective soul than towards the individual.
However, the socialists, along with Vandervelde, note, that the number of small landowners and small -
The number of traders is increasing daily.
... "If you look at the statistics again, you will find-
- you will see that their number increases year after year, that the small retailer, product of the division of | = work, is proliferating more and more; than in the especially in large cities, the army of shopkeepers | becomes innumerable. » (1). - cm.
—. Small shopkeepers, small property owners They are proliferating more and more, so there must be a sociological law that governs this evolution;
This shows that they have a desire for independence.
of individuality that drives them to do so, —

We have seen in times past ct in modern societies of people practicing the come Communism, these heroes nevertheless had... rays sounds far more powerful than the unbelievers of the future to be lived together. Despite this, the

"hommos who have taken refuge in these communities,

H Socialismo et Collectivism. (OR have never been more than a tiny minority, it's could not argue that, except for a few exceptions tions, it would have been the elite of society, "intelligent,

the strong ones.
Moreover, there are many who were there!
led in the hope of conquering paradise in the other world, which is something that will not aspire to Socialists. The vast majority went because that they were vanquished, beings who renounced They were opposed to all independence, to all spirit of freedom.
in the hope of having the assurance of daily bread
. dien. Are these last M's the ideal?
of the future.
There may be dissatisfied people who, noticing - their poverty, while they see around them two other men possessing enormous wealth, they only want one thing, and that is to turn everything upside down der, they do not see, in elTet, in the change generally, that a more expeditious means of acquiring what they do not have; they are therefore not at all enamored with an ideal of truth, they see only one thing, to possess in turn what is in the hand of neighbor; they return despite their superficial appearance rence, in the category of those who want to possess-Seder or those who possess. If the socialist leaders, based on this idea, that these dissatisfied people

The underprivileged are the most numerous and will become The strongest ones, they play a dirty game, because they... will obviously bring chaos, without being able to stop it.
tomorrow we will restore what they proclaim order. The masters of tomorrow having purely ct simply replaced the owners of the

The day before, there would only be one more revolution, from the | Human blood spilled and another century lost.

We have just observed that in the cities,
perhaps an immoderate love of his independence, | the fact that small retailers are proliferating more and more, - that the army of shopkeepers becomes countless.

Let's now see what the aspiration of the peasant farmer.

If we study the agricultural statistics of In different countries, it is noted that, unlike - what happened in England, the small exploit-Far from disappearing, the phenomenon has rather a slight tendency to develop: corn, these are only there statistical figures that Dous must maintain-to interpret.

Therefore, he suffers more than he benefits from everything.
rising wheat prices; not selling the
He does not face competition from the products of his land.
and rest outside of modern centralist tendencies dernes; if he is so attached to his property, it is because it ensures him a minimum of social independence; Therefore, there is no sacrifice he will not make for keep it; that explains the price of small properties is relatively higher than that of the big ones.

"Also in the current crisis are the exploits" stations that employ workers who are the
the "m m" while those where the family _ can at E) alone suffice for the work to resist better they seem to be thriving; and this exploitative average-plots of 5 to 20 hectares whose prosperity makes the

The conservative's joy is noticeably growing.
` e No more competition from large farms - crushes the peasant, the more he persists in "Hh more d He works hard and for a long time. - i
- - ,.. But the fanaticism of property, the exhaustion i to become, by abandoning his land, a proletarian silence. . ... (1) »? E
Do you believe these theorists take into account
Not at all this "property fanaticism."
How could they make it acceptable, since
The vast majority of men are looking for it!
`their independence and freedom of action in increasing in major cities "the army of shopkeepers who become countless" and to the . campaign "the current trend towards fragmentation

and agricultural spraying » » which means that the peasant "is so attached to his property because it ensures a minimum of social independence, and that there is no sacrifice he will not make for the

. keep. " ,
...That these same men: die Gel:
op cries out to them the horror of the "industrial prisons"
to believe that these same bags would be ideal under the collectivist or communist regime. And when we observe the prosperity of the average farms | agricultural holdings of 5 to 20 JAR ct

OI Kant, born. - Amlyse d Mare el Lan Irieu. |

the peasant's love for his small possessions, he is dead to claim that the future of agriculture is the large agricultural industry that would transform the | peasants of small landowners that they - are in

"Social workers" working in penal colonies agricultural workers who will be "capitalists"
would then become electivists or communists.

Far from realizing they are on the wrong track,
Our good socialists are looking for arguments drawn by the hair, they take circuitous routes.

hypnotized as they are by wanting to demonstrate the `

the possibility of their nonsense.

Thus: "Some socialists wanted to see in the farmer's debt, the element m
"of agriculture."

Where is this debt of the peasant? dan:
our admirably well cultivated countryside of the Loire Valley, where one sees rising dass each canton has superb savings banks
"made to drain etc. or that the growers:"
would do much better to employ themselves in improving their well-being, rather than using it to sell off public officials, social welfare institutions.

I don't really see it.

And there is such love there, such a beten: that these Poor socialists, not understanding anything, were completely taken aback.

that they are, by their fixed idea, treating the peasants of boors and mock what they call:
"The fanaticism of property."

Poor, unintelligent minds, while uge mehr

Observant country folk learn to: shoot the consequences of the facts they observe, this which tends to instill in them a scientific mind, the superficial city dweller does not try to delve deeper and repeats everything a bit, like a pue without |
to understand.

The poor things! They can't understand that "This fanaticism for property" is a need, because all these theorists, literary figures, more or less less skilled, have absolutely no sense of observation

vation, they built their theories in the garrets of a capital city they have never beyond the fortifications, and they have no awareness of what nourishes them and what they are products of nature.

For the vast majority of them, the SI arable is everything, man, his intelligence, his initial, its order, is nothing or almost nothing.
We sow with a sower, we reap with a reaper.
We drain the land and plow with a "steam-powered subsoiler".
This is the Earth, this planet of immensity, brings out from its depths wonders, which must be to everyone as well, since this planet is a person there is no particular right to it.

Unfortunately, that's not entirely the case.
So. The farmer loves his land, and rightly so.
Because he loved her, he cared for her like his mistress; or She is often sullen and rebellious, to embellish her
He must take every precaution with regard to her; 3
Hence his jealousy, hence his love.

Our socialists are therefore making a phenomenal begging the question. They say: the social system
The current situation is profoundly unjust — it always has
It has been like this, and it will certainly never be perfect.
— it needs to be completely transformed:
Revolution as a means, and Revolution as a remedy,
the collectivist-communist regime; and assuming Having accomplished their revolution, they depict the beauties of their system, forget only one cliosis, It's about pointing out its flaws and gathering information.

if the aspirations of men are with them,

Even if the current social system is perfect, we

We are far from claiming that. If it were perfect, we would not have these revolutionary upheavals;
but that all citizens, that the very
The vast majority want to fundamentally transform it into The height of it is what we deny; it has been It's easy to demonstrate.
= That it is in the best interest of society to that the system of individual property be Deleted, we prove the contrary.

As for the sets, and the beautiful oratorical passages or epistolary, to socialist and capita pamphlets.
Lists are not arguments.

On this subject, let us quote this page from Jules Lemaitre: 2 EE

| | March 6, 1901.

“We are rejecting, not socialism (the
The word is flexible, and it has come to mean sin-
...plement, or the state of mind of those who are sincerely concerned with social justice, that is the

a system of legislation that would ensure workers-theirs a little more of this justice); but we Let us reject collectivism, that is to say, the "social-"Jisation" and the pooling of all the wealth, capital, land, mines, factories, instruments - work arrangements, and the entire political system social that would derive from it.

“We reject collectivism because it is based on a false idea, on optimism absurd, based on a total lack of understanding of the human nature and things as they are.
One would only be feasible if all men
They were good, courageous, and selfless. But you...
You know what most men are like: I ninsiste done pas.

"Let's suppose it were done, though. That would be the
The most unbearable of tyrannies. It would be the panburcaueratie, panofficialism, mediocrity general criterion: the death of individual initiative A vast prison under surveillance, lavishly remuneration, prison guards, inspectors and distributors of labor. And, like waste would be enormous, as the production cost would exorbitant, as, consequently, any struggle would be impossible against the competition of labor foreign, it would very quickly be the ruin of industry. national sorting.

“We are pushing back the collectible again”

p that the collectivists n we 3 are too well known,

KM

It can be said, in general, that, as men, they are not the most recommended thingdevable in the nation. — A very learned professor. sister and philosopher, — who is not suspected of... neither electricianism nor timidity of mind, since it is the author of studies, somewhat offensive, on the The nervous system of Jesus Christ and Joanna: d'Are, — was saying recently in front of me: "I have “I believed in the dream of collectivism, but I have I'm disgusted, because the collectivists are lacking "Through excessive virtue." In other words, there are among them, a bit too many sinister jokers or even of simple rascals. I'm talking, of course, about the leaders, and not the mass of the ignorant whom they abuse and exploit. These ringleaders. will not accept, in the collective city, the the condition of a worker. They fully expect that they would be "of the administration"; that they would enjoy preferential treatment; that they would monitor the enormous workshop, not for free, And, in the meantime— They live off collectivism; they derive from it... resources and a political situation.

Their business seems to be going well. They have the government for them. They are already in the gougovernment. From there, the most violent overexcitement and a wild hope in the world of the working class. Strikes are proliferating; a general strike has been decided. if the government does not have the power to impose to the bosses the conditions of the St. federation.

"If we go back five years, we notes that there has been: |

"Under the Méline ministry, which lasted more than two years, 858 strikes, or an average of 33 per month;

"Under the ministries of Brisson and Dupuy (a (annual total) 457 strikes, or 38 per month; ^ "Under the Waldeck-Millerand ministry, a After 19 months, there were 1,362 strikes, or 72 strikes per months, ct, notice it, larger ct more prolonger than those of previous ministries,

"And what kinds of strikes?"

"When the strike is motivated by questions-
"salary or length of the workday"
"Work, we understand that the workers have it"
"recourse and that the government cannot do anything about it"
"grand'ehose.
But, for the past few months, these have been strikes.
"Provoked primarily for political reasons."
"Chaloni, a worker, did not hesitate to declare "that voluntary unemployment did not have for
: objective: an improvement of working conditions,
"but rather to activate the social revolution, this one"
"having to put everything back in order, if we are to believe him."
"its true place."

a Such a state of mind does not occur suddenly-
"lying and without reason. The worker must be "brought about by a series of sermons, and that,
"On the other hand, he has the feeling that he has nothing to do with it."
"fear of power."

BANKRUPTCY | OF THE SOCIALIST

"This preaching, the current ministry is useless."
"rage, and those who indulge in it are publicly They were claimed by him as his friends. Without them,
"Besides, everyone knows perfectly well that he doesn't "Couldn't live. Necessity chains him to "Them as much as sympathy." (Jules Dot-

€ MERGUE, » |
"This is where we are. Enemies"

declared individual property — of this property that the entire Civil Code aims to guarantee — were the government's official candidates who is the custodian and guardian of this Code.
This had never been seen before. And we hadn't We've seen no sign of the government being incapable either.
to ensure freedom of labor for people who pay the tax, but it is guaranteed to them, between others, that freedom, breaking away in this way, vis-à-vis a whole group of citizens, the pact that binds him to French taxpayers.

"In short, what is being prepared and what is already Come This began, particularly in Marseille, and it was annihilationthe state of French industry and commerce. However, when our commerce and industry will
The dead, I wonder how our workers. I'm afraid of the mines, the factories.
metallurgical, railways and raflinc-socialized ries, — and directed by what poli-
"Chinelles!" — many misfortunes await them.
Industrialists, traders, small landowners ynraux, workers who want to work and live,

D
` : md

For all of you, collectivism is the enemy.
Collectivism would be a step backwards, a reactionary tion, the regression towards a social state inferior to the state current, however imperfect and even pitiful it may be again, — and, finally, the ruin of France.

In a recent discussion on this topic — (such as that it is easy for you to obtain, dear reader, at the (town as in the countryside) — a lady, the mai-braid of a very distinguished young man, attached to an enviable position in one of our ministries more. in sight, he exclaimed, taking sides in the dis-percussion: "Me, I'm not asking for much, I would only like to own the little one apartment I live in, it would be I think
"All fairness, and I wouldn't be greedy."

What a young and very brilliant sub-prefect - replied: "But dear lady, this demonstration-
- the expression of your desire precisely legitimizes the individual property. Indeed, under the collective ownership system tivist or communist, no one would be pro-owner, you could not even be conces-Zionist — (for life, assuming you do desired) — from your apartment, because with your friend, you currently have two charming appearances richly furnished apartments, including six beautiful bedrooms, two kitchens, two bathrooms, two toilets, all with the latest comforts Water, gas, electricity. But if you want to take the time to take a look at the brochure cited above: "Where does socialism lead?"

W

96 ës pen PAILLITE pU SOCIALISM

`you will see that this one would not give you a thousand-
. ment satisfaction. IE SM
. . But you forgot in your gimmicks: |
. eiales. The Italian woman who serves as your maid: this young woman.
lady who is not lacking in a certain beauty,
nor intelligence, as every good Italian is an anarchist

...shit; perhaps she's outdoing her boss,

| probably also, she was born in this Lombardie from one of those peasant families where swarming.
slow twelve to fourteen children and who not having - food available on site — qe to a |
The only thing to do is to move abroad.
But this Italian woman is right — (she who has three E's (or four children already) — there are many of you.
too rich in comparison, and if you are not < satisfied with the portion Richter described to you,

B, this woman would find it momentarily fair

= ment. a
But this Italian woman from Paris, well-fed " well paid, having her man in the same . conditions, carefully raises his offspring el

Slowly, very slowly it's true, save your energy, - And nothing will stop him when the stimulation has ^» sufficiently driven to diligent work and to the scatter-gne de s'olrir une petite maison beaucoup plus
-as comfortable as your apartment. Surrounded by a small garden, outdoors in oxygenated air, in the countryside, a Parisian location, served by the metro

- electric trams.

Hard work, domestic economy.

Mv
. iie oce
GRE dens

Saving is indeed the simplest solution to achieve your desire. For, if we had continued-By making the comparison, we would have seen that this Italian proletarian anarchist of Paris — (who (wrong to be an anarchist for the same reason) — - is just a well-fed bourgeois woman compared to her brothers and sisters who remained in Lombardy, in Naples-taine and in Sicily, as well as a Florentine me Island recently recounted near Pisa: "These Italians, he said, marry very young, the woman
The girl is 17 or 18 years old, the man is 19 or 20; they don't have on the evening of their wedding, a valiant penny, the shirt that the woman carries on her back, was given to her by the lady who employed him in Florence, at a rate of 8 to 12 francs per month; they have no mother of their own.
a cot to sleep on — it is true that they could-will do as the Arab of Onésime Reclus (1).
In one or two years, they will already have Children crying out in hunger, and it will be so despite all the evolutions of the collectivists and the anarchists, until they evolved to the point where...
level of the social condition of current Parisians.
Indeed, a collectivist or anar- revolution A schist in Paris would be a huge setback for its inhabitants, without any benefit whatsoever to these Lombards and these penniless and homeless Neapolitans who mass, would immediately take the train — (gra(illustrates in a collectivist or communist regime) — and.
renewing the Danaids' barrel would disgorge

(1) See further in our chapter Colofilsatjoji at | rs Ké

- HAS St ME
e, E EC 4^5
m LI
Note H

without cesso their territories with tris pra population.
lifi que sur Paris infernd.

And Paris would become a non-Sicily! Because an
In the name of what principles, our internationalists — (the stateless, like Professor Hervé) would they refuse them hospitality?

Let's not continue with this table. If we were to...
to search for these 250 million starving Hindus, 80 nourishing, every day of their holy year,
cooked in water; these Australians, cited in chapter.
IT clown and these natives from the banks of the Ogoou:, Poor Paris, what would become of you?

Why, then, with a feeling of much more grand generosity, not to cease immediately enslaving brutally our inferior brothers who do not lack Neither intelligence nor conscience. Why not not to give up feasting on bloody flesh of these beings who have as many rights as we do freedom, in the infinity of worlds and times.

There is therefore no doubt about it: in the city as in the countryside, the desire of each individual is to acquire independence; to shake off all guardianship and that is why innocuousvulnerable people are leaving advantageous jobs where they are under guardianship, in commerce, industry, agriculture, drudgery, to settle down on a small scale shopkeepers, where their profits will be much less tall.

| Cello aspiration pousso óv idemment vers Vindi- |
H | dissension and individual property.

Secondly: the evolution of property will-her journey from individual property to communism - or, on the contrary, of joint or undivided property IF -personal property. — = — If The answer to cetto p" is morveillousomont 8
-fito by Proudhon: (1).

The third question is this: production

Would it be superior? Marxists answer this question.

nutritionally. They posit this as obvious.
formula: "It would be quite important, indeed, to..."
that our distribution principles be more equi- u tables that the currently accepted principles, if — their application was supposed to bring about a step backward, or memo

"a stop, in the expansion of the forms ae |

| lives.oi

All the sentimental considerations that one |

E few invoked € in favor of socialism would not suffice `

not... if collectivism was not intended to
to prevail over the capitalist system, because of its —
| superior production (2) Of d

We don't want to just create the Vid industrio

| capitalist, not under certain conditions and in some respects more productive than —

My little one, but as they (the socialists) pro-

However, this is not ideal and it is certainly not dag the future, since we see. as we

---

(1) See page 107 and further on in our chapter on Agriculture.
8 VANDESVELDE, . — - Loc, cit. | | |

As we said earlier, men flee from that they can, these industrial prisons,

But since modern men have horror of exploitation and that they flee dis that they can, the industrial prisons for to settle down, small shopkeepers, small farmers, small market gardeners, it does not follow that one must transform individual property into procollective privacy, on the contrary; that would prove even less than these operating centers, "These capitalist prisons" must become "Collectivist prisons."

They say production would be higher.

That's false. It's impossible that men whose working hours will be reduced, traValiant 8 hours at the Licu do 11, will produce moretage; much better, as they won't have any new masters dismissing them whenever they want to stroll 1; they will stroll, and like the supervisors - (foremen) will be elected by the workers, they will have no power over them; It will be certainly to whoever can stroll the most.

What advantage would some have in showing off? Their zeal wouldn't make them any richer in the end. the year, and we wouldn't dare distribute crosses to them

= like schoolchildren; would we give them some kind of advantage over others, but immediately the inequality of our social system current so would reproduce. — —

Moreover, it is absolutely false to read that the ` Large estates are more productive than smallholdings.

The exact opposite is true: a farmer will take better care of his plot of land the more he is to him and that it is proportional to his strength or to Edles from the whole family reunited. That's what Kropotkin himself notes, when speaking of the cul-tivators do Jorsoy and back maratchers back surroundings ` from Paris, who make the bull produce the maximum decor that it can produce. = — a

Therefore, production would decrease.
not only because of reduced working hours clouds, but above all do co that the stimulation to who will do the most to earn more, in ` the current society, would be replaced by the principle Së of the collectivist penal colony, to whom will it be made

| less.

Don't come saying, but there are some aid designs-Interested parties: (Vandervelde).
Yes, certainly there are environments where Your current practice of communism very selfless people, and we could I will take as an example, to the right and to the left |
a few personalities. | B
This reminds me of my great-aunt Françoise.
Hémon, whom I quoted at the beginning of this book, which died president of this small Republic, the Convent of the Incurables of Baugé. "23
— But I will never forget what she told me once the last few times I saw her. "If I hadn't -

I didn't believe in the afterlife, in its eternal bliss, ph

NG Gë WAS BANKRUPT by SOCIALISM |

Do you think I would have given 57 years of my life like that?
existence ",

This means that in this deinterossome

| splendid. which makes certain women into saints,

There is the conquest of eternal bliss, - E

B Now, our collectivist-communists are _ atheists, and I don't see that they will be able to promise To those who are overzealous, lo poras dans dag world.

Lya is doing well today, with her brains ready.
d. interested, though atheist, rather sparsely populated I believe that "there are, however, a few of them, I
I will take, for example, Louise Michel, but I will add-

I would say that there is a fixed idea there, a personal raoralonolle, a — KA a person has Dog of fill. -

These are very rare exceptions.
As for me, who works unusual hours:
I am driven by a temperament that loves to The discussion is excessive, and I'm obsessed with this.
. the idea of wanting to prove that it is possible to cons-
to build a social structure far superior to the current one without social revolution. I am therefore not naive - to do things differently. — c
But in the collectivist regime, where should I According to theorists, the goal will be achieved.
- the long-sought oasis, reached, the golden age returned On Earth, there will be no reason to do any zeal or to masturbate the mind nw to seek a improved social condition. - m

Obviously, if ever collectivism
e 'implantait, co que nous no croire pas, la société |

would immediately enter into regression.
. This society, however, is making progress in progress and we applaud the formula of Frédéric Bastiat: "I believe that the invincible ten-Social dance is a constant approximation men towards a common physical level, intellectual and moral, as well as an element-progressive and indefinite valorization of this level."
It is therefore quite evident that in a col-In a lectivist view, industrial production would be absolute.
nil lument.

We've just had a general overview | on the aspirations of collectivism and communism. | |
What do they want in a country like France?
Transforming a social system that conforms to the law of evolution, that is to say where everyone struggles for existence is stimulated, produces ct works as much as possible, in its own interest and in at the same time for the greatest wealth and for the improvement of humanity, (because the most gifted The fittest have a greater chance of growing and of - resist) — in a system where stimulation, the

the struggle for existence would be abolic, where the days -

work would be reduced more and more, where Ideally, one would work and consequently... to produce as little as possible, the flâneur being entirely there as rich at the end of the year as the worker economical, since the economy that produces the hospital would no longer exist, would have no value; that is.
to say a society where humanity would enter into regression Zion.
In the first case, overproduction, excess production 4 to who will do the most, coqui, — Ultimately, it is nothing but wealth since it allows anyone who works to afford the necessary sail and often achieve luxury (progress).
In the second case, extreme reduction of | the production, the formula being what would make it hands, result: scarcity, famine, return to the past (regression).
It is useless to say for which system we are. -

They arrived in Paris penniless, and they didn't manage to get to ' — | bd of several million that by force n!

and dirty dealings. — = |
— With regard to such people, there would only be one
The remedy, the lynching law. Unfortunately in

. immense modern cities, where nobody

...eonnalt, the reckless exploitation of man

| m The man: there is nothing extraordinary about him. These vast

08 ra PAILLITE DU SOCIALISM

In urban areas, we already see them UNDER certain conditions.
certain social influences enter into regression

This is how bands of "Apaches" operate there.

and Lecea, dos Manda, dos Casque-d'Or, are sung about by decadent newspapers and journalists, glori linked by painters, in quest for popularity
- These monstrosities could not take place in ` a society such as we defend. Co n'est.

not in our countryside, in our centers of —
...colonization, as we will describe them later that we would see such crimes.

But from the same source as individual property. and `
sometimes unfair; because society, in some ways,

The point of view is atrocious; must we therefore...
To completely overhaul?
Having weighed all these arguments, Proudhon, in

— came to say: Individual property, as it is practiced in France, made a demonstration of it:

eratie; while its particularly i ini- form - in England, made of this country, uno Ch gen arislo- |

. cracy and bourgeois.

He added: "Property is the greatest B
...a revolutionary force that exists and that... can...

= to oppose power. —

Italy was beautiful, rich, populous and see as long as it was cultivated by its owners; it _ became deserted and pestilent when the master left

I spent his immense income in Rome. And the ` three mœut fell with the culture; but the law is A. Thus he did it, she allows it, Here is one of the great abuse of | property been. Well, let's take it, with its abuses, and let us leave there divided, fragmented, the divipushed as far as the owner wants - to keep quiet; but it is necessary that the property circulate with man as a commodity, as a monnate. Immediately everything will change through the virtue of ma-

The only word for it is: property. That's how it is. that our species arose from the undivided te-nothing to do with the high civilization of property.
We cannot turn back.

The property and the owner must absolutely free; that is why the citizen in As long as he works, produces, owns, he is not one.
state official; "he is not beholden to anyone,
does what he wants, disposes of everything as he pleases will please. And it is in the country where this reigns individual autonomy, this proprietorshipto keep silent, that there is the most wealth and virtues,”

Closer to home, our great philosopher, - Alfred Fouillée, studying property (1) said:
"A truly scientific theory of property"
should be as non-sectarian and as broad as it is possible, equal in its elements to the elements essentials of reality itself, capable as the reality of becoming endlessly more complicated in its consequences without contradicting or destroying each other,

also capable of reconciling them, their data relative truths, the various doctrines upheld
"Until this day."

"m The social proprietorship and democracy, Paris Hachette, 1881. |

"In France especially, democracy will not be able to to live only on the condition of being neither a socialist, nor purely individualistic like the Republic American, but to maintain and increase cn facing individual property, all forms legitimate aspects of social ownership.

“Instead of tending to divest itself of all this that he possesses or may possess, the principles of Economic science authorizes the State, in contrast private and still sacred property, to be formed
'uno propriété collectivo, to increase it, to employ it or benefit the greatest number. The State will be able to thus increasingly replacing taxes, which weigh most heavily on the masses, resources that are voluntarily lent to him, or rather ` which are the natural income of the property

public. » |

And Mr. Alfred Fouilléo concluded: "Thus It is liberalism, of course, that provides the...
the most philosophical solution to the problem, ear it leave their fair share and their book to these three equally legitimate forms of ownership: the pro–
isolated individual properties, the individual properties associated visual assets, and finally public property and social. One could summarize economic liberalism as – mique in this formula: — Free individuals
"owners in the free state of ownership."

We will add this variant: — The individual and the local authorities that own property, in the municipality and in the state of ownership.

PROPERTY E IL
We will immediately put this formula into practice.
-HAS
In the issue of La Petite République of {see March 1902, Mr. Jaurès, analyzing an article do Mr. Jules Douinergito, of the "Economic Reform" triumph, or rather believes he is triumphing, in his collectivism or in its communism by emphasizing-gnant lo passage suivant «Lo gouvernement Germans have a sense of and concern for the national interest, He knows about the coal issue, like that Transportation is vital for industry. And After nationalizing the railways, he will - nationalize the mines. This will allow him to, while ` ensuring German workers conditions of favorable work, helping to develop - the industry.

And he adds: "Yes, it's admirable. And here are the conservatives who now recognize that he This is in the interest not only for the workers, but - for national production, to be transformed into "Public services, capitalist services."
"Mr. Doumergue, had he suddenly become collectivist? » | mE
But no! and Jaurès is astonished to see ensuiteo

a full-throttle attack against the socialists. - He is surprised to see Doumergue criticizing the speech-

French people who voted for a limit on hours of work in the mines, thus further aggravating the situation.
the conditions of our industry. - |
Come on, enough of this nonsense, TA these b

DP |

PEPPER EI TIE
Re, mn 32M a Nette A are pr mA P Ea SA We Rr ot T

words to certain ambitious (0) who fluctuate exploiting human credulity, to achieve power and who applaud collectivism in practice-as for mental restrictions following the method

dear to the Jesuits (2).

Collectivism is something quite different from a nation-the development of mines and railways; this is the inferior social order which, if it were to become established, due to human ignorance or power central usurped by surprise or violence we would lead to a state of regression.

At the intersection of nationalizing the mines, it would be perhaps much more logical and above all less annoying for society, to ask that these will one day become collective property minors, without any individual being taken into account abolition of private property, such as

As we saw earlier, it's a return to a

(1) It is interesting to read a very witty article by Mr. Léon Daudet, published in La Libre Parole on March 16, 1902, here is one passage: "Baron Millerand, who has been so fond of literature since that a volume was published on his grand ministry for three francs fifty, nodded, on a neck swollen with fresh meats, united head or hold all the regime's projects and all the farces:

The people's deceivers, but hampered by a hiccup he did not speak

| point. »

(2) It is pleasant to find oneself in good company. In I:

In the March 8, 1902 issue of Bios, Clemenceau says: e Ea fout cas

Why bother with the socialization of instruments?

work and class struggle if it's to throw them to the wolves:
By moving into the ministry? What's the point of leaving so noisily?

the radical socialists, claiming that they have the advantage over them of:

solving the social question, if it's just to fumble modestly among those after having been awarded the title of revolutionary

The ministry's approach has been calmed.

ZEE PROPERTY AND
n particular n° n yi a personal right of ownership;
that is to say, a mine that cannot be exploited
that by a community is the personal property new and inalienable of those who work there or They will work later; managing, administering trant, lying down with his stomach in the sun or in the shade, Working two, four, eight, twelve or fifteen hours, at night, during the day, as they see fit.
` without the state having anything to do with it, except for inspection from the point of view of general security and hygiene.
In short: give them the look, and let them...
leave peace with their general strike (3).
We could also "design: a mine, pro-collective community; which would not prevent a other > to be administered directly by the state;

"TA ca sujet, nous nous séuveséns d'un article paru daus lo — Morning, and signed by Mr. Harduin: There may be an idea in ` — the following letter signed Gucugnier. “Former worker sixty Fourteen years old — I've seen many crises, and always the organizations — Their strike leaders remained agitators. Why instead Didn't they tell the miners to organize the disorganization?
_ * You are 190,000 (120,000 able-bodied workers), mix -
. in a common fund, one penny per day, or 7,500 francs, Three hundred days of work will yield 2,250,000 francs.

In five or ten years, the minors would be in a state of organization.
^ an operation that would become all the more prosperous "quo

Each worker and employee would work for himself and for his brothers.

— See what we would achieve by continuing and accumulating the benetices of the exploitations, — Lo sort des mincurs no serait-il
This could not be seriously improved without revolution, without plunder.
— The fact is that this process might be the best for

To make this idea currently considered utopian is which is called Ja mine aux mineurs, — it only has two disadvantages: first, i ih du es 6? the Ira- workers

B DK | DI FMLLITE OF SOCIALISM

| a third by a Company, of this kind, |
We would see which one worked best.
- So, railways..... ` JN
Even if all the mines were pro-collective properties, and the railways owned national, that would not be the collectivist regime communist, that doesn't mean the same thing judicial.
Truly, Mr. Jaurès, whom we have never -
EU. heard discourse; but of which Mr. Leygues Ak
The French tribune sang his praises, we are sure —
. takes advantage of his naivety; let him study the book of `
Mr. Alfred Fouilléo... — T
This practice would, however, not be otherwise.
... something that the application of the formulas mentioned above Top: The individual and communities. BESCHE ` in the municipality and in the state, owners.
...In our chapter: the abolition of taxes, we will see what advantage there would be in the communes. jet the state are Lo ege

| vaiiloraiónt: thus much more for haten children and grandchildren E

E quo for themselves; then, and this is the serious objection, the

the day when the miners would decide to give up the strikes, of

In order to become more quickly capillary-minded, the strike organizers...
- would see the bread in their mouths, for this reason, never
. is ne lafasront les ouvriers s'engager dans la voio fudiquéo plus - top, | |

o LL i November 1901, , Malin),

nee hé dim cle pe Ae a vam A Capital! `,

We will only say a few words about this.
To discuss this issue thoroughly, we will need to... one should analyze the work of Karl Marx, in to show the contradictions; we would need to go in the "United States", study on site, the effects of these considerable accumulated capitals and as -.
monopolized by a number of billionaires res, discuss, compare and conclude.

We don't have time for that, it's taking up 1 of our time.
would be too far.

Recently, an American billionaire, Mr.
Carnegie, interviewed by "Le Matin", was emotional
-a rather curious opinion, quite well done on capital.

EE (Latin, March 2, 1902).

di près. President Roosevelt, the man of whom we what is being talked about most in the United States right now is Perhaps Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the great creator of the iron industry in America.

"Mr. Carnegie retired from business a few years ago."

(ti) We know that the socialists want the abolition of the capital, of the tiny capital, |

dem Ddiadd

es ug o omn Hb Mg emp os rer epa P AR e

year, to dedicate the end of his life to | spending scs millions, just as he devoted the beginning to them to win, and, for a year now, he has astonished America.
risk itself through munificence and intelligence
the availability of his gifts.

"Through his skill in spending his fortune for good"

| publishes, he is the type of American millionaire, of even though through his skill in winning them he was the type of the American son of his works.

"His father was a weaver who worked from home in Scotland, when the construction of factories ruined the small workshops. The child was ten years old when the father, returning one evening from taking his coins to the merchant

| for whom he worked, announced that it was the last—__new order

— This evening was the first A of my life, Mr. Carnegie has since said.

The family emigrated to America. "I remember—

"Clearly," he said, "that my father and my mother" expected nothing but great sa—erifices for themselves, but thought that this
"That would be better for their two boys."

“At twelve years old, he was working for twenty cents.”
per day in a spinning mill, and he recounts that none of his millions did not give him as much joy as - the first paycheck of one dollar. He was put in charge of heating a boiler in a cellar, and the fear
The thought of blowing up the factory made him so nervous that He would often wake up at night and find himself sitting on his bed, fiddling with the manometer. But

He didn't speak of his worries once.
parents: everyone in the house was making a

It's a point of honor to make life cheerful for others.

“One day, while reminiscing about his childhood, Mr. Car— - Negie called poverty "the most precious of -

"Legacies." "It seems there are today," he said-He, a universal desire to abolish poverty. Me, |
I would gladly abolish luxury; but destroying poverty—Truth would be to destroy the fertile ground of - virtues by which the race rises to a civilization Higher glaciation. » |
"There is a military morality in the United States"
billionaires. Mr. Carnegie is the most illustrious of them.
Theorist. He is the millionaire philosopher. U likes to talk to young people at universities communities, clubs, or churches. It's one of its doctrines that one must withdraw from at a fairly young age from business to spend the end of one's life spending an fortune, as we spent the beginning earning it:
He believes that millionaires have a pro- — mission divinely ordained and are responsible before God — before society, regarding their surplus wealth. The — artisans and millionaires seem to him to be the factheir progress of civilization, and he thinks that - It is from the ranks of artisans that millionaires -
"The prosperity of a nation," he said, "is proportional to the number of billionaire SCs.
Russia has only one, the Tsar; Germany has none.
& that two; France half a dozen; the An-England "has as much as the rest of Europe;

9,

America has more of it than the rest of the world.

"Mr. Carnegie distinguishes three means, for a millionaire, to dispose of his fortune. The first is to bequeath it to his children: "Suppose a li.
a herder who drives all the game into a corner of park, fattens it up and says to his little dogs: "I have

Having had a hard life in the wilderness, here's something for you "to stuff"; any father of a family raises-would have the shoulders to see a bloodhound change its pups lazy balls of fat. But the father of The family is doing "exactly what he criticizes the detective for".

"The second way to dispose of one's fortune"
is to bequeath it by will to institutions public. But there is neither generosity nor grace in donating what one cannot keep, and the lawsuits which follow the wills seem to indicate that

There's some sort of curse on post-donations liumes.

. “The millionaire’s duty is to look after himself.”
even in the distribution of his fortune as he has oversaw its acquisition,

"It's about the distribution of his immense fortune that Mr. Carnegie has dedicated the remainder of his life young. The last of his munificences is the creation-tion, in Washington, of a unique institute at world, which will serve as the crowning achievement of the entire system-university theme of the United States, by facilitating to all the universities and their professors more distinguished scientific research disin-
"interested," |

SR A

CAPITAL. rr £P

We will not dwell on discussing that - thesis. We believe, not without reason, that, except - with very rare exceptions, - intelligence, “My talent, the labor of a man, are powerless,
. in twenty or forty years, doing poor-Vro, a billionaire? It takes more than that, it takes... an absolutely exceptional opportunity; it requires `
- circumstances that will become increasingly rare, -
- such as the exploitation of a new world and the – . accidental discovery, in a concession of virgin lands, gold mines, diamonds or
oil. — — — |
Apart from that, the considerable ëmgeet Miis
have hardly occurred except through exploitation |
- immoderate towards others; but we also know that,
in democratic states, this exploitation tends to disappear more and more.

We can only applaud the ideas generated by... _reuses of Mr. Carnegie; (although it is not probable-clearly an exception among millionaires — or billionaires) — while we could not `that we should protest and revolt, as we have fact concerning property, vis-à-vis the community Countess of Stafford, if the capital did not serve than to Irusts, with the aim of ruining or KENE First, the rest of humankind,

We could only protest if we saw young "ligos" using millions of a Clara, any old woman, to exploit workers where cul-maari ruin "the business of others, in the H but selfish to increase their millions and ü ten-heading towards a billion; we believe that, in a `

In a democratic society, it would be immoral to do

...to glorify these through the votes of a certain
many of their fellow citizens.
However, what must be recognized is that...
Capital, money, "is a working tool" and production." This is easy to demonstrate.
Suppose a miser owns a million and that he
-Buried in: his cellar: it's as if that million did not exist. Instead, introduce this million in circulation: it immediately becomes a source -

...new riches, starting from well-being for - _ the mass. It will be used to create an industry, a | commerce, se one in wages, in aid - | to the producers. Everyone will benefit. U `

...will eventually generate millions more, Gest, that is to say, new working tools, and this

. without stopping.

"I'll go further: if that million falls in the hands of the prodigal son, there will still be one - A boon for all the humble living off its luxury.

— It is with capital that one breaks through isthmuses of Suez or Panama, which are being dug from new mines, which are drained from the marshes, -

i that virgin lands are fertilized but ma!-

healthy ones, who will become Mitidja. For, aam capital, without higher wages, without this hope |

...to make a fortune — (that is, to become capital: - list) - — in the name of Soe? principles would one send

men, 1 to die like dd PR BEN at Suez, |

a Panama; — contract malaria by drying out D marshes or to fertilize new lands.

Capital is therefore a necessary tool, and — like individual property, we are | forced to accept it with all its consequences

- good and bad, with its usefulness and its flaws. But we wish that instead to be the preserve of a few billionaires or - millionaires, it spreads, it becomes widespread — more and more; this is what we are seeing in ` a country like France, and, unlike -

Mr. Carnegie, we think that's what makes it n and will constitute its strength and wealth in the | present and probably also in the future.

We blame capital and capitalists.

when they use them not for fertilization and - to produce, but to oppress others; we blämons, when it is produced by exploitation inconsiderate behavior by a number of employees.
— Moreover, capital, as capital which produces the rent, the profit, tends to AMA of more and more.

Proudhon fought with EEEN and trou< vaitinique. the capital yielding 12*/,, but found - legitimate that he reported 2 */,. Well, from a statistick erected by Mr. Alfred Ney mark, it results that the First Empire, when it borrowed from
. money. paid on average 7.50 francs per liter am re) the Restoration, 6 fr. 31; the Monar-

July Day, 4 francs 74; the Republic of Isa

+ (6 fr. 64; ; the second Empire, 4 fr. 50.

—. |It is only 3.50 francs for the loans posterior. - "ed it descends IN 3 a for the 2nd last loan.

We see the SCH traversed. | VE
The rate of 2 1/2 is already starting to rise.

"^ (ver at the 3rd, current; it is 2 fr. 75 in the
— Savings banks; we see them being realized. without Revolution, which Proudhon considered legitimate.

We also see in a country like the d E. rance the privileged capital of idlers disappear from

| more. and more and become the weapon and property of f

© all those who want to work, save, in demonstrating private initiative. - 2

It is therefore illogical and absurd; it is misleading.

EN and inf: ne, quand on est la francais, de développement
These are ideas that exasperate businesses and Findus-

E | trie, which hinder private initiative and which tend

To ruin not only the hospital, but all the employees who make a living from it.

© CHAPTER VII `

D

"
I
:
,
nn
` "m L
"
.
D
3
'
'
'
'
H
S T
– N – LJ
e
'
P

m

Our Program

We have seen, during this study, various sociological formulas that impose themselves know:

to establish a social militia that ensures each individual the entire sum of happiness adequality, at any time, to the VP progressif of humanity (1). »

"With regard to natural laws, there is no man has only one possible freedom: that of – to recognize them and to always apply them – tage, in accordance with the goal of emancipation or of collective or individual humanization that it continues (2). »

"I believe that the invincible socialist tendency is–" a constant approximation of the hommos towards a common physical, intellectual and moral, along with a progressive elevation– "sive and indefinite at this level." (This is rather the observation of a law e, which is executed

---

| 1) Sébastien FAURE, loc. cit.
. (2) Baxouxixe, loc cit.

| naturally s: without | we trying: even to favoring it (1).) ` B

How did we conform to These formulas? = – –

To our chapter on Evolution and Revolution; – we said, with Paul Bert and Reclus, that bh The revolution was legitimate to overthrow everything

2. Regime of oppression. 8.

"Op, the public thing," the administration of people by themselves, if it is not ideal at all

...first, and this is understandable, this people are not | not reached the level of instruction, education, of

This understanding of his rights and duties that he can

To have in the following, is copendant Bn", d _ favors the law of evolution.

So, for the time being, we have... desired social system, if we do not have pre-feeling the ideal happiness "that we can

To hope, it is up to us to do our best.
We need to get it.

If we don't know each other, not bioù i « his

"Mi senden," to which we owe free- - How to comply, it is up to us to work in order to understand them, and to claim schools where they are studied and taught.
— We do not deny the social question, therefore, at
On the contrary, we take care of it as much as
. quite different; but, in an evolutionary regime, _ we repudiate the revolution. We want to con-

0 Frédéric Bee loc. cit. c up" xL Ug H s

. | pe

; T dt

"DH ep.
NE aE S

AR "ant HA e /
— can cupri RBC Biet E:

"T and freely comply with the laws 80Cl0-logics; we don't want a system that would lead us to a state of regression, conseforced consequence of an egalitarian limitation of - working hours; we don't want a authority distributing equality or proportion _ality of salaries and. giving "to each according to their strengths and to each according to their needs" as in the "collectivist" formula, with each his guardian angel or rather his prison guard who would proportionally grant the dwelling, the vet-ment and the pitanco. To hell with a system that sup.
would perhaps prevail, in a permanent way,
All inequality, that's true, but at the same time
all emulation and consequently all progress.
However, day by day, we want more in addition to doing everything that will allow us to
to gradually approach the ideal of happiness.
We must therefore fight and eliminate the inequities, establish all that can. We remind-get closer to truth and justice. `

We were therefore logical in fighting the socialism, which was only the sign and the banner of a party whose theories contradicted each other tion with natural laws and led us surely to bankruptcy.

It's not that we desire the status quo,
But our reforms are not revolutions.

We want significant savings,
within a budget that is monstrous, the suppression-

Pros Bah Rs

—— —— y pun DELL MN INIM
`

sion of all these useless positions, more or less handsomely paid, where the sons of the ark are paid.
bishops.

The suppression of this aristocratic republic.

| Caine, as well as these upstart young people who believe themselves to be necessary men and us.

calves.

Traffic, if not free, is at least very limited.
cheap, from one extreme point of the territory to The other, men who moved easily,
will bring — "without any authority" — the pro-

proportionality in welfare and therefore in wages, each one easily going to search far and wide for the happiness that he does not find where he is; and of products of his diet, thus putting the con.

summer in easy contact with the producer and allowing him to live well cheaply,

unnecessary intermediaries gradually disappearing to become producers and consumers in turn amateurs at the same time.

The extension of practical instruction and better including; by this we mean that we in We've had enough of these stinking, big-- pedagogues sellers of purple ribbons, whose knowledge is boils down to a few theoretical "bridges to the silly".

Agricultural education, which will teach theory-how and practically especially to the children of campaigns, something that had not been considered until now

. to teach him, while at the same time suggesting to him-will manage the idea of not abandoning this land nourishing which is the source of all life and of all life. | E

_ Colonization conceived in: a new spirit, that is to say, creation with private funds or social, colonization centers, where under the under the direction of a few agricultural masters and settlers op will teach the "unemployed" who want to Sr rend, la manière de cultiv et de faire proto reduce to the ground the food that the asphalt of the cities

-has not been able, despite science, to make it germinate yet.

To run this program, we bot freely choose men like Pe us

Let's define them. "E |
We need free elections, otherwise... tuites, at least arranged in such a way that they are delegate for the administration of "public affairs"
not to be the preserve of the rich alone, and that anyone who wants to devote themselves to the study of science - social, cannot aspire with impunity to re-_ to feel his fellow citizens. |

If, despite free and open elections, Wa Geng _ voters don't know how to take advantage of it if they delegate still beings such as those defined by Leroy-d Beaulieu, "see page 48," is that they still have need to evolve and wise and logical men, i

They will say calmly and without revolt that they still need good advice from men educated and enlightened.

But, above all, we need a homeland. Because B in the middle of useful Europe: army with ten teeth, it

132 14 FAILURE OF SOCIALISM

We need to put this program into execution, walk with peace of mind and to walk with Iranquillitó, we must be T m consequently

. an armeo forto.

|. An administration » » o The one we call-
. government) — having the initiative, cons-
. fulfillment of his duties, raw. generous, Aimeo.
To implement the "eco" program, we need...
| hores of good, wise, as we do not manquer ons pas d en trouver un grand nombrebro parmi |
, we, E:
Before delegating them for years, - Let's try to appreciate what they have in the - belly, let's express to them clearly what we want.

If they return from parliament, let's examine their | thefts, and if, in any way, they have increased-lied about taxes, when we were already | Overburdened, let's not make the mistake of re-electing them.

If we are delegating them for the first time, don't -
We don't choose them, because they are our Self-esteem, those who will know how to tell us about harsh truths would surely devastate many better our cause; Let us remember at the

"He who loves well, hates well." — |

Let's not take a "vulgar unknown i" which chance has brought to light; a cretin, like us

We have seen some, he ridicules those who elected him; a sinister joker disqualified them.- "ONE i CG chooses a mortgage that manages its loans well

None PROGRAM an" NE

| apo eS, that will prove he knows how to count. el que | practicing home economics, he will be able to The social economy, let's not take a spoiled son, neither too young nor too old, already having experience |
rience, en même que y de la vigor ct de energy. B e However, since the Gonna are beings weak, capricious and changeable, we will have -beautiful to have chosen him, in his past, a man of Well, wise and selfless, that will not be enough; |
The new environment can, in effect, transform it and to lose, it will therefore be necessary to question him: at length, have him address certain issues, take some commitments, and we ourselves owed him - to clearly express what we want, because In the future, if he has not fulfilled his duty, we We will know what we still have to do. - E
What do we want? - | |
This brings more happiness, and for that, a lot |
Lower taxes, the elimination of all taxes, if it were possible; easy transport, in order to

to be able to manage our affairs here or there, to ship us products, without the price being doubled where tripled, thus serving the consumer B

amateur as well as producer. - EL |
-This way we will avoid the WEEE tariffs: which are an obstacle to the commercial success of our | ports, we will favor the consumer, who is everyone, and the producer who will have no- -

| to fear foreign competition, being —

Tm

given the ease with which he will sell his harvest,
now relieved of internal charges.
— Like MGE, this is the acquisition of the Chemins de iron.
...Now, the time has come to choose a representative among the candidates present. Be generous:
capable, with your current means of giving your opinion, to tell the one you choose, what you want it to be made for your ideas and your interests, to a permanent Congress that we call—Hys in France, Chamber of Deputies,
To that end, feel free to express your opinions.
Let's be mindful of your desires.
You are as free as you can be today.
the being and if you have some masters or vulgar characters who want to pass themselves off as such,
shake off the yoke with indignation and you
You will see them disappear like shadows.
Aware of your desires, you will become so.
increasingly so, because by educating you, the Republic—blique will allow you to better understand your needs, to better design your ideas, and more.
The more you want to know, the more you'll learn, but in The more time passes, the more you emerge from the darkness.
to enter the light.

CHAPTER VIII

= Towards the abolition of taxes

Savings

NOTE TO THE READER

It would take many days, many months, to discuss the — bays that will follow; research, personal investigations, about the vecæies to be carried out, |

So, these are just a few milestones, picked at random to mark a plan to cover the terrain, a plan that I will probably modify after further examination,

They are not, however, the most to be pitied.

. in the immense struggle for life that they are waging against – –
I am bringing out more than thirty-seven million French people –

| which are relatively Lens n

the fifteen hundred million human beings at work.

-living and suffering on our planet before disappearing-
"I'm a master in the unknown." So there, to inflict upon... men who are no richer, and already on.

– charged T" 75 million new, it yd
T Indeed: "The paintings of the alles, published in 1897, by the Office of Labor are decisive, and the _ Young men returning from military service Sv.
– less than overly eloquent senators.
“Rather than taking up the pickaxe and the sledgehammer again”
On the street, most people rush to ask for a seat.
in the railways, preferring, not without _ reason, the position of a simple team player

To that of farmer, worker in or qua any other manual laborer.

Thus: : | eg

_–“A departmental road worker starts at 47 francs.

P per month, in the Ardèche, 564 francs per year, It

There are ten applications for one place. One postman

i viret à 600 ou 700 francs.

A teacher starts at 900 kee? and | must remain to this figure, for a minimum of Without. T SS a
An agricultural worker works barely 250
zi days per year; at an average of 2.75 francs per day; - N- "is a salary of 687.50, for the entire year. - If you consider the situation of a farmer in -
-~ general, farmer or sharecropper in my rich

Maine-et-Loire department, Lad EE or

REMOVAL | OF POTS — 13 39

T, a market gardener from the Paris area: you arrive- |
XO, you get the same results. But these are for you | seize by the throat, brandishing above.
...their heads, your contribution sheet. - E

However, you have to see how much they struggle "on"

furrow, accomplishing a useful and noble task there.”
—— (Ley Gues, from the top of the French tribuno) — - eise overwork at harvest time, work-working 16 to 18 hours a day, without complaining, — although sometimes not managing to "m the We two ends. —— — fe
Consider the situation of a Parisian shopkeeper: ?
One fine day, you see this/electron arrive

| taxpayer who comes to ask you - to do ` to take his wife to the hospital, his accommodation being -too cramped and because it will be impossible to pay the doctor; but having a license, the

Leen's assistance regulations want Ku he KÉ © pays 6 francs per day. i This man is playing with fire. He wanted to do

proof of private initiative, not being an employee

| ouun parasite, public official us Kéi to hooks of others; immediately, the state or the city — instead of supporting it, which would be more-

äi logic — brandished his patent, and, d shocking | Contrary to what one might think, the Paris City Council, whether he is a socialist or a nationalist, believing in the gaining popularity overwhelms this poor man with everything

p its taxes and contributions, while it relieves them. | rents of 500 francs, where do employees live?

shells, inspectors of a Louvre or a Bon Market, with salaries of 7, 8 and 10,000 francs. truck drivers from a railway company iron, made with their tips of 20 to 25 francs per day; city of Paris officials . or of the State, at the salaries of 8, 10, 100 west 15,000 francs per year, which nothing prevents — having only a few hours of presence per day — to live in the new modern houses, well airy and less expensive than outlying neighborhoods. However, examine the budget of this small shop tiquicr: : hairdresser, shoemaker, stationer or fruit seller; I'm not worried about the wine merchant. this being completely useless, even harmful to the rest of humanity, whom he poisons with his absinthes — he has a rent of 2,000 to 2,500 francs. His wife and daughter have perfectly suited jobs at the house; the three of them together will barely earn 8 or 10 and 12 francs a day, 3,600 to 4,500 a year. But as we said above, the nationalists and the socialists put around his neck the noose that strangles it, patents and contributions Butions of 300 to 350 francs.

In summary:

Rent. ...,..............	2,900
Patent, contributions... ..	3350
Gain..................	3,600
Remaining as maintenance...,	950

for three people in Paris. But what there is The best thing is that this little shopkeeper, who has never resting, working Sundays as usual On other days, she has neither a bedroom nor dining room, everything being at his place by his commerce.

Here's how, today, we promote initiative private initiative — are you surprised, after that, that there so many applications for a job tionary.

But this mindset that you are exploiting,
Members of Parliament, its time will come and the Sinister pranksters will be hanged high and dry.

Let those among you who wish to learn;

Members of Parliament or city councillors, let them go Ask the taxpayers and they will understand.
that we need to change tactics.

The ideal is not an indefinite increase in taxes, but on the contrary, their abolition.

That's why in London Islands, the inhabitants pra-Ticks pride themselves on having the least of possible taxes, pay for basic necessities very cheap necessity; trade is very prosperous and with better-paid employees; but there is few civil servants.

Examine the young doctor's situation. phar- | macien, lawyer, doctor of law who, having arrived at twenty-five, twenty-seven, twenty-eight years old, and who,
after spending twenty or forty thousand francs to his family, is obliged to = create a clientele and Dia a Kies for that purpose. He won't go renting an attic room on the sixth floor, where the consul would come to be. ter? He needs a suitable apartment (not For him, no; he might prefer to share the a Moorish woman's hovel with large, languid eyes reux, but for the customers he assumes should come); buy modern instruments, a mattress maker's needle, amid the clamor of the ignorant

ranis, could lead him to police corrections like that unfortunate Dr. Laporte, when he had valiantly done his duty, thus.
as the professor eloquently proclaimed Pinard, from an undamaged place, free from all pus.
ierg

Well! They haven't earned a penny yet; they they only spent it on their families, who deprived often of the necessities for them to pay their registration fees; they did not rent V'in-affected Parisian hovel which will be the silent witness of their lamentations and their misery, which already the burglars, Father François, in the form of taxes and licenses, they arrive to strangle them for to rob them of what they have not yet earned.

This is what the millionaire or billionaire — I don't care — Berteaux, Socialist MP, banker, having a sumptuous residence, avenue des Champs-Elysées, ignore it; that's why, from a
With a light heart, he asks for seventy-five million new to these taxpayers who have none:
The reason for being fleeced more than others,

| REMOVAL OF TAXES ms M3 —

Also, why do voters swallow so much?
These promisers of paradise, why do they give: $ their voices to men who only dream of aug-

- to raise taxes, always increasing them, instead to elect those who would like to reduce them, dimi- |

stink constantly. ` | P UM
The ideal, in fact, is constant dimnhutión, |
the march towards the abolition of taxes.
"Besides those whose table we have drawn, - see the situation of the one for whom the nations-— lists and the socialists, often both at the times {nationalists - socialists - revolutionary), |
as we see today, : thus of true |
“street performers put on a parade: e |
-a A team player starts at three francs. by day for each of the 365 days of the year, even | for days spent in camp — i.e. 1,095 francs per year — 95 francs more than a tax collector positions! Add emergency medical care, waxing and supply facilities;

the assured prospect of progress, of the.
retirement (a 2nd class factor earns on average 1,350 francs per year; the retirement of a installer | the route, for example, reaches 740 francs per year, and ` (The retirement age is set at 55).
e Here is a great mechanic Coinprigale i E:
He earned 3,300 francs last year, trade- - fixed salary and bonuses (e is the average; a certain-(a certain number reach over 4,300 francs). Its woman and her eldest daughter, aged twenty, tra- :

are valid in the offices of the same Company

They win, one 1,350 francs, the other 1,170 francs, -

Total for the household: 5,820 francs. Certainly

It's not all sunshine and rainbows! As they say, it's still less misery. Consider that a captain of the ar-French women earn, on average, only 3,675 francs, 79; a lieutenant, 2,747 francs, 37; a sub-Lieutenant, 2,463 francs! We must reach the rank as battalion commander to earn 5,797 francs. 9,

22.10 francs less for the officer's household superior to four gold galloons than for that one - railway mechanic and serf! sx

We are not asking that those who have a

a suitable situation where they can be happy

if they know how to manage their home and limit their ambition, be overwhelmed in turn, no; but we would like what a minister of Louis XV] -

The idea of putting it into practice was finally realized.

On the very day (August 24, 1774) that Turgot was called upon to direct the allaires, he wrote to the king:
"There is only one way. It is to reduce the de-think below the recipe, and quite a bit beyond-under to be able to save each year at

...less than twenty million, in order to repay-

to settle old debts, without which, the first

A cannon shot would force the state into bankruptcy.
... It will be argued that almost all the de-

Special care is essential. One can

They have very good reasons for this; but as -

There are no people who can do the impossible.

Ha, ` ^ At.
Ra

| REMOVAL OF TAXES ME 145

all these reasons must give way to necessity.
absolute economics... | ANE
c «…M must, Sire, arm yourself against your `goodness of your very goodness; consider from where you ` comes this money that you can distribute... and - -

: compare the misery of those to whom one is related.

-sometimes forced to tear it down by the exactions ———— more rigorous in the situation of people qe Wee

- have the most claims to your generosity...
And Mr. Jules Roche concludes thus: "This noble E language would be more accurate and even more necessary Today, as in 1774, there is no longer a king, without doubt; but there is no longer a Turgot to speak of Thus. No one, in 1774, represented "the — — peoples,” who bore the burden of expenses -

public; 'today', the taxpayer chooses

585 members of parliament and 300 senators who should be thinking - They act like Turgot. They act like the — courtiers who had him expelled. The only saying—

The problem is that the sovereign they flatter does not —

His name is not Louis XVI, but the Elector, The `
The courtiers lost the king. May they not be SR “Losing the people!” REN

Well, it's time these courtiers, these 'B's Flatterers understand that the voter is fed up with — such a growing increase in taxes and its-They say that today, in order to be well regarded by him, he

It will be necessary, not only. | but to achieve

savings, — —

It is also necessary that the voters send i ü Lam-

M6 | THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM
bessa or administer the knout to anyone, fat. ee

in a commendable spirit, aura demanded the increase.
section of any chapter of the budget before
. to have (following the method proposed on March 4th) 1902 by Mr. André Berthelot), achieved an economy-equivalent crumb. — |
11. These men need to change their tactics and that they tell themselves that, in order to please the voter.
it will now be necessary to reduce, reduce without | ceases public charges.
What we desire above all is that the - representatives of the nation are less far-those, vulgar ambitious people, but more cons-aware of their duty.

We have seen regarding property that the Social truth was: “The individual and collectives owners, in the REN and in the state as owner. » EE

It is by applying this formula and doing considerable savings that we can walking towards reduction and the Been taxes.

Here's how: I know my beautiful country of Anjou — one of the most beautiful, one of the most French of France — relatively small municipalities, having eighty and up to one hundred and fifty a thousand francs of income. These communes, if they

x "T o D ser AR SN MP
Fr mu VT.
- Hl eb ^A Ur 4^ - y
EL IS ONE

DELETION OF | rarórs A » Mj

| be well administered; would have seen their I incomes increase instead of decreasing and their annuities could have become equal to the sum of taxes paid by the inhabitants; he was not born-

necessary to be a socialist or a nationalist, bondicu- -

Sardinian or atheist, to find something so simple. Really?
Beaufort-en-Vallée apparently had, there is no -
For a long time, one hundred and fifty thousand francs of dreams.
mus; but following some work between-pis pardesageset prévoyants administrateurs22... - her resources were diminished; she maplus today p The ox thousand francs

. of annuities. — E 7
Instead of gaer, his resources could have.

increase. If they had been aware of "these"

"Social principles," I am convinced that the ha- - inhabitants of this small country would have marched with pleas

_sir— (there is still time) — to the realization "^ of this practicable ideal: "The elimination of | taxes. » - NS 2a

It's a small hole, you might say: an excop- FE

Lion. Well then! Let's take Paris. It is, obviously, the most whimsical city, the one "where theft, gas- — — looting, the dance of millions takes place there with the most d

of shamelessness that it is possible to see.
The elected officials begin by illegally touching a sum of five to six hundred thousand francs, and if the central administration was aware of its duty, if voters finally tired of rese >

It wouldn't be difficult to find some gullible people.

48 The Strawness of Socialism selfless men who would lead the finances of the "City of Lights."

But we will see further than we expect.
Mons, for economic reasons, the Republican Guard (1), to almost useless, while the barracks, splendid.
Properly placed investments will generate a significant income.
Suitable for the city.

We will remove the fortifications, but at the licu to completely alienate these lands, we we will award them on the express condition that in fifty years, these same lands and their superstructure will return, in full and without compensation, to the city of Paris.

When we hold a world's fair and that we will spend millions on it, we do not we will not be content with simply saying: this will give work for the workers; we will ensure that the work done should be durable, and that beautiful-Suddenly, many of these constructions that we let us raise, in the following, a source of income.

If we deem it useful that the land on the edge |

(4) In support of our statement, we can do no better than to inform General André, who proposed the other cheek to the signa-Mr. Loubet's policy, the suppression of part of the Gard:
Republican, as being absolutely useless, — If the best Minister of War, what we have had until this day," had!
Having become aware of our sociological ideas, I am convinced that he had requested its complete suppression for a laudable purpose and patriotic, we could still use them for a while certain times for the demolition of the fortifications and for building with materials found there, villas that would be theirs granted until their death; in exchange for this broken situation.

L

Nothing).

| TAX AVOID — Ia `

from the Champ-de-Mars — (it's all very topical) — let them be built; we will not alienate them completely, we will put their Dour concession 50 or 60 years old, at public auctions, and all that which has been built will return to the city at the end of that era.

Who can stop Paris from borrowing at 2 if,
to buy buildings that generate income for him:
will be ten; winnings amount to 1 million, eighty thousand francs, and for five hundred thousand
lions, forty million... summer, summer... |

As for the State, doesn't it have resources considerable? This monopoly on rectification of alcohol, which should not be confused with that of the manufacturing process, which would be unfair, would produce for him alone — (said Mr. Maujean) — five to six hundred millions (but it shouldn't be administered — this monopoly, like that of the post and telegraph office

by socialists, because then it would no longer produce Matches...

Tobacco products... |

The bidding process for tobacconist shops...

The postal and telegraph services, which, if well managed,
must be a source of income.

The sugar refinery...

What else do I know? All things which, exploit-those by the State, do not in any way infringe upon the rights and lead to no increase in spending

D. THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM

from the members of the extended family (1.

— The application of these ideas is perfectly realized.
sand with our current social system; it will be only the administration of "public affairs"

by honest, sensible people instead of being by savages and plunderers.

With consumption taxes abolished, transport being considerably reduced: the trade and industry were not hindered in any way. D consumers will have the cost price
goods they pay for — eight three | or four times their value.

It is pointless to add to those who groan at subject of depopulation, which is no longer obliged by tightening their stomachs, families will be able to give free rein to their conjugal pleasures: and s pronio many children.

We will add to the collectivists and the com-municipal, that the application of these ideas which must to bring (we believe) the maximum amount of happiness
. in humanity is completely contradictory with their revolutionary socialism, since it rejects all their theories and is only the pralegitimate and conscious of the current social state.

(1) We know that the state's woods and forests, which 0:
They bring him nothing; on the contrary, they would be a great resource.
wealth and revenue for the municipalities, if they were exploited by them, under the high direction of a few

French fry inspectors, strictly necessary and strictly
pay. | | | |

— Savings

When we save money, we don't...
'Let's not speak in a vulgar manner “candidate for parliament, deploring this spirit ^ of bureaucracy, which at present is losing - France and costs taxpayers so dearly, in ` the goal of appeasing voters and soliciting |

their votes. T | |
No! .

We will give some figures taken at random, and show the tremendous savings we we could do it, the day the voters have Enough of this St. Vitus' dance.

Most recently at La Cliambre, on March 4, 1902, Mr. André Berthelot filed, on behalf of his colleague Mr. Vigouroux and his own, the following project before: "No proposal tending towards a

increased spending, cannot be implemented | to see them, without saving any money, at less equal, it was simultaneously proposed and | previously adopted by the Chamber o, B
...Here are the terms in which Mr. Berthelot defended If popoi: E o

"At the time of appearing before the court universal, who will judge us, he is good, he is morally, let everyone take a stand, let everyone pronounces in a very clear manner on the problems that the events have to our Attention. IS

"Among these — there are none more more serious than that of budgetary balance. It is for us imposes responsibilities that must be considered opposite. The budget discussion revealed to everyone the eyes the peril that threatens the finances of the ,

"At present, it is for "a at at the end of our mandate, to take responsibilities bilities before the country and to indicate to it in what conditions need to be managed, in our opinion, the finances of the French Republic.
"The question is, I believe, posed by our draft resolution with complete clarity ct and perfect sincerity. You will answer "t.
In any case, I hope we will answer it.
in a manner as clear and frank as We ask the question ourselves.
= "If you think that the increases of expenses may be necessary, inevitable, irresistible as a kind of natural phenomenon, you will reject our draft resolution; if, in the con-to treat, you think that the few. increase-

. expenditures that justice, the interest of the services can justify, are likely to be offset by equivalent savings, you

You will also say. These are two policies. L^
the country will decide: it will rule between the canli-Deficit issues and the candidates of the economy.

"The question is clearly posed; I am convinced that everyone will consider it an honor to be there to respond with equal candor.

Although the question has been asked, as the Mr. Berthelot said with complete clarity and a perfect sincerity; there was no response.
This very clear question bothered our acrobats, he
A subtle way to avoid the pitfall had to be found.

I don't know for my part, and I don't want to to know the subtle parliamentary intricacies, I I want to be naive like the good public; I observe
One thing: the question was clearly and sincere-
The question was posed correctly, and it had to be answered in the same way. Eh No way! Those pathetic men got away with it.
by a false fugitive.

I would like to expose to public contempt, the names of those who applauded the evasive tactic, but in devoted to the Republic, I have respect for some names of old servants who, perhaps,
found themselves there, unknowingly; that this vote be a lesson for the future, and let them remember this well, bs dé, wés, that if they do not want to be treated quite rightly, as Mr. Leroy-Beau- did the place, which we mentioned on page 47, they do not henceforth behave more in a way that earns them these words.

However, we will mention the names of those who

by their stupid interruptions or their inter-

The convention has tried to change the debate. These are

Mr. Maurice Berteaux (we have already seen him)

— in the previous article}, Bourrat, Gauthier de

Clagny, Jourde, Lalferre, Pourquery de Boisserin, Rabier, Salis, Symian and — three famous collections —

i communal tivists Carnaud, Dejeante, Zevaes.

— A few days after the question was raised again by Mr. Vigouroux, we see the same men and the minister reappear | Collectivist Millerand.

Well! We're going even further than that! Mr. André © Berthelot: however, we applaud an

2 | proposal, which was the right measure for a
— ... A chamber composed mostly of eunuchs incapable and powerless to do good work; we want savings, consider.

reasonable, and we are not asking for expenses.

equivalent; no! these savings are the conse-

forced consequence of our ideas; they must for the

To currently relieve the burden on taxpayers

_ who are everyone, and tender, like us - e? We saw it previously in a future relatively led to the suppression of the im-pots.

As we said in Leeschte de |
our book; we will stock up on

Insecticide powder, kills and crushes pests.

. without pity; if any remain fit, who - 75 are. "still able to work, we Jo

SAVINGS 153
. elfrions d 'aller dans nos centres de colonisation
| to fertilize the earth.
My work was more or less finished when...
The discussion concerning the Secondary education reform. What report-port, could well have had this question with the
The subject of this book, I couldn't see any, and I didn't
I wouldn't have followed her if I hadn't seen the mixture there.
Mr. Brisson's name. I wanted to know his opinion of this austere republican, the great director of -
- awareness of several of my friends. I opened
. rofi iciel, this allowed me to read a superb ` presentation, a magnificent speech by Mr. Leygues.
In this discourse, a passage defending admission reasonably some of our ideas; but I search-I'm trying in vain to reach the necessary conclusions to react against "the great vicious circle.
Here is the passage: “Going beyond would be pre-a feeling prepared for many young men cruel disappointments. That would be unhappy of those whose happiness you claim to bring. Don't Don't you feel that the day you would have opened like the lycées and the collèges, our faculties at all children without distinction, France does not would be more than a nation of doctors without patients, lawyers without a case, civil servants, paramedics social siles, of which you will thus have increased the ` number.

"Work, whatever it may be, is noble, at its core."
mE E

| 156: 2 AND BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM

as at the top of the social ladder. The worker and PT the peasant who toils in the factory or on the furrow seen "socially accomplishing such a useful task"

She is as beautiful as the man who... This "this the pi Kg sion libéı ale the most honored.

| It is unwise to say or leave
. believe that there is a higher work in dignity |

E qu "un | autre travail.

), . € è ^? 6. e D de * " eeee è e

But how much thinner and miserable still

“the condition of those who, without fortune, have enlisted gés in liberal professions and who do not |

. clients nor causes, who wander through life disabused-^. Disheartened, discouraged, and wounded by all their disappointments.

tions and all their despair. There is no -
A sadder fate than theirs, a more gloomy misery

7 than their misery; there are no beings more worthy

| out of pity.

What about these downgraded items? According to the the nature of their soul, when suffering is too

acute, they fall. into. servility or da revolte.

That's what it takes courage to say I eri to stop the perpetual emigration to the — cities where so much energy is wasted, where so much sinks
...of courage, so that under the pretext of favoring = democracy, we should not be exposed to seeing.

which would be the end of democracy: the empty workshop '

and the deserted land.

: has
e RTE, Ni
29th ELI GL Sar Tm

"So, you might ask, what should be done?" (L)

Reading this passage reminded me of "the paintheir universal" by Sébastien Faure; but I I suppose that one of our great social doctors
I must have had an effective remedy; I was wrong.

When we say so well, that the peasant who struggles on the furrow socially accomplishes a task Ulile is also as beautiful as the man who practices
the most honored liberal profession, the con-Forced clusion should be: it is not enough to
To glorify these men, we must give them the honor.
necessary for the struggle for life, education agricultural, and I was already writing in the margins of my Official Journal “Bravo Leygues!” — But what was my astonishment upon seeing the increase of the number of scholarships; 2° the increase in the ` treatment of pawns, treatment of headmasters.

That is to say, while we are burdened and overloaded; that agriculture, commerce in They die like all other professions, they-we needed to be burdened more in order to increase the treatment of young people who have a situation waiting, who are clerks, potters, of medical students, apprentices, that is to say, young people who generally pay for their apprenticeships and who should be delighted, while awaiting a situationdion that they must create themselves superior €, to be housed, fed, and to have a few louís per month to their personal liking.

— (I) Session of February 15, 1002.

E 158. THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM

© If they are not happy, they should go and un- |
In Corsica, there are hectares and more.
uncultivated hectares.
I knew one of the pawns intimately, CT number, of former comrades, I never hear-None of them complained about their situation; all

On the contrary, they were very happy; many.

They sought to create superior positions for themselves.
and among them I can cite my compatriot and

A great friend, a bastard, a watercolorist of great talent and a very brilliant explorer, highly regarded in Madagascar gasear. If you increase their treatment, they –

They will certainly be delighted, but they will rot like

. those I see from my window in the cafes of the Latin Quarter, living together in the street Carmelites or Champollion with chicks

E in which there are no choices, saying they are too much | 8 generations.

To prevent the depopulation of rural areas,

Gei to prevent "those who, without fortune, have engaged in liberal professions and who have not

neither clients nor causes, who wander through life, disheartened
— dejected, discouraged, bruised by all their disappointments
"...conceptions and all their despair," I do not see | not just increasing the number of scholarship recipients

|. a remedy, "on the contrary. If we observe with

Sébastien Faure, with Leygues, that the proletariat
The intellectual is the most unfortunate, the treatment
The treatment indicated for this ailment is not to increase it.
: the number, by increasing the number of NE

SAVINGS (Uus E ge A59 i intended for young people without fortune, more or less | less gifted, who once they leave high school will be unable to withstand the competition.

One of our socialists, instead of being sentimental, — They observe a little more closely, they will do. of ` | best job. — deg AN `Our remedy, {and we send back the | reader in the chapter Colonization), is therefore to say | to the intellectual proletariat as to the others Do as my friend Bastard did... d
Listen to Virgil and Xenophon; go and colonize. B Admit the odyssey of Elisée Reclus's son-in-law, leaving for Algeria without any resources that My will to succeed, and founding a center of Colonization is thriving today.
By removing the scholarships, all the bags

you will not create new downgraded, and if `

In 1896, there were 5,017 scholarship students, at — One thousand francs per person, that's already something to achieve 5,017,000 francs in savings.
To what idea do the stock markets respond: themselves?
To this one: that the young people (supposedly the most ` intelligent people), will later be able to make men,
'or even great men who are useful to society,' also in the event that they are not favored —
—by fortune, it is in the general interest to put.
at their disposal the necessary means to to reach the situation in which 1 they EES to provide these services.

I believe ko C is the only reason Vi die

160 "A FAMAITE. OF. SOGIALISM

` to support the principle of scholarships; Principle 5 equality cannot be sustained: ear
we would return to the socialist thesis, and immediately

...we could give a thousand compelling reasons |

always quote. Leygues from the top of the stand, “But if we are willing to take the trouble to ob| server, on. will note that the very, very gi «nde
The majority of these scholarship recipients are philanthropists, 1 forming "a mob of pedants and rhetoricians"

-seeking the large dowry, and then become |
= the worst rotten bourgeois, or | well, if they don't arrive
Not very quickly by chance through this process, "de- |
NEC, enraged, disillusioned, wounded by all the disappointments

lions » they transform into revolutionaries |
black people or deceivers of the people. | T
'We could name names, I have some'
hundreds among my former classmates, and what < is the man who rubbed shoulders with others at college, at the high school, `
These famous scholarship recipients, who can't say the same?
"Does fate at least show itself, folds "

Is it just today that it was before? The supre- -

Is the subject matter of the competitions better than that of the birth? The new cards are appearing. e of the
"The iMac for the old ones?" 2

Simple common sense will allow us to respond.
to this question. iE 8

On what principle is the competition based? On What is the basis of our faculty's success?
— Dr. Guimbail, show us. daus — (t travers da NN ine » ' that it is purely el |

CS SAVINGS

| simply on chance, which is TT the competition; Sch on the development of just one of the faculties of intelligence, one of the least noble, is memory;

the randomness of the questions; : the randomness of the | juries, summer.

_ Is it even alongside intellectual faculties-"Agency, those of sensitivity, of will are whennegligible titers 3 M |

And education, and the outside world, a simplistic reflection of |

The inner man, who cares about him? P

And favoritism, the dumbest, the most stupid...

of all, the Boeing that one obtains through Pinter- —

median of the bureaucrat, the lackey; by the cama- - raderie, by displaying its — policies, E |

summer. He has nothing to do with it. D
"Your mouth doesn't have enough..."
against the game of chance, depositing in the cradle of an aristocrat of past centuries, the power and the ` Fortune, rank, or the crown. Your gods of . day are the products of chance. Some circum- —

. hypertrophied convolutions, innate aptitude, he- - editorial perhaps, to fix a large es of .

facts, often lacking cohesion, to absorb indigestible opinions and sterile theories; that's the — `
The basis of the competition. Is this a coincidence?
Usually, this phonograph work is considerable; the numerous rollers clutter- — —

They are exhausting the candidate. Also, when he “reaches the goal, when he has secured the famous | Gelle, informs himself in the ivory tower. lourbu – –
: You have so much to learn what they did |

rap

TE ARE LED, CUSTOMS + tm ns
H

others, the Creatrex screw, if indeed he possessed it
The youthful ardor of old has become sterile, its youthful passion has frozen.

Thus, this exquisite detail is justified,

Taine's definition: "A faculty is a casino" scientific, a sort of little intellectual Provence–
"A kind of tulle, where one comes to gently warm oneself and fade away."
And Mr. Guimbail quotes Charcot, who having passed pitiful competitions, nonetheless became a of our most learned physicians.

Similar examples abound. Is there at less a reason of state to maintain parcels

Fresh, to continue such errors, no!'
Mr. Leygues, as Minister of Public Instruction–

– public, he himself declares to us: “The Work, whatever it may be, is noble, whether at its lowest or its highest level.

at the top of the social ladder. That's imprudent.
to say or imply that there is work
"Higher in dignity than any other job..."

We can therefore achieve serious economies. Especially since scholarship recipients, like As we have already said, they are in poor conditions for the struggle for life. If they do not do not find on their path a "Clara what-"

"Conch" bringing them the large dowry, they will remain at the expense of society, “disillusioned, discouraged, wounded by all their — and by all `

their despair.

We will not propose, like Mr. Jules Lemaitre the complete elimination of the budget of — public education; but instead of wanting to mono-

SAVINGS OF 163

to impose the insirüetiun by suppressing the freedom of - pre under the pretext of respecting the son's freedom, | considering, according to the theory of Mr. Gustave Téry, - the Little Republic, the child as a being AND absolutely distinct from its ancestors, but linked, by ` | against, closely linked to society. A theory that does not takes no account of biological laws, such as if the child suddenly appeared under the sheet

"a cabbage, sent from the moon by the Holy Spirit" | an eminently spiritualist, religious, Christian introduction tenne and absurd) while the fetus, during the nine months from conception, he would no longer integral part of her mother's body. SE Superstition that believes that the operation of the aecou- —

Viet will create two absolutely distinct beings; u

"even if the child was not generally. the."
living reproduction of its fathers and mothers, of — their qualities and their defects, mitigated it is well through education (but how little) with sometimes, however, a Re or E new trends. ` .

We will therefore support these laws.

to which, with "a good spirit," we are Fast obliged to comply; and noting that The child is merely an extension of this world —

fathers and mothers of whom he is nonetheless a part integral, we cannot refuse them the right to have their offspring educated.

educators of their choice. ` 2
Ke la République, » refuses the door of: its administration |

o

Instructions to those who have not received such an equal,

Two pills that he sees fit, that might be sustainable;

took and the scientific method and examinations

` that it requires of masters who wish to establish

= schools a HIGH PHILOSOPHICAL CULTURE, the esseverely passed in front of remarkable professors-

8 qualified individuals, such as Mr. Aulard.... that makes sense;

but we must maintain freedom and Competition in education, the monopoly of the State being unacceptable and especially Be dis-

Hanging. E

We will tell the headmasters and principals that their establishments must bear their own costs; the faculties of the same kind, even if it means providing them with some subsidies as incentives, and to recom.

think of the directors who will have managed their establishments. We must succeed in reducing the : budget for public education at 100 million. (If I'm not mistaken, it was 60 million euros:)

(i the Republic.) —

(e 173 million in 4891, while d is in | 1902 of 209 million. — Among the causes

The increase represents the deficit of high schools and...

of colleges which seems to be due to poor management and to one. m inaccurate of {teaching secondary.) ` m

Let's not forget that d is Wé € country, la.

Belgium, England, summer..., where the universities

"free" hospitals, like those in London, function-n tionnent « « with the meng liberality » € that is to say-

RURSUS ECONOMIES 165 8

| to say that: these | countries are much more practical
8 that we, and that these establishments cost nothing |
Savings for taxpayers: 109 million.
We are eliminating the budget for religious institutions, without | Comments, savings: 47 million. - op
We are largely eliminating the budget fine arts. Why, as in England, > In Belgium, in Italy, summer, museums would not be They are not chargeable on certain days of the week. (The sums collected, used for their maintenance and to | (the acquisition of masterpieces, etc...) . ON The fine arts school will have to cover its expenses.
| like other schools. ` | |
It is perfectly logical to maintain with regard to me budget for fine arts and public education

Mique,... the same reasoning that we hold-

drions for the budget of religious institutions or that of | Posts and telegraphs. E © If we say: "Let those who wish to worship good gods or holy virgins, to be made - baptizing, getting married, and being buried in churches anyone; who want to have masses said | to gain paradise, they maintain themselves - their marabouts and their mosques. » 2:
It must also be said, "Those who can

| to treat oneself to the Opera, the Théâtre-Français, etc... Sy ` to strut around in white gloves and patent leather shoes, no -

don't do it. Offer this spectacle | by the residents - from Savoy, Auvergne and elsewhere who have not- ` ` Lan will have the opportunity to set foot there and who,

pay to subsidize these shows two

e? | p million 418,000 francs.

If you require refined entertainment, E

* a bunch of neurotic city dwellers, the country folk themselves -

They too are looking for their Sunday entertainment.

= while waiting for something better, at the spec-

...the ears of their mosques, their ears tuned to the sounds

. of the harmonium, the organ, the trumpet, where -

of the voices of young virgins singing the mass.

= If it is immoral, as Tery claims (loc. cit.), that these virgins give themselves up in their can,

ES tiques, to the immoderate love of a Christ with the cha_red-haired boy with blue eyes and white hands:

It is no more so than your low-cut stars.
'with exciting thighs, barren and beautiful'
old senators or a senile president.
Those who want to go and study in the different-different faculties or higher schools, pay the . expenses of these establishments and their teachers. E Because in a democratic society we must not -

= not "to give the impression that there is work higher up"

in dignity than any other job"; that everyone pays -

|. his apprenticeship, either and whenever he sees fit (D, -

We demand the removal of the decorations -
-civil actions: It is indeed ridiculous that in a

the democratic state where the spirit is pushed to excess

. egalitarian, you have bits of ribbon that are -
; spread indiscriminately. in the caer and ki Ex. Cecil Weien,

$. E

DM NA
a: last

s N GEIE

DEE AC A

or asc ge me AEN
m x- an S 4h aM

Darts AT TN ERAS: a ues

| pES ECONOMIES NEE LC

They seem to have the pretension of creating an electric MN

tion among the citizens.
If this selection were bodies made of ins conscientiously, if the decorations weren't

. never given except to men. who by —

'acts of generosity, courage, through work, — scientific discoveries, this could be about sex.

to be to a certain extent; although the acts of courage, as we saw with the ma-. rins du Caro, the scientific discoveries of a rare values have never been made with the purpose of "E win purple or red ribbons.

But we want to be logical. We don't want Let's not give the impression that there is more work
. higher in dignity than any other job; we claim- — —

J dons with Leygues, that the worker and the farmer who toil in the workshop or on the furrow, reme ` they undertake such a noble and dr
than any other.
And so that we cannot aa with Cas
— a thousand Pelletan the following pun: “You ”

You know? X... has just been decorated. — You want

Laugh? — Not at all! It's done... And on time.

"Yes, I'm talking to you, he's combining the Legion's industry."
of honor, in this particular sense which is che- P e valier des deux I» ooo ^

We, along with H. Maret, are calling for the removal of T.
of the Legion of Honour, or the equivalent permission for all citizens to paint their bellies, cu of ribbon scraps, € as they see fit,

HEY .
^

Economics, a few hundred thousand million and a palace which will be a source of rovenus |

We save on censorship costs.

We remove the three, but we do not will no longer pay employees

but useless.
Everyone agrees that there are four times more employees | in the ministries, at the hotel.

city, to public assistance, summer, that he give it to me

necessary; we are removing three out of four, and We offer them a villa in Hos in exchange centers of colonization. mE

All the agents nor those who wander around on

. the water's edge, with their dogs who are useless

to nothing, as recently demonstrated by the experiment
... enee du Matins
All the provocative agents who serve AUX | experiences of the famous Andrieux.
The morality police.
Those who mount the guard, at the gate of theaters, tram ticket offices, etc.
can (be replaced by bailiffs ot lai bius)
_ paid for by the companies that need it:
removed for economic reasons.
| Summer. ... summer... |
It is surprising indeed. What about a society?
that claims to be civilized, whether ten times, a hundred times more gendarmes than among the alleged su-MNT without "there are: fewer thefts or crimes,

We will make sure that a socialist minister trade, no spending, not considerable sums labels to buy cars for the posts and telegraphs; for we know that these do not function superiorly; while qwimto put down and harass the drivers a little less would suit their needs and glue manufacturers much better.

[. ebud; zet of the navy was in 1891 211 million
— T" — |898de286 —

— — — 19014de327 —
— —— —~= 1902de312 —

That's an increase of over one hundred million.

Well, it emerges from articles *with airs at the marine, and numerous reports presented to the Rooms, which are in this budget of gasbeaches that don't have a name to describe them.

In a recent article (Matin, February 28, 1902) entitled a sleight of hand, Mr. Camille Pelletan recounts that in his childhood (which is not (not from yesterday, he said) there was a man famous for to hide eggs, handkerchiefs, hats, bottles; this man's name was Robertlloudin. These sleights of hand, no, are nothing in comparison of the farco that was played recently to the House, and which passed without debate a a sum of 300 million for the navy.

On this subject he mistreated Mr. Lockroy, the rapporteur of this credit which, first of all, had published, in the name from the budget committee, an indictment of three hundred pages to demonstrate that the funds those devoted to our naval army were miserable. wastes utterly, he who, damn it, at the last At the moment, S found himself in agreement with the Minister of the navy.

He adds:

"At the moment when everyone pretends to be agree on the need to build, in the
As soon as possible, as many submarines as possible.
that we will be able to, the budget of MM, Lockroy and of Lanessan absolutely excludes them. Not a single one.

submarine construction began this year, »

I was waiting for Mr. Lockroy's reply, but it didn't He didn't wait. He called his former friend fumisto ct do farceur, he made the description and the
. praise for the submarine, what a marvelous machine, (costing only 50,000 francs, while the mas-

— armored dandies cost twenty-five centimes millions) that can be used for attack as well as for defenso, putting a euirassé in a thousand pieces, : without that he had time to notice it, — I don't know, I don't understand anything about things.
In marine; but with my taxpayer's naiveté
I thought to myself: "It seems to me that Camille Pelletan is less of a charlatan than Lockroy, and more logical | (perhaps because he is less literary): but since a tiny little boat, which doesn't
. costs that 50 million francs will blow you up like A pump, an inastodondo Ka costs millions ws

IN
e. a LINEN

s

and millions, I don't see why we don't built not this year of these wonderful little
. weapons of war, it's probably because there are do large and wealthy industrialists, who need to acquire to prepare the taxpayers' pie,

Between Messrs. Lockroy and Pelletan, there was a good
A small question about people, there's the story.
-do some gentlemen X., Y., Z., bureaucrats
. at the Ministry of the Navy having m their salaries.
For these, I will say what I said or I will say | for others: "These parasites, if they are misunderstood-
"Tents of their fate, we have a place entirely indicated for them. We have one in Africa.
immense valley, one of the largest in the world fertilize the Niger Valley; let us do the trans-Saharan, which will cost no more than one hundred million, - that is to say, the price of four battleships, these unusable monsters; ot co railway we econo-
would invest hundreds of millions in the future, protecting us from attacks by England, (in the event of a new | 'achoda). in us allowing us to seize without a fight the English colonies in Sierra Leone and the Loop
. of Niger, while at the same time developing con-
_ the enormous importance of smell and commerce-
-cial of our Atlantis.
Thus, we would save millions,
because of the soldiers we send to Sudan,
in | Chad, in the Upper Ubangi region, they arrive wh

that after a very long journey, a very long |

travel, via Senegal, Dahomey or the Congo, Extremely expensive trips; while "he would go in a straight line, at little cost, in a few hours from Algiers, which would make their resupply easy.
and a thousand other advantages.

eg a ds ER

In an article published on December 2, 1901, André Berthelot cites Guadeloupe, which comes to elect a revolutionary socialist, an opponent

standing armies; he declared himself ministerial,
as a consequence: instead of removing the

...company, we send a second one and the expense
| ost porto to. eese nnn 006.000 |

In Brazzaville, in the middle of the continent |

...black, for fencing a garden........ 70,000

For a function room to host events

Negress backs. ..... ee eene. 16,000

Devices "—— ied astonish the |

ne ro ||
The accounting practices of the French Congo

he said, is fanciful, there is a tre-

. general clerk with a salary of 45,009

1,055,000

"cba, a masterpiece of negligence and D, of routine," -

_This is the regulation of food supplies; it is a spending twenty million. for. the troops colonial, »

'Pix d ck
THE RER

SAVINGS 2473

"Simply reforming these absurd routines"
would save millions; the only ones to rogrotter would be the few suppliers of these flours avarice ot do ces conserves décomposées. Mais

"Do they have long arms?"

In the same vein, we add that the appointment of a notary deputy, who did not know managing one's own assets, spending the money his clients, at a post of twenty thousand francs or Tonkin is an abomination, and that Dana is of no interest. taxpayers, bonuses similar to those that are bad to do, no, they must not back up data.

We could go on for a long time. The subject is virtually inexhaustible. As we have This is enough to indicate our state of mind, and the the method we would use to arrive at this Ideally, taxes should be abolished.

By correcting our — an article by Mr. de Cassagnae, published on April 16, 1902, has fallen into our hands right before our eyes. We cannot resist the desire to quote a few passages.

D. What are the total taxes of the Triplex (Germany, Austria and Italy) for 16 million of inhabitants?
- R. 4.5 billion.

D. What does the average German pay?

It. 30 fr, 50.

D. What does the Belgian pay?

R. 31 fr. 50.

D. What does the Austrian pay?

R, 44 francs.

D. What did the Dutchman pay?

R. ^^ fr. 50.

D. What does the Englishman pay?

R. 66 fr. 50.

D. What does the Frenchman pay?

R. 99 fr. 50.

There is no region, in the five parts of the world, where bureaucracy proliferates as in We,

They look like mushrooms on a couch. manure.

...In 1850, when we still possessed Alsace and Lorraine, there were, these are the official figures, 180,000 civil servants in France.

Do you know how many we have today?

The figures provided to the Chamber of Deputies,

= during the last budget discussion, you I'm learning.

There are 446,000 civil servants.

That is to say, for fifty years, they have | increased by 228,000.

They have more than doubled.

And, note well, in this number, we do not Let's consider only state officials.

This does not include departmental officials. municipalities and local authorities.

Without that, we would have to exceed, by a great deal, the

...a huge total of 500,000.

Yes, "half a million civil servants in France.

AMI oM
Sai EA

That makes one civil servant per voter visa
fifty years ago, the civil servants cost us

855 million, LS D

At this time, they cost us 720 million.

. $ * °. d 9 e hd * 9

0. + 9 © oa | e ` ee 9
Mats, where the abuse seems even more appalling, oncoro Even more scandalous is when we compare the number of our settlers in New Caledonia, of "India, Cochinchina, Cambodia, Annam, from Tonkin, Senegal, Dahomey, Congo, from Madagascar and the number of civil servants assigned at the service of these colonies, — E
The number of settlers is 6,151.
The civil servants number 4,287.
[There are therefore two civil servants for less than a few] colonists. | (7

pe è ọọ 9 e — 9 e DD e

= the civil servant, for his part, without worrying about beauty time, if not for strolling, mocking the léaux that rain down on the owners, taunting Flooding, frost, hail, phylloxera, will to quietly collect his salary every month; he is fresh, plump, cheerful, while the peasant anxiously asks how, without bread on the board, he will be able to get through the bad season.
Then, at sixty, the civil servant retires, to —
to continue doing nothing, with uno retraiteo, paid By whom? By the peasant, who doesn't have any himself.
retirement! — MER fi ES
In short, it is the peasant who fattens the landowner.
` tionary. = B MEM
And according to the statistics, as we've seen, we need to win.
— Readers to feed a civil servant.
If this regime pleases the voters, they only have to . renaming the same MPs..., and the number of —the number of civil servants will increase even further.

However, we will tell Mr. do Cassagnac that he is responsible in the grand party for this state of disorder, ot of gnspillago who oxisto in our finances,

If, with his friends, they had given up something day to this irreducible opposition that they have not cossé do montrer vis à vis do l'État républicain. -If men who all look to me like dice. sincere democrats finally ceased to be idolaters.

these worshippers of the good gods and the saints

| gangrenous virgins. If they would be so kind as to give themselves - ...the trouble of noting the progress of science ...modern and to see that this science is the ideal New generations destroy the foundation. comblo all superstitious beliefs; then, - we could come to an agreement, and instead of seeing the alliance of brave defenders of general ideas reuses and the current social order with the worst enemies of him, in a common struggle against the enemies of the modern regime, of the regime - republican; on the contrary, we would see all the ` Democrats, all the real Republicans, the real ones Republic united in a sacred battalion, marching In pursuit of the ideal of truth and justice; ...fighting against the savage barbarians and pillagers who _gans work, dream of Dien vivro at the expense . of others. |

oo nu
"n EN ER

CHAPTER IX

Agriculture

The agricultural question,
SOCIALISTS AND THE AGRICULTURAL QUESTION.
Lee Corses and the agricultural question.

The reindeer that we offer.

- D ' '

J Agrioulture

— Agricultural instruction and propaganda

"You will retain men and children" in the countryside, [attract them to the things of Lu campaign; show them what azicuture; let them. to know what this stone that blade of grass, which meets the plowshare,
, “the grain of wheat; give them technical training—
| Note: ZI)
| | (Créwicrau, January 31, 1884, Session)

(of the Chamber.)

Agriculture, was at all times the principal ` richesso do la Franco, grâce à la fertilitó de son soil is due to the diversity of its climate.

All crops thrive there, the vine, the `wheat, hemp, potatoes, beets, olive oil, tobacco, etc., and in its extension - African, the lemon tree, - the orange tree, the mandarin tree,

. the citron tree and the marvelous dattier, `
More than half of the French live in special circumstances.
agricultural work: in France, 20 million

...lions out of 38 million inhabitants. It is true that | For the past few years, this number has been decreasing

. cause of rural emigration. towards the E city.
The raw product of agriculture in our

The country's income is approximately 14 billion, derived from capital.
of 100 billion francs, represented by the land value, which is approximately 91 billion, livestock 6, agricultural equipment L, the re fertilizer, seeds 2.

These approximate chillres also tend to to modify. -

Such a large industry, which sustains the life of an entire country should be the concerntion eonstanto of all those who are interested in the life, hygiene, wealth, and grandeur of a nation; for except hunting and fishing, Man feeds only on the products of the soil. something that we now seem to be completely ignoring in cities and in working-class centers. The very education that is given today to rural inhabitants make no attempt whatsoever to make him understand that it's not the fat ones salaries they will receive from the city that will provide food, and they would arrive much more surely to feed their family, more or less numerous, armed with a pickaxe and a shovel, sowing one or more hectares of land.

Unfortunately, that's not the case, certainly agricultural question which should take the place more importantly, in the broader social question, has, so to speak, passed over in silence; there is no Not at all mentioned in the daily newspapers. That's because in the video, they are not men valuable and really interesting things, including

EEN
ss. aM Lx xt T4 EENM

- AGRICULTURE EI
We take care of the most, but of the restless, the show-offs of the "loudmouths" and it follows that a committee composed of half a dozen strikers, pre-up with the strike, the eight-hour day, the social revolution, universal upheaval, are a much more important question, for a large number of our MPs and jokers, that the agricultural question, which, by its nature, the individuality, VW E dispersion, patience and the resignation of the members of the extended family peasant, does not attract their superficial minds at all. The field of study is vast, however, for the men truly WS of the happiness of their semMables.

But, like the spirit of showmanship, advertising Con artists who make empty promises have no chance of success near the peasants who are too far from the boards decafé-concerts and merchant shops d'orvietans, cetto question est gardée, ignored even by our political show-offs.
— It's not that they haven't tried in T genre, but their advertising spirit has dominated the whole question, and without trying to delve deeper which they were perhaps incapable of, they voted customs tariffs, export and certification bonuses certain crops to show farmers that they were taking care of them.
The small farmer, small landowner or farmer-mine who farms the land with his family and who, like We will see it later, it is the farmer who

pullv:- prospers and will have, in the future, luck da to prosper from more and more, he who must Area the free man par excellence, whom no one exploits and who exploits no one, has no interest in tariffs customs duties and export premiums, sun entre.
taken, his property not being large enough to -sowing many hectares of wheat
— beets.

He produces for the family's upkeep, and this it is only the surplus of his harvest that allows him some savings; it is therefore generally beautiful-hit harder by customs tariffs and export bonuses that it does not benefit from.

These bonuses to sugar producers are a burden on more for taxes, while making everyone pay, farmers, workers and the bourgeoisie, more sugar expensive; they are of no advantage to agriculture.
culture and only serve to enrich, to the detriment small fry, the already very powerful capitalist.
These bonuses should not be disregarded since 'they have amounted to over 40 million per year,
shared between five or six large sugar bowls,

It is, however, quite clear that progress is necessary.
conch shell in agriculture which, for example, would produce, with less work 30, 40, 50 and even 60 hectolitres of wheat per hectare instead of 15 or 18, allowing the farmer to feed
-© a larger family and population

- double that of current France without resorting foreign wheat:

That selection in dairy cows pou- — without managing to double the quantity of milk and “happiness; among sheep, to give more beautiful wool and better flesh; in gallinaceous birds —
most beautiful eggs, summer, gie, < It is obvious, I say, that this increase | in production, that even overproduction.
| exploited in collectivist theses, by the revolutionaries, who see in them only unemployment, falling wages and poverty workers, can only be an increase here of well-being, wealth and violence so that exploits the land intelligently, ——

So why is it the miner whose stomach doesn't
"He can't digest coal," he stubbornly insists, far from

; the light & to pick from the mine, when some thousands of hectares, in France, in Corsica, in Algeria and Tunisia need fertilization, under a sky “radiant, in an atmosphere where one can breathe”

| oxygen in full lungs, in licu of carbo- acid nique; where one does not fear firedamp and its — terrible explosions, and that with its same peak it would bring forth sufficient harvests from the earth

To feed a large family.

Why shouldn't he go and cultivate these virgin lands?

who wait in oblivion, for the moment to pay the multiplies human labor. Listen to what he says to Kä subject Onésime. Reclus (1) speaking of our

LL Our Colonies, p. 252, Im hette.

Algeria, Tunisia, which could feed E at 20 millions of inhabitants while its population is.
or only 3 to 4 million. "However, on surfaces equals, a good and beautiful southern country, like ours Atlantis can support more inhabitants than a beautiful and good northern country. To the people of the north, |
...M needs four meals a day, seasonal meatsgnantes, alcohols to rekindle the flame Inside, warm clothes. Houses _c'oses, coal and wood. That's how it is.
— mist and snow and ice, and that pale sun which does not sufficiently protect man against the cold, brother of death. But the southerner, powerfully aided - by stare which warms him, nourishes him, cheers him, lives

a little bread, some fruit, a sip of coffee; to this son of the sun, the vine and the olive tree

'They are enough; they provide him with what he needs. His luxury,'
...it's nature celebrating. It needs few clothes, little or no dwelling place, for under these nobles
. climates the poor man, when he cannot find a E vault, an arch, a portal, sleeps in its bur-
. us or his coat, his head on a stone, at the

"—the candor of silvery nights."

Why the luxury trinket or toy store

— does cheap remain in: the attic or in its

squalid lodgings, for making rolling mice, Santos-Dumont airships or cycling agents which he couldn't possibly make into a salmis for his family.
...and does he despair at the realization that he cannot
To feed his children, that tuberculosis, this great

Aa DH 13^ ot Ve er iR
x ty IC ec, Än Ika eh mu PERS T aad "s P UT SEE e. i D Tom vit + Kë RQ PR es Poet ws
m RE . ME! Ur

a scourge of cities, inevitably lurking, while A few tips and a little help would make him a happy man with healthy children and joyful in the fertile countryside.

Why the lawyer without a case, the doctor without
Are the clients, the painter "purotin," exasperated?
against society, while they themselves or their Fathers and mothers are guilty of having taught them a profession that no longer produced the raw materials first course of pot-au-feu.

Why is the small shopkeeper waiting behind its shop window like a wild beast catching its prey, - the client he'll try to skin dry, you said that all sorts of desires and dark thoughts will spring forth in his brain, while 'shepherd's eyes humming a song he could monitor his herds, — or that hunter, he would frolic on — a horse across the plain or the scrubland.

Why would they continue to give to literature?
The following table is shown:

Here, this is the dark abode of destitution.
From hunger. There, one sees them wandering, without respite or rest.
the pleading or angry eyes, those eyes that the workshop no longer seems to want. These have Strong arms, though! And they don't ask only to employ them in someone's service. One does not wouldn't be unhappy with them, come on! — The fingers of Those ones are skillful; they are fast, they would run so agile at work and they would cost so little to who would use them! — For weeks these | Unfortunate creatures go from door to door |

. offer their services. The first few days were sustained - through hope, having in his pocket what remained of
. |the last paycheck, discounting the credit that the bou-
The diaper and the grocer won't refuse, we did it, without

d trop so plaire le tour des ateliers côt des usines.
ECH But we received the same annoying message everywhere

The answer is, "Oh, not today, we don't need to..."
Person B: Come back in a few days and we
"We'll see!" — The unemployed man has returned.
The response was this: "Not yet, wait!"
These words resonate mournfully. To wait,

...wait some more! while one by one, these dear little things that he regarded as his entire fortune and those he had so painstakingly bought have gone away

"Mr. Pawnshop! Wait, and tomorrow you'll have to..."

(to bring one's last resources there! to wait,
And the baker demands what is owed to him and refuses

I credit! Wait, and here's the term and the pro-
-The owner mentioned selling and eviction OD?

...This is not the outward appearance that may seem SC caviable but the real truth is more than half ...situations in the world's capitals. Thus — . when Santos-Dumont recently went to find the

the police prefect, telling him that he was handing over 50,000 francs in his hands to withdraw from

| Mont-du-Piété: tools of the trade, objects - of all necessity which had been deposited there in bw week, he was told that it was simply Sebastien Faune, — Universal Pain. If

s TE ti "M

AGRICULTURE — 2,187

a drop in the ocean, given that he had advances have been made on matters of absolute necessity for 7 to 8 million francs (1).
Does that tell you nothing, O bion heurcux culti-ators! `
OR idyllic Corsican shepherds!
Whereas if we turn our eyes back to the — campaign we will be able to, and above all we will be able to In the future, to sing again with Virgil.

(1) Ea putting half of the prize he won, i.e. 50,000 francs, at Mr. Lépine's disposal for the poor of Paris, Mr. Santos-Dumont had expressed the desire that this sum be assigned to the removal of essential items involved by poor people at the pawnshop,
When we went to the information desk to provide satisfaction, 3u

Mr. Santos-Dumont's statement, it had to be noted that in order to achieve The donor's wish is that no less than 8 million should be received.

Could the problem of the POC M3's shutdown also be Insoluble than that of the quadratucs of the cer. ? m

_ (French, is Nu cembra 1901).

(O fortunatos nimium sua si bona norcnt
-Agricolas bh

Oh! How overjoyed the farmers are!
If they knew their happiness. We will say again with the Athenian historian and philosopher Xenophon: “Agriculture is the easiest profession to learning and the most enjoyable to practice; it

It beautifies and strengthens the body; it gives to the souls the leisure to think about friends and the "thing." publi-that"; she teaches the um hs justice and hospitality. a However, what was true in the time of the Greeks and the Romans, it still is today; unfortunate-Human stupidity knows no bounds and The man is humble, but never content with his lot, instead of seeking happiness in simplicity city and easy rural frugality, lets itself seduced by his foolish ambition and the lure of gain illusory, like larks in a mirror, and comes sinking into the big cities in the middle of the morbid excitements of neurotics in (rut, dear-singing in the exteriority of things, the happiness that is only in him.

Entire books have been written to depict it.
this state of mind and today we float at Wind, standard-bearer of the social revolution, we try to excite human passions over a question which is quite simple.

However, not all farmers are happy .

We can, in fact, divide the erfanne |
in three categories, there are not only idyllic stories | “rural life and the life of deprivation led by a A large number of them explain this attraction towards luxury and what seems like this easy life of cities. ` | TEES

He has the poor peasant, sharecropper, farmer or very small owner "in the departments at harsh climate, poor soil. He leads a frugal and laborious existence, and we must see if manages to save a few pennies, which they cost in sugar and deprivation.

Certainly, he is a free, autonomous, independent man.
during. But his life is much more difficult than that of employees even in agriculture or the industry. However, it can, more easily than the poor of the city, raise a large family thousand.

But the farmer –: to improve his lot.
He has the means; he just needs to know how to shoot.
part of its products and increase them, something lactic. Since he lacks a general education– It's professional and needs to be given to him and read indicate how to improve its products and t of to sell them easily.

This is the easy social renewal that will make the for– Tune is the happiness of an entire people.

The second category includes those who in richer countries, own a certain capital that allows them (whether they are farmers or small landowners) to live comfortably from their work and the produce of their fields.
They have independence and well-being, and their fate is far superior to the vast majority city workers. However, we see some many of those who are looking to leave the fields for positions they believe more lucrative (liberal professions, industry or trade) – and then we see the children dependent to serve with surprising ease the few pennies which had been accumulated with so much difficulty by parents. The examples are countless,
We will mention some of them a little later.
So take MX, who is a doctor of medicine.
cine and son of a farmer, and who, after having par– raced across Europe, Asia, and Africa, to the "The search for fortune, is coming. To fail in his country.
It is likely that if he had deployed in agriculture, energy, and the knowledge he has spent on medicine, he would have today
the fortune he is still chasing.
Take another one, pharmacist, it's the same story. – And this third one who sells his little property and who goes to Paris, butcher, hairdresser– Feur, the baker, whom we believe to be rich and of whom we –

let's see one day the name inscribed on the list of bankrupt,

Thirdly, there are the large agricultural... tors, like those seen in the Beauce and in Brie, operating farms of several hundred hundreds of hectares, with significant capital and advanced agricultural equipment; or the large winegrowers, livestock farmers, etc. They are the happier and more independent of men my. |

In general, it is quite certain that the farmer is the most independent of men. "A state employee, company employee, worker Industrial workers have their fixed daily working hours. A few minutes' delay can make things difficult for them. cause serious inconvenience, make them lose their place. One fine day, while the worker The industrialist and the employee are in their dark workshop, in the imposing factory or in The austere office, the plowman leaves, without a care No constraints, joy in the heart, radiant health and strength, take your walk in the neighboring village where a fair is being held, where takes place some kind of party. E

"And what man is happier, what picture is as worthy of the brush of a great master as That of the plowman driving his plow? The Do you see yourself there in the vast plain in the middle tall grasses brushed and caressed by the fragrant breezes, gently activating its . large red oxen. In his deep, resonant voice, H into the song of the homeland. Then his

Amo, far from the intrigues and corruptions of masses, taste perfect happiness! x Pure hos laborers, a good number of them

yet another false idea of their condition, that he
It is necessary to dispel this. They consider their profession Sion as degrading. Ah! good people, “learn that there is no such thing as a dishonorable profession”
when it sustains you and is exercised Honestly. On the contrary, work, under what circumstances-Whatever form it takes, it is always noble.
beautiful. And if there were some profession of little honorable, it certainly wouldn't be agriculture that has was the first profession of men and which will be the last.
This may have cast some discredit on Agriculture, in general, is characterized by its personnel.
was not as educated as that of other industrialists tries. But now, it will no longer be so.
Agriculture, which was simply a "routine"
passed down from father to son, has become a science relating directly or indirectly to all the others;
so that to make a good farmer, one must possess a varied and extensive education (1)”.

(1) The Farmer's Friend and the Worker's Friend.

The Socialists and the Agricultural Question

The dice, suspecting that they could not not to achieve their famous social transformation Without the support of the peasants, they all fell in love with conp and momentarily of concern for them.
In 1867, there was a parliamentary inquiry;
suddenly another one appeared in 1897.

Empty of their refrain, the socialists do not they shouldn't have to worry their minds, to delve deeper-to say whether their theories are collectivist or communist might be suitable or appealing to farmers.
_ only idea of socialist domination (1) the hypnotists-knows and to have unity (why unity), they they said: |

"Universal socialism affirms at the moment
current only to emancipate the unruly ones there is no

There is only one solution today...

...Yes, there is a common conception, at which led to the socialists of all the

(1) Despite the protealions of Jaurès who said: (5 Feb. 1002

Little idea di e ll has proven to the world that far to be a party of Corporalism, it welcomed into itself all
"Variety and all freedom of thought, el do la vio."

He demonstrated so little of his authoritarianism that Jaurès himself and his friend, the Ilalian socialist Turati, were excluded, as he

as he himself said in the same article, of a socialist ee, ddl 86 attached to Lille, as too moderate.

schools and from all countries: it's because there is only one
a means of liberating the proletariat; it is, wherever There is a divorce, where there is a separation of property.
and work, to replace what is called the capital, that is to say, private ownership of the means of production by/a common social ownership or collective means of production. And without weakness, without hesitation, knowing full well that this the general formula will adapt well within its unity.
to address the diversity of economic conditions, we let us proclaim it for the peasant world as for the industrial world. (1)
In other words, individual ownership is removed and the lands become property Whether local or national, no one can anymore to say this field is mine, but this field is pro-collective property, this field, this house belongs to everyone the world.
there are no more small or large owners we are all tenants or farmers of this Impersonal, elusive "everyone." That's it.
Revolutionary equality.
The consequence is immediately easy.
To understand: "the land"—the field—not being as they believe and foolishly proclaim a common "tool of the trade"; the farmer
"making the ground," as Kropotkin himself said-same — who at least took the trouble to study-to answer the question — so much so that in contracts

(4) Yellowed: s, Speeches delivered in the Chamber, June and July, 07,

KAN, 5
S: TZ PEN
sets o REA vlt

In recent years, market gardeners have stipulated that they... would bury their soil with eu... ——

...Like all major agricultural projects... cultural practices are far from being geared towards a report annual, but should only take effect at a more or less distant era, such as vineyards, fruit trees, etc., that This work is generally done by professionals. owners or under their direction: if the farmer He tells himself that he is merely the municipal tenant, and that sooner or later a stranger, often a the enemy will benefit from his work and his planting lions, so I'll let you imagine what beautiful Agriculture will progress with such a system.

Also, despite these catteries intended for | peasants and this repudiation of the term parta- | ge. ; the farmers are not mistaken, ct ce that they went to so much trouble to produce or to to grow, they will not accept that others They benefit from it, whether it's a very Selfish, that's possible, but what's certain is, that's because it's a human feeling, but the revolution- social change will not transform them, they know it. Well, men as demigods.

Addressing the agricultural question, others. socialists exclaim: "Conquered cities, the propagation- The greatness of socialist democracy overflows into the countryside; and there, opposite this property - - peasant woman whom they wanted to make the limit of her action, the economic theory of socialism seems shaken to its very foundations; the great pro-

i _priété no gagne que lentement le terre su la small and didn't win everywhere... The trial is over Would socialization be inapplicable to agriculture?

culture, would there be an irreducible autonomy? between < agricultural and industrial development here (0 by the same token the socialist conception ser ik) Island —. Insufficient and unacceptable: ? dÉ
— . What these poor socialist students bá
The attic rooms of the sixth or twelfth floors
i floors of Paris or Chicago, like chickens raised in spruce trees and who would die of

. hunger, if they were suddenly released into the middle of the Fields of wheat and oats are not included.

because Karl Marx no longer leads them by the hand,
We will explain it to them as clearly as possible.
possible and show them that they are doing f. vilite to . agricultural point of view; which demonstrates once again that the "social conception—
. list » is not only insufficient and inadmissible—
...siblo, but still fundamentally absurd.
Obviously, these populations had deserted the countryside, drawn to the cities by the lure
...high salaries already indicated a state of mind of the discontented. High salaries should not certainly not to give them ideal happiness, because their

Their expenses and especially their needs and desires

They should have moved much faster.
were therefore easy prey for the promoters of quee. exploiters of me—

z DH PET
D poral le AA rt un al Am ppr Pa 4 QU Sn "wo H ` ge * - PA 1
' r 4 a.] ' ev ^ d 1 E ot = H = D ae r un ' mr m ai al Pa Ra o dicii.

IA QUESTION | aamicose ` Im `

HN ot these not fulfilling Days |

promises, they had to turn immediately to

Other charlatans, bh Alangists, or nationalists.
`At the bottom of the line, in their collective theories—

Divists and communists, the socialists had | counted only on the gullible city dwellers, industrialists. - m

They had completely forgotten about the campaigns everything that touches it, directly or indirectly: thus, they advertising for the pawns, a frozen situation Wire is still quite paid, for substitute judges useless at 3,000 francs; but they won't occupy any of it.

rural schoolteachers' salary at 1,200 francs (1), deg ` justices of the peace at 1,800 francs, which does not affect olfactorythat is 144 francs per month.

. So the great Elisée Reclus was able to say with.
just reason ` ` | SEE |
- "And even today, the "Pr E lat" forgetting the peasants... doesn't he run the risk to consider themselves as a distinct class and to

to work not for humanity, but for its —— special interests. » - "

The socialists don't understand anything about this.
"Agricultural crane," the peasants speak of with disdain;

And it is from the uprooting of these men and these farms to the

| NT Y" teachers are TOM co who augmento games treat- g TNT, but the peace officers, are not. These latter, who must be independent men to judge in all ep, do not have a personal fortune, they will not be

qrun jouct centro FM mains de —— "- à | peine de den this state of semi-consciousness, of passivity of half-darkness where they languish.

And we care little that these men, from For a long time yet, may they not hear us. follow us » (1).

Jaurès, copendant, must have done enough biology. Logio to know that domestic rabbits, the Chickens raised in spruce trees are inferior intellectually, to the wild rabbits and vo. wings that run across the fields.

The same may be true of city dwellers and of minors compared to the rustic peasants; that is perhaps also because oxygen is no longer coming to invigorate their brain, the organ of intelligence, that they so easily make social blunders

_ lists.

However, their fixed idea is not of is eher the truth, but wanting to eliminate the pro- individual privacy, all bonus reasons or They accept the bad ones. "Some socialists wanted to see in the peasant's debt the revolutionary element of agriculture.

And they declare:

The engine of agrarian transformation, this will be industry, once united and subservient to agriculture. ture in the household of the medieval peasant, it re- now comes to this same union, but had ...mistress this time. Agriculture is back in a dead end from which she cannot escape

(1) Jaurès (loc. cit.)

| E +
9 tim GA LME ÈS 2c

same, I am: that the evolution of the large industry- | (rie leads to socialism: the industrial proletariat - Triel, in freeing himself, Zeg weighs down the peasants: LL interest of Punit, j Fharmonio of society.

e What will be. socialist agriculture? barely | Sex? - we can discern its elements, Socialization-tion of large industries, factories, of | Sweeten them, will first transform you into workers social issues: the farmers who sell to them currently-their work or their products, then the socialization of land rent and destruction 2s wage labor will allow, instead of large-scale exploitation...

alation which currently occupies almost half of the ground, the establishment of vast balifundra socia: E

lists, skillfully exploited. » (1) C.
...When we observe the prosperity of the small and medium-sized family-run property, which gives the individual the maximum of current freedoms that man can hope for, we are ill-advised to -

to say that the future will belong to the vast Dalifundra so-specialists. It is quite certain that the future is not not to large capitalist property - which of ` e E capitalist that it would become, would then be 80- - 'dialed by the revolution, by reason quite simply-more than large-scale farming. It will never be proportionally also in that the per- r1

tite |
Furthermore, when we observe this fanaticism of “(kan BEEN by Marcel kamen dd B Ho

300 EE FADA ITE OF SOCIALISM |

É da pi opi télé ct que l'on comprend quo si des DI

|. The owners are so attached to their property, it is ...that it guarantees them a minimum of independence

social; that we see small properties increasing.
. menter on nombre — although being of a higher price relatively high compared to that of the larger ones;

those of 5 to 20 hectares, farmed by family.

ment also increase ct Fer « Co which makes a Ines Joic of the Conservative Party;

We should look for the cause (of c co » and T and consider that this individual property is fe | : a gago deen, Get and freedom. e

If the countryside is deserted, if the peasants —

Gees recently said a schoolteacher from
+ the district of Sens — are attracted to the ...city as if by a sort of ". it's that he

There are reasons.
Everything seems to be done today to channel the

"(2 young, intelligent people heading towards the city, the pleasures ^ — easy, the bewitching women merchants
"dar of love, and these illusions, sublime, is We that

(i) The early Christian church of the PRES (ue ta

`< . dogma, but soon the secular world escaped him. The regimen`

Communistism no longer exists today: only in convents and Among the Moravians, there are none left since Cabet tried to...
Toxos to realize his Icarian utopia. . | exploitation. da eo 1 par. do: Wë se se en tail

D AGRICULTURAL QUESTION 5 EI

the provincial feels, when he falls into the capital-tale, amidst the festivities and the decorations of international trade fairs, like only Paris knows how |
gek, "S: 2 |
But this illusory paradise, although momentary, produced its effect on a certain number of those that the pleasure trains have poured onto the capital |

tale will leave their mono-fields forever

lones, hoping to enjoy these enchantments in the future Interludes, as if in a dream.
And the giddy, coquettish women, who dream |
of these immense bazaars laid out before their eyes a ides, : will be even more Wë of this die of | cities. - | | |

It's the nielleure, but ello faints —— " TTF on bereft of his personality tends towards his independence, and the day when ` Te legt, hommo songo, to form in turn a new family... - The community is at its highest degree of concentration in ha family, from l3, ello briso son cadre ct n'existe bientôt.
plas than in relation to the neighborhood. Everywhere and always, freedom rose up against communism, which was never able to be suppressed.
Mir que sur uno pelite scale, La plus geando coumunautó qui o?
It existed, like Sparta, and was founded on slavery and war.
The right to property initially belonged to the nobles; it was not - that later than the plebeians obtained this possession, at the- NES Qaella, the patriarchy, had to oppose it with all its might. But the The plebeians said to themselves, we too want to be free, we - _ also we intend to depend only on the law; we too

; we claim the rights to the land as we have claimed the right to family... | |
The demand was just, and the people's victory was not doubtful.
buzzard, | `
The people were given, each poor citizen, seven judges, (approximately two hectares of land).

Property is selfish; it has no preference for any taste.

Yernement, and everywhere she was the same. What she wants is ` ` that the state be its Wee that the government marched by it, and

a» P |

2 To make matters worse, - Ouvroz a newspaper amusing, whatever, you'll find an aesthete

.—.. new genre, a decadent songwriter from Mont.
=- marten or Batignolles, Courtille or Bellovillo, making the spirit so much the line, and You can be sure that he is the rustic peasant, - with her blouse and her big clogs she'll do it |

costs.

You won't go to the café-concert without being told sei ve la vieille rangaine, le jeune pur idiotiche arriving from his countryside.

And so it will not be in vain, for they will have learned to all to disdain the peasants. and Zeg |

LS for SÉ to his pleasure and benefit; that the government be his creature and its slave, otherwise it will perish, No power before her, no dynastio is sacred, no conti-

NE inviolable tution. Property must reign and govern in its guise. We know how the French Revolution unfolded:

sale and mobilization of a third of the territory as property
. allodial: that's what made the Franco a democracy, the

unlike England, which is an aristocratic monarchy.
bourgeois, by virtue of its property. In 1830, it was property that made to bring down Charles X; in 1848, it was she who brought down Louis-Philippe. The small property, united with a few men of the people,

-acclaims the Republic, but the large estate resumes cov-
'science of its strength, repair soon and get rid of the Republic- '

. republic, The plebeians having nothing, democracy rested on the -
- nothing. The coup d'état of December, like that of Brumaire, has succeeded through the support of large estates, -. - - |

- On the contrary, if we study the possession of the fief, we will arrive at /-. find opposite results. It is property that created freedom:

That's why every government, every utopia, every church so-

K is indifferent to property.

Having considered all these factors, we can conclude:
Oh, property is the greatest revolutionary force that exists.

bf! and who 86 can DES at Lee e?

Those responsible for educating the children will be among them.
It was therefore with disdain that, deep down,
he will consider the farmer - tilling the soil - herding cows - appearing to him as a vile thing, he will have only one idea: as soon as one of his students will show a little intelligence, lo srlir from this rustic environment to push it to middle school, high school, summer, getting a scholarship, the famous purse, to carry it in triumph, to make him to pass exams, to turn him into a bureaucrat, a ` lawyer, a doctor, a graduate, a professor, etc.

If we weren't overwhelmed with these graduates who are starving, waiting for the carrots grow all by themselves on the sidewalk, hoping — Oh, poor graduates, infatuated with pedagogy, rather.
that rich in intelligence - that a Berthelot does the future will find the tiny tablet to replacing current foods, without thinking that our Humanity deprived of needs would also fall into decline.
early in childhood.

Also, in these young minds, this disdain for Will the countryman make constant progress?
when will we create higher primary schools?
as in Sens, which was recently mentioned to me, one will see that not one of the students, boys or girls, who However, they are children of well-to-do farmers and could advantageously continue agriculture ture with new science and methods, Not one, I tell you, will continue. The few pum

The boys, for the reasons we have mentioned above, will rush towards the capital, to be a desk jockey or a sales clerk,

The girls, in order to wear hats and have the white hands, will dream of marriage with a city dweller any, starving, carrying huute-formo ct
frock coat, |

And how else could we be?
ment, when in the same department became now famous for its "pew-pew", you see an agricultural school like Cello de La Brush, designed specifically for cleaning agricultural equipment educated farmers, only produce dog-dates in the title of professor of agriculture; that is to say-to say that the present time is to create young rentiers.

However, this exodus must stop, otherwise, humanity that feeds only on the products of _ sol would be reduced to famino; and that it be paci-fatively by following the course we propose-sounds, or through the Revolution social, as Kropotkin describes, it will be necessary Even so, stop being so out of it.

all current socialists, and to return to our planet. - I

Here's how Kropotkin | portrays Bet culture of tomorrow, when the goddess Revolution with a wave of a magic wand will suddenly transformed humanity.

K Every time we talk about agriculture. we
g imagiuc always the country bent over the plow,

THE AGRICULTURAL QUESTION RO 205;

| randomly throwing poorly sorted wheat into the ground and anxiously awaiting what the good season will bring or Maudo will bring him back, we see a family working from morning till night and having nothing else but a reward of a cot, dry bread and sour wine drink. We see, in a word, "the tawny beto of La Bruyère.

"Today's farmer has more ideas
large, with designs of a far grander scale, A request that a fraction of a hectare for fairo eroitre all the plant-based food of a family;
to feed twenty-five horned beasts, he did not
It doesn't take any more space than before to feed them only one; he wants to get to the point of making the ground; to defy the seasons and climates; to heat the air and the soil around the young plant; to produce in one word on a hectare, which is what we were not able to achieve.

not used to harvest on fifty hectares, and this without excessive fatigue, by reducing do much more than the total sum of previous work. It | claims that we will be able to produce plenty of what feed everyone, without giving to culture fields that just co that everyone can give him-

wr with pleasure, with joy. m
"What, indeed, will these hundreds be doing?"

of a thousand workers who are suffocating today in small workshops and factories, the Where will they regain their freedom? Will they continue-“They, after the revolution as before, shut themselves away” in the factories? Will they continue to do -

"luxury trinkets" for export, while Ch |. will perhaps see the wheat run out, the meat depleted.
. nir rare, the vegetables. disparaltre sans être rem.
where placed? 00 |
"Obviously not! They will leave the city, X They will go into the fields! Helped by the machine that will allow the weakest among us to give:
With their shoulder charge, they will carry the revolution into the culture of a slave past, as they Tan

S ds portée dans les institutions et dans les idées.

"lei, hundreds of hectares will be covered with greenery, and the man and woman with delicate fingers will care for the young plants. There, other cent-hundreds of hectares will be plowed with a subsoiler.

steam, amended with fertilizers or enriched

= of an artificial soil obtained by spraying the -< rock. The joyful legions of occasional laborers-sion will cover these hectares of harvests, guided in their work and experiences, in part

T by those who know | agriculture GO but especially by the spirit, great and holy, of an awakened people of a Ze: sleep and that illuminates and directs co lighthouse

luminous - A source of happiness for all.

In the most difficult circumstances, we spoke the vicious circle into which we were being led | socialism and we gave the explanation there

— clearer than we could find at that moment; but We felt there had to be some. A pu "us

Net euro, clearer. More precise. Zi

As we said at the beginning of our book, -

(This is about France, we are not Let's not concern ourselves at all with what's happening at - Vandervelde,

The French population, over the last 50 to 60 years, since the creation of the railways, has remained more or less stationary.

From this population, let's take 1,000, 10,000, | million inhabitants, even 38 million; but For the sake of simplicity, let us just of a thousand (the reasoning would be the same on the 38 million). And let's note that the population of | cities have doubled since that time while the
The total population has not increased. Out of 1,000 inhabitants there were therefore 950 living off pro-professions and trades in the city and 750 of the work fields. Fortune could be distributed like this:

Let's assume an income, a cash product approximately 1,500,000 francs per 1,000 inhabitants, which would amount to 1500 francs for each person, if there were equality in products; but given the ine- - forced equality (as we have demonstrated elsewhere)
their), wealth or wages, let's examine them
-as they could be roughly distributed.
Life in the countryside was quite different ps what it is today. Now, if we let's give the farmers a product worth 500 . of cash per capita, that's a good average for peasants in fairly wealthy countries, I take For example, my district of Baugé —

B Hu.

(Maine-et-Loire), which is certainly in the good average of agricultural countries rich in France. That makes for a peasant family com- ` poseo of four members, a cash of 2,000 francs. and certainly /the average of the recipes in families agricultural production in my country is no higher; On top of that they have to pay rent, taxes, | clothing, etc... |

This may seem surprising to a city dweller: but he needs to know that the farmer produces the substances necessary for its nutrition while the Parisian buys them; let him pick them up in the trees, hedges or thickets, the wood which the heater and that he does not spend money on clothing ly. —

—. Gold, 500 fr. for 750 inhabitants make 375,000 i For convenience, let's say 500,000.

That left 1 million for the 250 inhabitants cities, which amounted to 4,000 francs each resources; with — social inequality — of the dreams naked in groups of two, four, six, ten, twenty, forty, one hundred thousand francs, for these inhabitants spread out in = a few rentiers, businessmen prosperous lawyers, engineers, architects, some shopkeepers had a certain number of out/— vricrs.

— But the railways came with them ease of transport.

. . Newspapers and journalists have spread | their criticism, their ridiculous jokes.

A poorly understood instruction, by the teachers - who were not as close as the rural schoolteacher should be. The lure of high salaries, easy pleasures, the gold that we saw rolling by the handful in those of the Parisians; finally, all of the lyre. And the country folk, flustered, took the train, and the Corsicans also rushed there with “enthusiasm” Thus the agricultural survey of 1866,

led by MP Abattucci, having posed this question (For the Coi se). » |

What are the causes that alienate the population? tion of agricultural work?

The Sartène Agricultural Society replied:

“The diffusion of instruction ot uno ambition excessive” (1). Mors, the rural population has decreased while that of the cities increased; and it happened This: That city dwellers are also today more numerous than the country folk; where there were some | There were 250, now there are 500.

Their resources have not increased, they would have rather decreased since there is now only ` 500 peasant buyers instead of 750. Lo numerary has increased, you will tell me, but being given that the value of money has decreased, that the food prices, taxes, the needs of... thoughts have increased, this increase in numeraires could not, for many (the small rentiers) for example), which reduces resources

---

(i) Paul Bourde, loc. cit., since the interest on money and rents di-mined while their expenses increased.

It therefore became apparent that in the positions envied, among the merchants who made business, he came to settle two or three pro-professional, where there was only one. The revenues
. 8th are divided more than they could be.
If they had stayed in the countryside, cultivating the on earth, there would have been no discomfort, because they con-continued to produce the substances necessary to their food; but coming to the city, they ve-
. would share, with city dwellers, the wages or

-the products that would then become insufficient to feed them, keep them warm and clothe them.

And let no one come saying, with the socialists-Let's raise wages, because then new Immigration, therefore a new generation.

Also, do you hear all the points without
The exception is to cry famine.

Furthermore, the name has been excessively increased,
civil servants, veritable parasites living
. taxes and licenses, paid by those who do proof of private initiative. Taxes are deve-formidable speakers. And although the government speakers nationals tried (intentional error or unconscious) to demonstrate that the wealth of the France has increased in the same progression-because of the taxes, a problem ensued.
considerable that everyone feels and that he You'd have to be willfully blind not to see.

The remedy is easy to understand: it is necessary that This exodus is ceasing, reducing the number of functions naires, the tax figure. Finally, to promote A-agriculture, which we must glorify, so that the inhabitants of towns and countryside are resuming - the normal proportion (1). |
— I therefore clearly see that there is a questionagricultural union and that the socialists, feeling the
The needs and desires of the "agricultural" population, but not Not understanding them well, they try to deal with them of their propaganda, in order to fish in troubled waters.

Fortunately for the public good that their these theories are completely unsuitable for peasants.

from France.

This question, as we have seen, is above all a major moral question, of education-tion and instruction, We have cited this An attraction to the artificial pleasures of the city?
mirage that this schoolteacher from Yonne was talking about;
These ridiculous jokes from small minds devoid of wit, they try their luck on the rustics peasants; but we think that all this decree

(1) I see the response of the collectivists: Let us establish the communnism; but I refer them to my chapter on this subject. Dail-Theirs, it's not Jura's disdainful opinions of things agricultural producers who gave us farmers, no one would no longer want to beeher the earth, even with the ripper; co No way! Not my idiot's daughter, I played the piano and flirted with a great socialist leader, who will never decide "on his" delicate fingers +, whatever Kropotkin says, for making soup ax pigs. |

"— poor humanity, do qe vivrais-lu?

2) | your AGRICULTURAL QUESTION

gut makes the current vogue. of socialism, ne [ow

^ that temporary and similarly that at certain times, Agriculture was prosperous, it will become prosperous again in _ a flourishing future and it will not be in vain that we

MW SE, the beautiful verse from Virgil:

OO YOU? nimium sua si bona morent |
. Agricolas! SE 1

There are thousands of examples that one could cite.
These illustrations should, however, give pause for thought.

/J...siones that will rush into the capitals. –

Corsicans and the agricultural question

Last September 1901, I went-born across Corsica, admiring the beauties natural and wonderful sites, when the opportunity arises Sion offered me the opportunity to see some types of — bandits (1).

`Calvi, it seems, is a happy corner of Corsica` where the bandit exists only exceptionally. Let us hasten-We would also like to say that the Corsican bandit is not not what a vain continental thinks; over there, it's The policeman who creates the bandit, you might be walking at night along the most obscure paths curs, covered in gold or jewels, you will not find not a marauder to steal from you; as in Jersey, where many bankrupts flee,
The flight is unknown. You will not encounter a
The Corsican beggar does not hold out his hand.
against, for a family quarrel, for a any vendetta, he cuts off your head
a sickle cut; but, since it's between families, That's nobody's business. It's a characteristic of the

(1) This trip, which I was undertaking for the purpose of social studies, was very prolific in terms of documents for me,

The Bankruptcy of Socialism

| customs of the past, which tend to 'disappear, however-dant (d). ie
© Thanks to the obligingness of the investigating judge: B
Mr. Colonna, and the very likeable sub-prefect, Mr. Vietor Greek, I visited the prison.
— . In the room where the men were standing, they:
a were four: ` z
Two big fellows were molling L | for having beheaded a third — to
. a sickle, of course — which had come to them — looking for a fight, claiming it was his turn
. to cultivate a certain field, which he had already taught-
started a few years earlier; to what extent |
Others replied: that having possessed it the year Previously, they intended to continue.
The quarrel had escalated, and to put an end to this dispute about collective property or communal, there was a violently severed head.
It is quite obvious that if, instead of being pro-collective or communal property, the property cut The discussion was individual and well-defined; it was a private, clearly defined discussi

would not have had licu.
The two poor devils, who didn't seem not at all malicious, they looked dismayed;
they recounted this as if E OË had been acc-

(4) e Moreover, 3 measures that we know — Corsica, in It was observed that she remained in a thousand ways, the prisoner of “In the past, she is trapped in her old, so foreign customs”
To the modern order, as it is enclosed within its vitiligo houses so well made for war and so PM pure for the pai-
"Siblos, field work."

(In Gorse, Voul Dounve) Calmann Lévy, elt,

THE AGRICULTURAL QUESTION — 215.
But by fate. The Turks would have said:
"It was written in the stars."

And I thought: "There you have it, O Jaurès, to Viviani,
"The beauties of collectivist property !"

|| It is necessary to give some explanations-Let's go. In Corsica, where the culture is still very primitive and where agricultural education has, a lot more than in the year, the need to be created, and to further stimulated by the creation of summer camp centers nisation, as we will discuss in chapter Next, there are immense areas that are pro-communal collective rights.

Practicing collectivism in their own way, the Corsicans take turns plowing these fields, he We need to see how. To avoid smoking their lands, generally not knowing what It's because they don't cultivate certain types of manure.
fields that every three years, leaving them in fallow land, and contenting themselves, as fertilizer, with burn the grasses and plants that have grown in the meantime. As these uncultivated lands are extremely numerous, there are some that are not cultivated only once every ten or twenty-five years. That explains why he can be found one year two people having set their sights on the same plot of land.

The other two prisoners have nothing to do lei. An ambush, a head taken off with a single blow sickle, then a sixteen-year-old kidnapper of a girl
pe

But most importantly for the cause that we

...occupied was that of a married peasant woman, who had stabbed twice, on a Sunday, in the village square, a young man who had had the mistake of boasting about having done it with her trifle. | E

What was this peasant woman? A woman of bars.
What did she live on? The produce of a herd of eighty goats.

At the time, that number meant nothing to me, that It's only later, after certain discussions.
I suppose I indulged in this little calculation. — `

A goat gives milk for about eight month of the year, that is to say 244 days; it gives | two liters of milk on average, sold on site at 0.25 francs per liter at Roquefort cheese shops who have settled there, resulting in a product
. of 0.50 centimes per goat in one day, i.e.:

2,122 francs per year, and eighty goats.
e 122 X 80 = 9,760 fr. per year, that is to say a trai-
higher than that of a member of parliament, to that famous | prototype at 25 francs per day.

And I remember, in comparison with this fact,
from a charming travel companion from Ajaccio to Corte, who, on the train, pointed out to me the Wonderful mountains. He went down to the station.
of Vizzavona, admirable site, the Davoplatz of the Corsica where several very comfortable hotels, sea-carefully placed in the mountains, in the middle fragrant plants were built next to them.

from the prefect's chalet. Then he returned with a piece of bread and goat cheese which he began to eating with gusto, telling myself: "never my-Sir, I have only eaten good cheese in

In my country, this cheese is delicious, I love it — easily my frugal everyday meal.

"And this Corsican bread. |

"And this clear water that flows down from |The mountain, now that's not adulterated like that Paris wine, like this muddy and micro- water _well that Parisians absorb: this one; dia-Phae and virgin of all contain would heal
the most stubborn stomach aches of city dwellers.
Look at it, over there, cascading down, just that.
"Seeing it makes you want to taste it."
.. Indeed, I went to the waterfall which falls-bait with a crash, fill a water bottle, souvenir from Ajaccio and I made it available to my companion `This man was happy, for a moment at least.

However, I think that this admirer of his country
natal, leads "a miserable existence in Paris, devoid of everything. Pleasure with a treatment of 15 to 4500 francs per year, adjutant re-enlisted in the army from the Military Academy, while he could live

— a shepherd in his mountains, making himself ten thousand France's rents by leading this anarchic life and libertarianism, as Sébastien Faure calls for.

And how many Corsicans like him "ve-they are groping obscurely in the offices, which possess kilometers of fertile land, left in isolation

te." | EP | MÉ
And I think of the few Corsican pawns that

I saw it at the Tours high school in 1883-84 and I

I see pawns again here in Paris, unionizing
` to obtain from the minister, with the help of Jaurès, |
| an increase in treatment in order to. of lice.

© see maintaining a common-law relationship in a hotel from Rue Cujas or Rue des Carmes, a whore from the bou- - Bleverd, whose ideal is... ct for the future than... -

"Let us die pawns."
—.Q, blessed wt and I: remember qua Dr. Ramaroni, from Bastia, to show me their superiority, he told me, he had done a lot autopsies, but one he had never seen before the only normal stomach, the physiological stomach described by Cruveilhier; it was that of a shepherd Corsica. ` Pu ES
Unfortunately. e or are "even worse |
What Parisian suburbanites, they no longer want them rather than tending the goats, they aspire to keep

And the prisoners, even in Cayenne (read the book of Rorique brothers), to be prison guards, gendarmos or rural guards on the continent, The `

Fashion, that's all there is, the madness of the bureaucracy tie spreads deep into the maquis, and as They have extremely friendly members of parliament and...

influential, witness the very hospitable Mr. Malasopina in his castle of Belgodère, they ask

(by Paul Boune, | loc. cit,)

They obtain a large number of government positions.
government and Viclets ribbons in abundance.

Agriculture is therefore neglected, and namebreuses are small properties of 12 to 15 hectares, very well situated and of exceptional fertility captivating, which are for sale for almost nothing, while their owners obtained on the continent a rural postman or employee position positions. Along the same lines, we see at Calvi, a nursery completely free of plants of fruit trees, and the government serves to its administrator three thousand francs of annuities.

These things seem extraordinary to a Continental, he cannot believe the stories he is told In fact, luckily for me I found in a book on Corsica by Mr. Paul Bourde, the same impressions and the explanation for this disdain of agriculture. "Until the end of the last century, The Corsicans lived in a state of perPetuelle. To bear arms, to take part in life the constantly agitated public of the Island, were the the only honorable occupations for a man. Manual labor was abandoned to women and servants... Fifteen thousand Italian workers who are referred to as Lucques, although he comes from various provinces, arrive in Bastia in the autumn and sc repantooth in the Island, where, until May they do the major works of clearing and stirring-land management... Almost all the villages have a beautiful place where the inhabitants spend the . best part of their lives to "talk politics, .

I will explain everything about this expression to you at this hour. the meaning... If you wanted to persuade these people that they would be better off with a more laboratory-like life. laughing, they might answer you that each is free to define happiness in their own way, but

It is likely that they would be satisfied with you ask: Do you take us for Luz?

"What?" (1).

And yet, the Calvi people should take modeled on their Mayor, Mr. Puccinelli, the only one, the only one that practices modern agriculture there, bringing forth from this extremely fertile soil wonderful fruits. His farm, deep in the The bay of Calvi is wonderfully laid out.

This is the model we will need to follow when we will want to spread agriculture in Corsica. THE orange trees, mandarin trees, lemon trees, the ` edrat trees, almond trees, jujube trees, ca-prayers, etc. .... I saw and admired everything there.

the direction of the very kind owner; I saw there long bunches of grapes, nearly 50 centimeters long timers, from Alicante to grains like eggs of pigeon, with an exquisite taste, which he preserves on the vines until the months of January and February and that it then shipped to Nice.

Mr. Minister of Agriculture, go see the property of the Mayor of Calvi, and after having

(4) In Corsica (Paul BourDE),

The | AGRICULTURAL QUESTION. AND

: admired "this earthly paradise which he was able to glimpse from 8
. all pieces, you will give it as an example. to ` They're crazy, men, by decorating him with the Legion of Honour - of honor (1). | ROBO i

(d T These decorations that T demands seem to contradict m

` with the idea that I put forward in chapter RE of this A 2
. sion of the decorations. ME

No!

Because, as long as there are civil decorations, it is better to © Leg grant to men who have actually done or produced 2

something that young, round people do pra nis d hoc n | or the hours of cream, | |

The remedies we offer

Well, are all these young people crazy enough?
people, like the thousands we see and thousands, whose names are at the tip of my pen and who come to take up residence in Paris, hairdressers, ehareutiers, boulangers, cuisiniers, grociers, frui-

. third parties, any kind of shopkeepers, with the obsessive idea-dante to make his fortune there, while such a beautiful dream,

such a beautiful ideal, such riches and happiness
easy opportunities are available to them.

That's how I'm referred to, in Courlon, in Yonne, a rich agricultural region: this year, at draw, there wasn't a single young man inhabiting the country; all had emigrated to the Capital, looking for a small job.

If a social revolution is not necessary
To change all of this, at the very least a revolution is needed.
in the minds and in the teaching of the camloincloths. Our ministers must be nova-men devoted to the public good, instead of being beautiful speakers, trying in a more or less cleverly combined, to retain a _ majority.

The methods are not revolutionary, they are DH and easy and the generations to come ` will regard as benefactors those who will be able to bring about this social renewal.

= In this goal, it is necessary to create a large, moving support for agriculture.

Our representatives, who represent the | campaigns and which must be in the Chamber, the great e"

majority, since the agricultural population in France
The greater number cease. In a spirit absurd advertising, which I hope will be re-will soon turn against those who want to escape it to serve, to play into the hands of the city workers industrial centers, thus creating this phenomenon-
nal. vicious circle - which we have talked about, |
arriving, in the end, at doing evil- |
happy and to displease these same workers. — - (Example: the latest "— of Paris S of
- Roubaix).
The voters, who are full of goodness, need to...
In this sense, they say that this increase in wages-These workers' pensions will not be produced.
that by new taxes, and that these taxes which we are already "dying" will create new miseries.

WU, the "rural residents" need to shout "uno" |
Good faith to these idiotic charlatans: "Enough of the im-l pots, enough larks which, in Paris, in Rou- .
Baix, in Montceaux-les-Mines, must fall | roasted all over the workers' stomachs; that-those who are not satisfied with their lot should

Sab 2: $4

zm IS FLUTE seen SOCIALISNE

| like us; that they take a pickaxe and a `
| shovel, and let them go and fertilize the thousands of hectares.
- virgin or fallow lands of the 3rd france,

from Corsica, Algeria, Tunisia. » |
And the charlatan MPs will then understand - that voters are no longer children, and They're fed up with the empty promises.
But since up until now we have been dealing with the depend-

— to spend millions to beautify the cities, it would be time that we also take care of embellishing the clothes |

rural developments.
We should stop treating agrisulioursc o | (primitive € and outcasts, and offer them pleasures_sirs that can only be found in the city. —

It is necessary for selfless minds to dedicate themselves to This beautiful and honest propaganda; it is necessary that...

. exchange grateful farmers do not elect
No more ambitious people or jokers, but men.

_ resolved to defend their interests and to march | towards the reduction and elimination of taxes.

And everything that can be done to help Agriculture will have to be: also regarding the wish

+ like that of the Eure-et-Loir General Council, and the French Farmers' Association, requesting that the Machinery Gallery be preserved, - _if well arranged for agricultural competitions, will be — once formulated, it must be granted immediately, despite the famous ideas of the socialist collectivist minister.

The most important thing for us will be to create Agricultural instruction. : pe

[i XDE]
E acus e des cb

THE AGRICULTURAL QUESTION. 225

Indeed, the most beautiful propaganda that can be |
to be done in favor of agriculture must be done by

I'm a rural schoolteacher.

To this end, the government, or at least Some ministers have shown tendencies; some - lessons in physics and agricultural chemistry must to be given at school; questions are asked of subject to the primary school leaving certificate; in many municipalities, a field of experience is made available to the teacher who can (optional) to practically teach the culture and Gardening. Here and there, in the prefectures, In some sub-prefectures, professors agricultural projects have been created that are going to their fantasy and, whenever they feel like it, to do, in the rural communities, conferences on grafting, the size of the vines, the artificial meadows, summer, etc.

This teaching (if it is possible to give it to him) (to name this), indicates a trend, a good will, the feeling of a need; but according to In our opinion, there is a lack of cohesion.

Do you see any professors of medicine or of teaching their science by traveling to across France, describing tuberculosis in a county seat, smallpox in the sub-prefecture - - and typhoid fever at the prefecture; this

It would be ridiculous and pathetic. Even better, we claim that these professors agricultural practices are harmful to the goal we have

290 TA FAULTATE pu SOGIALISME

: we propose; these are young rentiers living in taxpayers' expenses, which are not subject to. cun service, were created by an evil genius.

They are imbued with collectivist ideas, or with large-scale farming using agricultural machinery

i. schools. Changing residences often, they do not

They therefore do not attach to the ground, nor to the inhabitants that they are responsible for destroying and not | can communicate ideas to them. that they

They do not share. They aspire to only one thing, it's asking for their change and moving up in rank, to increase their salaries.

What we want, on the contrary, is a | teaching with cohesion, - | E
Instead of spending only two years: at Im G normal school, our rural schoolteachers will pass

One more year in which they will be busy.

* especially theoretical agriculture and above

E practical. Most of the young people who enter at the teacher training college, were born in the countryside, sons of . cultivators or rustic parents. They are vi-| greedy, full of health and the financial interest they © will find in this reform. It will make them. P ween K

E "m | TES
— Besides, digging the soil is a very | hygienic, is Professor Thierry, chi-surgeon at the Pitié hospital, does not engage in this exercise there in Chaville, every day after |

EET consultation. |

See in the city where the regular summer camp is located, |

di VE
ds M ii gd S MT Kai EN `sa AE a” . s to en, t) A soul of EAS. LB LI MT NI He DA Ié

It is impossible to add OX fields to it — | experiences, future teachers will go on to spend a year in a farm school. — to E

Their lessons will be taught by Professor E. of agriculture. Once appointed, the municipality will net The teacher has at his disposal a plot of land for... Several hectares, a small farm. As it will be. the farmers' interest in having a master for | give them advice and guide them on the path — of the pregres, if they do not have this field or this firm, they will impose themselves with pleasure by some additional cents to receive this benefit farm school. INN Co

The stables, because we want to see them little by little - animals chosen from the purest breeds, will be built according to the rules of Ma "m | modern veterinarian. ` " ER The products will be the property of the teacher. which will see its budgetary resources increase | considerably; if he has more difficulty and more work, he will be richly rewarded and no will not complain. That is how we will not be — : not obliged to burden taxpayers with new- taxes to increase the processing of poorly paid rural schoolteachers (1). : E

We just said that the country folk trou- - will quickly see the benefit they will have in owning a farm

; ^u) In many departments, the state owns forests — Land and meadows. That the state grants to the municipality a few hectares areas of these meadows, in exchange for which the latter will have in the 4

The necessary land for the town center that we are requesting...

S
L

i 15. |

| ecolo ot que c co sera los plus légers centimes addi.

– conditions they will ever have endured, but there EE quantity of municipalities in France that possess T communal land perfectly suited for ins-

– to work with the schoolteacher and I can't think of anything else hometown in Maine-et-Loire, which is located in a small property of 8 to 10 hectares, its priest, horse owner, Leen cochèns, chickens, |
summer. n SE
This farm SE: will be a place do AE AER for the farmers who will come to learn the
the latest improvements they need, this will be their Sunday distraction, we shall know -
...to provide them with attractions. The rural church ac= tuelle, this vast building which today serves only to - to teach the "socialist blunders", from anar-Christian sans-culotte Jesus, will serve as a lecturer
. kind people who, through light projections, - will interest the farmers, as well as the societies- - choirs and small theatres will be organized in the chapels; thus some young girls Peasant women will become charming actresses, | capable of competing with those of the Théâtre Français and the appeal of a country road thus understood, -

| adding. cheap transport that ...we have claimed, it will be penalized to that of a ` x capital. - | | Sai

a from 0 = 408 lim aA E cc AM

| THE AGRICULTURAL QUESTION 229

And the rural schoolteacher will therefore have learned his science ` agricultural at the teacher training college, by an agricultural professor-- culture coming out of the agronomic institute – there
There will then be cohesion and coordination. – |
Therefore, the sta- will not be done in vain.
| agricultural lists, as prescribed for all ` the two years by the ministries of wn and Delaguerre. — — |

The Agronomic Institute, alerted by these statistics

ticks or other data, will prevent its ` professors that there have been or will be overpro-

. production of such goods in such and such "
regions, and these will give the teachers the 2nd Necessary advice.

Thus, there will be order, science, and coordination.

| » there is only disorder today, (SE and p routine. g dei
It goes without saying that these future masters loving the soil that gave them birth, will give to the ` children whom they will be responsible for instructing, love from his native land, a love of the great outdoors and of the countryside

pagne and we will no longer see the emi- "E

"Granting from the fields towards the city, we will see at the

On the contrary, these pneumonia and tuberculosis patients

| desert their spruce trees to go and rebuild

— lungs, stomach and heart in the open air r of Kä"

the ogg do RE SÉ

AM — THE FAILUTE OF THE SOCIALIST.

I was preparing this article when the chance of circumstance-Constances made me communicate my ideas to one of my clients from the Parisian suburbs, this one, Mr. Chopin, a schoolteacher in Verrière-le-Buisson, is one of the few who practices with taste and perseverance France, agricultural education. For once, the

The minister had the main house, and after having | won several medals, the teacher from Ver-Rières was, in January 1901, decorated with the — Agricultural merit.

The children are taken twice a week to the field of experiments, and the master recognizes already those who will later become up "- agri-
. eulteurs. |
Parents are — services that Mr. Chopin is returned to them, and there are many of them.
who come to him asking for further information; he

moreover, readily makes himself available to them
...tion, to show them the influence of such and such fertilizer.

We were pleased to speak with Pee brave man, with a French face, we

we went to admire the vine plantations in
'in the courtyard of his school, we visited his field of experiences and we were delighted to see him to share our ideas. From an agricultural point of view, of course-all the more so as he put them into practice.

But all of this is tiny — a child's toy —
We would like to see this man at the head of a farm: rural school, such as: we have described it.

We asked him to tell us what- | a few lines on this subject, thinking that they would have — much more valuable when written in the hand of a skilled practitioner. Here they are: — 2
"In light of the setbacks that are befalling the rural inhabitants who came to the city to

to become rich; as a result of the influence being too widely considered – to make a workers' and merchants' business, that would be to make . a great service to society to study and repores
the means to retain in their country
. originally wanted the lure of a better salary, - of illusory pleasures: the goal of leaving the country natal. i
"In these circumstances, the role of the institution- " the future is all mapped out and we can affirm, without ` `fear of being contradicted, that the teachers of our campaigns have already done a lot to prevent o _ ecttte emigration towards the city. They will return a . great service to their country by continuing, speakers –

. moral lessons and their advice, to be maintained at
. village young people who are too ambitious and think = that everything owes its success to the city. For that reason, he. |
The teacher must search, by all means.
possible, to interest his students in the work of | Fields. | P
o «a N must: that, 3 inspiring ideas "Y M. Geet, 2 City, more recent works and advice by Mr. René Leblane, he will make children love it -
. to whom this agriculture is entrusted, which Sully has A mpm with nm in the mines of Peru. … Ki

232 THE FRIENDSHIP OF "LISM"

We therefore believe that what a child is called, from his lowest age, to understand the work he
He sees what's happening around him, and will develop a taste for it even more.
And his taste will only intensify if he takes part.
himself. It is therefore with pleasure that we will see-Let's laugh at the teacher adding elements to the lessons of science which, as we know, are directed towards agricultural education, practical lessons in a-agriculture and gardening.

"What will it take to succeed? A little bit of goodwill on the part of the municipalities for to provide the teacher with a small - A field of six to ten ares, where it would be easy (the major works, plowing and others, having been carried out by the municipal road worker), to differentiate trials on plants to be cultivated in the region,
on the use of chemical fertilizers, etc.
"The school garden, which I see unhappily-often insufficient in scope,

It would, for its part, be the site of gardening studies.
_ so interesting that children always love it a lot. I'd like to see in this garden, next door from the part cultivated by the master, the small areas cultivated exclusively by each student Aged over ten. If the science lessons
- lessons done at school have a true practical conclusion-agricultural ment with these small gardens, what a vocation-tion and what love of the countryside one could print for young children. Later, when The levels will have left the classroom, it's still at the teacher to whom it belongs | to direct the young people People wanted to keep them in the paternal home.

| following the current post-school work that one `

| calls, quite rightly, the day after The school, the teacher, through adult education courses,

- public lectures given at the school, conti- ——

will change to make people love the fields and to show the — . dangers of city life to those who would like trying to lose a quiet and honorable situation
. stable, sheltered from poverty, to replace it with The poignant uncertainty felt by our villagers, - when, after selling the little one at a ridiculously low price
. inheritance painstakingly amassed by several generations. —
rations of ancestors, they come to fail so miserably Cx
fortunately in our cities." | |

Yes, what we desire from the Law: heart, God is The ideas we have put forward have an influence | any, with a view to the happiness of humanity. If the minister of agriculture, this Buddha placed on 'A throne, so far removed from earthly things, deign to grant us listen and wants to do something in favor of agriculture, of which he is the high priest over the | land; well then! let him decorate with the Legion of Honour-

. neur this valiant schoolteacher. And as the honor-If that's not enough, let him appoint him inspector.

. primary, he will immediately work miracles, and of name-

many schoolteachers, who until now had disdained this ^ his own, will begin: to teach practically.

P.S. — We cannot conclude this chapter without mentioning, Ge

"b a completely independent developer, than a former | Prosecutor of — the Republic, Mr. Berlot, young and pregnant, $9 pounds, in the district.

dissement de Baugé, to the agricultural propaganda that we demin.
gifts; that these new scathing remarks indicated a man of value, which deserves a better fate than the one it receives the government.

It's partly his fault, I'm not saying it isn't, but when a pariah Archbishop MX.., public prosecutor in Tours, is Official candidate in Loches, why the animosity towards The other one?

| I had finished my | chapter on agriculture E
| when the book of one of my former schoolmates, P. Ronce, La |
-Agricultural crisis, I understood what I had forgotten one something very important.
One of the great evils of our time is cor- -
tainement this idea of the conquest of gold. |
-. Are these the discoveries of the Minos of gold and diamonds?
. mants, the considerable fortunes that have been formed = found in certain parts of the world by ex-exploitation of coal and oil mines;

o through large-scale manufacturing, using tooling

new and improved versions of certain products.
Is it the ease of transport, the spread of education, newspaper advertising which per-

. were showing off, showing off

- under the eyes of greedy, ambitious people, this gold,

these precious stones, these riches, the stimulants, the d > obsessed with this idea D? to make a fortune from MS i

Were the beliefs disappearing?

were not replaced by sufficient education

z health, a love of good and of one's neighbor, |

. . For one reason or another, either for

- all together, it is certain that this -
a state of mind, which perhaps existed a little in the past - -

© This is not the place to study it - heels,

1! » be eme current society more than is reasonable. `

Many men are not looking for happiness! 2

Ki

that they could easily have, they are looking for _ da fortune, hoping that she will give it to them; he;
have completely forgotten the old proverb:

Wealth does not bring happiness.

- Sébastien Faure, in his grief | Verselle, studying the moral state of the poor and... of rich, ignorant, and learned, claims that They are all unhappy and that's the social question
It is above all a major moral question.

And it's true; thus this idea of making a fortune,
One of the miseries of our time is an idea absolutely false, absurd, completely contradictory to live with the modern democratic spirit because it __ assumes that some will rise through wealth, not only in the midst of others, but almost

I always do it at the expense and through the work of others.
Well, those people are wrong, and Mr. Levasseur, member of the Institute, and my former classmate Ronce are also wrong to give them bad

...Tips.

City dwellers that they are, these latter do not have I understood the response from this farmer from Brie perfectly.
to their council to work on increasing the yield of his land.

Here is the passage: "I know very well that there is a vicious circle. A farmer from Brie, to whom I I was talking, some ten years ago, about this aug-The yield management replied to me: "We will thus contribute to debasing the p" by the sura-

DI | AGRIGOLOGICAL QUESTION 237

C abundance, and we will take more trouble for
"To earn less," Certainly; that's why the A decline is to be expected anyway. But, don't Wouldn't it be better to save oneself through quantity?
When one cannot become rich through scarcity? That is

This is how many industrialists reason, and I ` E

issued that they act well when they spend |

"To increase the power of their tools."

"If cities attract workers, it is they | also who are the customers for the products of the farm, and without urban markets, the produce agricultural products would usually be very cheap, ei

The farmers wouldn't bother.
"l produce as much (1)." Do em D However, the ideal of the farmer, very well understood — by the farmer from La Brio and by all those who SH know the countryside, it shouldn't be the one- —

di: to make a fortune", produce, produce, tra- —
To work, to always strive. The peasant, in order to be...

"happy, will go very well dor. ot de pier-holidays. - m:
The potasses students, the brilliant pupils, are all designated

| for Mr. Leygues' scholarships and the others were supposed to — . i to find it perfectly natural for man to acquire (o

- Happiness had to overwork itself, always overwork itself.

They could not understand the ideal of the peasant, — | sung by Virgil and Xenophon; all children they ` —

T) RoNc, The Agricultural Crisis, preface by Levasseur, De bookstore

`Guillaumin and Vi

EH - GA BANKRUPTCY. OF SOCIALISM

They were already too tame to assimilate any further.

later the anarchic and libertarian ideal of Proudhon and Henri Maret, who, on the contrary, must do the BET wealth and the happiness of the countryman.

Have we quoted this passage from Kropotkin: E Moreover, agricultural work, aided by machines, Feieren will soon be the most attractive and the most joyful in all activities. +. | ^ - "Enough jewelry! Enough clothes!"
"— dolls! We would go and immerse ourselves in work again |
..— fields, to seek vigor, impressions there
"of nature, and the joy of living" that we had | “forgotten in the dark workshops of the fau| towns. PE a | |
|... "All in all, if half PE of adults gave about fifty half-days
. born per year to the cultivation of fruits and vegetables = out of season, everyone could eat all year round

24 luxury fruits and vegetables to your heart's content.

Fifty half-days a year, that's the ideal.
| of agriculture, such must be the ideal happiness for . Phomme. The only point that separates me from Kropot- f

NS kine, it's because I'm an atheist, and I don't believe in - _ the goddess Revolution; I believe that this happiness,

"Men will be able to have it when they understand it."

^ .will do well, without opening the bellies of the bourgeoisie, - `by going, as we explain in chapter
...continuing, cultivating thousands of hectares of land

Virgins, in Corsica, in Algeria, in Tunisia. ` m
A Theuro. presents, is it to these | winemakers

"gf" D RSS SR LS 7

the area around Bourgueil, Chinon, and the hills

...of Saumur, of the Côtes du Layon? Are these - small farmers, owners of fertile lands, - do not live this anarchic and libertarian life, — wealthy (not billionaires), independent, happy

very happy, and far from overworking themselves, they did not tra-They are not worth half the days of the year.

The remedy for the great social question, and in ` : the present case regarding the agricultural question, therefore, is not _ not to push farmers towards INDUSTRY

i AGRICOLE, the agricultural industry. - .
It is: Ee

Piety, such as Proudhon defended it.

To facilitate | the implementation of the pro- |

To create agricultural education, such as we We proposed it to teach the cultivator to — |» produce more, with less effort, and sell it off - “the supplement to his harvest in exchange for N products which he does not have.

d No longer Lo [MUN of the ` cities through college and high school scholarships; —
| to employ, on the contrary, a portion of money

. to create centers of colonization.

Ae To clearly show the farmer, what will be the `
-the happiest of men. To this end, let us organize

We subsidize village festivals; we create, —

- musical societies, choirs, shooting clubs, etc.

Let's decorate our churches that we won't use.

more to teach superstition, but the ideal EM N of the Future, the morality of science: “ad veris

—— (tatem per scientiam.”– Let’s decorate them with your-

. bleaux of our most famous masters; we there
We will hold conferences, light shows,
We will have beautiful collections there, libraries
...well-chosen teas, and on Sundays, pianists - experts will accompany young female farmers to `larynx free of any Koch bacillus, singing of the Saint-Saëns, Gounod, or Massenet. We

— we will not have restored the worship of the goddess Reason, —

we will have established life and science, where it reigns

"For death and superstition.

ES d Presently, we will need to ebróger ko

- military service, abolish exemptions, the `

...to make it equal for all, and to take care that at the
. barracks they don't become Damaged. - d

Educated, free, happy, having books, bro- i

. newspapers, entertainment, agricultural crops -

...giving over their land, with love and knowledge, to safety

the stupid jealousies and ambitions of city dwellers,

d sme du: true. ——

an inevitable consequence of our social ideas.

We have tried to indicate a remedy for depopulation of the countryside; but this is not sufficient to cure us of our current malaise. large cities and industrial centers, on the other hand, are crowded. How many times have we seen Paris, young and vigorous young men, brought - here by chance or independent circumstances- defying their will. How many came there? attracted either by the luxury and wealth of the capital glimpsed one festive evening at the Tsar's or on July 14th, either through bad advice from a butcher relative, butcher, baker, coiler, etc., in the process of to make a fortune, unless it's bankruptcy, who sold their small property, coming to buy here

E

“a grocery store, a MOROEA bar where they have | (n spent their money, just long enough to realize it- - to have to and find themselves without a job, without a home,

, fear. of being ridiculed by old friends.

`not daring to return to their native village, of How many were born who did not ask for it? Sg this vast Capharnaum and even their majority - Warfare, did not advance beyond the fortifications. Many, -

Without souls, without family, are badly turned, who - would have been at the been ad of deg cultiva- - eurs. -

That's how you find yourself on the i days - Two newspapers of bandit stories, which have com-

started by trying to do something.

Finally, after finding that the campaigns

| were becoming depopulated and sought in agricultural education-

"A remedy for this depopulation, we have -"

= since in Corsica, for example, this remedy would not be not enough, the Corsican having a horror of work agricultural and that he would only indulge in it when he would see mainlanders come to cultivate his island and

"to create situations there that are more pleasant than -- those of rural postman or Lm on the continent.

Indeed, there is no shortage of land in France.
which remain to be explored and which could provide

"In addition to the thousands and thousands of inhabitants,
But they have owners who -

They leave them fallow for their own pleasure, and we let us accept, with Pro, that individual property-

| | COLONIZATION ` T " |. 48.
Individual use must lead to certain abuses; 1

but could we give this name to certain ` Large properties that exist in France? If-

This property was abusive and particularly | ger

n unique, shocking Iron our spirit of equality, is

~ as in England and Ireland where there is only one B CH owner, "Countess Stafford, was able to expel him

"at once fifteen thousand farmers from his lands";
we wouldn't speak like that, but we said...

at the beginning of this book that we do not —

. occupations that of France. — das

... Also, to do what the patricians $ fi rent to Rome for the plebeians; to increase the ` number of rural farmers at the expense — of the unemployed city dwellers, we will have to look for m valleys quite far from the Seine basin, but who will be no less rich and beautiful —

...on the contrary. It will be pointless to go very far. S

Last September, we took a car in Calvi to visit the forest of Bonifato, which is a 3-hour drive away, is-

That is to say, about 30 or 36 kilometers away.
— For more than two hours, in the valley of the Ficarella, our little cheve:-: Corsicans trotted:

on perfectly maintained roads, travelled ` ranting completely uncultivated lands, where vegetated ` ` the rockrose, the mastic tree, the heather, etc., by and by

to a few cultivated fields, (and in what manner) —
. some rare hovel of — with a flat roof s without E |

fireplace,

These few thousand hectares were pro-_ communal property and considering that this land with less difficulty than in our regions more exposed to frost, could cause growth succulent plants, and wonderful fruits, - we were thinking of Clemenceau's article (Cheval maintaining unnecessarily in congested cities, | idle and unemployed, while without great difficulty, with a few blows of the pickaxe or of shovels (only a few hours a day) they would produce their own food there.

`While for a long time, I had been describing to my friends, my colonization system, not thinking - than to distant lands, which could offer great difficulties, I had finally discovered his licu preferred, twenty hours from Paris.
Listen to what the "Joanne Guide" has to say about it.
"We leave Calvi via the Ile-Rousse road.
3.5 km Col de Sainte Catherine, where the view detaches itself at .. right the Calenzana forest road, which leads

at the Bonifato forest house.
|. 4k.4 we cross the Ficarella on the bridge of Bambino.

^4 k. 8 we leave the Ile-Rousse road for turn right onto a car road that crosses a fertile plain... On the eastern side of these Collines is located 1 km from the Moncale road.
in a graceful valley sheltered from the winds and covered in greenery.

. “Calenzana, capital of the canton of 3,055 inhabitants
. tants (telegraph) on a gentle slope, at the foot
from a green hill (expansive view over the gulf) Calvi). The territory of Calenzana is one of the most “the riches of Corsica, and all the cultures pros-father. The Secco moves a large number of oil mills. Its mineral wealth are no less important. It is there, in fact, that... finds the Argentella mine. Calenzana is a

The most productive Corsican villages in terms of honey:
neighboring mountains are covered with aromatic plants
"These are the characteristics that give this honey its exquisite taste."

But as I was talking about this idea these past few days to some Corsicans, they pointed out to me that the Coast Orientale was absolutely wonderful and everything about it a neglected fact from an agricultural point of view.

Whether it's more or less unhealthy, that's it.
possible, but we have the means today sanitation and land clearing, putting the workers protected from the effects of Malaria.

It was on this coast that the ancient ` city of Aléria “founded by the Phocaeans and repeu-

. later replaced by a Roman colony sent by Sulla. Aleria, which was the seat of a bishopric, was Until its destruction by the Saracens in "1v. siéele, the island's capital." This means that That coast was once rich and healthy.
"Approximately 2 kilometers north of Aléria, near from the left bank of Tavignano takes place the large body of water in Diana Pond, which was

E TE XA PAILLITE pu SOCIALISM

in antiquity. the port of Aléria (Poitus Diana).
In the pond, which rarely communicates with the ` | sea through a narrow channel, the island of fishermen, measuring M

...approximately 400 meters of circuit is formed in its entirety —

—entirely made up of a huge accumulation of scales —
'of oysters, which, undoubtedly resting on a shallow bottom,
...dates from the Roman era, while 'Méria end ait `
Salted oysters in Rome. | KH
"A car road that's ON the road" national road for 2 kilometers to the south and continues to west. via Boitel Avenue, leads to the estate national of Casabianda, governed by the Ponts-et- —

Roads, built on a rocky hill, 60 meters

of altitude and which extends lengthwise, from north to south | 3

Seafront for almost 8 kilometers with 6 ki-

QUE: larger-width lométzes (over 2,000 hectares) flaws). In the former penitentiary area, the hotel, —

open to foreigners with authorization from the o

= Bridges and Roads, offers a serious resource - to the hunters frequenting the Aléria plain ex- -

— extremely game-rich. — Next to the estate of Casabianda, is home to the magnificent estate of ` Machigliani (750 hectares, vineyards, cereals, meadows ries, etc.), or Mr. Leca, former chief surveyor, has achieved true cultural marvels.”

Well, whether it be in the plain of Calen- ^;

zana, or on the east coast or elsewhere;

- either in several points at once, we iie: |

donations to the creation of agricultural centers. of coloni- -

T sation. We begin with the ois because- - i ' Se 1 ^ “+ od

: "ER
ae of FINAL x, Eg Ee? E

| COLONIZATION E 249

that it is closer, that its wonderful sites

3 will enchant the settlers, and its climate will be _ extremely pleasant to conlinentals; we . hopefully continue with Tunisia, Algeria, the

Maroe, the Niger Valley, Madagascar, etc... m

© The field of experience is vast, as we know it.

...let's see, much larger than the street sidewalk
—. St-Jacques, of the rue Montmartre, or even that.
- Boulevard des Italiens. - SE
All sensible and self-interested people, all

-those who love France with a selfless love
They will understand that this scra will revive them through contact.

| of the infinite beauty of nature, these men annihilated
...damaged by the oxygen-depleted air of cities and now incapable of struggling for existence. Done, that
-whether it be the Government, the city of Paris, the assis` public law, large cities, Lyon, Mar- .

Scilly, Bordeaux, etc.; whether it be the departments- SCH

. ments, the community or private initiative, or Well, all at once, it's time to decide, at the...
Instead of continuing the old routine,

To accomplish a good deed in a short time.

time to produce wonderful results, and in the future to regenerate and rejuvenate our France which,
| currently exhausting and decaying. a
. . But according to the wisdom of the nations, the things They are only worth what we make of them; good

. seed makes good grain.

— . UU will be necessary to found and "m these n | e of colonization of intelligent young men, 1

active, with a sense of order and economy, etc.
It is quite rare and disinterested. These different

With all these qualities combined, I believe, however, that one can —

Finding them is absolutely essential.

to the practical application of our ideas.

These are not expenses of money that we 3

— want to make acquisitions of agricultural machinery

unusable schools and motor vehicles. wealthy builders aiming to reach E pretty pots of wine, —

'No.

What we need is a permanent, full-time equivalent (HE CDI).
but fertile, of a few thousand hectares; of Goodwill, and PN instruments pri~

...modious and inexpensive.

..— I am requesting, for the creation of a first E LE 'éontré, an annual sum of 100,000 francs, and ` You'll see—I'm going to do wonders!

VR To be released.

I suppose: a moment r^ mission DUM. * place.
designated; it is, if you will, the plain which takes place while going from Calvi to Bonifato.

^ . Well, a few thousand hectares on the coast an oriental like the wonderfully |
— located in Casabianda, neighboring the private estate ol de Marchigliani, where the owner, Mr. Leena achieved true cultural marvels.

What Mr. Puccinelli in Calvi, what Mr. Deca ` have achieved this on their own initiative and in their

of personal interest, we will do it: on a larger scale |

s 2a OF

NE of the KT o

COLONIZATION n |. 251.

large scale in the interest of France and
humanity.

You found the young man active and... interested, determined to succeed; you have put at his disposal available a sum of 100,000 francs that ...— you will gradually provide him with the be-

care during the year, |

You will not grant him a salary.
Outrageous! 18 to 20 thousand buses, Count Votis, have you?
recently done to a bankrupt who, not having unable to manage his own affairs, would be in trouble ...to administer those of our colonies. No, ensure his survival with 3 or 4 thousand francs, ct, as he is young and easygoing, you him will allocate a certain percentage on the pre that will make this colony pay.

He's going to leave, but he needs some help and collaborators, he is accompanied by five or six young and vigorous men, already disillusioned of Parisian life and which — that there is no There's nothing to be done about it.

A mason, a blacksmith, a carpenter, two | farmers, a cook; their treatment will not be not high, roughly the same as it would be here; they will later be foremen with a share of two benefits, let's assume for the moment a treatyamounting to 1,000, 1,200, 1,500 francs, which makes at at the end of the year a sum of 9,000 francs. Transport from Paris to Marseille, 42.50 francs. A Day in Massilia, 10 to 20 francs.

The boat from Marseille to Calvi, 12 or 23 francs.

To be generous, let's assume that the trip will cost them 100 francs each, or 700 francs in total. Here in Calvi, and in the uncultivated plain, but fertile or it is a question of establishing this colonization center. For a while, they will take boarding school. . in some hotel or at Miss Félicie's.

The administrator hires for six months. about twenty men from Calvi or Lucca (quoted P. Bourde), at a rate of 30 or 40 sous per day; in short, at the price they are paid in the country: it will not make the same mistake that they have made these deranged young people who are sent on missions to Congo, Sudan, or elsewhere, paying for Negro workers at a rate of 20 francs per day, then that a few pennies worth of cloth or glass beads would have done their job much better? No, I I will pay these men the lowest possible price. But, since I don't want to be treated by the socialists, capitalist exploiters, although traValiant for the good of humanity, I askrai for each of the Corsicans who will have distinguished themselves guided in the task I will have entrusted to him, to all if they have also worked, a guard- position rural or prison guard on the continent, because that is their ideal.

The early agricultural equipment, or tools
The employees who built it cost me 2,400 francs.
After six months, concerns are already being raised.
light construction; barracks that will

COLONIZATION Rise s KR

= receive p settlers; several kane of land E
` have been cleared and sown and already some | D:
: tates, tomatoes, beans, etc., will per- i

| to put in place the task of feeding the newcomers.

'So, we can write to the minister of...'

I colonies, to the Municipal Council of Paris, to the Con- –
.. General Seine of the Seine, to public assistance, 262 | summer, that the installation is. “ready to receive the

a promotional convoy,

Meanwhile, at the Ministry of Dei: to

. the town hall,. posters had been put up; -

. in some newspapers, faded advertisements, |

teaching men who, without work, desired SCH

to go and colonize, that an agricultural center was in formation

. tion, and that on such and such a date, a draw would be held among the ` `

"First ones who would have registered to go -" to fertilize new lands.

Some competent men had made a choice among those who had registered, of S – a way to eliminate the lazy, the worthless.

Then this departure, which will gradually be followed by `

and many others are fixed on such and such a day and time at the . Gare de Lyon, under the direction of X...

`As this is a good work, done by the government or under its high patronage, the

AL
e HM

| Transport will be at half price: or a quarter of a seat.

The journey from Paris to Calvi is 42.50–12.

= 54 fr. 50 will therefore be 27 fr. 25 or 45 fr. more

“a sum of 5 francs for food during e | travel. E PX ke

PPT BACK TO SCHOOL rtt: | e ere ae E | 4: E TES MEAT 7 908 NISI T SE ha, rudi! p oria PE a
c
`

o THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM H

Two future colonists leave at the same time, which makes to pay a sum of 640 francs or 400 francs. Upon arriving at `

Calvi, 'I will distribute to each of my men –

...290 or 25 francs; I have for each man a the sum of one hundred francs for the year, I told them- -

— I will contribute 5 or 10 francs so that they can (to offer some minor distractions. - to

They are clothed, fed, and housed in the center.

— in the Barracks; which rise up and go P to rise: E

Pavilion n* n which is the Me: the admin- d

a tration, la correspondance, l'habillement, ete.

Pavilion No. 2, the kitchen, the dining hall, etc. |
Pavilion No. 3, the forge, the workshop, the store, —

` oil y a fer brut, pelles, pioches, eh ete. ; T
. oi on va les —

Pavilion No. 4, the workshop of 1 carpenter and of |

. framework. d Pavilion No. Kk 'Atelior dos masons, s, plasterers, di summer. Kr

The pavilion nn? ^ 6, the wards, the stables, 1 a g farmyard.

finally the communal dormitory or the rooms by- B huts where the settlers will sleep.

Upon the arrival of the first twenty colonists, including E

Each person already has a small file detailing their states.

WW previous, the administrator, - indicates ` the beautiful

Xenophon's maxim, which is printed in large print

e" characters against the wall:

"Agriculture is the most important profession."

...to learn and the most pleasant to practice; it ...beautifies and strengthens the body; it gives to souls the leisure to think of friends and of the thing public; it teaches courage, justice ...and hospitality.

Then he asks each person their particular tastes: Most of them go to clear and cultivate the land earth; there are among them masons, blacksmiths, carpenters, bureaucrats, who have their jobs all found. Two or three never learned anything, one Go wash the dishes, 2nd peel the vegetables, the 3* herding sheep (1). -

In the second convoy, there is a painter. Purotin and a singer from Montmartre. The first will paint some frescoes to decorate the The second common rooms will brighten up some days

(1) I have heard these past few days that a cellmate at The palace of Fresnés-les-Rungés cost taxpayers twelve one hundred francs a year. Wouldn't that be more practical, and wouldn't it make- We don't provide many more services to society, while also ralising serious savings, by taking on the unemployed and the homeless work before they fall to lead them to fertilize colonization centers,

When they fell, instead of letting them rot in the ver- Polish table that replaced Mazas, and to ship them to many do ;rais, to celto ile enchanleresse, it seems, which is called the New Caledonia, could we send them there cheaply? drain the marshes of Biguglia, on the eastern coast, |

New ideas require new methods. We - will soon study /the bankruptcy of spiritualism and of the ...religion and we will show that the consequence of biological laws

- gique, is this > that if man transforms himself under certain conditions

influences in beastly fauvo (read the newspapers of these times) (niers), it is necessary to employ, with regard to those, means that one Use it for wild beasts. Re-establish the knout and things will change;
But before taking action, extend a hand.

The parties, the comrades, of: his comic songs. g
But we haven't forgotten that we had — . This is a matter for men, not for Capuchins, too -

Will each settler be able to have his family and takedra his meals in his apartment ER gn

|. instead of the communal dining hall.

© His half, which he brought, will do her own thing
...cooking with vegetables from the colony, or else
B will go to the kitchen to get his ready-made meals.
The woman will be employed in the kitchen, washing up linen, making socks, blouses,
trousers, etc.; at pavilion no. X, under the direction |

. of a foreman, Ms. Z..

All these people will be paid according to their `work, their application, their activity, with `

—— tickets representing a value of X.

...When they have acquired a sum of 2,000 francs."
for example, they will be given in exchange a nice house surrounded by one or two hectares of ...land already cultivated by the colonists; it was given to him will provide farming implements, seeds, - with a few animals and he will become a small landowner.

v free, self-sufficient farmer. In the following, during- - that he will have some surplus harvest, if he has pe need for manufactured products, mobile objects to bind them, he will come to exchange them with the colony which will have continuous relations with the continent, of

In a few years, where there is no current current.

such as uncultivated and deserted lands, will flourish the | life; of coqueites '1 ser at the small palaces

COLONIZATION 257
Enchanting, beautiful villas will rise in the middle a place of lush vegetation; without hope - of unrealizable infinity, of immense wealth and fortune.
to conquer, but with the conscious idea of doing

Happiness, simply and rustically.
To summarize:

A few million hectares are protected by the State in the style of the Casabianda estate.

A sum of one hundred thousand francs is allocated by _ the State, the city of Paris, etc., or even by a journal with subscriptions from its readers, (com-Many things have been accomplished by newspapers which did not have this humanitarian aim) (L), or even `

by a lottery...............,.... 10). 000 fr.
The treatment of the director and the | Six pioneers from the beginning............ — 12,000 »
^ Af VON Leuven nC 700 »
The treatment of twenty Luccans — |

or Calvais for the preliminary work

naires at 1.50 or 2 francs per day ct | » man for 6 months........ 7,200 »

19,900 francs.

(1) Lo Figaro of recent days promised one hundred thousand francs to the one who can give him the most probable result in advance Regarding the upcoming elections... Is an experience like The cello we're proposing wouldn't smile at him. We would talk Similarly, the newspaper Le Matin tried to resolve the issue.

several problems arise, such as "the trip around the world" (lcs).
. two submarines, the Frangais and the Alyirien, the Blanchet mission,
_ summer, elc, The creation of an agricultural colonization center, ne |
Would it be "an interesting project to undertake?"

Report: EEN 900 fi.
Construction tools,

agricultural instruments............. ... 2,500 »
— Then animals, horses, va-goats, sheep........... . 4,000 »

EE 30,000 fr.

Construction materials, KÉEN

extremely cheap, since they are located on site, Corsica having on all its roads. (de get edu mE)

Ballo these A 000p
e mE . 50,000 fr.

The transport costs of 500 co-leaving Paris for the plain of Calenzana, and some money for — their little pleasures, while waiting that they are owners and that they

. provide freely and in a ` autonomous in their maintenance and to that x

of their family ()..... e, 50,000 »

They rise up, better and better, in one of these plains uncultured people, housing 500 colonists there, who joyfully

They work there with a human mind, that is to say, selfishly- -

ly in their personal interest: that of to acquire individual ownership of a small palace enchanting at the bottom of a marvelous bay, like
The bay of Calvi, which apparently saw the birth of the audacious | = Christopher Columbus.
© These settlers, all working in Y'envie, have -. cleared and sown, I don't know how many hectares, carved thousands of
of building stones. The masons threw the foundations of a number of coquettes villas.
The blacksmiths forged pickaxes and plows for other settlers to come.
The sawyers felled pine trees and oak trees in the Bonifato forest, transforming them beams and planks intended for housing.
The carpenters are preparing the doors and windows.
The administrator also wrote to the minister that all ...these men working in their own self-interest,

with the clear aim of possessing,
Having their own little villa works wonders.
The ideal scenario for wg is the same: to be in all things that they themselves would have created; it would therefore be nearly a thousand men that one could have had a year, | | |

has

two or three years, small owners, there is no no argument, no discord, but of rivalry at work, with the overarching idea of achieving similar results pure happiness, without seeking wealth which can only be acquired at the Ge of the au-

"This is the picture at the end of the first year.
At the end of the second year, we trans-carried over a thousand settlers, after five years, - are already rising at the bottom of the bay of Calvi hundreds of charming villas.
– The administrator did not deem it necessary to limit his company, he laid the foundation for a magnificent hotel intended to receive tourists who wish to visit | the wonderful sites of Corsica.
It began at the foot of Monte Grosso, ge the marvelous forest where the mouflon frolics, where Clear, pure water will cure stomach ailments.
Parisians, the construction of a sanatorium entirely for the purpose of modern, in part. intended for tuberculosis patients of the capital.
A car or horse-drawn carriage service of these wonderful Corsican horses bred by the ` settlers, must do the service of the magnificent hotel from Calvi to the Bonifato sanatorium. –
– In the plain rise hectares of vineyards, - forests of orange, lemon, and jujube trees, etc., and already we can see ships of ` trade, transatlantic or railcars, - arriving from Nice or Marseille, bringing the

: manufactured products from the Continent "in + exchange

Early produce or wonderful fruits (D. - "ETE
After five years, the center's administration –

P. of colonization. which will have increased, but which -
DT m must always have retained principles of eco- |

^ nomy, will by itself produce more than a hundred

a thousand francs in income; she will no longer need 2 to continue his work with raw materials, |

But - a city was founded in the new spirit, |
Rustic, simple, happy ST.; the work is accomplished.

€) Today, siae les séclitsstiont députés Corses, |
the subsidies that the state will give to the Fraissinet company, will be stupid and ridiculous, money wasted.

The mainland, in fact, completely ignores Corsica, which is such.

| | that it is today, could be called, the Ccrse wound.

It's important to know how to tell people, often in their own personal interestnel, harsh truths: moreover, they tell them to themselves,

| thus: when this question was asked, during the agricultural survey
| 5 of 1865, led by Deputy Abatucci: |

What are the causes that alienate the population from the Iraqis?

agricultural valleys? ` L

The Sartène agricultural society replied:

S ` em The dissemination of education and an excessive ambition
.. (Paul Bourde), |

She could have added: horror, and the deepest disdain |
on. for agriculture. - Poe

Well, as long as the Corsicans continue in the squares of d
- Their villages going around in circles talking politics; as long as - thousands of Corsicans will continue to want to vegetate "obscurely"

-really in the offices, while they own miles - |

...of fertile land left uncultivated," the boats that are subsidized - ` B will operate to provide service to Corsica, will go empty and return

. deont de meme; sinon poor ramène encore de eg nombreux 1

Those civil servants, -

The goal is to "roll, let's leave these people now."

free, autonomous, self-governing, and —

Let's go to other areas, install new E

Kaes wonders.

It's a utopia; you are like socialists.
—. lists that you fight, in Juno they will tell me 4

some of them.

No! A thousand times no! What dee — achieved, almost without resources, in mm particular interest, there is no reason why a

| No one else can do it in the general interest |
...with the resources that a — can provide

The community or certain benefactors.
This is how Elisée Reclus's son-in-law I

(I don't have the details in front of me) alone, without resource, after traveling through Algeria went -- pitch your tent in the province of Oran. In -

= €e lieu, et sous son direction, s'élève NM hui | |

B: a small, very flourishing colony Q.

| a) Thus, I see. in the World. Illustrated on November 20th

= November 1901: e A new French center on the border of the ` Morocco. = M. Say, lieutenant. of the ship, fully eovoyé, there is A few years in Nemours to study. The possibility: of to make a port... — |
^ «During the excursions he made by sea, and guided somewhat by |
With his adventurous spirit, he went to the Moroccan border and
...noted the advantages that could be reread commercially

of certain natural harbors that were located on the territory there

E foreign. b

"These advantages were of great importance to our browser xr that he didn't hesitate to break his career as a sailor for so ——

| COLONIZATION 263
The administrator, moreover, will have an interest in it.
in particular, like all the other colonists; we have, said that he had such and such a percentage on the profits made by the colony, and nothing prevents him from having his own little villa there; but = like a good ship's captain who in the `
A shipwreck only abandons its vessel last,
Similarly, his villa will only be built last.
place.
It's a phalanstery, a nest of learie me Other opponents will say. A thousand times no. We we do not want to go against the needs or human aspirations; we take the hommine as they are. We try to achieve generous ideas for the good of humanity, without revolution, without opening the bellies of the bourgeoisie, with their help, on the contrary; for among them he to devote exclusively to the creation of a port at Kiss which, by Its geographical location and hydrographic position, per-
. putait do faire de cette localité néou uu centre d'affaires important commercial... |

The beginnings were difficult....

"In Toules, these considerations were known to our colonisateur, who knew how to find all the advantages in Kiss that he would have . sought in vain on Algerian soil...

The result was not long in coming, in June.
This year, the first grain harvesting operation was opened at IISS and

From its inception, the Moroccan tribes of Vinreul brought their wheat.
and their barley; and the merchants of Nemours themselves
entered into contact with their neighbors, | 8
"The small colony has since experienced rapid growth and expansion."
In July, a coastal company sent a...

steamer to load grain “A city is being created; it is useless to make it

Sorlie Toul Co Quo, French influence can gain through the "n of this port."

17...

004 14 VALINE pu socias

There are geniuses, powerful minds, and... selfless, n
"You're copying our ideas," the collectors will say.
communist tivists. 2 Even less! We have commented in ellot by fighting you, demonstrating what your ideas were absurd, and led society to Vabimo; that they were in contradiction with the – biological laws and human aspirations,

First, we don't have a revolution, we |

Let's keep the current social system and KS property

'individual; far from suppressing it, we `
On the contrary, we seek to generalize it.

goodness, — i |
—We help with the management of campaigns.

We encourage the colonization and expansion of s

| the largest France.

We write according to the maxim of Xóno- En

| phon, that Agriculture is the most noble and the most D
-free from all professions. |

All this without harming anyone; good: better,

: with the help, the assistance of the infamous capital.

.. M y a done dans la méthode une divergenca |

| considerable: a world. dÉ
The Corsicans will be delighted, their island, uncultured - |
acd gi qu'elle cst, devenir : un paradis vM Les

Im Ces ioi ci, en feéattendant les rencontres publiques, éinel- d

Given these ideas, I heard myself being told: "But the Corso is -.

"...sterile." Corsicans shouted the eternal refrain: "Our island is - "...abandoned." - 'All this is false, utterly insane, Corsica is-

- exire mome BH qn faveurée; but its inhabitants p

COLONIZATION 20!
foreigners, learning B8es sites - will flock there; they will then find comfortable hotels tables. English tourists will come to visit it.

The forests will not be burned down by stupid people.

| MC

altendeni vous uno M iba do rond do cuir, une rento du gou er=- nement; they make France sing,

To truly appreciate Corsica, you must have seen the farmers.

from my RBaugeois to sow their lands, and compare their travail with the one I saw there: down there, we need to delve deeper into the

The answer that I received was given by a brilliant young lawyer from Calvi.
having back proper summers, to whom I asked this question: "But – Why are these lands not interlocked?..., Reply.

We would need to bring in the fertilizers from the mainland, and that It would cost us too much, eh D... my arms fell to my sides; you Think about it, I didn't ask for any more. ` |
What is certain is that there are some territories |
While arid, there are, on the other hand, extremely fertile plains.

. left uncultivated, I mentioned the plain of Ficarella, the domain | |

. do Cassbianda; jo pouvais riter les prairles près de Campo di

. . Loro, leaving Ajaccio, where thousands could be raised –

. of horses, etc. – But the Indians, they will not
. never anything; when they own. kilometers of a ` fertile land, they do as the one cited by P. Bourda at the

...page 33 of his book:

An accident kept me in a state of inactivity for about ten days.

` village inland, a former road and bridge driver |

...sées, a very kind man, would keep me company. He was managed to constitute in the canton of Porto-Vocchio, a professional __ a property of twelve hundred hectares in one contiguous block; he boasted to me about i

The advantages: good vineyard drainage ditches, abundant springs

Dantes for watering, six thousand olive trees to graft, a . ` part of the timber in full yield and whose first cut should

"To cover part of its purchase costs; onfln, co which is very Rare in Corsica, a limestone quarry. He had attempted the

...fortune in Panama and we had brought back sufficient capital

_ to start the operation on a grand scale, Well, cot |
The man was only troubled by a die. And it was about returning home.
the administration of the bridges and roads: s. I tried in vain to represent-

a. to feel the pleasures of the free and long life of the iu"-

Tairo, Cotto, life did not smile upon him:

Professor Tad

.20G THE BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIALISM

Also in the application of these ideas, we

we hope to have with us not only the collections

tivists and communists who will know how to recognize their mistake, and those who will want to see their programming in it

"This will be for my children," he said.
For him, he needed his job, » |
On page 17 of his volume "En Corso", we read; "The a-Agriculture on the island is still using Virgil's methods.
L

e > 9 > eo,e 9 o 9 85 c5. ù o © o 0 9 I e On the other hand, let's take an article by Henri Marct who knows the Corsica, having stayed there, published October 15, 1901: "We have often blamed the follies of our colonial policy and the gas-

Pillago millions, H has often happened to us to say that with the hundredth, what do you say? the thousandth part in this thrown money Without profit at all costs of the sea, we could have improved

. rer, téfertilider e» quo nous possessiona déjà ; et nous avons comme

The government of France, prepared for one of those prodigals who, Instead of repairing their house, they buy expensive dea pro-
new pries,

We will search far and wide for islands to colonize and, something Curious, we don't think about colonizing Corsica, but...

we possess — a century,

ee . H . ed + $ $

The Romans possessed Corsica, and they did not love it. because they had made it a place of exile. However, they had succeeded to cleanse the coasts and give it a fertility that would be today-ten times bigger today if we wanted to use the Mum which modern science possesses.

e 4 e? LE . ee

"This country where you find the most beautiful fruits in the world, which would give early produce in January, solicito since long years a boat service that was not granted to him. »...

Well, to supplement the subsidy for boat services which was recently voted on, it will be useful to establish there some agricultural colonization centers that will make this island a marvel

leuso in culture, without which this subsidy, as we have seen |

To say the above would be absurd and ridiculous.

We hope to have as our representatives in Parliament: Mr. Clé. B.

menceau, I. Maret, Berthelot; Corsican and colonial deputies and all sincere men who are interested in greatness, in the wealth of the homeland, and to the expansion of Greater France,

applied; but all men do good who are aluit
In the morality of Christ, love one another.

"others.

We will bring together all the men of goodwill, who without ulterior motives want to work for the happiness of humanity.

But we will not give it as a basis for our young society, old superstitions, contempt-Plato of death, as among the Trappists.

We will bring the violin with us; we
we will open our minds to progress, to science;
we will have a new morality, and if we Let us believe in the usefulness of God. "To the candor of "Silver nights" under a sky of unparalleled blue,
we will search with our eyes and our thoughts Liufini, and in the contemplation of these worlds unlimited, whose Zenith is studded with stars, we will have new designs, which will not be those Hindu mystics, Egyptian worshippers |
of beasts, or idolatrous Christians (D.

(1) We — given from our heart, that — Buddha all-powerful, minister, or villa in Paris, summer...

Something Osiris, Bischoifsheim, Rothschild, Robert Lebaudy, your 100,000 francs from Deutsch, the 20,000 from Santos-Dumont;

Some Figaro, Matin, Gaulois, Temps. (en. with the sub-

— descriptions of their readers;

They include the possibility of that ideo and provide the capital (lo capital, you hear me correctly, MM, the collectivists) necessary to achieve it,

©- What if the government provides another 15,000 francs?
to drain marshes like those in Calvi, under the direction of?
distinguished Mr. Sorba, engineer of bridges and roads, jl fass ——

killing two birds with one stone, so that this money serves at the same time

ECH B | E BANKRUPTCY or SOCIALISNE

(at deg one — do. colonization, of which the colonists will make 2 themselves the indicated drying, | |
It is unnecessary at the moment to list all the means possible ways to reach Cobul, Every day, men,

Good women bequeath their fortunes to the communes, to social assistance.
| public. The work we are proposing is just as useful, — there is no reason why the summo DECH no soil not m um dang cobut. —

Conclusions -

We have seen that socialist theories _led humanity to ruin; that the march

. towards their realization resulted in an immense — vicious cerele; that in the end, the next day

` of their revolution, the socialists (1) were.
reduced to making a living by plowing the land.

We therefore studied this agricultural issue,

His aspirations and needs, we have seen what -

= farmers were still today the

the majority of workers in the nation, therefore the force; but cola not being sufficient to legitimize the `

d dese d'ici bas, that they were still the ideal, ` (As they were the ideal of the Greeks and Romans). |
So, the question was simple. Why leave -

- the political show-offs to lead, administer, the |
"A public thing." Why, O rustics

Peasants! Don't you lagelloz them with your own hands?

< skilled in wielding the whip and the goad, they - `

3. To encumber your individual freedoms further.

ED Knorrkise, Agriculture, if 3

f

- happiness,

duels of a bunch of laws or social prescriptions,
which you have absolutely no need for. ...,.,.....,.....,

What do you care about an eight-hour day?
while you know that there are periods of "Press" of harvests where you are obliged to working fifteen and sixteen hours, you know very well that man cannot be likened to a fool

machine tuned like a piece of sheet music, ct

Full text of " Averroes and Averroism: a historical essay "

See other formats

Qass

Book_

AVERROES

AND AVEIÎROÏSM

FROM CH’S PRINTING WORKS. LAHURE (MAISON CRAPELET), 9 RUE DE VAUGIRD, NEAR THE ODÉON.

AVERROES

AND AVERROISM

HISTORICAL ESSAY

BY

*/

ERNEST RENAN

PARIS

AUGUSTE DURAND, L1RRA1RE

5 RUE DES GRÈS,

1852

£

0^

PREFACE.

If it were not necessary to look in the history of philosophy—

phye that positive results and immediately appapplicable to the needs of our time, we should re-to be close to the subject of this research is approximately sterile. I am the first to admit that we have not-
We have little or nothing to learn from Averroes, Neither Arab nor medieval. Although the problems that preoccupy the human mind today are essentially the same as those who have always sought it out?
the form in which these problems arise in our days is so particular to our century, that very few of old solutions are still likely to be there applied. 11. One should only ask the past about the past himself. Political history has become more noble since that we have ceased to look for lessons in skill or moral. Similarly, the interest of philosophical history-that perhaps lies less in the teachings positives that can be derived from it, that in the table of evolutions of the human mind.

The defining characteristic of the 19th century is that it has substituted the historical method for the dogmatic method that, in all studies relating to the human mind.

- II -

History, in fact, is the necessary form of the science of everything that is subject to the laws of life changing and successive. The science of languages is the history of languages; the science of literatures and philosophies, it's the history of literatures and of philosophies. The science of the human mind is, of Even the history of the human mind. Psychology she only considers the individual, and she considers him in a ma-abstract, absolute, like a permanent subject and always identical to itself; in the eyes of critics, consciousness develops in humanity as in the individual; she has her own history. The great progress of the The criticism has been to substitute the category of becoming for the category of being there, the conception of the relative to the con-Conception of the absolute, movement versus immobility.
In the past, everything was considered to be; one spoke-milk of philosophy, law, politics, art, of poetry, in an absolute sense; now everything is considered to be in progress. It is not that formerly progress and development were not,
as today, the general law: the earth revolved before Copernicus, although there was no awareness of its movement. The substantial hypotheses preceding-always the phenomenal hypotheses; the statue Egyptian woman, motionless with her hands glued to her knees is the necessary antecedent of the Greek statue, which lives and moves.

From this perspective of critical science, what we research in the history of philosophy, that is much less philosophy itself than history. Arab philosophy is certainly an immense event in the annals of the human mind, and a curious century like ours should not fail to to serve without having returned this ring of tradition. He However, we must resign ourselves to it in advance: he will not come out from this study almost nothing but the philosophy contemporary can be assimilated with advantage, if this is not the historical result itself. It is not up to the Semitic race from which we must ask lessons of philosophy. By a strange twist of fate, this race, who knew how to imprint such a unique character on his religious creations high level of originality, did not produce the most A short essay in indigenous analysis and philosophy. The thoughtful, independent, rigorous, courageous research the truth-seeker, seems to have been the sharing of this Indo-European race, which, from the depths of India to the far reaches of the West and the North, of-then the most remote centuries up to the Modernes, sought to explain God, man and the world in the rationalist sense, and left behind, as staggered at various stages of its history, these systems, always and everywhere subject to the laws of a Logical development. Philosophy, on the other hand, among the Semites, it was never anything but a pure borrowing-an external and infertile imitation of Greek philosophy.

The same must be said of the philosophy of the middle ground. The Middle Ages, so profound, so original, so poetic-that in the heat of his religious enthusiasm, is not from the perspective of intellectual culture, which a long groping to return to the great school of no-blue thought, that is to say, to antiquity. The Renaissance, far from being, as some say, a deviation of the es-modern take, led astray by a foreign ideal, is not that the return to the true tradition of civilized humanity-Why criticize the Renaissance and the times moderns to do with science and discernment, this What did the Middle Ages do without criticism? Was there anything better? studying Aristotle based on detestable translations rather than Should we study it in the text? Was it better to know Plato?

by some bad commentary on the Timaeus, or by second-hand quotes, which by the whole of his works? Was it better to know Homer through Dictys and Darès than reading the Iliad and the Odyssey?

Everything that the Semitic East, everything that the Middle age have had philosophy properly speaking, they owe it to wind to Greece, if therefore it was a question of choosing from the Having established a philosophical authority, Greece alone... would have the right to lecture us; not this Greece, Egypt, and Syria, altered by the mixture of barbaric elements; but the original and sincere, in its pure and classical expression. At the con-milking, if, instead of asking for doctrines at past, we only ask him for facts, the ep-periods of decadence and syncretism, transmission and slow alteration, will have more in-interest that the periods of perfection, where the original protrusion-the ginauric genius sometimes seems to fade beneath the per-perfection of form and the exact measure of thought.

These observations seemed necessary to me in order to

to avoid the reproach of having devoted so much care to a doctrine that no longer has anything to do with us. But from the moment we admit that the history of the mind human is the greatest reality open to our inves-any research in this area takes on a meaning and value. It is, in a sense, more im-about knowing what the human mind has thought about It's a problem, having an opinion on this problem;
because, even when the question is insoluble, the trathe val of the human mind to solve it constitutes a experimental fact, which always has its interest; and in assuming that philosophy is condemned to be nothing but an eternal and futile effort to define infinity, One cannot deny, at least, that there is something there for the es-
They were curious to see a spectacle very worthy of their attention.
I have, in general, forbidden myself from expressing my feelings about the problems that the subject brought me to touch, or at least I did it as simply as possible, seeking only to represent with exactistudy the originality of the characters and the physiognomy of Schools. Schools are to philosophy what parishes are to philosophy.
tis are in politics; the personal system of the historian Nothing almost always serves any purpose other than to distort one's judgment and spoil the effect of his painting. Who knows if the subtlety Isn't being judicious not about refraining from drawing conclusions?
There is, mind you, neither indifference nor the Skepticism; that's criticism: one is only a historian by condition of knowing how to reproduce at will within oneself

the different types of life in the past, to understand them to embrace originality, and to find them one after the other legitimate and flawed, beautiful and ugly, worthy of love and hatred.

I would deprive this work of its most honorable commemandate, if I didn't say that it was undertaken according to advice from Messrs. Victor Cousin and Victor Le Clerc. However unworthy it may seem of benevolencelance with which these eminent men encouraged him Enraged, we will see, I hope, a weak result from the the movement they brought to history studies literary and philosophical. I would also miss my dearest memories, if I didn't mention here the persons whose complacency allowed me to enrich with so many unpublished documents the history of averroism Paduan: Mr. Abbot Valentinelli, librarian of Saint Mark's, in Venice; Mr. Baldassare Poli, professor of philosophy at the University of Padua; the scholar Mr. Samuel Luzzatto; and so many others, who have It makes you appreciate Italian hospitality so keenly. En- Finally, I must express my gratitude to Mr. Thomas. Munoz and José de Aiava, members of the Academy of Madrid, who got me the copy from the Escorial of a very important Arabic document on the subject which I'm busy.

I took care to record in my notes what I owe it to the excellent works whose philosophy is aristotelic has already been the subject among us. We will see on- How useful were all those beautiful searches to me! Mr. Hauréau's work on scholastic philosophy, and those of Mr. Munck on Arab and Jewish philosophy in the Middle Ages. Regardless of the article if sub-stantiel that he inserted, on Ibn-Roschd, in the Dic- Mr. Munck, a specialist in philosophical sciences, has collected, on the Commentator and his family, do- interesting comments, which he would have already published, without the fatal accident that interrupted his scholarly occupationstions. Undertaken from another point of view, my travail, far from rendering his own useless, will only serve to... to make us desire, if, as we hope, science is not deprived of the results to which it was entitled to expect from such a shrewd mind and erudition also practiced.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Preface.

PART ONE.

AVERROES.

CHAPTER ONE.

LIFE AND WORKS of AVERROES.

I. A look at the diverse fortunes of philosophy, in Arab Spain, before Ibn Rushd 1

II. Biography of Ibn Rushd » 7

III. The causes of Ibn Rushd's disgrace and persecutions whose philosophy was the subject of discussion among Muslims in 12th century 22

IV. On the fortune of Ibn-Roshd among his coreligionists 28

V. Fables which have embellished the biography of Ibn-Roshd 32

VI. Ibn Rushd's knowledge, and the sources from which he had it drawn 34

VIT. His fanatical admiration for Aristotle, 40

VIII. Commentaries by Ibn Rushd... 43

IX. List of his works. ...» 48

X. From the Arabic text of Ibn Rushd. Arabic, Hebrew and manuscripts

Latins 39

XI. Editions of his works 63

CHAPTER II.

DOCTRINE OF AVERROES.

I. Antecedents of the doctrine of Ibn-Roschd. Arab philosophers. 66

II. Muslim Sects. Motecallemîn, , , , 76

III. The Problem of the Origin of Beings: Raw Matter, First engine, providence 81

IV. Theory of Heaven and Intelligences 88

V. Theory of the intellect in Aristotle 94

VI. Progress of this theory among the Greek commentators on Aristotle. 99

VII. Theory of the Intellect among the Arabs. Unity of the Active Intellect. 103

VIII. Union with the active intellect; perception of substances se-adorned, 110

IX. Collective immortality; resurrection 119

X. Ibn Rushd's Morality and Politics 125

XI. Religious Sentiments of Ibn Rushd, 128

PART TWO.

AVERROISM.

CHAPTER ONE.
Averroism among the Jews.

I. General Overview of Jewish Philosophy 137

II. Moses Maimonides 140

III. Ibn Rushd adopted by the Jews 142

IV. Hebrew translations of Ibn-Roshd 145

V. Levi ben-Gerson and Moses of Narbonne 152

VI. 15th century; Elie del Medigo, etc. 154

CHAPTER II.

Averroism in scholastic philosophy.

I. On the introduction of Arabic texts into scholastic philosophy tick 158

II. First Latin translations of Averroes; Michael Scot 162

III. Hermann the German. Translation of the medical works 166

IV. Averroes' first influence on scholastic philosophy. 173

V. Opposition of William of Auvergne 179

VI. Opposition of Albert the Great 183

VII. Opposition of Saint Thomas ^87

VIII. Opposition of the entire Dominican school 196

IX. Opposition of Giles of Rome 200

X. Opposition of Raymond Lulle 203

XI. Averroism in the Franciscan school < , . . . 206

XII. Averroism in the University of Paris 213

XIII. From Incredulity in the Middle Ages 222

XIV. Influence of the Hohenstaufen 228

XV. Averroes becomes the representative of unbelief. Legend of The incredulous Averroes 232

XVI. On the role of Averroes in Italian painting of the Middle Ages. 238

XVII. Universal Adoption of the Great Commentary 249

CHAPTER III.
Averroism in the school of Padua.

I. General Character of the School of Padua 255

II. Medical averroism. Stone of Abano 258

III. Petrarch's struggle against Averroism. 260

IV. Jean de Jandun, frà Urbano, Paul de Venise 268

V. Gaetano de Tiene, Vernias 276

VI. The Struggle of Pomponat and Achillini 281

VII. Alexandrians and Averroists. Lateran Council 289

VIII. Augustine Niphus 292

IX Zimara. Orthodox Averroism 296

X. General revision of the translations of Averroes. The Juntas, Bagolini 300

XL Opposition to Averroism. Opposition of the Hel- Peripatetics Leninists 305

XII. Platonic Opposition: Marsilio Ficino 309

XIII. Humanist Opposition: Louis Vives, Pico della Mirandola... 312

XIV. Continuation of Averroist teaching in Padua: Zabarella 319

XV. Cesar Cremonini. Ruin of Peripateticism in Italy 325

XVI. Averroism considered as a synonym for impiety: Caesarpin, Cardan, Vanini 332

XVII. Averroes outside Italy. Various Judgments 339

APPENDIX.

I. Fragment of Averroes' unpublished treatise on the possibility of union with active intellect . . . . , 347

II. Fragment from the treatise On the Errors of the Philosophers by Gilles de Rome, relating to Averroes, 349

III. Exposition of the Averroist doctrine of the intellect, by Benvenuto of Imola 352

IV. Fragment of the 31st lesson of Frédéric Pendasio on the Treatise on the Soul 353

V. Preamble to Cremonini's lecture on the treatise on the Soul 357

VI. Letter from the Inquisitor of Padua to Cremonini, and reply from Cremonini 359

AVERROES

AND TAYERROISM.

PART ONE.
AVERROES.

CHAPTER ONE.

LIFE AND WORKS OF AVERROES

If-

Averroes' life occupies almost the entire duration of the 12th century, and is linked to all the events of this decisive era in the history of Muslim civilization-mane. The 12th century saw the definitive failure of the attempt-a faction formed by the Abbasids of the East and the Umayyads from Spain, to create a development within Islamism rational and scientific. When Averroes died, in In 1198, Arab philosophy lost its last representative.

Through the misfortunes of his life and through the immediate reputation The ritual he enjoyed after his death? Averroes participated to the disadvantages and benefits of this situation. Having arrived after a century of great intellectual culture, at moment when this culture collapses, so to speak, on herself, if the misfortunes of her old age attest to the disrepute into which the cause he defends has fallen, by a A happy consolation, he collects almost single-handedly the glory of the works which he merely summarized. Averroes is, in a way, the Boethius of Arab philosophy. one of these decadent men, compensating by the the bulk of their work is what they lack in originality, compiling, commenting, since it is too late to to create, the last vestiges of a collapsing civilization, but, by an unexpected stroke of luck, seeing their name at-to try to grasp these debris, and their writings to become the formula abbreviated by which this civilization enters for its part in the collective work of the human mind.

Arab-Spanish philosophy barely had two centuries of existence, when it was suddenly brought to a halt

driven by religious fanaticism, the political upheavals ticks, foreign invasions. Caliph Hakem II, in the 10th century, had the glory of opening this brilliant series studies, which, through the influence it has exerted on the Eu-Christian rope, holds such an important place in the history of civilization. Andalusia, say the historians-Muslim countries, under his reign, became a large market where the literary productions of different climates were The books composed of materials were immediately brought up for sale.
in Persia and Syria were often known in Spain before being in the East. Hakem sent a thousand dinars of

1. Pascual de Gayangos; The History of the Mohammedan Dynasties in Spain, from the text of Al-Makkari (London, 1840), t. I, append., p. xl et seq., t. II, p. 168 et seq. — Casiri, Bibl. arab. îrfsp., t. II,
p. 37-38 and 201-202. — Middeldorpf, Comment, de institutis litterariis in Hispania quœ Arabes auctores habucrunt (Goettingae, 1810), p. he, 59.
— Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, in the life of Ibn-Bâdja (Bibl. nat., suppl. ar. 673, law. 195).

pure gold in Abulfaradj-el-Isfahani to have the first a copy of his famous Anthology; and, indeed, this beautiful
The work was read in Andalusia before being read in Iraq. He maintained contacts in Cairo, Baghdad, Damascus, and Alexandria, agents tasked with procuring for him at what-whatever the price, the works of ancient science and modern. His palace became a workshop where one did not meet contrasts with copyists, bookbinders, illuminators. The cata-the log of his library alone comprised forty-four volumes, and even then, all that was there was the title and a brief description of the book. A few writers they say that the number of volumes rose to four hundred thousand, and that to transport them from one local In another case, it took no less than six months. Hakem moreover, he was deeply versed in the science of genealogy and biography. There was no book that he didn't lût; then he wrote on loose sheets of paper the name, the nickname, the author's family name, his tribe, his family, the year of his birth and death, and anecdotesdowries that were running on his account. He spent the rest of his time discussing it with the scholars who flocked to his court from all parts of the Muslim world.

The Arabs of Andalusia, even before Hakem, were... were drawn to liberal studies, either by the influence of this beautiful climate, either through their relationships continuous relations with Jews and Christians. The efforts of Hakem, aided by such favorable provisions, de-developed in this country one of the literary movements

the most brilliant of the Middle Ages. A taste for science and beautiful things had been established in the 10th century, in this corner privileged in the world, a tolerance whose times...
The latter can hardly offer us an example. Christian Look, Jews and Muslims spoke the same language, chan-they recited the same poems, participated in the same studies literary and scientific. All the barriers that separaterent the men had fallen; all were working with a even granted the work of common civilization. The academies of Cordoba, Granada, Toledo, Seville, Xativa, Valencia, Jaen, Murcia, Almeria, Malaga, Calve became active centers of philosophical and philosophical studies scientists.

But the fatal cause that stifled it among Muslims the most promising seeds of intellectual development, Religious fanaticism was already paving the way for the ruin of the work. of Hakem. The theologians of the East had raised serious doubts about the salvation of Caliph Ma'mun, because he had disturbed Muslim piety by introducing Greek philosophy1. The rigorists of Spain do not showed no less severity. The Hajib Almansour, having usurped power over the weak Hisham, son of Hakem understood that everything would be forgiven him if he wanted to to satisfy the instinctive antipathy of the imams and the people against rational studies. He therefore had research done. in the library so curiously collected by Hakem all the works of philosophy, astronomy and other sciences cultivated by the ancients. All were burned in the public squares of Cordoba, or thrown into the wells and cisterns of the palace, where they are taught velit under piles of garbage, stones and rubble. Only the books of theology, grammar, and of medicine. "This action by Almansour," says the historian Said of Toledo2, was attributed by the chroniclers of

1. The misfortunes that befell him were considered a punishment. tion (his attachment to philosophy (Abu Heda, Annales Moslem., II, 148, 150).

2. Gayangos, i. Ier, append., p. xl et seq.

time, to the desire to gain popularity among the multitude, and to find less opposition, by throwing a kind of stain on the memory of Caliph Ha-Kem, whose throne he sought to usurp. We
We will see, in fact, how few philosophers were popular in Andalusia. The people never liked the wise men; he finds it even harder to bear the aristocracy of reason than that of birth and of the fortune. Since Al-Mansur's edict, philosophy was the object of open persecution in Spain. Those Those who engaged in it were declared impious by the leaders of the law, and scholars were obliged to conceal themselves generously sharing their knowledge, even with their closest friends for fear of being denounced and condemned as hereticent.

The upheavals "of which Muslim Spain was The theatre in the 11th century completed the disappearance of the Remnants of the civilizing work of the Umayyads. Cordoba, the center for good studies was ransacked, the palace of The caliphs were overthrown, the collections destroyed. The remains of Hakem's library was sold at a very low price and scattered throughout the country. Said says he has seen several volumes in Toledo, and admits that what they contained should have burned them, if the research done under Almansour had been conducted with as much intelligence agency than passion.

Yet philosophy had such deep roots in this beautiful country, that all efforts made for the Destroying it only served to bring it back to life. "With these precious remains, Said continued, the study was renewed ancient philosophers. The scholars began again to to frequent the lush pastures of philosophy; the educated men returned to the natural sciences, in so that in the present time (1068), we can say that these Studies are as flourishing as they have ever been. Praise be to God! The progress of these sciences However, they could be even quicker if they were not deterred by the rigidity and devotion of some of our kings, who, like their predecessors-Cessators abhor them; and if the scholars of our time was not required each year to file the pen to grasp the sword, and march in defense of our "Borders attacked by the infidels."

Thus, without shining with this halo of brilliance and prosperity which it enjoyed under the reigns of Hakem and From Hischam, Arabic philosophy still flourished in Spain. gne in the second half of the 11th century. The experience has proved that philosophy needs no protection nor any favors: she asks no one for permission and takes orders from no one. He is the most spontaneous of all the products of human consciousness. Age The gold from Hakem's reign did not bequeath any name to the future illustrious; harassed by fanaticism, Avempace, Abubacer, Avenzoar, Averroes saw their name and their works to enter into the flow of European life, that is to say of the true life of humanity. Yet nothing can save- would stop ignorance, the day it is given to him to prevail, and where reason abdicates itself. It is to this triumph of barbarity that we will witness in the Averroes' last days, and especially in the years which followed the death of the last representative of the Muslim philosophy.

§11.

The sources for the biography of Ibn-Roshd1 are: 1° An extended article, but one that lacks its beginning, in a supplement to the dictionaries of great men-my of Ibn-Baschkoual and Ibn «el-Abbar, which possesses the National Library (Arabic supplement, 682), and of which The author is Abu-Abdallah Muhammad, son of Abu-Abdallah Mohammed, son of Abd-el-Melik el-Ansâri, of Morocco2. 2° The notice that Ibn-Abi-Oceibia dedicated to him in his History of Physicians*. 3° The article by Leo the African in his book of Illustrious Men among the Arabs1*. 4° Some passages from the historians of Spain-

i. The Latin name Averroes was formed (Vlbn-Roschd through from Hebrew, where Ibn becomes Aben or Aven. Few names have undergone transcriptions also varied: Ibin-Rosdin, Filius Rosadis, Ibn-Rusid, Ben-Raxid, Ibn-Ruschod, Ben-Resched, Aben-Rassad, Aben-Rois, Aben-Rasd, Aben-Rust^ Avenrosd, Avenryz, Adveroys, Benroist, Avenroyth, Aver~roysta, etc. Averroes' given names have provided other variants: Abul-guail, Aboolit, Alididtis, Ablull, Aboloys. At the head of the CoUigct, we read: Membucius (or 3/ahuntius, or Mauuitius), which Latin dicitur Averroys [anc. funds, 6949 and 7052; Arsenal, se. and arts, 61), probably by alteration tion of the name of Mohammed. Indeed, Hildebert, in his poem on Muhammad calls this false prophet Mamutius.

2. This volume contains only the biographies of the characters who were named after Mohammed. The first pages of Ibn-'s life Roschd have disappeared, and I must say that this article, deprived of a title and transposed out of its alphabetical order, it would probably have escaped my notice. if Mr. Munck, who has made a special examination of this manuscript, does not would have indicated it.

3. Arabic manuscript from the National Library (suppl. ar., 673), f. 201 v° et seq. — Mr. Pascual de Gayangos published a very flawed translation of this notice in the appendices of volume I of his translation of Makkari.

4. First published in Latin by Hottinger, in his Bibliothecarium quadripartitum, p. 246 et seq. (Tiguri, 1664), according to a copy from Florence; a second time by Fabricius, Bibl. greeca^ t. XIII, p. 259 et seq. (1st edition). .

^

Muslim group, and especially Abd-el-Wahid el-Marrekoschi1. 5° The indications taken from his own writings2.

Of all the biographers of Ibn Rushd, El-Ansari appears
He was by far the best informed. He kept his information... comments from people who had known the Philosopher from Cordoba. Although later than Ibn Rushd of a generation, Abd-el-Wahid also deserves all confiancée. The precise details he gives about Ibn-Zohr, on Ibn-Bâdja, on Ibn-Tofaïl, whose writings he saw at-Historians, including one whose son he knew, attest that he lived in the philosophical society of his time. Ibn-Abi-Oceibia was writing approximately forty years after A-'s death Verroes, and he had gathered his information from the kadhi Abu-Merwan al-Badji, who appears to have known personally-the Commentator. As for Leo Africanus, his authority is of very little value. Although he cites each page of Arab authors, and in particular the biographer Ibn-el-Abbar3, Leon often composed based on his own imagination. Moreover, the Latin translation which alone What remains of his book is so barbaric that very often
We must give up trying to find meaning in it.

The anecdotes told during the Middle Ages and the Renaissance
The sessions on Averroes have an even less historical character.
risk; they testify to nothing other than opinion that we had formed of his character, and are only of interest

1. Arabic text, published by Mr. Reinhart Dozy (Leiden, 1847).

2. I must warn, once and for all, that the quotations from the works Averroes's, when the edition is not indicated, refers to that of 1560, apud Cominum de Tridino, except for the Physics and the treatise on l'Ame, where I followed the edition of the Juntas of 1553.

3. Mr. Reinhart Dozy, who is currently finishing the printing of extracts important figures from Ibn-el-Ahbar's Tekmilet, were kind enough to let me know that no mention of Ibn-Roshd is found there. Ibn-el-Abbar in particular-milk perhaps in one of his other works.

for the history of Faverroism. Yet it is these recits which formed the entire biography of Averroes up to the mid-17th century. Since the publication of the opuscule, in 1664, the article he devoted to AverRoes was reproduced with confidence and without criticism by Moréri, Bartolocci, Bayle, Antonio, Brucker, Sprengel, Amoreux, Middeldorpf, Amable Jourdain. The notice of Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, although it was known from PoCocke, d'Herbelot, Reiske, de Rossi, was not really taken advantage of only in recent years by Messrs. Wûstenfeld1, Lebrecht2, Wenrich3, and by M. Munck, in the excellent article he wrote on Ibn-Roshd, in the Dictionary of Philosophical Sciences, published by Mr. Franck.

Léon's

The Kadhi Aboulwalid Mohammed Ibn-Ahmed Ibn-Mohammed Ibn-Roschd was born in Cordoba around the year 1120. El-Ansari places his birth in the year 520 of the Hijra. (1 1 26); but Abd-el-Wahid testifies that he had nearly eighty years old when he died in 595 (1198). moreover, in his commentary on the second book of On Heaven, He cites an event from the year 1138 which he had witnessed. Memories of Cordoba can be found in several forms. rights to his writings. In his Commentary on the Republicrepublic, when Plato wants the Greeks to be the people privileged for intellectual culture, it demands in falove his Andalusia5. In the Colliget(\. II, c. xxn),

1. Geschichte der arabischen Aerzte und Naturforscher (Goettingen, 1840), pp. 104-108.

2. Magazhi fur die Literatur des Auslandes. Berlin, 1842, nos. 79, 83, 95.

3. De auctorum grœcorum versionibus et commentariis syriacis, amincis, etc. (Lipsise, 1842), p. 166 ff.

4. Fol. 176v° (ed. 1560).

5. Fol. 496. His judgment on France is much less favorable.

He argues against Galen that the most beautiful of climates is the fifth, where Cordoba is located.1 The historian Aboulfadhi Teifaschi2 reports a discussion which took place a place in the presence of Almansour, between Ibn-Roshd and a inhabitants of Seville on the preeminence of their homelands respective: "If a learned man dies in Seville, said Ibn-Roshd, and that people want to sell his books, They are taken to Cordoba, where a guaranteed supply can be found; If, on the other hand, a musician dies in Cordoba, we go to Seville is selling its instruments.

Ibn-Roshd's family was one of the most respected rables of Andalusia, and enjoyed great esteem in the judiciary. His grandfather, named after him Aboulwalid Mohammed, and like him, the qadi of Cordoba,
He is a famous jurist of the rite among Muslims.
Maliki. Our National Library (suppl. ar., 398) possesses a voluminous collection of his consultations.
arranged by Ibn-al-Warrân, head of prayer in the Great Mosque of Cordoba. On several occasions, he played an important political role. Following a In the revolt, he was tasked with bringing about the submission of the Spanish provinces to the sovereigns of Morocco3. The Christians of Andalusia who supported the invasion of Al-Phogus the Battler, in Muslim territory, he passed again (around 1125) in Morocco, he presented to the sultan the dangerous situation that these enemies were creating in the country saddle. Concedimus aliam natîonem ad aliud virtutum genus melhis a natura esse parafant, ut in Grœcis facultas sciendi multo prestantior, in Gallis aïiusque hujusmodi gentibus iracundia. I am inclined to believe that there is here an interpolation or alteration by the translator.

l.Fol. 33 v°.

2. Cited by M. Quatremère, Me m. on the taste for books among the Orientalsrate, p. 40.

3. Leo Afr. apud Fabr., t. XIII, p. 282.

interiors, and it was on his advice that thousands Christians were transported to Salé and the coastal areas.
Baresques*. By one of those whims of fame which We have more than one example, this Averroes whose name has almost attained, among the Latins, the fame of that Aristotle, among the Arabs, is distinguished from his illustrious predecessors.
ancestors by the humble epithet of el-hajîd (the nephew).
Like his father and grandfather, Aboulwalid Ibn-Roschd first studied theology according to the Ash'arites, and canon law according to the Maliki rite. His bio-graphs boast almost as much about his knowledge in jurisprudence is not limited to medicine and philosophy.
had as his teacher in jurisprudence Abu Muhammad Ibn-Razek, and in medicine, Abu Ja'far ibn Harun of Truxillo, whose biography was given by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia 2.
There is no proof that he received lessons from Ibn-Bâdja (Avempace), who died in 1138, although the similarity of doctrine, and the profound respect with which he speaks of this great man, allow us to regard him as his student.
Ibn Rushd thus lived in the society of all men my illustrious figures of his century. Through his philosophy, he raises above directly from Ibn-Bâdja; Ibn-Tafaïl (X Abubacer of the scholastics) was the architect of his fortune, as well as we We'll tell you soon. Throughout his life, he found himself in the most intimate relationships with the extended family of Ibn-Zohr, who alone summarizes the entire development scientist of Muslim Spain in the 12th century: he had \. Gayangos, t. II, p. 306-307. — Conde, IIIa parte, cap. xxix.— • In Citing Conde's work, I do not intend to attribute to this writer a authority, which he in no way deserves, as he has so clearly demonstrated. Mr. Reinhart Dozy in his Research on the Political and Literary History of V Spain during the Middle Ages, vol. I (Leiden, 1849).

| 2, Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, in Gayangos, t. I, appendix, p. xvn, xvm. — Casiri, vol. II, p. 84.

for colleague Abu Bakr ibn Zuhr the Younger in the functions as the king's physician, and the friendship that bound him to Abu-Merwan Ibn-Zohr (Avenzoar), the author of the Teisir, was so narrow that, when Ibn-Roshd wrote his Culliyyâth (generalities, or treatise on the whole body) (human), he wished his friend to write a treatise on the parts, so that their works combined would form a complete medical course. Finally, he was in contact with the theosophist Ibn-Arabi, who nevertheless did not believe to recognize in him a fairly reliable follower. Ibn-Roshd, then kadhi in Cordoba, having asked him to communicate The secrets of his science, Ibn-Arabi was diverted by a divine vision of revealing them to him*.

Ibn Rushd's public career was not without brilliance. Fanaticism, which was the soul of the al- revolution Mohade was for a time restrained by liberal tastes of Abd-el-Mu'min and Iousouf. The fall was attributed to from the Almoravids to the destruction of books they had Orders: Abd-el-Moumen rigorously defended these acts of barbarity 2. The philosophers of the century, Ibn-Zohr, Ibn-Bâdja, Ibn-Tafaïl and Ibn-Roshd were in favor to his court. In the year 548 of the Hijra (1153), we We find Ibn-Roshd in Morocco, perhaps busy with... to reconsider the views of Abd-el-Moumen in the erection of colleges that he was founding there at that time 3. Yousouf, success- Abd-el-Moumen's sister was the most learned prince of his time. Ibn-Tufayl obtained a very high position at his court influence, and took advantage of it to attract scholars from

1. Fleischer, Calai. Codd. Arabic. Lips., p. 492.

2. Asian Journal, February 18-48, p. 196.

3. Comment, from Cœlo cl Mundo, f. 176. — Munck, 1. c, p. 158. — Conde, llla parte, cap. xliii. — Leo Africanus, in his History, of Africa, 1. II, p. 60, attributes the founding of these establishments to Iakoub Almansour.

all countries. It was to Ibn-Tufayl that Ibn-Rushd owed the honor of sharing in the emir's favors. The historian Abd-el-Wahid had collected, from the very mouth of a disciples of Ibn-Roshd, the account of his first presensation, as the commentator was wont to report

“When I entered the presence of the Commander of the Faithful,” he said, I found him alone with Ibn-Tufayl. The latter began to to praise me, and to extol my nobility and antiquity of my family. He even went so far as to exaggerate somewhat. in this regard, and said things that I was completely unaware ofly. After a few banal questions, the emir opened Thus the conversation: "What is the opinion of the philosophers"Sophists on the sky? Is it an eternal substance or "Another accident?" I was seized with fear and everything forbidden; I looked for a pretext to excuse myself from reto lay eggs, and the emir could not know everything this time my knowledge of philosophy. But in a few words that Ibn-Tufayl told him, and though I didn't hear him, he understood. my confusion and turned to Ibn-Tufayl, who began to discuss the question the emir had asked me. He reported everything that Aristotle, Plato and the other philosophers Sophists have said on this subject, and further expounded the argumentthe position of Muslim theologians against the philosophers, with such memory power that I have neverbut seen in a similar way by scholars who deal with these investigations. The emir, however, knew so well how to put me He made me feel at ease, and he led me to speak in turn, and to say this that I was thinking on this subject. When I had withdrawn, he he gave me a sum of money, a fur coat "The honor of a grand prize, and a mount."

1. Dozy edition, pp. 174-175. — Cf. Leo Africanus, article by Ibn Tufayl, p. 280.

If we are to believe the same historian, it was according to the wish expressed by Iusouf, and at the urging of Ibn-Tofail, that Ibn-Roshd undertook his commentaries on Aristote. “One day,” said Ibn-Roshd, “Ibn-Tufayl made me ap-

Peel and said to me: rc I heard today the emir of ((believers complain about the obscurity of Aristotle and his
"Translators: 'Would to God,' he said, 'that he would meet...'"
"Would someone who wanted to comment on these books and in
"to clearly explain the meaning, to make them accessible-[capable to men] You have in abundance all that he
"It's necessary for such a task; undertake it. Knowing "your high intelligence, your penetrating lucidity and your
"Powerful application to science, I hope you That will suffice. The only thing preventing me from doing so ((load, that's the age when you see me arrive, joined to "My numerous duties in the service of the Emir."
From then on, Ibn-Roshd added, I turned all my attention towards the work that Ibn-Tufayl had recommended to me, and there you have it.
which led me to comment on Aristotle.” It is without Ibn-Roshd doubts that Ibn-Tufayl is alluding to this in this passage from his philosophical novel: c< All the philo-The philosophers who followed Ibn-Bâcîja remained well within below him. As for those of our contemporaries who They succeeded him, they are still in the process of being formed, and have not reached perfection, so that one cannot "Their merits still need to be judged."

Ibn-Roshd continued to enjoy, under the reign of Iousouf, of the most constant favor, and to occupy the the highest places. In 565 (1169), he filled at Se-city the functions of kadhi2. In a passage of his

1. Philos, autodld. Proœm., p. 16 (ed. Pococke, 1671).

2. We see him appear in this capacity in a story by Abd-el-Wahid (ed. Dozy, p. 222).

Commentary on the Fourth Book of the Treaty of the Parties Animals, completed this year, he apologizes for the er-mistakes he may have made, because he is very busy of the affairs of the time, and away from his home in Cor-Doue, where are all his books?1 It should be placed around 567 (1171) his return to Cordoba2: it is probably since It was during this period that he composed his major commentaries.
he often complains about the preoccupation with public affairs things, which deprive him of time and freedom of mind necessary for his work. At the end of the first book of
In his Abridged V Aima gesture, he says that he must have necessarily to limit ourselves to the most important theorems, and to comp-compares to a man who, pressed by the fire, escapes by taking only the most essential things. His His duties required him to travel frequently to the different parts of the Almohad empire. We find itvons, sometimes on this side, sometimes on the other side of the strait, at Ma-rock, in Seville, in Cordoba, dating his comments from these different cities. In 1178, he wrote to Morocco De substantia orbis; in 1179, he completed it in Seville one of his theological treatises; in 1182, Iousouf the ap-shovels back to Morocco, and names him his first physician, replacing Ibn-Tufayl 3; then he confers the dignity of Grand Kadhi of Cordoba. Under the reign of Iakoub Almansour-billah, we find more in favor than ever. Almansour liked to talk with him scientific subjects; he would have him sit on the cushion reserved for his closest favorites; and in

1. Munck, 1. c— This passage was cited by Patrizzi [Discuss. Perip., 1. X,
f. 94 (Venet., 1571). 11 is altered in the edition of the Juntes. Opp., t. VI,
f. 103v°(ed. 1550).

2. For a discussion of these dates, see Mr. Munck's article,
pp. 158-159.

3. Conde, III parte, cap. xlvii.

the familiarity of these conversations, Ibn-Roshd lets himself go-he was born to say to his sovereign: 'Listen, my brother'.
In the year of the Hijra 591 (1195), while Almansour was prepared to undertake against Alfonso III of Castile
the expedition which ended with the victory at Alarcos, We find the old Ibn-Roshd with him. Ibn-Abi-Oceibia recounts, in great detail, all the favors with which he was showered in this circumstance, fa-veurs who, by arousing the jealousy of his enemies, were undoubtedly the main cause of the misfortunes that poison-the last four years of his life were marked.

Through one of those reversals that make up daily history...
At the head of the Muslim courts, Ibn-Roshd lost the good thanks to Almansour, who relegated him to the city of Eli-sana or Lucena, near Cordoba. Lucena had been au-formerly inhabited by Jews, and such was undoubtedly the occasion of the fable endorsed by Leo Africanus, and since it was adopted too easily, which makes it find a
He took refuge with his supposed disciple, Moses Maimonides.
It even appears that his enemies tried to make people believe that he was of Jewish race2.

The reasons for dlbn-Roschd's disgrace gave rise to many conjectures. Some attributed it to the friend-the close bond that existed between the philosopher and Abu Jahya, governor of Cordoba, and brother of Almansour3; the others

they sought the cause in a lack of courtesy towards the Commander of the Faithful. Abd-el-Wahid 4 and Ibn-Abi-

1. Mr. de Gayangos supposes that it was Almansour who, out of affection, gave Ibn-Roshd the title of brother. But after careful examination From the passage dlbn-Abi-Oceibia, I decided on the other interpretation-tion, which is that of Mr. Munck.

2. Additional Ms. ar., n° 682, f. 7.

3. ttid.

4. Edit. Dozy, pp. 221-225.

Oceibia1 recount that Ibn-Roshd having composed a commentary on the history of animals, he said, in partgiraffe man: "I saw a quadruped of this species-
"piece at the king of the Berbers' house*," thus designating Iakoub Almansour. He acted in this way, said Abd-el-Wahid, at the in the manner of scholars, who, when they have to name the king of a country, dispense with the laudatory formulas that are-courtiers and secretaries bend to their will. But this freedom displeased Almansour, who regarded the expression "king of the Berbers (i^Melik el-Berber) as an outrage. Ibn-Roschd said in his apology that this expression was a due to the reader's error, and that he had written Melik el-Barreyn (king of the two continents), meaning by this Africa and Andalusia. These two expressions, in fact, do not differ almost only by diacritical marks.

Another version has been preserved for us by El-Ansâri8.
A prediction had spread throughout the East and in the An-Dalousie, according to which, on a certain day, it would rise a hurricane that would destroy the human race. The people He was very frightened by it, and was already thinking of fleeing into the caves or hiding underground, Ibn-Roshd was then kadhi of Cordoba. The governor having gathered the scholars and serious men to consult, Ibn-Roschcl allowed himself to examine the matter from the point of view Physics, and according to the predictions of the stars. What-Someone asked him if he didn't believe what was reported of the tribe of Ad, which was exterminated in this way.
Ibn-Roshd responded in a disrespectful manner to

1. Translation of Gavangos, vol. I, appendix, p. xx. — The same story is found in the margin of El-Ansâri's biographical article, but written in a different hand (suppl.ar., no. 682, f. 7).

2. We find a passage almost identical to this one at the end of the com-

Commentary on the second book of De Cœlo, p. 177 (ed. 1360).

3. Suppl. ar., n° 682, f. 8.

2

this fable, consecrated by the Quran, which gave rise to... sion to his enemies to present him as an unbeliever and an infidel.

Whatever the truth of these accounts, there can be no doubt that philosophy was not the true cause of the disgrace of Ibn-Pvoschd. She had made powerful enemies of him, which made his orthodoxy suspect in Almansour1. All educated men, whose wealth aroused envy, were facing the same accusations. Abd-el-Wahid recounts that Ibn-Roshd's enemies obtained the autograph manuscript of one of his commentaries, and that they referred to Almansour the quotations from philosophers an- those who were there. Almansour, having summoned the principal figures of Cordoba, brought to trial... before them: Ibn-Roshd, and, after having anathematized his doctrines, condemned him to exile. The emir had a letter sent to at the same time edicts in the provinces to prohibit these dangerous studies and order to burn all the books that related to it. An exception was made only for medicine, arithmetic, and elementary astronomy, as much as you need to know to calculate the durations of the day and night, and to determine the direction of the kibla-, El-Ansâri has preserved for us the entire text of this curious document 3. The emir declares that God created In advance for the fires of hell, the impious who dare to say that reason alone can give us the truth.

As we can see, it was a court intrigue: the religious party

1. We can see several testimonies gathered by El-Ansâri, 1. c, and the similar account by two contemporary historians, in Gayangos, t. I, p. 198, et t. II, appendix, p. lxvi.

2. Edit. Do/.y, p. ~2'2l-±2o. — De Hiunmer, Journal asiat., February 1848, p. 19G, and Literatur»cschichtc der Avaber, I Abth., I Band, p. civil, next 3 Ms. additional ar., n" 683, f. 7 v°-8.

Gieux succeeded in driving out the philosophical party, Ibn-Roshd, Indeed, he was not persecuted alone; several are named important figures, scholars, doctors, scoundrels, kadhis, poets, who shared his disgrace. "The cause of the Almansour's displeasure, says Ibn-Abi-Oceihia, was that one had accused them of giving their leisure time to the culthe nature of philosophy and the study of the ancients1. » El-An-Sâri reports the pieces of verse that were made at this on this occasion; Ibn-Roshd still appears there first line 2.

This disgrace was not long-lasting: he is likely that a new revolution brought back the phiphilosophers in favor. Almansour, back in Morocco, lifted all the edicts he had issued against philo-Sophie applied herself to it again with fervor, and, on instances of learned and important figures, recalled Ibn-Roshd and his unfortunate companions.
Abu-Djafar el-Dhahebi, one of them, received the charge to oversee the writings of doctors and philosophers pheas of the court.

The account of Ibn Rushd's disgrace is accompanied by gné in Leo Africanus 3 of childish details about the tricks his enemies used to unmask his heresy, and on the humiliating circumstances of his retraction and his exile. These accounts do not appear serious enough to be reported here. However, in it Allowing for imagination, one cannot deny that several of the traits reported by Leo Africanus are found in El-Ansâri. Ibn-Roschd, assures this

1. Gayangos, p. xix.

2. Additional Ms. ar., n° 683, f. 8-9.

3. Apud Fabr. Bibl. gv., t. XIII, p. 283-287. — Cf. Bayle, Dict., art.
Averroes, note M. — Brucker, Hist. crit. phil., t. III, p. 100, 101.

last, used to say that the most painful as he had to suffer in his disgrace was having entered the Great Mosque of Cordoba with his son Abdallah, he was outrageously driven out by common people1.

Ibn-Roshd did not long survive his return to favor.
died in Morocco, at a very advanced age, on Thursday, 9 of Safar in the year of the Hijra 595 (December 12, 1198).
This is the precise date given by El-Ansâri 2. Ibn-

Abi-Oceibia similarly places the death of Ibn-Roschd at beginning of the year 595. But he contradicts himself-even when he claims that Ibn-Roshd was in favor alongside Mohammed-Annassir, who succeeded Iakoub-Almansour on the 22nd of Rabi' al-Awwal, the first of the year 595 (January 22nd) (vier 1199), and especially when he places the reminder of Ibn-Roschd under Almansour, in that same year 595. Ibn-Arabi, who witnessed his funeral, Jafeï and Muslim chroniclers also use the year 5953. Abd-el-Wahid deviates very little from this chronology: he places the death of the Commentator at the end of the year 594 BC, that is to say, in August or September 1198. Alone, Leo The African dates it back to the year 1206*. El-Ansari

---

1. Additional Ms. ar., n° 682, f. 7.

2. Ibid, f. 9 v°.

3. Jafeï, ad ann. 595 (ms. anc. ar. funds, n° 644, f. 141).

4. Dozy edition, p. 225.

5. Reinesius, Pococke, and d'Herbelot hold it to be 1198. Moreri, Antonio, de Rossi followed Leo Africanus. Hottinger, according to a conver-erroneous conversion of the Hijri years into common years, placed death Averroes's in 1225. 11 was copied by Middeldorpf. The others have struck at random; thus Tennemann is dated 1217 or 1225; Sprengel, for 1217; Bartolocci, for 1216. — The older authors, cpai had no other point of reference than the account of Gilles de Rome on Averroes' sons followed an even more uncertain chronology. Pierre d'Abano (ConciL Controv.^ f. 14 v°, Venet. 1565), Patrizzi {Dis-

We learn that Tbn-Roschd was buried in Morocco. outside the gate of Tagazout, but only after three months later, his body was transported to Cordoba, where it he laid to rest in his family's plot in the Ibn- cemetery Abbas. Ibn-Arabi, in fact, recounts that he lived in Morocco to load his corpse onto a beast of burden for the transport to Cordoba1. Leo Africanus states, from a On the other hand, having seen his tomb and his epitaph at Morocco, near the Corroyeurs gate 2.

Ibn-Roshd left several books, some of which... devoted themselves to the study of theology and jurisprudence, and became qadis of cities and districts. One of them, Abu-Mohammed Abdallah was a practicing physician quite famous. Ibn-Abi-Oceibia gave a notice on His life followed that of his father. He was a doctor.

d'Annassir, and wrote a book on the therapeutic method-Unique. All these circumstances hardly allow for it.
to believe Giles of Rome's account of the stay sons of Averroes at the Hohenstaufen court.

Ibn-Beitharet Abd-el-Melik, Ibn-Zohr died almost that same year. Abu-Merwan Ibn-Zohr and Ihn-Tofaïl had already been dead for some time. The entire Pleiad philosophical and scientific of Andalusia and the Magreb thus disappears almost simultaneously in the "Last years of the 12th century" The historian of the Almohades, Abd-el-Wahid 4, visiting the Magreb in the year 595 cuss. Perip., t. I, 1. 94, Venet. 1571), Pagi {ad Baronium, ann. 1197, no. 11 j were the only ones to think of taking advantage of the dates containe the signing of treaties.

1. Fleischer, Codd. Arabic. Lips., p. 492.

2. Apud Fabr., t. XIII, p. 288.

3. Additional Ms. ar.. no. 673, f. 203.

4. The History of the Jlmohades, edited by Reinhart Dozy (Leiden, 1847). Preface, p. vi.

(1198-99), encounter still alive, but very advanced
In his later years, Abu-Bekr Ibn-Zohr, the nephew, recited to him... fragments of his poems. In 603 (1206-7), he ren-against Morocco, the son of dlbn-Tofaïl, who repeatedly tells him-Several poems composed by his father. We no longer lived So many memories and so much tradition, more and more each day weakened, from the past.

S m.

The disgrace of Ibn Rushd and the suspicions of hetero-
The doxies who rose up against him are the salient feature by which he captured the imagination of his contemporaries.
All Muslim historians and biographers are una-Nîmes in this regard, and the variety of circumstances with which they report this fact is itself the best proof of the impression he made. These persecutions, Moreover, these were not isolated incidents. Towards the end of the
In the 12th century, the war against philosophy was organized across the entire surface of the Muslim world.1 A reaction theological, analogous to that which followed in the Latin church
the Council of Trent, strives to reconquer the ground Lost, through argument and violence. Islamism, like so many great religious creations, is tou-days went by, growing stronger and obtaining from his followers a more absolute faith. Most of Ma-Homet hardly believed in his supernatural mission; Incredulity, in the first six centuries of Islam misme, had been pushed to its absolute limits.

In modern times, on the contrary, not a single om-Without a doubt, not a protest. He arrived to

---

1. Even today in Egypt, the term "philosopher" is an insult, and synonymous with impious, corrupt, like farmaçoun (freemason).
Yoy. Voyage to Ouadar, published by Doctor Perron, p. 673.

Islamism, what happened to Catholicism in Spain, which would have happened throughout Europe, if the religious revival of the late 16th and early 17th centuries The 16th century would have stifled all rational development. The-Charisma, a kind of compromise between reason and faith, quite similar to our modern theology, it seizes upon Egypt under Saladin, Spain under the Almohads, and has remained to this day the orthodox doctrine of Muslim schools. From all sides, thunder is heard in the chairs against Aristotle and the philosophers1. In 1150, by Order of Caliph Mostandjid, all philosophical works phiques from the library of a kadhi, namely the writings of Ibn-Sina, and the so-called Encyclopedia of the Brothers of purity, were burned in Baghdad. In 1192, the Physician Al-Rokn Abd-el-Salam was accused of atheism.
and the destruction of his books. The doctor who presided over the ceremony went up From the pulpit, he delivered a sermon against philosophy, Then, taking the volumes one after the other, he said a few words to show its wickedness, and the passed to people who threw them into the fire. 2. Rabbi Judah, Maimonides' beloved disciple witnessed this
A strange scene. "I live," he said, "in the doctor's hand." Ibn al-Haytim's astronomical work. Showing the circle by which this author represented the celestial globe:
"Here," he cried, "is this immense misfortune, the inexpressible..."
disaster, the dark calamity] By saying these words, he he tore up the book and threw it into the fire. 3.

---

1. The best minds, Abulfeda, Makrizi, appear themselves rather unfavorable to this philosophy. Cf. Ahulf., Jim. Moslem., IV, 255.
— De Sacy, Exposition of the religion of the Druze, introd., p. xxn.

2. Abulfaradj, Hist. Dyn., p. 451, text.

3. Joum.asiat. July 1842 (p. 18-19), art. by M. Munck.

All the Spanish philosophers of Ibn Rushd's century were, like him, subjected to persecution. The Al-The Mohads were directly under the tutelage of the Gazali school; their founder, in Africa, had been one of the students of this enemy of philosophy1. Ibn-Badja, teacher of Ibn-Roschd had already paid for the suspicions by going to prison.
of heterodoxy that were attached to his person, and if necessary According to Leo Africanus, he owed his deliverance only to the influence of Ibn-Roshd's father, then Grand Qadi2.
Ibn-Tufayl was considered the founder of the philosophical heresy.
phique, and for the master in impiety of Ibn-Roshd and by Maimonides3. The philosopher Abd-el-Mélik Ibn-Wahib, of Seville, a contemporary of Ibn-Bâdja, found himself obliged to limit one's teaching to the basic elements. More Later, he even gave up philosophical studies entirely.
questions and forbids any conversation on the subject, seeing that he was risking his life; "for," said the chronicler, So lofty were his views in these sciences, that he would have undoubtedly found guilty, had he continued to study them dier.)) He therefore reduced himself to the most orthodox theology.
doxe, ((so that one does not find in his writings,
as in those of other philosophers, of these ca-
"Sometimes"
They used even greater rigor. The philo-Sophie Ibn-Habib, from Seville, was put to death because that he cultivated proscribed sciences; "that is why, the historian adds, that the books of these sciences are ofcame so rarely, and the men who cultivated them did not They do it only surreptitiously. Moutref of Seville, conti-

1. Cf. Abd-el-Wabid-el-Marrekoschi (editor Dozy), p. 124.

2. Leo Afr. apud Fabr. Bibl. gr., t. XIII, p. 279.

3. Ibid.% p. 280-281.

h. Ibn-Abi-Oeeibia, in the life of dlbn-Badja (ms. Bibl. nat, f. 195).

He is now occupied with these studies, not without to be greatly upset by his fellow citizens. He never dares appear in public, nor show the books to anyone that he wrote on this science.

The life of Abu-Bekr Ibn-Zohr by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia is full of similar traits. "We know," he said, "how Aimansour conceived the idea of destroying in his states works that deal with logic and philosophy philosophy, ordering that all books of this kind that could be found were publicly burned; and how he worked to abolish the study of these sciences, in persecuting the men who applied themselves to it, and making them-without severely punishing those who were convicted of having read such works, or of keeping them in their libraries. When he first had this thought, he charged Abu-Bekr Ibn-Zohr, the nephew, with the execution of his orders; for, although he knew well that Ibn-Zohr was himself very devoted to the study of logic and philosophy, he pretended to be uninformed about it, not wanting to persecute him over this matter, Abu-Bekr executed faithfully carried out the task entrusted to him. He made re-I searched in all the bookstores in Seville, taking care that not a single work dealing with of the subjects mentioned above, to the great sorrow of friends of these sciences. Now, in Seville, there was found a a man of high rank, who hated Ibn-Zohr, of whom he coveted the favor. This man accused him of giving himself up, despite the caliph's injunctions, to the study of the works prohibited acts. A denunciation, signed by several Witnesses, was sent to Aimansour. The caliph, having read this document, ordered that its author be seized immediately.

1. Gayangos, t. I, p. 198, 199.

2. Ms. Bibl. nat., f. 199 v. —Gayangos, t. I, appendix, p. x and xi.

the author and that he be put in prison. All the witnesses who had him had signed, greatly alarmed for themselves, took the escape. It is said that on this occasion Almansour exclaimed: “By Allah! Even if all my subjects were to sign "this statement and would bear witness that Abu-Bekr Ibn-Zohr did what he is accused of in this "On paper, I would still say that this is not true, so much "I know the uprightness of his heart and the rigidity of "His religious principles."

“I collected,” Ibn-Abi-Oceibia continued, “the anecdote following Abul-Abbas Ahmed Ibn-Mohammed Ibn-Ahmed, from Seville: “Ibn-Zohr had two students to whom He was teaching medicine. One day, as they arrived- "They went at the usual time to read to him some "works of this science, he noticed in the hands "From one of them, a small book dealing with logic. Ibn-“Zohr threw the volume into a corner of the apartment, and

"ran at the delinquents with the intention of beating them."
"The students fled, and stayed for a few days"
"without coming to his house. But finally they took courage, and "They presented themselves before their master, apologizing for having
"brought into his house a forbidden book, of which they were ignorant-" ((would, they said, the content. Ibn-Zohr pretended to ad-((offer their excuse, and continued to do with them)
"Readings on medicine; but with the difference that a-Having devoted some time to this study, “Ibn-Zohr had them recite some part of the Quran,”
"urging them, when they were at home, to read
"comments on this divine work, as well as "traditional stories concerning the Prophet and
"other books on theological subjects, but par-Above all, it is essential to be very precise in its execution.
"of their religious duties. The young men followed "the recommendations of their master, and when, little

"Some time later, Ibn-Zohr found that their spirits
"were well-disposed, he brought a copy of the book of
"the logic he had first seen in their hands, in their "saying: Now that you are well prepared for the ((reading this book, nothing prevents me from reading it
"with you; and he immediately began to do it to them"
"Explain." I mentioned this fact in order to show the
"Ibn-Zohr's upright heart and piety."

What is important to note, and what can be said to What is most surprising at first glance is that these persecutions were very agreeable to the people, and that the Even the most learned princes allowed themselves to be snatched away, despite their personal tastes, as a means of popularity.
This antipathy of the crowd towards natural philosophy Reality is one of the most characteristic features of Spain Muslim. "The Andalusians," said Makkari1, "left behind luminous traces in all branches of science, with the exception, however, of natural philosophy and astronomy. These two sciences, although cultivated in secret, passed down through the highest classes, were never taught public displays of disapproval due to the prejudices of the crowd.
For if a man of the lowest class heard a
In other words: "Such a person gives lessons on philosophy"
"natural, or works in astronomy," he called it immediately zendik (impious, unbeliever), and this qua-The offensive denomination remained attached to the man's name.
scholar throughout his life. Sometimes even his existence-Tence could depend on his circumspection; for the men of the lower classes, once ill-disposed and pre-Those who had come against him would have, at the slightest provocation,

[1] Gayangos, t. Iev, p. 141.

hit in the streets, or would have burned his house down before that the heads of state were even aware of it. Perhaps the caliph himself, in order to appease the "The goodwill and affection of his subjects," he would have ordered. that the poor man should be put to death, and that out of scruple-their research was conducted in his States, for that all philosophical works perish in the flames. It is claimed that this method is one of those that... ploya Almansour[1], to gain popularity among the lower classes, during the early years of his usurpation, although he himself was a follower of these sciences, and that he was working on them secretly.

§IV.

Now we understand why this Averroes, who for four centuries had among the Jews and among the Christians such a long line of disciples, and whose name has appeared so many times in the great battle of the human mind, has not set a school among his comradestriotes[2], and how the most famous of the Arabs with eyes The Latins are completely ignored by their coreligionists. In general, the borrowings that the Middle Ages made from muSultans cannot give any idea of the importance relative to parts of Arabic literature. The philosophers phes, which were almost the only ones known to the Latins, do form only an imperceptible family within the whole of this literature. Avempace, Abubacer, Averroes did not have no renown in Islamism. Of all this great development-

[1] This is not Iacoub Almansour, a contemporary of Ibn-Rosclid, but the vizier Almansur (died in 1009), who usurped power over Hischam II. See above, pp. 4-5.

[2] Abd-el-Wahid (p. 174) and El-Ansâri (ms. f. 8) speak however from a disciple of Ibn-Rosclid, named Bondoud or Ibn-Bondoud.

Over time, only a vague reminiscence remained of the Name of Ibn-Sina (Avicenna). The great collections of biBibliography, the Kitâb-el-Fihrist, the dictionary of Hadji-Khalfa, mention very few philosophical works pheas properly speaking. The very name of Ibn-Roshd is only mentioned incidentally in Hadji-Rhalfa, at regarding Gazali's work, which he refuted 9 and the Ibn-Sina's poem, which he commented on.[1] Ibn-Khallekan he didn't say a word about it in his life about great men of Islamism; Djemal-eddin al-Rifti, who followed him of a generation (1172-1248), does not name him in his History of the Philosophers. Maimonides, it is true, He read his works in Egypt in 1190. But Abdallatif, who visited this country around 1197, and who tells us all the disputes he had with the Egyptian doctors on the philosophers in vogue at that time, there were none no knowledge[2]. Jafei and the chroniclers, in menpositing his death in the year 595, they simply say vaguely that he composed many works; but one sees that the very name of the great commentary is not reached them.

It is not only Ibn-Roshd's contemporaries They had not praised his knowledge and eminent faculties. Ibn-Said calls him the prince of natural philosophy. his timed. Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, in the Life of Ibn-Bâdja, places him at the forefront of this great master's disciples. tre[4]. The kadhi Abu-Merwan-al-Badji, cited by this biograph, grants him this an excellent judgment, a great

[1] Cf. Hadji-Khalfa, Lex. bibliogr. (ed. Fluegel), under the words Tehafo and Ardjuza.

[2] De Sacy, Relation de l'Égypte, par Abdallatif, p. 466.

[3] Gayangos, vol. I, p. 198.

[4] Ms. ar., Bibl. nat., f. 196. — Gayangos, t. I, appendix, p. xv.

"Clarity of mind, powerful faculties." Several theTestimonies cited by EUAnsâri represent him as a men whose reputation had reached the farthest reaches of Islamism[1]. The historian Jafeï[2] praises its penetration, its constant application to study and universality from his knowledge of jurisprudence, theology, medicine, philosophy, logic, metaphysics and mathematicks. Finally, in an interesting discussion on the preeminence of Andalusia and Africa, cited by Makkari, Ibn-Roschd figures in an honorable rank among the great men that the defender of the AnDalousie alleges to support the superiority of this country[3].

Leo Africanus recounts that the famous Fakhr-eddîn Ibn-al-Rhatib Razi, having heard in Cairo about the Ibn-Roshd's reputation led him to charter a ship in Alexandria.

to go see him in Spain; but having learned the disgrace, which his heterodoxy had brought upon him, he re-He refused to go on this trip. He himself, in fact, had experienced similar unpleasantness in Baghdad for his opinions philosophical. But the biography of Ibn al-Khatib, in Léon, is filled with such gross contradictions, that this story deserves no credence. A few lines Further down, Leon has him die one hundred and seventy-four years later.
After Averroes! In any case, Fakhr-eddîn appears to have been a disciple of this free philosophy which was later characterized among the Latins by the name <Vaver~ Romanism. He commented on Aristotle and Avicenna; after his After his death, verses were found in his possession in which he sang of eternity.

1. Additional Ms. ar., n° 682, f. 8 r° and v°.

2. In the year 595. Ms. Bibl. nat., anc. fonds, n° 644, f. 141 ; suppl.
ar., n° 723. '

3. Gayangos, vol. I, p. 37.

unity of the world and the annihilation of the individual. The little-ple, having learned of it, dug up his ashes and desecrated them.

Therefore, we should not seek to define Averroism proper-said among Muslims2, on the one hand, because Ibn-In their eyes, Roschd did not possess the same originality.
than in the eyes of the scholastics, who saw him as isolated from his background; on the other hand, because the phi- studies Philosophers fall after him into complete discretion said. The true posterity of dlbn-Roschd and the continua-immediate explanation of Arab philosophy will be found among the Jews, in the school of Moses Maimonides. Now, This doctrine of Maimonides is considered very severe.
liar by Muslims. The orthodox Makrizi says that Moses Maimonides made true believers of his coreligionists atheists, of the Moattil, and that there is no sect that deviates further from the divine religions established by the Ministry of the Prophets 3. Moattil is the participle of The verb attala^ which means to strip a woman of her necklace, clear the air. The moattil is the one who removes from God, his attributes, who creates a void in God, declares it inaccessible to intelligence and alien to the government of the universe4. This is the nuance by which the peripateticism borders on pantheism; and it is, in fact, the doctrinetrine to which the name was later attached of Averroes.

1. Leo Air. apud Fabr. Bîbl, gr.^ t. XIII, p. 289 et seq.

2. Paul Jove claims that Bajazetll was attached to the opinions of Averroes: Peripatetici Averrois opinionibus oblectabatur [Elogla virorum bellica (virt. illustr., 1. IV, p. 344). He will no doubt have believed a priori that the phi-
The Arab philosopher enjoyed an equal reputation among his coreligionists to the one he had in Italy.

3. De Sacy, Chrestomathie arabe, vol. I, pp. 299-300,
4. /£/</., p. 32b, and t. II, p. 96.

§V.

The number of fables accumulated about the characters historical is almost always due to their cefame. Any man whose name becomes, rightly or wrongly Rightfully, the label of a system, ceases to be appropriate. to hold, and his biography indicates much more about fortunes various aspects of the system with which it was identified, such as its his own individuality. Averroes paid the debt of his renamed; few biographies have grown so large fables like his own. These fables can be divided into three categories. classes. Some come from Arab biographers; the Others are of Christian origin, and were invented to support the role of incredulity that the Middle Ages played playing Averroes; some stories finally seem to warrant to be attributed to the great fame that Averroes enjoys in northern Italy during the Renaissance, and to this genius inventive, which made all schools so fruitful in anecdotes about the teachers received.

Most of the traits reported by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, El-Ansari and Leo Africanus aim to raise the Ibn Rushd's virtues: his patience, his ability to forgive the insults, his generosity, especially towards the people of Letvery. Nothing in these harmless tales resembles the legend of the Christian Middle Ages. There is a long way to go from this respect-
The Kadhi table of Cordoba, dedicated to the precursor of the Antichrist, striking with equal contempt the three known religions, blaspheming the Eucharist, and crying out: May my soul Death of the philosophers! We will have to to critique these recent narratives and disentangle them the origin, when we examine the role of Averroes as a representative of religious unbelief by means of age.

Of all the fables produced by the philo- reputation Averroes' sophistic and medical philosophy, the most absurd, without doubt, is the one that originated from its assignment to contradict Avicenna. This tendency had already been remarked by Roger Bacon1. Benvenuto of Imola dedicated created the same tradition2, and claims that it was to conto betray Avicenna, who argued that one must respect the the religion into which one was born, from which Averroes conceived his doctrine contempt for established religions. Symphorien Champier assures3, and it has often been repeated after him, that Averroes refrains from naming his rival. Nothing could be further from the truth. ment. Ibn-Sina is often contradicted in the great commentary "mental", and especially in the Destruction of the destruction. But in medicine, Averroes is so far from being his equal. systematically hostile, that one of its main oumedical works is a commentary on the didactic poem Ibn-Sina's tic, to which he grants the most pompous praise. Imagination, however, did not stop at such a beautiful thing. path: it was said that Avicenna, having come to Cordoba from time of Averroes (an anachronism of a century and a half), this last, to satisfy his hatred, had made him suffer more dreadful tortures, and had him expire on the wheel4. Clearly, this reflects fierce hatreds. Renaissance scholars. This era could not to conceive of two school leaders without assuming they are enemies, A thousand examples of the hatred between Aristotle and Plato were recounted, of Bartholomew and Baldus; it was readily believed that Averroes treated his rival as he himself would have been treated,

---

i. Op us Majus, p. 13 (Jebb ed.).

2. Ad Inf., cant; IV, v. 143 (ms. Bibl. nat., n° 4146, suppl. fr,, f. 25).

3. De clarîs medicis, apud Gesneri Bibl., f. 100. — Bayle, note A.

4. Vossius, De Philos, sectis, cap. xiv, p. H4, — Brucker, t. III, p. 108.

He was generally accepted, among the doctors of the Renaissance, which Averroes did not concern himself with in practice medical1, although it was acknowledged that he had been a doctor of the King Memarolin, and that a discovery was attributed to him Importantly, it should be noted that bloodletting can be performed. safe for children2. Freind showed that this opinion stemmed from a misunderstanding about a passage where Aver» Roès attributes this experience to Avenzoar3. This is equally-ment of a misinterpretation on a passage of the Colliget, that then came the bizarre and often repeated opinion that Averroes was accustomed to prescribing no remedies for his aila- of \ But the most ridiculous, certainly, of all the misunderstandings to which Averroes was subjected include the one 'that one reads in the Patiniana: "Averroes was killed by a wheel of cart, which unfortunately crushed him in the street5; » and in the Yerdier de Vauprivas, cited by Bayle: “Aver- Roes was broken by a wheel that was placed on his sto- mac." This fable probably stems from a confusion with another fable, that of the torments he made suffer Avicenna.

S VI.

Therefore, we must give up on knowing anything about character individual of Ibn-Roshd. All that is said about it appears-

i. Cf. Brucker, t. III, p. 99.

2. Etienne Pasquier (Letters, vol. II, 1. XIX, p. 548): “How many For centuries we have practiced medicine, believing that one should not bleed a child until he reached the age of fourteen, and that the Bloodletting was previously not a remedy for them, but death! A heresy in which we would still be today without Averroes Arab, who first dared to test it on his son, aged "He was six or seven years old when he recovered from pleurisy."

3. Hist. medêc., pars II", p. 256.

4. Bayle, note D. — Brucker, t. Hî, p. 108.

5. P. 97 (eclit. 1701).

clings to the legend, and testifies much less to what it was that the opinion that had been formed of him. Neither by his Neither studies, nor by his character, does Ibn-Roshd deviate from the type common to the Muslim scholar. He knows what others They know: medicine, that is to say Galen; philosophy, that is to say Aristotle; astronomy, that is to say the Almagesture. Like any good Muslim, he adds to it the jurisprudence-dence (canon law), and like any distinguished Arab, the poetry. Poetry no longer existed at that time, among the Arabs, that an ingenious combination of syllables: one does not Therefore, one should not be surprised to see it cultivated by minds as unpoetic as Ibn Sina and Ibn Rushd. Leon The African informs us that Ibn Rushd had composed several pieces of moral and gallant poetry, which he burned in his old age.1 Léon preserved a fragment of it for us which might indeed suggest that in some respects For Ibn-Roshd, wisdom was merely the fruit of the anborn. The paraphrase of Aristotle's Poetics attests in Its author has a great knowledge of literature Arabic, especially pre-Islamic poetry, the true and Great Arabic poetry. Quotations from Antara, Imroulkaïs, Ascha, Abou-Témam, Nabega, Motenabbi, from the Kitâb-el-Agdni (collection of ancient songs) Arabic sounds)2, are found on every page. This Paraphrase, on the other hand, accuses the most ignorance complete of Greek literature, and one should expect to find theretender. The Arabs knew nothing of Greece but the phiphilosophers and scientific authors. Not one of the writers-

\. Apucl Fabricium, Bibl. gr., t. XIII, p. 287.

2. Thus, on page 54 (ed. 1481), he quotes the verses that the poet Asclia sings at the Ocadh fair, in honor of his host Mohallak (see. Caussin de Perceval, Essay on the history of the Arabs before Islam, vol. II, (p. 400), truly characteristic vain things of Greek genius did not come up to them, and it can also be said that they had were quite incapable of appreciating them. Logic, astronomy, mathematics, and to a certain extent the medicine, are from all countries, Aristotle's Organon has been accepted by the most diverse races as the code of understanding. On the contrary, Homer, Pindar, Sophocles, even Plato, would seem quite bland. to the peoples of Semitic race, much like the The Bible appears to the Chinese as a book of supreme imMorality. In any case, Ibn-Roshd's blunders, in fact, Greek literature, are really of a nature to to make you smile. Imagining, for example, that the tragedyTo die is nothing other than the art of praising, and comedy the art of blaming1, he claims to find tragedies and comedies in the panegyrics and satires of the Arabs, and even in the Quran!

The extreme flippancy with which the critics and the Historians have spoken of Arab philosophy, but perhaps only to explain a gross error which, since d'Herbelot, has has been often repeated. "Averroes," says d'Herbelot3, "is the the first to translate Aristotle from Greek into Arabic, before that the Jews had made their own version of it; and we have not I had for a long time no other text by Aristotle than that of the verse Latin sion which was made on the Arabic version of this

1. This peculiar theory is reproduced verbatim according to Averroes, in the prologue to Benvenuto of Imola's commentary on The Divine Comedy.

2. The elegy is no less curiously defined: “Species vero “poetrise quœ elegia nominalur non est nisi incitati ad actus cohituales, “quos amoris nomine obtegunt et decorant. Ideoque oportet ut a talibus “carminibus abstrabantur filii, instrument and exerccantur in carminibus “quœ ad actus fortitudinis et largitatis incite. »

3. BibL Orient., under the word Rosclul.

great philosopher, who later added very extensive commentaries, including those of Saint Thomas and other scholastics ques were used \ before the original Greek texts of Aris- would have been known to us, along with his commentators. D'Herbelot may not have known the history of the versions Latin texts by Aristotle, which have not been carefully studied than for some years; but as an oriental- As a talist, he should not have ignored: 1° that Aristotle had was translated into Arabic three centuries before Averroes; 2° that translations of Greek authors into Arabic have been done from Syriac and not from Greek; 3° that perhaps no sa- before Muslim, and that certainly no Arab from Es- loincloth, didn't know Greek. In any case, this opinion erroneous belief seems to have prevailed from the earliest times of the Renaissance. Augustin Niphus1, Patrizzi2, Marc Oddo, in the preface to the 1552 edition of the Juntes, Jean-Baptiste Bruyerin4, Sigonio s, Tomasini6, Gassendi7, Longuerue8, Moréri9, and in general all of the 16th and the In the 17th century, Averroes was considered to have introduced- D'Herbelot, reproducing Aristotle among the Latins. this misunderstanding, and adding to it a new degree of precision sion, was copied by Casiri10, Buhle11, Harles12, de Rossi13,

1. In librum de Subst. Orbis (Venice, 1508), f. 2. — In Phys. Auscultationes Aristotelis (Venice, 1549) prof.

2. Discuss. Peripat., 1. XII, p. 106 (Venice, 1571).

3. T. I, f. 7.

4. Pref. du Colliget, p. 81 (ed. 1553).

5. Opp., t. II, p. 706 (Milan, 1732).

6. Gym. Patav., p. 4 (Utini, 1654).

7. Exercise. parad. adv. Jristot. (Opp., t. III, p. 1192).

8. Longueruana, pp. 68-69.

9. Dict., art. Averroes.

10. Bib. Arabic. hisp., t. I, p. 185.

11. Jristot. Opp. Prolegg., ed. Bipont., p. 323, 346.

12. Ap. Fabr., Bibl. gr., t. III, p. 306, note.

13. Dizionario degii autori arabi, p. 157.

Middeldorpf1, Tennemann2, de Gérando3, Amable Jourdain4, etc., etc. The same mistake was made in the catalogue of Hebrew manuscripts in the National Library national s; it is stereotyped for a long time in all the Correspondences-Lexicon. Such is, in literary history-raire, the tenacity of error.

Ibn-Roshd therefore only read Aristotle in the ancient-versions made from Syriac by Honein Ibn-Ishak, Ishak ben-Honein, Iahja ben-Adi, Abu-Baschar Mata, etc. He knows how to make use of all the exegetical means at his disposal. possesses; it compares the different Arabic versions6, He discusses the value of lessons, he even sometimes makes critical observations that would seem to assume the con-birth of the Greek language7. But his blunders suffi-would prove that the text has always remained closed to him. One of his most bitter enemies, Louis Vives8, curiously noted them. He confuses Protagoras with Pythagoras, Cratylus with Democritus; Heraclitus becomes a philosophical sect, that of Herculeans! The first philosopher of the sect of the Her-Socrates was the leader of the Aculeans, just as Anaxagoras was the leader. from the Italian school 9!

1. From Instit. lit. in Hisp., p. 67-68.

2. In the Encycl. of Ersch and Gruber, art. Averroes.

3. Hist. systems comp. dephil., t. IV, p. 247 (ed. 1822).

4. United Biography, art. Averroes, — The same error crept in by inadvertence in the Dict. des se. philos, (t. III, pp. 614-615). Some pages above, it had been expertly noted by Mr. Munck [Ibid. , p. 460.)

5. Catal. Codd. mss. Bill. Begioe, t. I, p. 19, 30.

6. Metaph., XII, p. 323. — De anima, III, f. 175.

7. In Proedicam., f. 23. — De anima, 1. I, f. 114 v°; 1. II, f. 127, 130, 159; 1. III, f. 160 v°, 195. — Phys., 1. I, f. 17; 1. II, f. 34; 1.IV, f. 61. — Exhibitions, media in I'hys., f. 200, 203.— Destr. Deslr., fol. 217 v.

8. De causis corrupt. art., 1. V. Opp., t. Ior, p. 141 (Basel, 1555).

9. Metaph., I, f. 22. A very similar mistake was made by

These errors would, in fact, point to the most egregious ignorance, if one did not consider that they are for the most part apart from the fact of the translations that Ibn-Rosehd had between the hands, and that the Arabs, moreover, lacked no- the most basic information about the whole and the history of Greek literature.

As for the barbarity of Averroes' language, can we This is surprising when one considers that printed editions of his works offer only a Latin translation of a Hebrew translation of a commentary made on a Arabic translation of a Syriac translation of a text Greek; when one thinks especially of the genius so different from Semitic languages and the Greek language, and to the ex- The extreme subtlety of the text that needed clarifying? Com- How could the original thought not have evaporated? in these repeated transfusions? If all the aid from the modern philology? if all the penetration of our best- their minds are not enough to lift the veils that en- develop for us the thought of Aristotle, how Ibn-Roshd, who only had versions in his possession Often unintelligible, would he have been happier? One is almost tempted to thank him for not having done No more misunderstandings, and to say with Isaac Yossius: If grace nescius, congratulate adeo mentem Aristotelis perspexit, quid non facturas \ si linguam scisset grœcam 1?

After Aristotle, the Greek commentators, Alexander Are Themistius of Aphrodisias and Nicholas of Damascus the ones who...?

the author of the Arabic translation of the dialogue of Cebes. Cebes, transported In admiration, he exclaims at times: co cHpcr/.Xsiç! The translator believed that this was the name of the person he was speaking to, and added at the end of the work: Explicit expositio Herculis Socraticiad Cebetem Platonicum, etc.

[1] Of philos, sectis, c. xvm, p. 90.

whose names appear most frequently in writing of Ibn-Roshd1. Among the Arabs, Ibn-Sina and Ibn-Bâdja are the most frequently cited. The opinions of Ibn-Sina and Alexander are usually only alleged for to be fought, and sometimes with obvious bias lite2. Ibn-Badja, on the contrary, is always^ treated with a deep respect, and if Ibn Rushd sometimes allows himself to Disagreeing with someone's opinion is the only way to protest. of his admiration for the father of Arab philosophy- Spanish 3. In general, the controversy occupies a very- a large place in the writings of Ibn-Roshd, and introduces there a lively tone that is interesting. Sometimes the enthusiasm- The siasm of science and the love of philosophy elevate F up to a very eloquent moralistic tone.4 His com- The comments are verbose, but without dryness; the person- The author's uniqueness is constantly apparent in the digressions and the reflections with which he interweaves his text. I don't believe However, there is nothing to be gained from this for interpretation. of Aristotle. It would be just as well, to better understand Racinema, read it in a Turkish or Chinese translation, or, to appreciate the beauties of Hebrew literature, s'a- to draw up to Nicolas de Lyre, or to Cornelius a Lapide.

S seen.

Averroes' superstitious admiration for Aristotle

1. It is undoubtedly due to an error by the copyist or translator that the Cicero's name appears in the commentary on Book VIII of the Physics sique (p. 177, ed. 4552), and that of Seneca in the translation of the Poetics by Hermann the German.

2. Phys., VIII, f. 173. – Mcteor., 1. HT, f. 55 v. – To hinder and corr. , 1. I, f. 286 v. – De anima, 1. III, f. 169, 176 et seq.

3.Phys. 1. IV, f. 74v”; Lively. 122, 138. – De anima, III, f. 176 v°
A. See especially the Prologues to the Commentary on Physics and to

The Destruction of Destruction.

has often been noted. Petrarch was amused by it1; Gassendi linked it to the cult of Lucretia for Epicure2; Malebranche made it a weapon in his struggle against Aristotelianism3. “The author of this book,” says Ibn-Roschd, in the Preface to the Physics, is Aristotle, son Nicomachus, the wisest of the Greeks? Who founded and

I've finished logic, physics, and metaphysics. I say that he founded them, because all the works that have What has been written before him on these sciences is not worthwhile that people talk about it, and have been overshadowed by his own writings.
I say he finished them, because none of those who They have continued to this day, that is to say for nearly fifteen hundred years ago, he could add nothing to his writings, nor to find an error of some importance there. Now, that All of this is found together in one man, that is a strange and miraculous thing, and the being thus privileged He deserves to be called divine rather than human, and there you have it.
Why the ancients called it divine — this We "Let us offer endless praise," he said elsewhere, "to him."
who distinguished this man (Aristotle) by his perfection, and which placed him alone at the highest degree of superiority human, to which no man in any century has been able to attain; it is to him that God alluded, saying (in the Quran): This superiority, God grants to whomever he wants." — • "The doctrine of Aristotle," he added, 6 is the supreme truth; for his understanding has been the

1. De sui ipsius etmult. ignore. Opp., t. II, p. 1052.

2. Opp., t. I, p. 396 [Liber Prooemialis a'iv. philos.), and t. III, p. 1192 [Exercise. parad. adv. Arist.).

3. Search for Truth, Book II, Part II, Chapter VII

4. Mr. Ritter rightly observed that this passage is very different in both Latin versions of the commentary on the Physics.

5. To bother, animal., 1. I.

6. Destr. Destr.. 1. I, dissertation. in.

the limit of human intelligence, so that one can say from him, rightfully, that it was given to us by Providence to teach us what it is possible to know.
"Aristotle is the principle of all philosophy; one does not may differ only in the interpretation of his words and in the consequences to be drawn from it1. " — "This man has has been the rule of nature and as a model or she sought to express the type of ultimate perfection.2
All of this is roughly equivalent to the words attributed to him.
Balzac, "that before Aristotle was born, nature was not not entirely completed; that she received in him her last-to deny the fulfillment and perfection of her being; that she could no longer ignore it; that this is the end of its forces and the limit of human intelligence3. » In essence,

These expressions are no stronger than those that one found on every page in Christian authors, since The great rise of Aristotle in the 12th century. An opinion very widespread attributed to his philosophy a supernatural: a demon (good? bad?) had revealed it to him- the secret; only the antichrist will know it.[4]

Perhaps even these exaggerated praises should not to be taken too seriously. What is certain is that Ibn-Roshd sometimes distinguishes between his opinion and that of the text he is commenting on. Never, no doubt, will he allows himself to express a thought in his comment different from that of his master; but, on the other hand, He takes care to warn us that he does not accept the res-{.Epist. deconn. intell, abstractï cumhomine, init. (t. X, ed. 1560).

2. De anima, 1. III, f. 169 (1530). Cf. Meteor., 1. III, f. 55 \° (Mit. 1560). This passage had already been noted and quoted by Roger Bacon (Opus MajuSy-p. 36), Gilles of Rome [Quocll., III, quest. 13), Patrizzi, Discuss. Perip., t. I, f. 98 and 106 (Venet., 1571).

3. Disc, following the Christian Sacrale, p. 228 (Paris, 1661).

4. Bayle, art. Aristotle, responsibility for the doctrines he sets forth. At the end of his average comment on Physics l$ he states that he has not had no other intention than to express the feelings of Peripatetics, without stating his own opinion, and that his Lut's goal was the same as Gazali's: to make known the systems of philosophers, so that we may judge them fully aware of the facts, and refute them if necessary place. At the end of his letter on the union of the separated intellect with man 2, he also declines responsibility for doctrines contained therein. Perhaps that was not the case. that a precaution to philosophize more freely at the shadow of another. It must be admitted at least that this trick is very common among the Arabs. Ibn-Tufayl[3] remarks- that Ibn-Sina constantly refers to his Philosophy Eastern to find his own thought, and that he says often in his comments things he doesn't believe no. Gazali, in his Makacîd-al-Falasifa, sets forth the systems of philosophers with an assurance that could to suggest that he is stating his own opinion, and to- since his sole purpose is to prepare the refutation that he wants to do it. Perhaps many contradictions of the Ancient philosophy explains itself in the same way, by the ease with which one agreed to borrow for a

at the moment the language and mannerisms of a school, without being there to commit in an absolute manner.

§ VIII.

Averroes achieved fame among the Latins at a dual role: as a doctor and as a commentator of Aristotle; but the commentator's glory has almost

4. Unpublished passage, cited by M. Munck (1. c, p. 165).

2. Opp., t. X, f. 360 (ed. 1560).

3. Phil. autodidact, (ed. Pococke), p. 19.

It makes you forget the doctor's reputation. Of some reputation Although the Col/iget enjoyed power, he never attained authority masterful work on Avicenna's Canon. Numerous comments Ibn Rushd's comments on Galen, none of which have been translated neither into Hebrew nor Latin. Moreover, in medicine, as in philosophy, Ibn-Roshd is a disciple of Aristote. He wrote a work ex professo to reconcile him with Galen; when agreement is impossible, Galen is always sacrificed. This is according to the philosopher's doctrine that he considers the heart as the main organ and the source of all the functions of animal life1. Its
The medical system, moreover, has no originality whatsoever.

As an astronomer and as a jurist, Ibn-Roshd nor does it present any clearly defined physiognomy terrified. It is through his Great Commentary that he is which has come to constitute one of the poles of philosophical authority Phic: Nature as interpreted by Aristotle. – Jristote interpreted by Averroes.

Ibn-Roshd composed three kinds of texts on Aristotle Comments: the main comment, the comment average, analyses or paraphrases 2.

The form of the major commentary belongs to its own to Ibn Rushd. The philosophers who preceded him, Avicenna and Alfarabi had not employed any other comcomment that the paraphrase, in the kind of that of Albertus Magnus. The Aristotelian text was based on a sustained exhibition, where the text and the gloss remained indistinct. Ibn-Roshd's method in the Great

1. Cf. Sprengel, Hist. of medicine. , t. II, p. 381. – Freind, Sist, media.f p. 255 et seq.

2. Abd-el-Wahid el-Marrekoschi informs us that the analyses re-
They were thundering a volume of about 150 pages, while the large
The comments comprised four volumes in total (p. 175, Dozy edition).

The comment is completely different. He takes one after the other each paragraph of the philosopher he quotes in extenso, and explains it member by member, distinguishing-covering the text with the word kdla (he said), equivalent to Quotation marks. Theoretical discussions are introduced. in the form of digressions; each book is divided into sums, themselves subdivided into chapters and into texts1". Ibn-Roshd obviously borrowed from the com-Commentators on the Quran, this system of literal exposition, clearly distinguishing what belongs to the author and that which belongs to the glossator

In the average commentary, the text of each paragraph is cited only by its first words, then the the rest is explained, without distinction of what is from Ibn-Roschd or what pertains to Aristotle.

In the paraphrase or analysis, Ibn-Roshd speaks to-days in his own name. He expounds the doctrine of the philo-Sophie, adding, subtracting, searching in the other treatises which complement the thought, introducing a order and a method according to his fancy; these are, in a word treatises under the same title as those of Aristotle. That is especially by the titles that Aristotle held sway over the human mind hand: the labels on his books remained, for nearly for two thousand years, the divisions of science itself.

It is certain that Ibn-Roshd did not compose his great comments only after the other 3. At the end of his grand

i. These divisions were universally adopted in the schools peri* Pateticians of Italy. Cf. Patrizzi, Discuss. Pe/ ijj., t. I, f. 98.

2. Comments of this form, true commentaries, are called-Slow scharh in Arabic. The average commentaries are called telkhis. The paraphrases or abridgments are designated by the name djewàmi, corresponding dant à summœ ou auvo^iç.

3. It was a widely held opinion during the Renaissance that he He composed his paraphrases in his youth, his average commentaries

Commentary on Physics, completed in 1186, reads In Hebrew translations: "I made another one shorter in my youth.” 1 Often in his comments average comments, he promises to write more detailed ones loppés. Finally, several of Ibn-Roshd's works include their date in the Hebrew translation, and offer thus the means of determining up to a certain point the series of his works2.

1 1 69: Paraphrase on the books of the Parts and of the Generation of animals. (Seville.)

1 1 70: Average comment on Physics and on The Posterior Analyses. (Seville.)

1171: Commentary on De Cœlo et Mundo.
(Seville.)

1 1 74: Paraphrase on Rhetoric, Poetics and Metaphysics. (Cordoba.)

1 1 76: Average commentary on the Nico- Ethics mask.

1178: Of Substantial Gold bis. (Morocco.)

1179: On the Demonstration of Religious Dogmas.
(Seville.)

1 1 93: Commentary on Galen's De febribus.

1195: Questions on logic (written during his disgrace).

We have all three types of comments on the Posterior Analytics, the Physics, the treatises on the Heavens, of the Soul, and Metaphysics. On the other books of Aris-in middle age and his great commentaries in old age. Cf. Niphus, in Pliys. Auscult., procem., Venice, 1549, and the preface to the edition of Juntas of 1552 (f. 2 v°).

1. Pasini, Cocld. jnss. regii Taurin. Alhenœi, leave Ia, p. 52.

2. Bartolocci, Wolf, and Pasini committed very serious offenses on these dates.
errors, purely resulting from an erroneous conversion of the years of the Hijra into years of the vulgar era.

tote, we only have average comments or the paraphrases, or both. The only works of Arisiotes, about which no commentary remains from him.
The ten books of Y History of Animals and the Politics 1. The commentary on the History of Animals has He certainly existed. Ibn-Abi-Oceibia? Abd-el-Wahid and the Arabic list of Ibn-Rushd's works which is found in manuscript 879 of the Escorial, they mention it expressly2. As for Politics, Ibn-Roshd tells us he himself learns this in the epilogue of his commentary means on Ethics, that the Arabic translation of this Aristotle's work was not yet known in Spain.
pagne3. At the beginning of his commentary on the
In Plato's Republic, he explicitly states that he has no...
I resumed the explanation of this work because the Aristotle's books on the same subject were not par-came to him.

We could have believed, upon inspection of the Latin editions of Averroes, that he did not know books XI, XIII and XIV of the Metaphysics: indeed, one does not find in These editions have no comment on the three books mentioned above. cited4. But Mr. Munck observed that these three books are discussed at length in the translation Hebrew commentary, average 5. Mr. Ravaisson? of the

We have nothing on the Great Morals and the Morals in Eu-dème. The Arabs usually group the Great Morals with the Morals to Nicomachus, which they thus compose of twelve books (Cf. Wenrich, op.
(cit., p. 136).

2. "See above, p. 17.

3. Opp., t. III, f. 317 v% 318 r° (ed. 1560).

4. Ravaisson, Metaphors of Thus, vol. 1, p. 81. — Jourdain, Researches on the Latin translations of Aristotle, p. 178. Book XI is also missing in Al-Bert; the 13th and 14th centuries in Saint Thomas.

5. Dict. of themselves. phd,, t. III, p. 162. ~ Cf. Pasini, Codd. mss. regii Bullfighting. Athenœi1 I, p. 14-13.

remains, had noticed that Xbn-Roschd was familiar with these books by Alexander of Aphrodisios, and that he gave the analysis of it.
lyse, according to this commentator.

We are not aware of some other comments.
than by vague or inaccurate indications. Thus the list of the Escorial mentions a great comment on the Apocryphal book of Porno. Labbe, Wolf, deRossi1, byslow of a commentary on De Musica; but it is It's obvious they were misled by the ambiguity of the word which in Hebrew designates Poetics, and that the book which they what is in view is a paraphrase of this work, translated by Todros Todrosi. Finally, Bernard Inavagero2, in a letter written to the Juntas, claims to have seen in Constantinople the great commentary on the two books of Plants. Ibn-Roshd only made extensive commentary on the books he had already paraphrased and presented in previous Before, it's hard to believe he would have given so much care to this book, without anything of it having reached us. It is also by mistake that Fabricius attributes to Averroes physiognomic writings3.

Six.

In addition to his commentaries, Ibn-Rushd composed a a large number of pamphlets, including full remuneration presents very serious difficulties. The catalogs that we The Arab biographers who transmitted this information are far from being coto divide among themselves and with what we have in our hands. Often the same title refers to different treaties*. more often the same treatise is given under titles

4. Labbe, Nova Bibl. ms. (Paris., 1652, in4°), p. 116, 306. — Wolf, Bihl. ïiebr., I, p. 20. — De Rossi, Coda, heèr., t. II, p. 9-10.

2. Edit. Jimt., 1552, i. I", f. 20 v° Proœm.

3. Bièl.gr,,%, III, p. 252.

various; sometimes finally treaties are formed by the agglutination of several others. In a manuscript Arabic from Tescurial (no. 879) % where there is a list of works by Ibn-Sina, Al-Farabi, and Ibn-Rushd are included under the latter's name seventy-eight works of philosophy, medicine, jurisprudence and theologygie. Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, for his part, lists at least fifty. By gathering these various indications, by the comparing it to the writings we possess, and transcribing it Regarding the double jobs, here is the list we would be brought to train.

I. Philosophical Treatises,

1° Destruction of Destruction, in Arabic Tehafot el-Tehafot2, refutation of the work of Algazali, entitled: The Destruction of the Philosophers. The Hebrew Translation of this work appears to have suffered from serious interpolation tions. One might even believe that in several places Ibn Rushd's thought has been altered. The last five Disputes are missing in the old version made from Arabic.

The doctrine set forth therein is, moreover, on several points, in blatant contradiction with that of Ibn-Roshd3.

2° De Substantia Or bis, or De compositione corpo-laughs coelestis. The list of Escorial and Ibn-Abi-Oceibia

1. I need a copy of this document, which is so important for the subject that concerns me.
cupe, to MM. José de Alava and Tomàs Muîïoz, secretary of the Academy historical figures from Madrid, who have been of service to me in this circumstance stance, an eagerness for which I am deeply grateful.

2. Bayle, Antonio, Brucker, and almost all the old critics have given the Hebrew title Happalath Hahappala for the Arabic title. Cf.
Bayle, note G. — Antonio, t. II, p. 399. — Brucker, t. III, p. 103. — Wolf, Bibl. Hebr., t. III, p. 46. — What can we say about d'Herbelot who supposes Algazali after Ibn-Roschd! (art. Roschd.)

3. The De œternitate mundi contra Algazelem, mentioned in the library

4

they mention several separate works under this title.
Indeed, this treatise is composed of dissertations written in different eras. It is one of the most re-pandus in Hebrew and Latin. Usually attached to the book De causis, it took its place with this treatise in the body of Aristotelian writings.

3° Of animated beatitudine, to which is always joined, or as a second part, or as a separate treatise, the ou-Next volume:

4° Epistle on the union (ittisâl) of the separated intellect with the man.

5. Treatise on the material intellect, or the possibility of the union; mentioned in these terms by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia:
"A treatise on the question of whether the material intellect may or may not include separate forms, question that Aristotle had promised to solve in his book of "The Soul." Until now, it had been believed that this important treaty it existed only in Hebrew1. I found the translation-Latin tion in two manuscripts, both from the 14th century key and of Italian origin2: 1° at the library of Saint-Marc, in Venice (cl. VI, no. 52), under this title: Tractatus Averoys qualiter intellectus materialis conjungatur intelligent abstractse; 2° at the National Library (old collection, no. 6510), under the title: Epistola de intel-reading. Despite the similarity in title and subject with the work mentioned (no. 4), the two treatises are distincts (see Appendix I).

6° Commentary on Ibn-Badja's letter concerning that Saint Mark, is undoubtedly identical to the Destruction of the Destruction. Cf. Zanetti, Latina et italica D. Marci Bibliotheca, p. 117.^

1. In Paris, in Oxford, in Leiden. — Uri, Bill. Bodl. , leave I", p. 74. — Wolf, Bibl. Hebr., I, p. 44.20-21; III, p. 15-16.

2. The Paris manuscript belonged to Nicholas Leonicenus, the union of intellect with man, mentioned by the list of the Escorial.

7. Questions on the various parts of the Qrganon, which is usually attached to the comments.

8° On the Conditional Syllogism, mentioned by the list of the Escorial.

9° Epistola de primatate prsedicatorum \ following of the Posterior Analytics, in the Latin editions.

10. Abridged Logic, published in Hebrew at Riva di Trento; identical, no doubt, to the work entitled in Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and in the bibliographical note of the Es-Curial: A book of what is necessary in logic, and to Y Introduction to logic, which can be found in a large number of Hebrew manuscripts K

41° Prolegomena to Philosophy, in Arabic, to the Es-curial (no. 629); collection of twelve dissertations: ° on the 1. Subject and predicate; 2. On definitions; 3. On pre-first and the Posterior Analytics; 4° on the propositions; 5° on the true or false proposition; 6° on the proposition-contingent or necessary tion; 7° on the argumentation; 8° on the legitimate conclusion; 9° on Al-'s sentiment Farabi concerning the syllogism; 10° on the faculties of the soul; 1° on the senses and hearing; 2° on the four qualities 2.

42° Commentary on Plato's Republic, men-listed in the Escorial; it exists in Hebrew and in Latin (Opp. t. III, ed. 4,553)”

43° Statement of the opinions of Abu-Nasr (Alfarabi) in his treatise on logic, and those of Aristotle on the same subject; judgment on their opinions and on progress

1. Bartolocci, Bibl. rabbi., t. I«% p. 13.-- Wolf, I, p. 18; II, p. 12. — Pasini, I, 20, 66.

2. Casiri, I, 184.

that their disagreement has caused science to do; mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and by the Escorial list.

4° Various comments on Alfarabi, between au-very much on its Organon expositions, indicated by the list of the Escorial.

5° On the criticisms that Alfarabi addressed to the book of Aristotle's Posterior Analytics, regarding order, to rules of the syllogism and definitions; work men-edited by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia.

16° Refutation of the established classification of beings by Ibn-Sina, in absolutely possible and possible by their essence, and necessary outwardly and necessaires by their essence. In Hebrew, at the Bibl. nat. (ancient. funds, 356); mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia1.

7° An average commentary on the Metaphysics of Nicolas, mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and in the list of the Escorial. This is undoubtedly the Philosophy pre-Mother of Nicholas of Damascus. Nicholas is often cited by Arab philosophers, and in particular Ibn Rushd, who mainly criticizes him for wanting to reverse the order books of Metaphysics2.

18th Treatise on this question: If God knows the special things; mentioned in the Escorial list.

9th Treatise on Eternal Existence and on Existence Temporary. (Here.)

20° Research on the various points of Metaphysics which are discussed in Ibn-Sina's book entitled: AU S chief a ; mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia.

1. Cf. Munck, Dict. des se. phil., art. Ibn-Sina, p. 175-176.

2. Metaph., 1. XII, Proœm. , f. 312 v°, 314 v° and 344 v°; From anima, 1. III, f. 169. Cf. Pierron and Zevort, Métaph. by Aristotle, t. I, p. 124.— Wenrich, De auct. grœc. vers.f p. 294. — De Sacy, Relation de l'Égypte, by Abdallatif, p. 77, note.

21° A book on the folly of doubting arguments the philosopher's comments concerning the existence of matter first, and clear proof that Aris-'s arguments Everything on this subject is the obvious truth. (Ibid.)

22. Question about time. (Ibid.)

23. Questions on philosophy. (Ibid.)

24° Balances speculationum, seu staterœ subtle ', in Hebrew, Bodleian style, in Turin, in Parma1; discussions on God, creation, immortality, prophecy.

25th Treatise on the Intellect and the Intelligible, in Arabic, at the Escorial, no. 879, probably identical to the treaty From the intellect mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Qceibia, and that Mr. Wüstenfeld 2 looks, on the other hand, as identick to the second part of the animated De beatitudine.

26th Commentary on the book of Alexander of Aphrodisias on the intellect; mentioned in the Escorial list.

27° Questions on the Book of the Soul, by requests and by answers. (Ibid.)

28° Two books on the science of the soul, distinct from previous ones. (Ibid.)

29° Questions on: De Cœlo et Mundo. (Id.)

Other titles, which can be found in bibliographies and in the manuscripts, stem from errors or from duplication. Thus the De generatione animalium tam secundum viam gignitionis quant secundum viam putrefactionis, which appears in the catalogues of the Biblioth. nat. (Sorbonne funds, 61 2 *, former funds, 651 0), is only an excerpt from the commentary on the twelfth book of Metaphysics. The treatises De rerum naturalium mutatione juxta veteres philosophers, cum exposed Ben

1. Uri, leave 1% p. 74. — -Wolf, t. III, p. 16; t. IV, p. 753. — From Rossi, Codd., t. II, p. 77.

2. Geschichte der arabischen Mrzte und Naturforscher, s. 107.

Resched; — Of tis horn; — De sensibus; — “Of nutrimento; — De diluviis; the commentaries on the Hai Ibn-Ibn-Tofail's loMhan and on the Regime of the Solitary by Ibn-Bâdja, mentioned by Wolf, Bartolocci, Moréri, ne are based only on vague and inaccurate indications.
It is also by mistake that d'Herbelot attributes to him an ou-political work entitled: The Lamp of Kings, which is from an Ibn-Roshd of Tortosa, earlier than ours by two centuries, (National Library, old Arab collection, nos. 887, 888, 889.)'

II. Theology.

1° A pamphlet on the agreement of religion with the pbilosopbia; in Hebrew (Bibl. nat., ancient funds, 345).
This treatise is probably identical to the one that Ibn-Abi-Oceibia refers to a short treatise entitled:
Critique of the various opinions on the agreement of the phi-philosophy and theology 3.

2. An attempt to prove that the opinion of dissidents and that of the theologians (motecallemin) of our religion in the mode of the world's existence, beautiful things are getting closer-A blow to the meaning; mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and by the Escorial list.

3. The main lines of argument in science principles of our religion; work mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and by the list of the Escorial. It is found in Arabic at the Escorial (no. 629), and in Hebrew at the Bibl.
nat. (Oratory, no. 111).

1. Wolf, Bibl. hebr., vol. I, p. 14 et seq.; vol. IV, p. 751 et seq.
Bartolocci, t. I, p. 14. — Moréri, art. Averroes, — Brucker, t. III, pp. 104 and 178.

2. Cf. deRossi, Dizionarïo degli aut. arab., p. 157-158.

3. This is the lesson followed by Mr. de Gayangos. The manuscript of the Bibl. nat. porte: the agreement between the Sunna and theology.

4° The Book of Results11 (Kitab et-tahsil), or Collection conflicting opinions of the Pro- companions

phète, of the first and second tabis, with the arguments for or against their different schools of thought and an explanation of the main passages, forming the Phare2 has conflicting opinions. It's the first works of Ibn-Roshd mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia.

5° Commentary on the Yakidet of Imam Mahdi, men- included in the Escorial list.

III. Case Law*

1° Prolegomena to jurisprudence, mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia,

2° The ultimate term for someone who studies jurisprudence dence; mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and by the list of Escurial 3.

3° Vigilia super errors repertos in textïbus le gis cwilisj in three volumes; work mentioned by Leo African 4.

4° Cases of the Bar, in three volumes; in Arabic at the Escorial, No. 988.

5° Complete Course in Jurisprudence, in Arabic at the Escurial, nos1021 and 1022.

6° Treatise on Sacrifices; ibid. no. 1126.

7° Treatise on Tithes; ibid. same number.

1. The title of this work presents some rather great obscurities. Mr. Gayangos seems to have had before him a different version from that of the manuscrit de Paris.

2. Or the cream, according to the lesson adopted by M',   from Gayangos.

3. Mr. de Gayangos read zihaiet (maturity) instead of nihaiet, which is found in the Paris manuscript and in the Escorial list.

4. Fabricius, vol. XIII, p. 287.

8° Illicit profits of kings, presidents, and usurers. Jbid. n° 4 1 27 *.

9° Summary of the book of Jurisprudence by Algazali intitled el-Mustasfa; mentioned in the Escorial list and by the historian Ibn-Said, cited by Makkari 2.

Among the legal texts that bear the The name of Ibn-Roshd is difficult to determine with specifying those that belong to the Commentator or to his grandfather. There can be no doubt that the Commentator had he not composed works on this science, since Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, Leo Africanus and the Arab list of his works which are found in a manuscript of the Escorial They agree in attributing it to him. He is singular, however. that among the titles originating from these various sources, No two can be found that coincide. As there are three famous jurists named Ibn-Roshd 3, One in particular, Abu-Abdallah Mohammed Ben-Omar, who lived around the year 700 of the Hijra, and whose writings are If they are found at Escorial 4, it would not be surprising if they would have been confused.

IV. Astronomy.

° Abridged version of the Almagest, indicated by the bibliographical notegraphic of the Escorial. It is found in Hebrew in a a large number of libraries. It has never been translated in Latin. However, Pico della Mirandola, Vossius, and Others were aware of it.

2° From motu sphderœ coelestis, mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and the list of the Escorial, and that Mr. Wiïstenfeld * regards as identical to De substantia Orbis.

1. Casiri, t. I, p. 446, 450, 465-466.

2. Gayangos, t. I, p. 192-193.

3. De Rossi, Dizionario degU autorï arabiy p 158.

4. Casiri, vol. II, p. 164.

3° On the circular appearance of the sky of fixed stars; treaty mentioned in the Escorial list.

In the second book of his major commentary on the In his treatise on Heaven 2, Ibn-Roshd announces the intention, if God This allows him to compose a work on astronomy as it was in Aristotle's time, in order to destroy the theory of epicycles and eccentrics, and to make conto link astronomy with Aristotle's physics.

V. Grammar.

A book of what you need to know about nnmaire; mentioned in the Escorial list.
2° On the verb and the derived noun. (Ibid.)

VI. Medical works.

1° The major work entitled Culliyyât (generalities), from which Colliget 3 was derived; complete course of medicine in seven books. Books II, VI, VII, were combined by Jean Bruyerin Champier, under the title of Collectanea de re medica. The book De sanitate tuenda which can be found in Arabic at the Escorial (no. 879) is undoubtedly only the Book VI of the Colliget.

2° Commentary on Ibn-Sina's medical poem, called Ardjuza \ It is one of the most widespread works

1. Op. cit., p. 107.

2. Fol. 125 (ed. 1560). — Cf. Comment, in xn Metapk., f. 345 v0.— From Coelo, f. 124 v°, 125.

3. The etymology of this word was generally sought in colligo; hence the name Colleclorium sometimes given to this treatise (Bibl. nat., old fund, no. 6949).

4. That is to say, a poem written in the Rajaz meter, specially assigned of Averroes. He is mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and by the Escorial list, and is found in Arabic at the Escorial, in Oxford, in Leiden.

3° On Theriac; treatise mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and by the Escorial list. Ibn-Roschd quotes it himself (Colliget, 1. VII, c. n). It is found in Arabic at the Escorial (n° 879), and in Latin at the Arsenal (scienc. and arts, 61).

4° Average exposition or commentary on the Defebribus of Galen.

5° Exhibition on the three books De facultatibus na-Galen's turalibus.

6th Exposition on the seven books of Galen De morborum causis et symptomatibus \ These three comments are found in Arabic at the Escorial (no. 879).

7th Exhibition of the books of Galen Hspl at Layvwcecoç twv 7ï£770vGoTCûV TOTCtoV .

8. Exposition of Galen's book entitled in Arabic Istoukisâth (cTotyst'a). This is undoubtedly the IIspl twv aaO' 'l7;*rcoxpaT7]v gtoi/slcov.

9th Exposition of Galen's On Temperaments.

\ 0° Exhibition of the book Simple Medicines Galen.

11th Book Exhibition ©epaTueuTMtviç [/.eOoSou de Galen 2. All these comments on Galen are men-mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia and by the Escorial list.

\ 2° De temperamentorum differentiis, in Arabic to to didactic poems. The Middle Ages and the Renaissance translated this word by particular.

The text of Ibn-Abi-Oceibia only contains Itep'i oia^iuastoi;. M. de Gayangos, misled by a misreading, translated: Of the bloodletting.

2. Mr. de Gayangos, misled by a bad lesson, gives the title to Galen's book: On the Forms of Creation.

the Escorial (no. 879); probably identical to the De temperamento, mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia as an ou-a separate work from the exhibition on Galen's book which bears the same title.

3° Equal temperaments, mentioned in the list from the Escorial; undoubtedly opposed to Ilepl àvw[/,oc}.or SuaKpaGta; of Galen.

4° Of spermate. First printed in Latin in vol. XI of the 1560 edition; mentioned by the Escorial list.

5. Question about intermittent fever, mentioned by Ibn-Abi-Oceibia.

6° A book on putrid fevers, (iirf.)

M0 Treaties exchanged between Abu Bakr ibn Tufayl and Ibn-Roshd on the chapter of medicines, as he is found in his book entitled Cullijjât. (iic/.)

We still find in the manuscripts, in the col- medical readings of the Renaissance and in the libraries graphs, the Latin text or the indication of several treaties which bear the name of Averroes, but whose authenticity seems highly doubtful. Such are: De Fenenis, —De Concordia inter Aristotelem and Galenum of generation Sanguinis, — Hippocratis secreted y — Quœstio de convalescentia afebre1,' — Canones de medicinis laxativis*, — - De Sectis, — De Balneis%.

Six.

The limited fame that Ibn-Roshd enjoyed among the Muslims and the rapid decline of philosophical studies After his death, the Arabic copies of his

1. Wüstenfeld, p. 106.

2. National Library, old collection, no. 6949.

3. Antonio, Bibl. hisp. vêtus, t. II, p. 40t.

works spread very little and barely left Spain 1. The enormous destruction of manuscripts Arabs ordered by Ximenez (the number of books burned in the squares of Granada at eighty thousand) 2 completed the process of making the original text very rare works by the commentator. The manuscripts that we The remaining ones are almost all in Moroccan script. Casauwell, quoted by Huet, yet claims to have received some of his hands a manuscript brought from the East by Guillaume Possuch, and containing the commentary on the five parts of TOrganon, on Rhetoric and Poetics3. I confess that for a long time I considered the assertion to be suspect which the learned bishop of Avranches covers with his authority. How, I wondered? Would Postel have brought back From the East, a book that perhaps has never even entered it? Huet, having himself noticed that Scaliger deses- it was already feared that any Arabic manuscript of Aver- Roes is surprised that this learned man did not have con- birth of the Postel manuscript, his friend and his regular correspondent. Isn't this objection, in In effect, peremptory? The errors with which the treaty abounds De Interpretatione, when it comes to oriental versions tales, do they not allow us to call into question the te-Huet's testimony?... But after examining the

In the Florence manuscript, I saw some of my doubts confirmed.
dissipate. This manuscript, in fact, is exactly composed like the one Huet is talking about. The comment on

1. Freind had already made this remark [Hist. med., pars II", p. 254).

2. Gayandos, vol. 1, p. 9. In this regard, let us note that the precious
The Escurial collection is not, as one might believe, a remnant of the Arabs of Spain. It comes largely from Moroccan ships Cains captured in 1611. The fire of 1671 devoured nearly half of them.

3. De interpret.y 1. II. De claris interpretibus, p. 141 (Paris, 1680).

Rhetoric and Poetics are combined there with that of the Organon; but this combination is too characteristic for that Huet and Gasaubon had met him by chance. This it would not even be too bold a conjecture to suppose that the manuscript handled by Casaubon is the same one which today rests on the Laurentian plutei.

The Florence manuscript 1 contains the commentary means on the Organon as well as the paraphrases on the Rhetoric and Poetics, that is to say the whole com-complete commentaries on the logical works of Aristote2. My examination of this beautiful manuscript has not... revealed no significant differences with the Latin text, if it is not in the paraphrase of the Rhetoric and especially of Poetics. I have insisted elsewhere3 on the interest that-The publication of this para- would be a significant event for orientalists.
phrase. Of the two translations we have, that Hermann the German is completely unintelligible, and Abraham de Balmes' version is quite different from the text?
Hebrew translator having deleted or replaced with examples familiar to Jews, the Arabic quotations that Ibn-Roschd himself had substituted for the overly particular features Hellenic elements of the text.

The Escorial library is, with the Lauren-yours, the only one in Europe that owns some part of the Arabic text of the philosophical works of Ibn Rushd.

1.Ev. Assem. , Library. Palat. Medic. Codd. mss. orient., p. 32S, Cod. clxxx. — Mr. Wustenfeld [Gesckichte der arab. Aerzte, etc., p. 106) wrongly assumes that the Laurentian Library possesses a complete copy. complete commentaries of Ibn-Roshd.

2. Rhetoric and Poetics are always part of the logical works questions in the classification of Syrians and Arabs. Cf. Egger, Hist. of criticism among the Greeks, p. 155, 299-300; — Jourdaiii, Research, pp. 139 and 142.

3. Archives of scientific missions (July 1850).

No. 629 contains several pamphlets collected under the name From Prolegomena to Philosophy, and the important Treatise on the Demonstration of Religious Dogmas.
No. 646 contains the commentary on the Treatise on the Soul;
No. 879, a question on the intellect and the intelligible, and the complete catalogue of his works1. Hadji-Khalfa, at Regarding the Tehafot of Gazali, it has also preserved for us Arabic preface to the Tehafot-el-Tehafot of Ibn-Roshd2. Finally, we find some Arabic texts by Ibn Rushd, written in Hebrew characters for the use of Jews. Our The National Library possesses in this category an abridged version of the Organon, the average commentary on the Treatise of generation and corruption, on the Meteors, on the Treatise on the Soul, and the paraphrase of the Parva Naturalia2. The Bodleian Library possesses, in the of the same character, the comments on the treaties of the Sky, Generation and Meteors4.

The Arabic text of Ibn Rushd's medical works is less rare than that of his philosophical works. The Escorial possesses several manuscripts of its commentary. silence on Ibn-Sina's medical poem (nos. 799, 826, 858), his commentaries on Galen, his Treatise on the Theriac, perhaps even the Colliget. The library Bodleyen Library8 and the Leiden Library6 also possess

1. Casiri, t. I, p. 184, 193, 298-299. An old catalog of the Escurial, made in 4583, and published by Hottinger, indicates some other works that are not found in Casiri: two manuscripts of the com-Commentary on the Book of Heaven, and two manuscripts of the Colliget [Oriental Library, append.,p. 8, 9, 14, 15, 17, 18),

2. Lexicon. bibliogr. (cdit. Fluegel), t. II, p. A6Q et seq.

3. Munck, Dict. of themselves. pkil.,t. III, p. 164.

4. Uri, p. 86 (Codd. hebr.).

5. Uri, pars IIa, p. 128 and 261.

6. Catal. Bibl. Univ. Lugct. Bat. (Lugd. 1716), nos. 720, 721, 722. — several manuscripts of the commentary on the poem by Ibn-Sina.

While Ibn-Roshd's Arabic text is rare in our libraries, as well as the Hebrew versions of his works books abound there. The old collection of the Library nationale alone possesses nearly fifty manuscripts; that of Vienna, at least forty; the collection of the abbot de Rossi contained more than twenty-eight. After the Bible, There is perhaps no book that finds itself in a stronger state. proportion in collections of Hebrew manuscripts.

Averroes' Latin manuscripts are also very well-known breux, especially in funds that represent, like the Sorbonne collection, a major movement of studies scholastics; almost all of them are from the 14th century.

No part of Ibn Rushd's Arabic text has been able to be... bliée.

Two of his works, his Abridged Logic and His Abridged Physics appeared in Hebrew in Riva di Trento, in 4 560. Mr. Goldenthal published in Leipzig, in 842, the Hebrew translation of the commentary on the Rhetoric.

The Latin editions, partial or complete, of Averroes are literally countless. From the year 1480 to the year 580, to Hardly a year has gone by without the appearance of one New. Venice, for its part, has more than fifty. of which fourteen or fifteen are more or less complete1.

The Catal. mss. Angliæ et Hiberniez, Codd. Laudenses, no. 398, seems into display the Arabic text of the Colliget.

1. For a list of incunabula editions of Averroes, see Hain, Repert. bibliogr., under the articles Aristotle, Averroes; — Panzer, Annals typogr. , to the articles Padua and Venice; — Hoffmann, Lex. bibliogr., t. I, p. 316 et seq.; — Mittarelli, Bibl. Codd. mss. Michaelis

Padua, however, had the honor of the editio princeps.

In 1472, 1473, and 1474, the following appeared in this city: various treatises of Aristotle with the commentary of Averroès, Nobilis Vicentini Joannis Philippi Aureliani and fratrum impensa, opera vero atque ingenio Laurenti Canozii Lendenariensis.

In 1481, a paraphrase of the Poetics was published in Venice. with Alfarabi's glosses on Rhetoric[1]; in 1482, the Colliget and the De Substantia Orbis. In 1483 and 1484, a complete edition of Aristotle appeared accompanied Averroes's, in three volumes (very rare), by André d'Asolo[2]. In 1489, a second complete edition was published, in two or three volumes, folio Gothic, by Bernardino de Tridino[3]. From then on, the editions followed one another year after year year without interruption. The years 1495, 1496, 1497 and 1500 saw the publication of further editions or less complete; Aristotle will no longer appear in Venice without being accompanied by his interpreter. André d'Asolo, Octavien Scot, Comino de Tridino, Jean Gryphius, and especially the Juntas, followed up with the editions with incredible speed throughout the 16th century. The most widespread and best edition is that of Juntas of 1553. The last complete edition is that of 1,574.

Venet. prope Murianum, append. , col. 25-28 and 32; —Antonio, Bill, hisp. dressed, t. II, p. 397-401; — Fabricius, Bill, grœca, t. III, p. 211 and following. ; — Wustenfeld, Geschichte der arab. Aerzte, p. 105-108; - And an extended bibliographical note, added by Mr. Daremberg to the article of Averroes, in the reprint of the Universal Biography (1843).

[1] This edition is located at the National Library.

[2] The National Library possesses a magnificent copy on vellum, which It belonged to Wladislaus II, King of Bohemia and Hungary. Cf. Van Praët, Catal. des livres sur vélin, t. III, nos. 8 and 9. — Brunet, Manuel du libr.y t. I, p. 177 (4th ed.).

[3] This edition can be found at the Arsenal Library.

Although Venice had, so to speak, acquired the monocenter of Averroes' works, some other cities however-and saw separate editions of his works published medical and even his philosophical treatises. Thus BoIogne (1501, 4523, 1580), Rome (1521, 1539), Pavia (1,507, 1,520), Strasbourg (1,503, 1,531), Naples (1,570, 1574), Geneva (1608). Lyon also had its edition complete, at Scipion de Fabiano's (1524, in-80)[1], and numerous partial editions (1517, 1531, 1537, 1542).

At the end of the 16th century, editions became more even rarer; only a few medical treatises persist still trying to advertise. In the 17th century, these countless volumes are buried forever in dust and oblivion.

1. This edition, the only complete one that has appeared in France, is very rare.
I have only seen one copy, in a provincial library.

CHAPTER II.

DOCTRINE OF AVERKOÈS.

s.

Seeing the name of Averroes constantly come up in the history of philosophy, one would be inclined to consider it like one of those great founders of systems, who have rallied around an original doctrine a long family of thinkers. Or a more extensive knowledge Arab philosophy leads to this result, apparently singular rence, that the system designated in the Middle Ages and in the Renaissance under the name of Averroism, is only the set of doctrines common to the Peripatetics Arabs, and that this designation truly contains a misinterpretation, almost as if one were referring to it by name of Themistianism or Simplicianism', the whole Peripatetic studies from the Alexandrian school. The history-Literary history may not offer an example of man whose character had been more altered by the renamed, by the lack of criticism and the distance of the times. Remained the only one in sight as a representative of the In Arabic philosophy, he had the fortune of the latecomers.
and was considered the inventor of doctrines he had not the fact that it exposes in a more complete way than its predecessors.

It is not only the doctrine of Ibn Rushd, considered In itself, it lacks originality. Although Ibn-Roshd never aspired to any glory other than that of com-This apparent modesty should not fool us.
to create an illusion: the human mind always knows how to claim its independence. Link it to a text, it will know how to re-to find his freedom in the interpretation of this text: he will distort rather than renounce the most inalienable of his rights, the original exercise of his thought. Under the pretext to comment on Aristotle, the Arabs; like the Scholasticstics, have managed to create a philosophy full of elements natives, and certainly very different from that which was taught at the Lycée. But this originality is not acknowledged; in Ibn-Roshd's eyes, science is complete, All that remains is to facilitate its acquisition. It is not necessary Furthermore, one should not be under any illusions about the importance that among the Arabs the men specially called philosophers. Philosophy was only one episode in The history of the Arab spirit[1]. The true movement The philosophical understanding of Islamism must be sought in the... Theological sects: Qadarites, Jabarians, Sifatites Motazelites, Batenites, Talimites, Ash'arites, and especially in Kaldm. But Muslims have never considered to give this order of discussions the name of philosophy (Jîlsafet). This name does not designate research among them. of truth in general, but a sect, a particular schoolGreek philosophy and those who study it. When We will study the history of Arabic philosophy; it will be very important. It is important not to be misled by this ambiguity. What is called Arab philosophy is only one section very limited and among the least interesting of the movement philosophical within Islamism, to such an extent that MuslimsThey themselves are almost unaware of its existence. Gazali

i. MH Ritter very clearly perceived this fundamental characteristic. See Gesch. der Christ. Phil., III Th., XI Buch, I Kap. and his dissertation, Ueber unsere Kenntniss der arab. Phil. (Goett., 1844). — Cf. Th. Haarbriicker, preface later. by Shahristani, p. seen. — ■ De Hammer, Literaturgeschichte der Arabertl Abth. , I Band , S. lxxxi.

presented as evidence of his inquisitive mind, for having wanted to know about this rarity. "I have not seen," he said, no doctor who has given any attention to this study[1]. The Arabs have imprinted their national character to their religious creations, to their poetry, to their architecture tecture, to their theological sects, as much as they have shown little originality in their attempt to continue the phiGreek philosophy. Let's just say that it's only through a very disappointing ambiguity, that one applies the name from Arabic philosophy to a body of work betweentaken as a reaction against Arabism, in the parts of the Muslim empire furthest from the peninsula, Samarkand, Bukhara, Cordoba, Morocco. This philosophyphie is written in Arabic, because that language was decame the learned and sacred language of all Muslim countries mans; that's all. The true Arab genius, characterized through the poetry of the Mu'allakat and the eloquence of the Quran, was absolutely antipathetic to Greek philosophy.

Confined, like all Semitic peoples, within the a narrow circle of lyricism and prophecy, the inhabitants people from the Arabian Peninsula never had the slightest idea of what might be called science or rationalism. It is when the Persian spirit, represented by the dynasty of Abbasids prevailed over the Arab spirit, which the philoso-Greek philosophy penetrated Islam. Thus, it was in Baghdad, the quintessential Abbasid city, which is the center of this a new movement; they are Christian Syrians and affiliates of magic, who are its instigators and the instruments. He is a caliph, an eminent representative and Almamoun, passionate about the Persian reaction, who there presides. Raised by the Barmekids, who were considered

1. Treatise translated by M. Sclimoelders, pp. 27-28.

attached to ancient Persianism, we see him throughout his life re-curiously look outside of Islamism for the enrationalist teachings from India, Persia, and the Greece1. Although subjugated by a Semitic religion, Persia was able to maintain its rights as an Indo-European nation.
European, and to create an epic, a mythology, a philosophy. The Abbasid attempt recalls in many respects the movement that carried the Germanic peoples, converted to Christianity, to seek-dear to Greece their philosophical and literary inspiration rary. But external causes stopped this developmentslature, and that's why philosophy is always remaining among Muslims a foreign intrusion an aborted experiment with no consequences for education in-cultural peoples of the East.

If you compare the doctrine contained in the writings dlbn-Roschd with that of Aristotle, we recognize from the pre-firstly the serious alterations suffered by the peripate-ism between these two extremes. But if we want determine the point at which the new element was introduced, who transformed one philosophy into another, the question becomes very delicate. Ibn Rushd's theories do not differ-differ in no essential characteristic from those of Ibn-Bâdja and Ibn-Tofaïl, who for their part only to continue, in Spain, the series of studies that Ibn-Sina, Alfarabi and Alkindi had founded their foundations in the East. Alkindi himself, whom we usually consider as the founder-dating from Arab philosophy, it appears to have no right to the title of creator. His doctrine is only one echoing that of the Syrians, who themselves directly to the Greek commentators of Alexandria.

1. Gustav Weil, Geschichte der Chalifen, II Band, S. 253 ff. (Mannheim, 1848).

Between these and Alexander of Aphrodisias, between this last-according to Theophrastus, there is no innovation ininstantaneous. However, one can say that the origin of the Arabic philosophy, as well as scholasticism, must be sought in this movement which carries the sesecond generation of the Alexandrian school towards the peripa-Porphyry is already more Peripatetic than Platotonic, and it is not without reason that the Orient and the In the Middle Ages, they considered it as a necessary introducer. saire to the philosophical encyclopedia. Porphyry posed the first stone of Arabic philosophy and of phi-Scholastic philosophy. Maximus, Julian's teacher, Proclus and Damascius are almost Peripatetics. In the school of Ammonius, son of Hermias, Aristotle takes definitively takes first place and dethrones Plato. The commentators Themistius, Syrianus? David the ArMenian, Simplicius, John Philoponus report the advent-The shift from Peripateticism to universal domination. is the decisive moment when philosophical authority is established established for more than ten centuries.

It is on this peripatetic extension of the school from Alexandria that we must look for the point of junction of Arab philosophy alongside Greek philosophy. reasons that are usually given for the preference The claims made by the Arabs to Aristotle are more specious. that were real. There was no preference, because there was no They had no choice. The Arabs accepted the culture Greek as it was handed down to them. The books that the most accurate expression of this transition are the apo-Aristotle's Theology, which one might believe composed by an Arab, and this book De Causis, of which the

Cf. Ravaisson, Essai sur la métapli. cPArist., t. II, p. 540. ■- Vacherot, Iiist. crit. de l'école d'Alex. , t. II, 1. III , chap. vu.

The indecisive nature of the character kept all of scholasticism in suspense. Arab philosophy always retained the imprint of This origin: the influence of the Alexandrians is evident in it. every step. Although Plotinus remained unknown to

Muslims1, nothing resembles the doctrine of Enneads such as a page from Ibn-Bâdja, from Ibn-Roschd, of Ibn-Gabirol (Avicebron). It is true that influences those coming from the East were able to combine with those from A-Alexandria; there can be no doubt that Sufism, originally from India, naturalized in Persia before Islam, did not played a part in the formation of theories of union with active intellect and final absorption 2. That is the very nature of mysticism is to simultaneously border on rationalism and the principle of faith, and to lend the sometimes leaning towards the most absolute rationalism, sometimes towards the
the most intemperate superstition.

Thus, Arab philosophy appears to us, from its earliest stages... first manifestations, endowed with all its essential characteristics tils. The titles that alone remain to us of Al-'s works kindi (9th century), relating to the intellect, are sufficient for to prove that he already held this fundamental view, the theories which later gained such prominence in schools of great importance. In Alfarabi (10th century), these documents trines are already almost as developed as in the

1. M. Vacherot [Eut', de Vcc. d'Alex., t. III, p. 100] thinks that Plotin had to be translated into Arabic. But we have the information.
more accurate information on the Greek authors who have been translated into that language Plotinus does not appear there. M. Haarbrücker (trans. of Schahrist., t. II, p. 192, 429) thinks, it is true, that the author called by Shahristani the Master Greek [al-scheick al-Yauaanï] is none other than Plotinus. But whatever the au-Having been thus designated, it is certain that Shahristani only knew him through very incomplete extracts.

2. Notices and Extracts, vol. XII, p. 289 et seq. — See on Sufism the works of Tholuck, de Sacy, de Hammer, Allioli [Mém. ae VAcad. of Bavaria, vol. XII), writings of Ibn Rushd. The mystical theories that soon Ibn-Bâdja will explain in his Regime of the Solitary, re-They are all found in Alfarabi. The end of man is to enter into an increasingly close union with Reason (the active intellect). Man is a prophet from the beginning.

that every veil has fallen between him and that intellect. One Such bliss can only be attained in this life:
The perfect man finds his reward here below in his its own perfection; all that is said to be beyond is not that fable 1. But it is in Ibn-Sina (Avicenna) that he we must seek the most complete expression of phi-Arabic philosophy. God being absolute unity, cannot to have an immediate effect on the world. It acts on the first sphere, and from there its action is communicated to

All of nature through planetary intelligences. God does not enter into the flow of particular things: At the center of the wheel, it allows the periphery to roll as it pleases. The perfection of the rational soul is to become the middle direction of the universe; she achieves this through internal purification laughter and moral perfection, which prepare the vase where the divine intellect must spread. Yet it is men who need neither study nor asceticism ism to receive the illumination of the intellect. These favors- The prophets are God's laughingstock. In general, Ibn-Sina appears to philosophize with a certain restraint. Ibn Rushd himself bitterly criticizes him for not knowing how to take a side. and to always maintain a middle ground between theologians and the philosophers 2. 11 admit that human personality

4. See Dict. des sc.phil., art. Farabi, and in general the excellent Articles on Arabic philosophy that Mr. Munck has included in this collection. Mr. Ritter's overviews [Gesch. of Christ, Phil., III Th., XI Buch, I Kap.) are also full of accuracy.

2. Phys., 1. II, f. 27 (ed. 1553).

preserves after death; and he seeks to stop on the way of pantheism, by placing the world in the category of the possible. This distinction between the possible and the necessary-Saire is the core of Ibn-Sina's theory, and the basis for which he seeks to establish the divine personality. Ibn-Roschd adds, however, that, following others, Ibn-Sina did not admit the existence of any separate substance, and that his true opinion on God and the eternity of the world, it was to be sought in Eastern Philosophy, where it identified God with the universe

It was primarily against Ibn-Sina that Ghazali directed his Destruction of philosophers. Gazali is, without con-Tredit, the most original mind of the Arab school. He... left, in a curious book2, his philosophical confessions sophists, and the account of his journey through the different systems of its time. No system Having satisfied him, he concluded to skepticism; the skeptic-Since asceticism could not restrain him, he plunged into asceticism. ism, and seeks in the mystical dances of the Sufis the dizziness of his thoughts. There he stops in death and annihilation. Those who, after having philosophized, embrace mysticism out of desperation, are usually the most intolerant enemies of philosophy Sophie. Gazali, having become a Sufi, undertook to prove the impos-radical power of reason, and, by a maneuver which has always appealed to minds more ardent than wise, to found religion on skepticism. He deployed in

1. Destr. Destr., disput. X, fine sub. — Ibn-Tofaïl, P/»7. self-taught. proœm.
— Roger Bacon was aware of the existence of this Eastern philosophy, and the also gives it as the expression of Avicenna's last thought [Opus Majus,-p. 46, ed. Jebb).

2. Published by M. Schmœlders, in his Essay on Philosophical Schools.
the Arabs. Mr. de Pallia had provided an analysis of them [Memoirs of the Academy of Moral and political sciences, foreign scholars, vol. I, p. 165 et seq.).

This struggle demonstrates a truly astonishing perspicacity of mind.
It is primarily through the critique of the principle of causality that he opened his attack against rationalism. Hume did not Nothing more was said. We only perceive simultaneity.
Causality is never anything other than...
God's will causing two things to follow each other - Certainly. The laws of nature are not, or do not ex-
They take precedence over a habitual fact; God alone is immutable.
This, as we can see, was the negation of all science. Gazali was one of those strange minds who do not embrace religion gion as a way of defying reason.
Moreover, unfavorable rumors circulated about his integrity. of his feelings. Ibn-Roshd claims that he attacked the philosophy to appease theologians, and dismiss the suspicions that had arisen against his orthodoxy1.
Moïse de Narbonne maintains that he had composed for his friends a small secret note in which he gave the solution to the objections that he had presented to the public as insolubles2. Ibn-Tofaïl points out his perpetual contradictions-tions, and clearly proves that he had composed esoteric works, in which he professed very strong doctrines different from those he threw at the common people. "Accept
"What you see," he said, "and leave aside what you have heard;
When the sun rises, it spares you the need to contemplate Saturn III.

Gazali exerted a decisive influence on philosophy Arab. His attacks produced the usual effect of contradictions, and introduced into public opinion adversaries a precision hitherto unknown. Ibn-Bâdja (Avempace) was the first to attempt to "rehabilitate"

1. Destr. Destr., prol. and dispute. 111% f. 84 (cl. 1560).

2. Delitzsch, Datai. Codd. Hebr. Bibl. Lips., No. 26.

3. Pococko, Philos, auto didac tus, proœm., p. 19, ff.

Against him, the authority of reason had humiliated Gazali. science, and claimed that man does not attain perfection than by renouncing the exercise of his rational faculties. Ibn-Bâdja, in his famous treatise On the Regime of the Solitary, tried to prove that it is through science and development- It is through the successive development of his faculties that man arrives at to identify with the active intellect. He added a theory to this. politics, a kind of utopia or ideal model of so- society through which man would arrive at this identification. The triumph of the rational soul over the animal part is the goal of the efforts of moral life. The act of the intellect- connection is made through the intelligible forms that arrive to the material or passive intellect; there, they receive from The intellect activates form and reality. When man, through study and speculation, has arrived at full possession session of his consciousness, then it is acquired intellect; the The cycle of human evolution is complete, and man has no Nothing left but to die.

This noble and elevated rationalism is also the foundation of the The doctrine of Ibn-Tufayl (the Abubacer of the Scholastics). His novel by Ha/Ibn-Iokdhan, a sort of psychological Robinson gique, published by Pococke, under the title: Philosophus autodidactus aims to show how the fa- human cults arrive at order through their own strength supernatural and union with God. Yl Autodidact is a a mystical peripatetic in the Alexandrian style. There is such a passage which seems to be a literal translation from Iamblichus. Of all the monuments of Arab philosophy, it is perhaps the only one that can offer us something other than a historical interest. From this came the singular fortune of This text, translated into English, Dutch, and German, and adopted by the Quakers as a book of edification.

Thus philosophy, exhausted in the East, resumes a a new brilliance in Muslim Spain by Ibn-Bâdja and Ibn-Tufayl, but at the same time imbued it with a a much more pronounced tinge of mysticism. Before these great men, it is true, the Peripatetic pantheism had had in Spain an illustrious representative, whose existence tence remained an enigma, and for the scholastics who

They quote him on every page, and for modern criticism which, Until recent years, it had been unable to break through the mystery surrounding it. Mr. Munck1 has rendered an eminent service to the history of philosophy, by demonstrating that this Avicebron, who played such a large role in the phi-
The Christian philosophy of the Middle Ages was none other than the Solomon ben Gabirol2, a Jewish man from Malaga, renowned in the synagogue as a hymnographer3, and especially in discovering-donating the Hebrew translation to the National Library and the Latin translation of the Source of Life. But Ibn-Gabirol does not appear to have exerted any influence on the nor even on that of Arab philosophy of his time, his fellow believers.

§11.

Arab philosophy presents itself to us with the characteristic... a fairly uniform type. Among all philosophers sophists whose succession we have just shown (Gazali (Except for one exception), the method is the same, the authority is the same.
the doctrine differs only in degree or degree advanced stage of its development. It is in the religious sects

1'. Literaturblatt des Orients, 1846, no. 46 (Leipzig).

2. The very transcription of the name is not outside the realm of analogies: Ibn-Gabirol, Aben-Gcbrol, Avicebron, like Ibn-Sina, Aben-Sina, Avipenny.

3. Cf. Ewald and Dukes, Beitràge zur Gesch. (1st item. Auslegung der Alt. Test., art. Ibn-Gabirol. — Ad. Jellinek, lieitràgc zur Gescliichte der Kabbala (Leipz., 1852), p. 26.

gloomy exits from Islamism that we must seek the
the variety, individuality and true genius of the Arabs*.
Barely a century had passed since the death of the Pro-Phetius, that already the dispute was beginning to undermine the dogma that he had founded. Freedom and predestination were the first object on which the need for activity was exercised theological. The Kadarites (supporters of freedom) and The Djabariles (predestinarians) maintained on this eternal battlefield, the long war of texts; and of the reason. The attributes of God were the second brandon of discord. The extreme rigor of monotheism which reigns in the Quran, the constant attention to fighting the Christian dogma of the Trinity and the Incarnation, to to repeat endlessly: God has no son, God has no Mother, God does not beget, God is not begotten.
This made people think a lot about it. Some (Moattils) denying God any positive and susceptible of being related to creatures, made it a being abstract, about which nothing could be asserted. In general philosophers and philosophical sects, by contrastion to the distinct hypostases of the God of Christians, denied the eternal and distinct attributes of essence divine, while the Sifatites (supporters of the attributes), The Teschbihites (assimilizers) made God in the image of man and were spread across the different degrees of anthropomorphism. The Ash'arites strove to

1. On Muslim sects, see. Pococke, Hist. specimen. Arabum (ed. White, Oxford, 1806), p. 17 of the text, 208 et seq. of the notes; — Schahristani, Book of religious and pJiilosophical sects, published in Arabic by M.W. Cureton (London, 1846), and translated by M. Haarbrücker (Halle, 1850-1851); — Hadji-Khalfa, introduction to his Lexicon bibliographical references, vol. 1, p. 64 et seq. (ed. Fluegel); and the work of Mr. Scbmœlders, who however must be consulted with great care serve.

to unite the doctrines of the Jabarians and the Sifatites, with some restrictions to avoid falling into the fatalism-absolute secularism and materialistic anthropomorphism. For The Hashwaites, on the contrary, believe that God is a corporel, inhabitant of a specific place. He is sitting on a throne, it has feet and hands, etc.

In the face of this intemperate dogmatism, skepticism expressed itself in endlessly varied sects. The Somanites rejected all knowledge acquired through speculation, and only admitted what could be touched and seen: They were considered bad believers. The Talimites, by another kind of skepticism, which formed the basis of the certainty of conscience based on the authority of an infallible man, the imam. They are almost indistinguishable from the Batenians, Muslim Kabbalists, who seek the truth in the letters and numbers *.

Finally, even the most openly admitted incredulity itself formed sects within Islamism: Rarmathes, Fatimites, Ismailis, Dualists, Druze, Hashishchins, Hernanites, Zendiks, secret sects, with double-dealing, combining fanaticism with disbelief, license with enthusiasm religious siasis, the boldness of the freethinker to the su-
The persistence of the initiate and the indifference of the quietist. Such is indeed the bizarre nature of Muslim unbelief mane. She wavers undecided between the religious sect and the secret society, and hides the most revolting immorality, the most frenzied impiety, under the veil of initiation:

To believe nothing and to allow oneself everything, that is his formula.
Moreover, the vague nature of these various names does not allow us to clearly highlight the nuance. Thus The infamous sects were lumped together under the name Zendik.

1. De Sacy, Chrest. or., t. II, p. 2o0.

and communists, outings from Bardesane, Mazdak, the Manichaeism, and the freethinkers (ahl eUlahkikj les people of V (evidence), who only believed what is proven. The people make little distinction between di-various classes of unbelievers. Sometimes even they were attached-the Zendiks are devoted to magic, to Sabaism, that is to say to idolatry1.

Such were the bizarre products of this great a ferment in which all the elements of Islamism floated From the 11th to the 5th century AH. A liberal theology and rationalist, that of the Motazelites (dissidents) rallied For a time, moderate minds were at play. Motazelism represented... felt in Islam as a nuanced form of Protestantism by Schleiermacher. Revelation is a natural product human faculties; the doctrines necessary for salvation are a matter of reason: reason is sufficient to address them to lead, and at all times, even before the revelation, one was able to get to know them. The school of Basra was, under the protection of the Abbasids, the center of this great reform movement, the most com-The complete text can be found in the great Encyclopedia of Brothers of sincerity (ilkh wan-el-safci), attempt to reconciliation between philosophy and Islamism, which does not
It seemed to satisfy neither the philosophers nor the devout.

Thus, apart from the study of Greek philosophy, Islamism provided a vast field of rational discussions, grouped under the name of Kalam, roughly synonymous with our theology

1. Cf. de Sacy, Exposition de la religion des Druzes, passim; — Chrest.
Arabic, vol. I, p. 306, vol. II, p. 96, 191, 203 et seq.; — Translation of the history. of the Sassanids, from Mirkhond, p. 361 et seq. See also Asian Journal.
Oct. 1850, p. 314, and an interesting lesson by Mr. Lenormant on the in-Credulity within Islamism (Historical questions, lesson XVIII).

scholastic1. The Ralâm, whose existence predates the introduction of Greek philosophy among Muslims mans under Almamoun, initially represented no system- particular theme. But when the favor shown to this philosophy would have jeopardized the dogmas of Islamism. the role of the Ralâm changed, and now consisted of de- to cleave apart the attacked dogmas with the same weapons, to a small extent close to our own theology, of dogmatic what it was at first, has become primarily apologetic2. The main goal of the Motecallemîn is to establish against The philosophers, the creation of matter, the novelty of the world and the existence of a free God, separate from the world and acting upon the world. The system of atoms seemed to them favorable to the controversy they wanted to stir up. hold; they chose it. The atoms, they said, have been created by God; God could destroy them, and endlessly He creates new ones. God acts freely and directly. ment in all things; all that is is immediate- his work. Negative deprivations or accidents (such as darkness, ignorance, etc.) are even pro- produced by God in the substance that supports them, all

1. Kalâm represents in Arabic all the nuances of the word X6yoç. On For the origin and precise meaning of this word, see J. Goldenthal, in the Memoirs res of the Acad. of Vienna, t. I, 1850, p. 432. — Delitzsch, Anehdota zur Geschichte der mittelalt. Scholastic unter Juden uud Moslemen, p. 292, next. — Schmœelders, Essay, p. 138-139. — Haarbrücker, Trad. of Schahrîstani, vol. II, notes, p. 390 et seq. Motecallem (derived participle) (from the same root) designates the dogmatic theologian, as opposed to aufaquih, casuist theologian. The word QeoX6yoi, in Aristotle (Metaph., 1. XII, chap. vi), was |rendered in the Arabic version used by Ibn-Roschd by Motecallemîn.

2. Here is the definition that the Tarifat gives of Kalam: “A science in which one discusses the essence of God, his attributes, and the conditions tions of possible things, according to the canon of Islam, to refute the "Metaphysics of the philosophers." (Kdit. Fluegel, p. 194, Lips. 1845.)

like positive accidents1. Thus, God creates death, God creates rest, just as he creates life, just as he creates movement. The soul itself is but an accident. that God continues endlessly. Causality is not in the laws of nature; God alone is the cause. Two facts do not are never necessarily linked to one another, and the entire universe could be completely different from what it is is not. Such is the system that the Motecallemîn found- rent the best to oppose to the peripateticism of the philosophers Phes: a very poor system indeed, like all those which are designed to serve the needs of controversy, but recommended by that deceptive air of clarity which is seductive the vulgar. It is against this system that we will see Ibn Rushd, Maimonides and the later representatives of Arab philosophy, attempting a supreme, but impotent-effortless, $ni.

This credit must be given to Arab philosophy. that she was able to boldly and perceptively identify major problems of Peripateticism, and to pursue the solution with vigor. In this, it seems to me super-laughable at our medieval philosophy, which tended always downplaying problems and taking them by the dialectical and subtle side.

However, the entire spirit of Arab philosophy, and consequently- The entirety of Averroism can be summarized in two doctrines, or, as the Middle Ages used to say, in two major errors, intimately linked to each other and constituting an interpretation Complete and original interpretation of Peripateticism: Eternity of matter and the theory of the intellect. The philosophy of Philosophy has only ever proposed two hypotheses to explain- to understand the system of the universe: — on one side, a free God, personnel, having attributes that determine it; providence; causality of the universe transferred to God; human soul substantial and immortal; — on the other hand, matter eternal, evolution of the seed through its latent force, God indeterminate; law, nature, necessity, reason; impos- the nature of intelligence, the emergence and reabsorption of the in- Divided. The first hypothesis is based on an idea that is too The second, an exalted view of individuality; the second, based on a view that is too exclusive of the whole. Arab philosophy, and in part-particularly that of Ibn-Roshd, is classified in the manner more decisive in the second of these categories.

---

1. The Mu'tazelites, whom Ibn Rushd always equates with the Mu'takallimun, they even regarded deprivation as a substance. Cf. Destr. Dcstr., disput. III, p. 119 v°.

The problem of the origin of beings is the one that Ibn-Roshd is the one who most preoccupies him: he returns to it in all his written, and always with renewed insistence. But Nowhere has it been treated with more development that in the great commentary on the twelfth book of metaphysics. "There is," he said, "on the origin of to be two opposing opinions, between which there is other intermediaries: some hold for the development, the others for creation. The parties- Without development, they say that the generation is not that the exit and in a way the doubling of beings; the agent, in this hypothesis, has no other function than to draw beings apart from one another, to distinguish themwar 1; it is therefore evident that its functions are reduced to those of the engine. As for the proponents of creation, They say that the agent produces the being, without it needing for this, from a pre-existing material. That's the opinion

1. Cf. Metaph.,l.XII, f. 344 v.

Motecallemîn of our religion and that of the Christians For example, John the Christian (John Philoponus), who claims that the possibility of the created being resides only in the agent. As for the intermediate opinions, they are reduced to two; but the first one in turn admits two rather different nuances. These opinions agree One point is that generation is only one transmutation of substance, which every generation supposes a question, and nothing is generated except of his fellow man. In the first of these opinions, the agent creates the shape and prints this shape onto a existing material. Among the proponents of this view, Some completely separate the agent from the matter, and call him the giver of forms: that is the opinion of Ibn-Sina1; others maintain that the agent is tanearly not separated from matter, as when fire inbegets fire, or that man begets man; sometimes separated, as happens in the generation of animals and plants, which are born from dissimilarity: That is the opinion of Themistius, and perhaps of Alfarabi. The third opinion is that of Aristotle, and consists of to say that the agent simultaneously makes the compound of the matter and form, giving movement to the matter and transforming it until all of this who was potentially there takes action. In this opinion In nion, the agent merely brings to fruition what was already in power, and to achieve the union of matter and of form. All creation is thus reduced to a movement. whose principle is heat. This heat, spread in water and in the earth, gives birth to animals and plants, which do not grow from a seed. Nature

1. See Destr. Destr., depart ai., disp. III, f. 350 v°.

produced all this with order and perfection, although she either devoid of intelligence, as if she were guided by a superior intelligence. These proportions and this productive energy, which the movements of the sun and the stars give to the elements, are what Plato calls-milk the ideas. In Aristotle's opinion, the agent does not create no form; for if he created one, something might to emerge from nothingness. This is the false imagination according to the-which we represent to ourselves the forms as created, which has led some philosophers to believe that forms are something real, and that there is a donor of the for-my; it is the same opinion that led the theologians of three religions that exist today, to say that something Something can come from nothing.1 Based on this principle, the Theologians of our religion have assumed a single agent producing all beings without intermediary, and of which Faction is exerted simultaneously by an infinite number of people. of opposing and contradictory actions. In this scenario, Fire no longer burns, water no longer moistens; everything is in need of a special and direct creation. Even more so, when a A man throws a stone; they claim that the movement-ment does not belong to man, but to the universal agent salt2. They thus destroy human activity. But here an even more surprising doctrine. If God can do to pass something from non-being to being, it can of even to make it pass from being to non-being: destruction, like generation, is the work of God; death is a creation of God. For us, on the contrary, des-Instruction is an act of the same nature as generation. Every being that is created carries within it corruption in its power. sance. To destroy, as to create, the agent has no

4. Cf. De Cœlo and Mundo, f. 197.

5, Cf. Destr. Destr., depart ai., disput. I.

than to translate power into action. Thus, it is necessary to maintain to hold power and agent in relation to each other. If If one were missing, nothing would be, or everything would be in Act: two equally absurd consequences.

The entire doctrine of Ibn Rushd, the very core of his The controversy against the Motecallemîn is contained in this A crucial step. Generation is merely a movement. Every movement presupposes a subject. This unique subject, this universal possibility, it is the raw material, endowed receptive, but devoid of any positive qualities, also suitable to receive contrary modifications1.

This raw material is not subject to any name nor any definition. It is merely the simple possibility-eternity. Every substance is thus eternal by virtue of its matter, that is to say, by its power of being. To say that a thing is generated from absolute non-being to being, that is to say that she possesses a disposition that she has never had before. Matter was not created, and it is incorruptible. tible3. The series of generations is infinite a parte ante And as an aside, postk': everything that is possible will be done. otherwise there would be something idle in the universe 8, then, in the midst of eternity, there is no laughter of difference between what is possible and what is*. Order did not precede disorder, nor did disorder... The order preceded the movement. The movement did not precede the rest.

1. Zimara interprets Averroes' thought thus: Materia est una secundum subjectum, et multa secundum potentias et habilitâtes ad recipiendum formas contrarias [Solut. contrad., f. 62, ed. 1560).

2. I, Phys., f. 18. — VIII, Phys., f. 155.

3. I, Phys., f. 22. — VIII, Phys., f. 194. —XII, Metaph., f. 34) v! — From Subst. Orbls, cap. iv, f. 324 v°, 325.

4. VIII, Phys., f. 176etsqq.

5. VIII, Phys., f. 184.

6. III, Phys. , f. 47.

Neither rest nor movement. Movement is eternal and continuous; for every movement has its cause in a movement previous movement 1. Moreover, time only exists through movement. We only measure time by the changes of state that we observe within ourselves. If the movement of the universe stopped, we would cease to exist. to measure time, that is to say we would lose the feeling of successive life and of being. One does not measure the time during sleep than by the movements-elements of the imagination; when sleep is very-probottom, and that the movement of the imagination dies out Completely, the awareness of time disappears. The softclothing alone constitutes a before and after in the duration. Thus, without movement there would be no successive evolution, that is to say that nothing would be 2.

From this it follows that the motor does not act freely. as the Motecallemîn claim. Ibn-Sina, who made so many concessions, imagined, for their comto please, his classification of the possible and the necessary. He places the world in the category of the possible, and assumes that it could have been different than it is. But how? to call possible that whose cause is necessary and to eter-

What? Freedom presupposes novelty; but God has not of a new reason for being.3 The world could not have been nor greater or lesser than it is; for only whim

---

1. VIII, Phys., f. 155-157. — De Cœlo, f. 197.— Epitome Metaph., leaflet. IV, f. 398. — ■ De Subst. Orbis, cap. iv, f. 324 v. — Cf. Arist., Metaph. A, p. 246 (ed. Brandis).

2. IV, Pliys., f. 82 v° et seqq. — This passage is one of the most ingenious by Ibn Rushd. In it, he develops views on sleep that are absolutely seblables to that of Dugald-Stewart.

3. “Impossibile est quod actio nova fiât per voluntatem antiquam. » (VIII, Phys., f. 159.) Cf. Destr. Deslr. dispute. I, f. 21, and leave. , disp.I, f.333 v°.

would have determined one measure rather than another.1 The Chance is only rarely an efficient cause and by accident. tooth. However, one would be much more willing to attributing to chance the events of this world that all the order of the celestial bodies; therefore Aristotle deals more severely Democritus and those who support the pre-first feeling that the supporters of the second2. God, by Consequently, it only knows the general laws of the universe. towards; it deals with the species and not the individual3; because If he knew the individual, there would be innovation perpetuelle in its being. Besides, if God governed immediately, the evil of the universe would be his work vre; or else it would be necessary to grant it the power to rea-to read the impossible, which would be to admit the principle of Sophists4. The only reverential opinion towards God is therefore the one that reduces its providence to being only the The general reason for things. In this hypothesis, everything That which is good in the world is attributable to him. since he willed it; evil, on the contrary, is not his work, but the fatal consequence of the material contra-laughing at his designs.

So far, Ibn Rushd seems to me to be merely an interpreter faithful and intelligent interpretation of Aristotle's thought, expressed on-all in the first and fifth books of Physics and in the twelfth of Metaphysics. Being, for Aristotle, being composed

---

1. De Cœlo et Mundo, f. 119 v.

2.. Expos, media in Phys., f. 202 v° et sqq.
s 3. Destr. Destr., disput. XI and XIII. – XII, Metaph., comm. 37.

4. Epit. Metaph., tract. IV, f. 399 v° (ed. 1560). —Destr. Destr., disput. I, f. 341 v°.

5. In the Destruction of Destruction (dispute III, f. 101v°, 102), Ibn Rushd speaks of Providence in a vulgar manner, and with a a pompous use of language that is not typical of him; but this place seems to have been severely altered by the translator.

of an indeterminate element (matter) and an element Determinative (form), matter becomes infinite. the permanent foundation of all things. Matter is the possible, and the possible is eternal. Assuredly the this form of reasoning was open to attack, and it was not The Motecallemîn were not wrong to reply: Your The mistake is to consider possibility as a thing real. Possibility has no subsistence; it is a a pure conception of our mind, without any reality2. This was peremptory against the somewhat crude expression the series of Aristotelian theory, but did not undermine the profound truth that served as the basis for this theory, to to know the eternal identity of the permanent foundation of things, on the surface of which the ever-oscillating lines unfold lantes and variables of individuality.

§IV.

The extreme simplicity with which we design the invisible world, has made it impossible for us to to get an idea of the system, which is much more complicated than found in religions and philosophies of antiquity. Aeons, genii, sephiroth, demiurge, metatron, etc., all have disappeared, since the ruthless Occam put the gods to flight with his scolas- axiom Tick: We must not multiply beings without reason.

Arab philosophy is far from being so restrained. One The numerous hierarchies occupy the entire interval between God and man. "The government of the universe," said Ibn-Roschd resembles the government of a city, where everything

1. Cf. Aristot. Metaph., 1. XTI, cap. vi (trans. Cousin, p. 195 et seq.).

2. Schmœlders, Essay, p. 159.

starting from the same center, but where not everything is the work immediate of the sovereign 1. » The profound conception of AAristotle, that god of the twelfth book of the Metaphysics, immobile, separate, center of the universe, which directs and moves the world, without seeing it, through the attraction of good and beauty, This metaphysical Newtonianism, so simple, does not satisfy the Arabs. Never has God been so determined, so isolated from the world, that of Aristotle. If we apply the name pantheism for doctrines that fear To limit God, no doctrine has been more so than his. opposed to pantheism. This theodicy could be suitable to a naturalist school like the Peripatetic school: to simplify its purpose and eliminate anything resembling To a hypothesis, the naturalist would like to attribute to God, once and for all, his share firmly settled, and to relegate him as far removed as possible from the realm of experience. The school Arabs could not accept such a simple concept. It was necessary to create a sort of minister for this invisible king in order to to put him in contact with the universe, something analogous to Philo's lyoç irpocp-opwtoç, image and mamanifestation of the powers hidden in the depths of infinite existence.

The passive only ever becomes an act through the fact of a active power2, and the contingent cannot be explained by a series of causes to infinity 3. Undoubtedly the circle The causes cannot stop at a given moment. The Rain comes out of the cloud, the cloud of steam, the steam from the rain; the plant emerges from the plant, the man emerges from

---

1. Destr. Destr., disput. III, f. 121 v. — Epit. Metaph., tr. IV, f. 395.

2. II, Phys., f. 31 v. — Destr. Destr., disput. Lively. 150 v°. — See Ravaisson, Essai sur la Metaph. dArist., t. Ier, p. 542 et seq.

3. Metaph., I. II, f, 50 ^ man through the corruption of the generative being, without that it is permitted in this chain to continue to take one moment rather than another as a starting point1. Where then should we look for the cause of multiplicity? It cannot be found in one. to emerge as one. Only one being can be the im- product This being, mediator of God and in direct relation with Him, This is the first intelligence 2, the first engine of fixed stars, a kind of demiurge whose origin should not to be sought elsewhere than in the chapter seen in the twelfth book of Metaphysics, misunderstood and combined with Alexandrian data, or perhaps, by some sort of compromise, of which the antagonistic sects offer names-numerous examples, with the doctrine of hypostases and of the A verb, which was, moreover, so vigorously opposed.

This primal intelligence, this initial driving force, which is For Aristotle, God himself is nothing more than the first agent of the universe, to whom they apply the magnificent expressions by which Aristotle has sought to express the mode of action of intelligence divine3. The Quran itself provides arguments for this theory; for it is written there: The first thing created by God is intelligence. Plato, according to Ibn Rushd, did not he didn't want to express anything else when he said it in his own style depicted that God created the angels in the morning, and that after their Having left the creation of everything else to others, he rested*.

1. Destr. Destr., available IV, f. 152, 158.

2. Epit. Metaph., tr. IV, f. 395 v° et sqq.

3. To be convinced of this, one need only read the Abridged Metaphysicsthat, tract. IV, f. 39G. For a moment, however, Ibn-Roshd seems to identify-to honor God and primal intelligence; for, he said, nature has nothing sufficient.
perflu. [Ibid., p. 397.]

A. Metaph., 1. XII, f. 344-v°. It is possible that this entire passage was Interpolated by the Hebrew translator. — Cf. Destr. Désir., disput. XII and XV.

Galen glimpsed the same truth when he spoke of this informative form, to which truly belongs the creator's name1. Several religious sects, more or less influenced by Gnosticism, the Talimites, the Bate-The Sabians, like the Greeks, professed a similar doctrine and admitted intelligence as the firstborn of all creature

“The nature of the stars,” Aristotle had said, “being a a certain eternal essence, and that which moves being eternal also and prior to what is moved..., it is evident that at-
As many planets as there are, there must be as many essences as there are essences.
eternal in their nature and each immobile in itself...
One is first, the other is second, in an order corresponding to the movement of the stars relative to each other.3
"A tradition dating back to the most remote antiquity," he said.
elsewhere, and passed on to posterity in the envelope of

The fable teaches us that the stars are gods, and that the divinity embraces all of nature. Everything else It's just a myth... But if we extract the principle to consider it alone, knowing that the first essentials These are gods, one might think that these are doctors truly divine trines4.... » This bizarre glimpse, which seems reminiscent of Pythagoras or Plato, and which surprised all the commentators, to the point that plu-Several critics did not hesitate to call into question the authenticity of the book in which it is found 5, was the original text-

1. Destr. Destr., depart ai., disp. III, f. 350 v°.

2. Schmoelders, Essay on the Philosophical Schools, p. 202.

3. Metaph., 1. XII, cap. wine (trans. Cousin), p. 203. — Ed. Brandis,
p. 251.

4. Ibid. (trans. Cousin, p. 212). — Ed. Brandis, p. 254.

5. Cf. Vacherot, Theory of First Principles According to Aristotle (Caen, 1836), p. 48 et seq. — Ravaisson, Essay on the Metaphor of Aristotle, vol. I, p. 103, 104. — Pierronet Zévort, Métaph. of Arist.^X. I, introd. lxxxviii tifde of the theory of intelligences, which forms one of the points the most characteristic aspects of Arab philosophy, and to which their syncretism blended so many foreign elements gers. Newton's mechanical hypothesis has so profoundly-how deeply it penetrated our ideas about the system of the universe, that all the concepts of antiquity, the Middle Ages, of the renaissance, of Descartes himself on the World, appear to us today as the dreams of an au-age. No matter how hard we try, we cannot re-We will never announce our modern ideas frankly enough-born to understand, that is to say, not to find absurd, the de Cœlo et Mundo, the treatise on the World to Alexander, the one from Substantia Orbis. The homogeneity of the universe was then poorly understood: one could not sup-

to assume that the same system extended to all parts of the world, and that the same law which determines here below the the movement of an atom presided over the revolutions of celestial bodies. Ibn-Roshd is therefore not responsible for what might seem strange to us about his theory of the sky and inconceivable. In his eyes, the sky is an eternal being, incorruptible, all action, simple, weightless, moved by a soul \ Indeed, circular motion cannot to come from only a soul, bodies being susceptible only of up-and-down movement. The sky is not composed of matter and form. It is only in the place by accident-tooth2. It is the noblest of living beings3. Infinite quantity As for duration, the movement of the sky is not so with regard to the Quantity 4. If only one star were added to the body and lxxxix, and t. II, p. 361 et seq. — Michelet (of Berlin), Critical examination than the Meiaph. d1 Aristotle, p. 19-4-195.

i. De Substantia Orbis, cap. v. — De Cœlo et Mundo, f. 67 v.

2. Phys., IV, f. 66et sqq.

3. De Subst. Orbis, chap. vi.

4. Of Subst. Orbis, cap. iji — De Cœh et Mundo, f. 151.

star, this body would stop instantly; for the measurement of its strength is exactly proportional to its mass; and if it stopped for a moment, the first engine could not to set in motion again; it would be corrupted by inactivity, and with him all beings whose essence is to move see 1. It is therefore not by its intrinsic nature that it is incorruptible and eternal, but through the continued action of the first engine, and the Prophet was able to say truthfully: (c Everything is corruptible, except His face2. »

Therefore, in Ibn-Roshd's eyes, the sky is a living being. composed of several orbs representing the members essential to life, and in which the first engine represents the heart, from which life radiates for other members bres3. Each orb has its own intelligence, which is its form. as the rational soul is the form of man; these intel- hierarchically subordinate lines constitute the chain of motors, which propagate the movement of the first sphere up to us. Desire is the driving force at- which they obey4; always seeking the best, They are constantly in motion, because movement is only The appetite for the best. Their intellect is always in act and is carried out without any failure outside of Imagination and sensitivity. They know each other. themselves, and have knowledge of everything that passes into the lower spheres; the primary intelligence has, therefore, complete knowledge of all this which is happening in the universe.

1. De Subst. Orbis, chap. vi. — De Gêner, et Corr., paraphr. f. 318.

2. De Subst. Orbis, cap. vit.

3. Zimara, Solut. Conlrad., f. 212.

4. Phys., VIII, comm. 85. — De Cœlo et Mundo, f. 125. — - Metaph., XII, 337, 341.

5. By Beatit. animoe, cap. v. — Destr. Destr., available XVI, f. 325 et seqq. — De Cœlo et Mundo, f. 127 v. — IV, Phys. , f, 66 et sqq, — Epit. Metaph., tr. IV, f. 394.

Thus, a vague, indecisive overview, without connection to the rest of the Peripatetic doctrine, became among the hands of the Arabs a theory of the first principles of the universe, bizarre, I admit, but ingeniously linked in all its parts, and from which we shall see emerge, as a special case, their entire psychology.

S v.

Ibn Rushd's theory on the intelligences of the planes taires, is merely an amplified commentary on the twelfth book of Metaphysics; his theory of the human intellect is, likewise, only the third book of the treatise on the Soul, interpreted with subtlety, the random comparisons dice and the mixture of mystical doctrines, which characterizeThey are raising Arab philosophy.

((There are two elements in the fact of knowledge) analogous to matter and form, that is to say a passive principle and an active principle; in other words, terMy, there are two intellects: one, material or notsif (7ïaGy]Tixoç, sv ouva{/.si, àuvcrroç, âuva|/.svo;); the other, formal or active (wv bnù,zyj,ioL^ 7roi7)Tix.o<;): one, suscepcapable of becoming all things by thinking them; the auto be _, making things intelligible. That which acts is superior to that which suffers; therefore the active intellect is supsuperior to the potential intellect. The active intellect is seadorned, impassive and imperishable (^wpicToç, îtal âTuaGvjç, xal ajAiyyjç, tti oucta wv êvspyeia); the passive intellect, to the Milking is perishable and cannot do without intellect. active. Now, true intellect is separate intellect, And that one alone is eternal and immortal.

1. De anima, 1. III, cap. v, § 1. Edit. Trendelenburg (ïena, 1833), p. 91. — Trans. Barthélémy Saint-Hilaire, p. 302, — ■ Waddington-Kastus, from Aristotle's Psychology, pp. 212-213,

From this doctrine, we already see emerging a cona sequence that the philosopher himself foresees and accepts. The intellect in action, it is said, is prior to the intellect in power. And yet, within the individual, power precedes act 1. Therefore, it is not in the individual that it We must look for the active intellect, prior in time to the very act of thinking, "It is not when Sometimes she thinks, and sometimes she doesn't; it's only- when it is separated, that intelligence is really what she is2. » The active intellect is impersonal-nal, absolute, separate from individuals, participated by the individus. One more step, and we will have to say that the intelthe reading is unique for all men, and to proclaim this what Leibniz calls monopsychism. This is the thesis Averroist. Aristotle never expressed himself clearly on this point; but it must be admitted that Ibn-Roshd and the Arab philosophers, in attributing this doctrine to him, have not the fact of drawing the immediate consequence of the theory as presented in Book III of The Soul.

Other passages, moreover, confirm this interpretation. Position 3. The intellect comes from outside; it is separable from body, eternal, impassive, divine4; it is in the soul a a separate, independent substance, distinct from the individual, as the eternal is to the corruptible.5 It is in some

---

i. eH 81 xocxà 8uvakuuv ypovto -potepa h tw ivf , 8X10; 81 where "Xpovto (1. III, cap. v, § 2. Edit. Trend., p. 91). — Cf. Metaph., 1. XII, cap. you, p. 246 et seq.; ed. Brandis.

2. De anima, 1. III, cap. v, § 2.

3. Cf. Kastus, Psych. d'Jristotc, p. 215-216, 284, 307-308, 333, 335. — Barthélémy Saint-Hilaire, Treatise on the Soul, Plan, p. 76.

4. AsiTcetat 81 xbv vouv [xdvov ôupaôev £7iEtaiévai 7.0a Qsfov slvat poVov (From (to bother, anim., 1, II, chap. m, p. 736, ed. Bekker). Cf. De anima, 1. I, chapter iv, g 14,

5. From anima,!. I, cap.iy, § 13.

sort of another kind of soul1, the study of which belongs to the metaphysician and not physicist 2. This results from All of this is a theory quite similar to that of Malebranche, a kind of objective and impersonal reason light, which enlightens all men, and by which all is intelligible. That is the interpretation of most of the Greek commentators, from Alexander of Aphrodisias, from Themistius, of Philoponus3, and of all the Arabs without ex-reception.

Such a doctrine, certainly, is not in agreement with the general spirit of Peripateticism. But this is not the the only time Aristotle introduced into his system fragments of older schools, without putting themselves in It is difficult to reconcile them with his own insights. It is obvious-dent that this whole theory of the voiç is borrowed from Anaxagoras. Aristotle himself cites it (1. III, chap. iv, § 3), and Simplicius has preserved for us a long fragment of this philosopher, who offers the most complete analogy with the passage from the treatise on the Soul that we are trying to clarify-cir4. In Book VIII of the Physics5, the same theory is given expressly as from Anaxagoras.

In an ingenious thesis presented to the Faculty of Letters 6, we fought against Ibn-Roshd's interpretation,

1. "Eor/.s <iu-/9jç yivoç ^T£pov etvai, xa\ xouxo [j.6vov Ivôsysxai ywpi'ÇeaOai, xaOa-sp xb à'tSioV xou cpOapxou (De anima, 1. II, cap. n? g 9). — Cf. ibid., L II, cap. m, $1. — Metaph.j 1. XII, cap. mr.

2. De anima, 1. I, cap. i, § 11.

3. This is how it is understood, among the moderns, by Trendelenburg, p. 175, 492; Raisson, t. I, p. 58o et seq. ; Brucker, t. III, p. 110; Tiedemann, Geist derspec. PhiL, t. IV, p. 147 et seq.

4. N6o; ol etci à'-ctpov y.ou auxo/paxèç, xa\ [js;jr/.xat. ouûsv\ yprj[j.ax'., àXkb: (x6voç aùxbç icp' Éowxou sari (apud Trendelenburg, p. 467).

5. 'Avaçayooac <jpOw; Xiysi , xbv vouv db:a07j cp^ay.ojv y.cà &<ji-yr\ sl'vai (Phys. 1. VIII, chap. v).

6. Denis, Arislote's Rationalism.

and argued that for Aristotle, the active intellect is merely a faculty of the soul. The passive intellect is then only the fa-Cult of receiving the savra<7[/.aTa; the active intellect is not that induction acting on the <pavTa<7[/.aTa and by drawing the general ideas. Thus, the theory is brought into line with reality. as presented in the third book of the Treatise on the Soul? with that of the Posterior Analytics, where Aristotle seems to re-reducing the role of reason to induction by generalizing the facts of sensation. Certainly, I am not hiding anything. that Aristotle often seems to consider the οὐτος as per-sonnel to Tliomme. His constant attention to repeating that The intellect is identical to the intelligible, that the intellect he acts when he becomes the object he thinks about1, is difficult to reconcile with the hypothesis of a separate intellect of man. But it is dangerous, it seems to me, to thus forcibly aligning the different perspectives of ancients. The ancients often philosophized without liking themselves.

miter in a system, dealing with the same subject according to the viewpoints that were available to them, or that were offered by previous schools, without worrying dissonances that could exist between these various sections of theory. 11 It is childish to try to them to agree with themselves, when themselves They cared little about it. It would be just as well, as some German critics declare all passages to be interpolated.
that cannot be reconciled with the others. Thus, the theo-
the line from the Posterior Analytics and that of the third book of the Soul, without expressly contradicting itself, represent-in my opinion, they offer two profoundly different insights anima.

1. btXN(x\xz\ ra&ç ecrct xà voy)Ta ô vouç, àXX' svxsXs^sia ouôiv , 7tp\v &v vo9j [From i, 1. III, cap. iv, § 11). See Metapli A, c. seen and ix. -r-From anima, 1. I,
c. m; 1. II, c. i; 1. III, cv — Kastus, Psychology of Aristotle, p. 209, 281, 333. — Rallaisson, JÊëtàpk. of Arist., 1. 1, p, 196, 199.

tincts and of different origin, on the fact of the intellect-agency.

Probably 9, translating -into modern language the theory of the intellect expounded in the third book of The Soul, and by freeing it from overly substantial forms of
In the Aristotelian style, we arrive at a theory of con-birth quite similar to that which for half a century has won the assent of all philosophical minds questions. It is entirely up to us to make Aristotle say: Two Things are necessary for the intellectual act: 4° a
The impression of the outside world received by the thinking subject 2° a reaction of the thinking subject on the given data of the Sensation. Sensation provides the substance of thought; Here it is, pure reason, gives form. But this mis-
The method of rapprochement is always perilous.
Old systems must be taken for what they are.
and accepted, from their author's point of view, as curious products of the human mind, without ever being in-interpreted according to the views of modern philosophy.

In short, the Peripatetic theory of the intellect,
as it emerged from the work of the commentators, composed of five theorems: 1° distinction of the two in-2° incorruptibility of one, corruptibility of the other; 3° the active intellect conceived outside of man, like the sun of intelligences; 4th unity of the active intellect; 5° identity of the active intellect with the last of the worldly intellects. The thought of Aristote leaves no room for hesitation on the two pre-first theorems; it is sufficiently clear, without being undisputed, with regard to the third. As for
As for the last two, they are indeed the work of the commentators.
tators who, through inductions or comparisons,
believed they could thus complete the master's theory.

S VI.

Aristotle's immediate disciples, Theophrastus, Aris-Toxenus, Dicaearchus, Strato, do not appear to have deeply concerned about the doctrine expressed in the third Book of the Soul. For them, the soul is merely the resulting soundboth the organization of body parts; the theory of pure reason could have no place in a system of such crude materialism. In Alexander of Aphrodisias, on the contrary, this theory leads to great developments loppements. The passive intellect, which is now called material (6 O^wcoç vouç), is nothing in act, but everything in power 1. For being nothing by its own strength before To think, when he thinks he becomes the thing thought. The in-such material is therefore only an aptitude (Ê7uiTY)SeioTV]ç) to receive ideas, similar to a tablet on which There is nothing written down. The fact of knowledge takes place through the intervention of God, who takes hold of the faculty individual as well as an instrument. The active intellect, For Alexander, therefore, is God himself; but God does not maintains with the soul that it is a passing relationship; it is not that the external driving cause, and does not prevent it from soon fall back into nothingness 2.

Alexander of Aphrodisias can be considered the first author of the immense importance that the theory from the third book of the Soul acquired in recent centuries of Greek philosophy, and throughout the Middle Ages.
Themistius attests that even in his time this passage had given rise to endless controversies, and Philo-

j. Trendelenburg, De anima, p. 486.

2. Ravaisson, Essay on the Metaphor of Jurist.} t. II, p. 302. — Zimara > Hello. Contai. 176 and 178 v°.

On this subject, a whole army of dissidents refutes it.[1] Themistius, as with Alexander, the separate intellect is outside of man. Already it is clearly established- the question of unity or multiplicity of the intellect. It is one, he said, in its source, that is to say in God; it is multiple through the individuals who participate in it. pent; just as the sun spreads from a single center in an infinity of rays[2]. The passive intellect aspires to to unite with the active intellect, as everything aspires to its improvement. Simplicius did not introduce into the controve no new element. The passive intellect is pelaughable, like everything that lives a successive life. When He acts, he identifies with the thing thought.[3] Philopon is a more original spirit, but a much more interpretive less faithful. In his eyes, the soul is immaterial, simple, immortal (6ewc, x.al àcrco^aTo;, îtal âraG/'ç). The intellect, when it is in action, must identify itself (é£ô{ÀQioîfaOai, évurcapystv) to the thought object. The vouç is nothing other than the raithe sound of all humanity. Indeed, the vouch, says Aristotle (Book III, Chapter V, § 2) is always thinking; that is to say, adds Philopon, that humanity always thinks, as In a sense, one could say that man still lives, because that humanity still lives[4]? Finally, in the apocrypt of Aristotle's Theology[3], the theory of the intellect is presented in a manner very similar to that that we will find among the Aral: es. The role of the intel-

---

1. Barth. Saint-Hilaire, Treatise on the Soul, p. 305, note.

'2. Trendelenburg, p. 493.

3. IHc vouç otxv ivepy^, 5 x-jto; stti toÎ'; voouijivoiç, xat er:tv cfoep rà voojij.sva [IùidX

•i. Where yàp 707 sva t<~) àpi0[i(& vouv Xiyo[j.zv àù vosîv, ccXX' o~i bi SXro tÇ x'Safxco o à/Ooto-'.voç vouç &z\ vos?" (Trendelenburg, p. 490).

5. See the excellent analysis given by Mr. Rayaisson, Metaph d\frisf.: t. II, p. 012 et seq.

(O

active license is to purify the data of sensation for to make it intelligible. It is the intermediary (the Word). through which God created the world. God shines forth in active intelligence, this radiates in the human soul Maine, the soul in the body, and thus divine life descends down to inanimate matter.

Moreover, this doctrine of the intellectual- unique and universal agency was exclusively specific to the Peripatetic school. All of antiquity, from Anaxa-Gore, had called voi; the spiritual principle of the universe1. The entire school of Alexandria had accepted the procession. particular intelligences of universal intelligence saddle2. But it was above all the crude realism that the The Latin Church Fathers brought to psychology which con-tribua to highlight the question of the unity of souls. Saint Augustine stirs it curiously, but, according to his habitude, avoids answering it, in a curious passage of his book De Quantitate animœz. This passage was noted in the 9th century, and became in the abbey of Corbie the text of a rather heated controversy. A Hibernian monk, named- Macarius Scotus, claimed to derive the doctrine of monopsychism, and communicated his opinions to another winter residents of this abbey, whose name has not been known served. Ratramnus, a monk of Corbie, one of the writers better known from the 9th century, he first fought him in a dogmatic letter, then, at the request of Odo, bishop of Beauvais wrote a work against him which has remained unpublished. Mabillon discusses it based on a manuscript by Saint Eloi de INoyon4; there are several others in the

1. Cicero, De Dhinat., 1. I, c. mid. — Sallust., Bell. Judgment, c. ir. — Virg., Geprg., IV, 221; Mneid., VI, 724. —De Mundo ad Alex., c. seen.

2. Cf. Rallaison, op. cit., t. II, p. 504-505, 534 535.

3. Cap. -xxxii (Opp., 1. 1, p. 434, ed. 1679).

A. Mabillon, Acta SS. Ord. S. Bened., Sec. iV, pars II, prsef., libraries of England K Ratramne deals with his advers-heretical status, more deserving of being repressed by the self-ritual that is fought by reasoning, and leads him to say that there is only one man and one woman in the world soul? such an absurd error, he adds, that its author of-should be called Baccharius and not Macarius* \ He pa-

It was also noted that this doctrine was not uncommon among the Hibernians. A collection of canons for the Hibernian Church Bernese, which is found in a manuscript from the collection of Saint-Germain (no. 121, written in the 5th century)3, contains (fol. 182-184) a chapter on the soul, where curious-Several questions have been raised that seem to have This relates to the errors of Macarius. The same doctrine is from remains mentioned in Bede4 and is found in the PanTheon of Godfrey of Viterbo, attributed to the Manicheans and to Plato3.

p. lxxvi etsqq. ; Annals Ord. S. Bened., t. III, p. 139-440. —Dom Ceillier, Hist. gen. of ecclesiastical authors., t. XIX, p. 159. — Ellies Dupin, Bill, ecclesiastical, 9th century, pp. 237-258. — Fabricius, Bibl. med. et inf. Latin. , t I, p. 243 — Hist. lltter. of France, t. IV, p. 258-259; t. V, p. 350.
— It was inadvertently that Fabricius wrote Marianus Scotus, confusthus our 9th-century winter with the Benedictine of Fulda of the 11th century. Mabillon and the authors of the Hist. litt. de la Fr. propose to i to tifier Macarius Scotus or with Scotus Erigena or with a Macarius, to whom Raban-Maur dedicates his book on Computus.

1. Catal. mss Angliæ and Eiberniæ, mss. Coll. S. Bened. Cantabrig. , No. 1567; mss. Coll. Sydney-Sussex, No. 734; mss. Coll. S. Trinity. apud Dubl., no. 816.

2. Quoniam non beatus, sed stultus et ebrius talia somniavit.

3. Part of this valuable collection was published by Dacberi (Spicil. , (t. I, p. 492) and part by Marlene [Thés. Jnecd., t. IV, init.]. But The chapter we are talking about here has remained unpublished.

4. Mundi constitutio, inter Bedse Opp., t. I, col. 397 (Basil., 1563):

5. Apud Pistorium, German. rer. Script. , t. II, col. 58.

§VII

It is primarily by developing certain theories at the ex-exclusion of the others, that the Arabs have altered the whole of Peripateticism; now it is quite remarkable that the theories to which they thus gave preference are precisely those that do not appear in Arisall that in an incidental and obscure way. Already we have seen an isolated thesis from the twelfth book of the Metaphysics becoming in their hands the core of a vast system, encompassing both their metaphysics, their cosmology, and even their psychology; this time again, it's a doctrine borrowed from a foreign school of thought.

manages, disagrees little with the spirit of Peripateticism, and whose its authenticity has likewise been called into question, which will become the central point of their philosophy.

The role of the intellect is to perceive the forms of things, he himself must be absolutely devoid of shapes and like a transparent crystal that does not letto be that the image of objects[1]. For if it had forms These forms, being their own, would blend with those of the objects perconceived and would alter the truth of perception. The intelreading, considered within the subject, is therefore merely a pure reskepticism. But to stop there, as Alexander did Aphrodisias's analysis is not exhaustive due to the knowledge. It is not enough to grant the intellect a vague and indeterminate disposition to receive forms[2].

---

4. Omne recipiens aliquid necesse est ut sit denudatum a natura recepti [From anima, f. 160). — Oculus si esset habens colorem, non esset possible virtuti visivse recipere colors [De connex. intell, abstr. cum man, f. 358).

2. Dicere quod intellectus materialis est similis praeparationi quse est in tabula, non tabulœ secundum quod est prœparata, ut exposuit Alexander hune sermonem, falsum est {De anima, f. 168-169).

Indeed, we conceive of the intellect as empty of all form; so if it were only a simple disposition to receive the forms, we would conceive of nothingness. "What! Alexander, exclaims Ibn-Roshd, you claim that Aristotle did not want to parIt refers to a disposition rather than a disposed subject. Truthfully, I am ashamed for you of such speech and such singular comment. A provision is not in effect none of the things she is capable of receiving. A dispositionsition is neither a substance, nor a quality of a substance stance. If, therefore, Aristotle had only presented the intellect as an aptitude for receiving forms, he would have To create an ability without a subject, which is absurd. Also do we see Theophrastus, Nicholas, Themistius and the others? The Peripatetic writers remain much more faithful to the text. of Aristotle. This hypothesis was only formulated by Alexander; all the philosophers of his time agreedThey return to rejecting it, and Themistius rejects it like a absurdity; quite different in this respect from the doctors of our days, in whose eyes one cannot be a perfect philosopherunless one is an Alexandrianist[1]. » It is therefore necessary to grant to the intellect an objective existence, and the act of conbirth only occurs through the cooperation of the sub- intellect objective (passive or potential intellect) and of the intellect objective (active intellect). Passive intellect is individual.

and perishable, like all the faculties of the soul that do not- dyes that the variable; the active intellect, on the contrary, being entirely separate from man and free from all the mixture with the material is unique, and the notion of the number is only applicable there because of the individuals who participate2.

1. De anima, 1. III, f. 169. — Cf. \b\d., f. 170.

2. Necessity is ut sit anima non divisibilis ad divisioneni individuorum, and ut sit etiam quid unum in Socrates and Platone (Destr. Destr., f. 349 v"}.

Without being expressed with the precision that we require- Let us now turn to philosophical research, This solution meets the main conditions of the pro- problem, and determines with sufficient clarity the share of The absolute and the relative in the fact of knowledge. refutations that the Middle Ages attempted of Ibn-Roschd have, in general, been wrong, like all the refutations, which seek to take a system by its His weakness rather than his truthfulness. Certainly, if he is at The world is a revolting absurdity; it is the unity of souls. as we pretended to hear, and if Averroes had ever Averroism could not have supported such a doctrine to the letter; it was not would deserve to be recorded in the annals of dementia and not in those of philosophy. The argument constantly re- Albert, Saint Thomas, vehemently opposed Averroist theory. mas: What! The same soul is therefore both wise and mad, gay, and sad; this argument, I say, that Averroes had foreseen and refuted1, would then be peremptory, and would have was enough to sweep this extravagance from the field of es- It took human hands the very next day after its appearance. On closer inspection, one can see that this is not the case. Ibn-Roshd's thought, and that this doctrine is linked in his mind a theory of the universe that is not lacking neither elevation nor originality.

The personality of consciousness has never been well clearly revealed to the Arabs. The unity of reason objective struck them much more than the multiplicity of subjective reason. Convinced, moreover, that all the parts of the universe are similar and alive, they have — Cf. De anima, 1. III, f. 160 v° et sqq., and the fragments of the beginning taire moyen sur l'Ame (unpublished), which Mr. Munck translated from Arabic {Dict. des se phll., t. III, p. 166-167).

1. Destr. Destroy, leave, available. IIIa, f. 350.

considering human thought as a whole,
as a resultant of superior forces and as a general phenomenon of the universe. Undoubtedly, in a philosophy that separates as vaguely as phi-Arabic philosophy Psychological order of the ontological order
gic, and which never says precisely whether the field of His speculations are either within man or outside of man.
Such a way of expressing oneself was not without danger.
We wish Ibn Rushd had said it more clearly.
that he did not do it: The unity of the intellect means nothing other something that the universality of the principles of pure reason and the unity of psychological constitution throughout the human species. However, there can be no doubt that Such was not his thought, when one hears him repeat without ceases that the active intellect does not differ from knowledge the knowledge we have of the universe1, that immortality of the intellect designates the immortality of humankind2, and that if Aristotle said that the intellect is not sometimes thinking, sometimes not thinking, that must be understood relative to the species, which will never disappear, and which exerts its influence without interruption at some point in the universe.
its intellectual faculties3. A living humanity and permanent, such is therefore the meaning of the theory of averthe roistics of the unity of the intellect4. The immortality of the in-such an active telect is thus nothing other than rebirth eternal humanity, and the perpetuation of civilization-

1. Epist. of intel. y f. 67. Et quia intellectus noster in actu nihil aliud est quam comprehensio ordinis et rectitudinis existentis in hoc mundo..., sequitur de necessitate quod quidditas intellectus agentis hune nostrum intellectum nihil aliud est quam comprehensio haruin rerum.

2. De anima, 1. III, f. 165 and 175 v°.

3. lbid.y f. 170 v°, 171.

A. This is also the interpretation proposed by MH Ritter {Gesch. der christ. Phil.lV BS 148, ff.).

tion S Reason is constituted as something of the absolute, independent of individuals, like a part-integral part of the universe2, and humanity, which is only the act of this reason, as a necessary being and eternal.

Hence also the necessity of philosophy, its role providential, and this strange axiom: Ex necessitate est ut sit aliquis philosophus in specie humana 3. For all power must take action, otherwise it would be vain. It is necessary that at each moment of duration and at at some point in space an intelligence contemplates the absolute reason. Now, man alone, through the speculative sciences, latives enjoys this prerogative. Man and philosopher-Sophie are therefore also necessary in the plan of the universe

This is the original theory developed in the treatise Of the happiness of the soul, and in the digressions of the com-Commentary on the third book of the Soul. It is true that the the technical language of Averroism is much more com-complicated. By bringing together the different expressions by the-which Ibn-Roshd seeks to designate the various nuances due to knowledge, one could find up to five in-

1. Quemadmodum scientia et ipsum esse sunt quid proprium ipsi homini, et artes ipsœ quibusdam modis propriis videntur inesse ipsi homini, ideo existimatur universum habitatutn non posse esse expers alicujus habitus philosophizes vel artium naturalium. Quoniam licet in aliqua parte defuerunt ipsœ artes, exempli gratia in quadra septentrionali terras, non propterea remainder quadrse privabuntur eis [De anima, f. 165 v°).

2. Scientiœ are aeternae et non generabiles nec corruptibiles, nisi per accidens, scilicet ex copulatione earum Socrati et Platoni.... quoniam intellectui nihil est individuitatis [Desire. Destr., f. 349 v°).

3. De anim. beat, , f. 354.

4. Et scias quod non est alia species quae apprehendât intelligibilia, nisi homo, — Similiter oportet ut inreniantur aliqua individua in specie hominis, quas apprehending hune iuteilectum ex necessitate (Ibid. t f. 356).

Telects, active, passive, material, speculative, acquired. It is especially with regard to X material intellect that the lan-Ibn-Roshd's pledge is difficult to reconcile with that of the Greek commentators and other Arab philosophers. Alexander of Aphrodisias, by creating the expression of vou; ûXtxoç, probably only meant to designate X intellect passive, which represents matter in the fact of the con-birth. In general, the Arabs heard the same thing the material intellect (akl hayyoulani) in the sense of a capacity for knowledge.1 Ibn-Roshd, on the contrary, presents the material intellect as incorruptible, not begotten, unique, eternal, like unto the intel- active reader 2. In essence, this divergence is hardly more than in words; for Ibn-Roshd himself is obliged to to recognize, like Alexander, that the first act of Intelligence is only a possibility, a disposition to becoming, common in its essence to all men, but multiple by accident 3. As for Y intellect acquis'*, it invariably designates the external reason that Man made himself clean, impersonal reason as participated by the personal being. It is for Ibn Rushd presents it as partly corrupt fragile and partly incorruptible, according to what it has from God or of man 5.

The flaw in this system is that it separates too deeply

---

1. The Tarifat (ed. Fluegel, p. 457) defines the material intellect: “Mera “facultas intelligibilia comprehendendi, meraque potenlia, qualis in “pueris deprehenditur. » Cf. Stlimoelders, Docum. phil. Arabic. , p. 120.

2. De anima, 1. III, f. 160, ff. , 170, 179.

3. From beat, animœ, cn From conncx. intel. abstr. cum hominc, f. 35S v°.

4. A kl bil-malkct (intellect us balmelche, in Latin translations) (of Avicenna) or el-akl cl-mustafdd. Cf. Tarifât, 1. c. — De Sacy, Chrest. Arabic, vol. III, p. 489.

5. De anima A. III, f. 163.

Clement, the two elements of the intellectual phenomenon, and to introduce a cosmic agent into a problem which can be resolved through simple psychology. To draw up man like a statue facing the sun, and wait that life should descend to animate it, is to await the impossible. Any system that places outside of man the the source of reason, condemns itself to never explain the fact of knowledge. Consciousness alone is in contact with itself; psychology should not address- to serve no external engine to fill the gaps of his hypotheses. Ibn-Roshd, moreover, does not conceal the difficulties of his system. If the intellect is unique in in all men, it is in all to the same degree, the A disciple has nothing to learn from the master. When a When man perceives something intelligible, everyone else perceives it. even, as long as he does; the psychological fact loses all individuality. Just as in celestial bodies, Each species consists of only one individual.

because each species has only one engine, the plura-
The situation would be as idle as if a pilot had several ships under his command, or one worker several tools; Even if several souls share a single driving force, there is superfetation in nature. Furthermore, the ability to create the intelligibles, which is the property of the active intellect, is not always in the same man to the same degree; It is born and grows with acquired intellect or intellect speculative, and that is why Theophrastus, Themistius and others have identified speculative intellect and the active intellect \ Ibn-Roshd rightly responds that the active intellect entering into communication with a being relative, must be subject to the conditions of relativity; that

i. De anima, f. 161 et seq.

the union of the intellect with the individual soul does not take place nor through the multiplication of intellect, nor through unification individuals, but through the action of the intellect on the sensitive images, an action analogous to that of form on the matter; that this union is nothing other than the eternal participation of humanity in a certain number of eternal principles like hers. These principles, in themselves communicating with the corruptible being, do not participate in their corruptibility; they are independent of individuals, and as true in the deserted regions of the globe as in those where there are men to perceive them.
Plato's uncreated types are chimeras, if we entends to the letter, but has nothing but truth in it, if one interprets them in the sense of the objective reality of the universal. Thus, the intellect is both singular and multiple.
If it were absolutely unique, it would follow that all perceive that the same object. If it multiplied with the many of those who know, the intellectual community
If gences were destroyed, science would be incommunicable.
On the contrary, if we maintain the unity of the object and the multiplicity of subjects, all the objections are resolved

S VIII.

The passive intellect aspires to unite with the active intellect.
as power calls forth action, as matter calls the form, as the flame leaps towards the body fuel. But this effort doesn't stop at the first

The degree of possession, which is called acquired intellect. The soul can lead to a much more intimate union with the intellect universal reading, to a kind of identification with reason

\.Ibid.,î. lG3etsuiv.

paramount. The acquired intellect served to guide man up to the sanctuary; but it disappears as soon as the goal is reached, much like sensation prepares the imagination nation, and vanishes as soon as the act of imagination is too intense. Thus the active intellect exerts its influence on the soul two separate actions, one of which aims to raise the material intellect to the perception of the intelligible, the other to lead him beyond, to union with the intellectuals themselves. Man, having reached this state, completestakes all things by the reason that he has approached prayed. Having become like God, he is in a way all beings, and knows them as they are; for the Beings and their causes are nothing outside of science that he has it. There is in every being a divine tendency to receive as much of this noble end as befits his nature. The animal itself participates in it, and carries within it the power to attain the first being1. That this state is admirable, exclaims Ibn-Roshd, and that this mode of existence is strange! Also, it is not at the origingin, but at the end of human development that we find there happens, when everything in man is in action and nothing to the power of 2.

Such is this doctrine of Y union (ittisâl) 3, or, as The Sufis say that the problem of "us" and "you" is the basis of

1. Cuilibet enti inest divina intentio , ut perveniat ad recipiendum tantum illius nobilis finites quantum competitive suse naturse. Itaque entibus, quse in ipsorum natura non habent nisi ut sint in hac essentia diminuta7 ut bruta animalia, erit possibile habere in seipsis virtutes per quas in fine ascendent ad talem perfectionem qualis est primi entis simpliciter [From beat, animœ, f. 356 -y0}.

2. From anima, f. 180. — From beatit. anima?, c. m and iv. — Epistola De intel connection, abstr. cum komine. — Munck, Dict. of themselves. phil.9 t. III, p. 169-170. — See. appendix I.

3. The Sufis use the words jam or itùhâd, which designate a An even more intimate identification.

all of Eastern psychology and constant object of concerns of the Arabic-Spanish school. We have given the important place it occupies in the writings of Ibn-Badja and Ibn-Tufayl. Ibn-Badja had devoted two Treatises ex professa, often cited by Ibn-Rushd. A However, an important nuance separates the doctrine of Ibn-R.oschd of that of his two compatriots. At Ibn-Badja, the union is achieved through asceticism, through something analogous to the unitive virtues (al éviaiai àpsTaQ of Jam-blique. Chezlbn-Tofaïl, mysticism overflows. We arrive to Yittisdl by the whirling of the dervish, by giving himselfgnawing vertigo, by locking himself in a cave, the head down, eyes closed, and dismissing all ideas sensitive1. The Orient has never known how to stop in the quie-ism on the borderline of extravagance and immorality.
Identification with universal intelligence through External methods have always been the chimera of sects. mystics of India and Persia. Seven degrees, say the Sufis lead man to the final end, which is the disappearance of disappearance, the Buddhist nirvana2 where man arrives, through the annihilation of his persona-to say: "I am God!" Poetry itself is de-The echo of these dreams came. Absorption in God and the death to creatures is, under the veil of a bizarre allegorism, the perpetual theme of the Persian and Hin- school Doustane. ((Don't go, said Wali, and ask Avicenna) to analyze this love for you; it doesn't know the rules

1. Philosophus aulodid., p. law.

2. See the brilliant parable of the Simorgh, symbol of the universal being resulting from the concert of individuals [Notices and Extracts, t. XIT, p. 311.
— Journal des Savants, January 1822, article by M. de Sacv). — This apologgue forms the basis of the pan-Béist poem by Ferîd-Eddin Attàr, intitulé: The Language of Birds, which Mr. Garein de Tassy is publishing in this month the notice in the Notices and Extracts.

of this art... All moral books must be erased, if the true Plato (God) comes to profess in your school1.

Ibn-Roshd always remained a stranger to these follies:
He is undoubtedly the least mystical of philosophers.
Arab-Spanish. He loudly proclaims that one cannot to the union than through science. The supreme point of development-
In his eyes, human development is only that in which the fa-Human cultures are brought to their highest power.
God is reached as soon as man, through contemplation, pierced the veil of things and found himself face to face with transcendent truth. The asceticism of the Sufis is futile. and useless. The goal of human life is to achieve triumph- to focus the higher part of the soul on sensation. This In fact, paradise is attained, whatever religion one follows. professes. But this happiness is rare and reserved only to great men. It is only obtained in the oldlesse, through persistent exercise of speculation, in renouncing the superfluous, provided also that one does not lack- to seek the necessities of life. Many men they only taste it at the very moment of their death; for this perfection almost always goes against perfection bodily. Alfarâbi having waited in vain until the At the end of his days, this supreme bliss, he declared that this was only a chimera 2. But the aptitude for union is not not the same in all men: in this respect there is a kind of elective and gratuitous grace 3.

1. Works of Wali, published by M. Garcin de Tassy, p. vin.

2. From anime beat, f. 355 r° and v°. — Of connection. intell, abstr, cum homine, f. 359 v° and 360. Et quum Avennasar credidit in fine suorum dierum pervenire ad hanc perfectionem et non pervenit, posuit impossible hoc et vanum, et dixit esse fabulas vetularum. Sed no est ut dixit vir iste.

3. See the analysis of the Treaty on the possibility of union, given by

This theory has a name in the history of philosophy. philosophy; it is called rationalist mysticism. It is the Ivwcri; alexandrines; this is an exaggeration of what Aristotle had spoken wisely and temperately about the effects of the speculation, which brings us closer to God and makes us to participate in his happiness. Aristotle is still sufficient to ex- explain the most risky doctrines of philosophy Arabic. There can be no doubt that the theory of union does not either modeled on the description of divine life, as it can be read in chapters vu and ix of the twelfth book of the Metaphysics sique. The voice always thinks, and always thinks the object The most divine, which is itself. Divine thought grasps the well within an indivisible moment, it is the current state of all intelligence, that is to say the supreme good, because Thinking is the greatest happiness and the most extraordinary thing. excellent. And what is admirable is that God enjoy eternally this perfect happiness which we we only have flashes*, In the 10th book of Morals Nicomachus, the supreme happiness of life according to the spirit, of the contemplative life, is described in more mamagnificent still. "But such a life," adds Aristotle, is perhaps above humanity, because it is not to the title of men that we enjoy, but because of this that there is something divine within us2.” Thus individuality and the the limits of human nature were scrupulously respected.

The theory of union is very closely linked in the spirit of the Arabs the question of the perception of the sub-

Mr. Munck, according to the Hebrew translation [Dict. des se. phll.y t. III, pp. 169-170).

1. Ed. Brandis, p. 249. — Trans. Cousin, pp. 200, 213. Cf. De partibus anirn., 1. IV, cap. x. — J. Simon, De Deo Aristotelis, p. 18-19.

2. Mor. Nic.}\. X, cap. vu et vin separate stances (t& xs^copisf/iva). A question that Ans- The question arose and he did not resolve it, he suggested to Arabs of endless conjectures. After having explained- how he conceives of abstract things, the phi- The philosopher adds: "We will see later whether it is or not." It is possible that, without itself being separate from extension, Intelligence thinks of something that is separate from it.1 It is not easy to say where Aristotle held his promise.2 Ibn-Roshd undertook to fulfill his silence in a treaty that remained unpublished, but of which we have the Hebrew and Latin translations3, under this title: Treatise of F, material intellect, or the possibility of union, and that two Jewish philosophers, Joseph ben Shem-Tob and Moses of Narbonne, accompanied by commentary taires4.

The Arabs, like the scholastics, understood by Aristotle's x££c«>pL<7|/iva, the separate intelligences, the angels, the spheres, the active intellect.3 The question is therefore to know if man can achieve this through his natural faculties real and experimental methods for understanding invisible beings

1. De anima, 1. III, cap. seen, § 8.

2. Barth. St-Hilaire, Treatise on the Soul, pp. 319-320. — The same gap had struck Saint Thomas: "Hujusmodi autem questiones," he said in his treatise against the Averroists (Opp., vol. XVII, p. 99 v°), most certain « colligi potest Aristotelem follows in his libris quos patet eum scripsisse “de substantiis separatis, ex his quse dicit in principio XII Metaph.; “quos etiam. libros vidimus number XIV (sic), licet nondum translatos

"In our language."

3. Old collection, 6510. — Saint-Marc Library, cl. VI, cod. 52.
A. Munck, op. cit., p. 163, 168 et seq.

5. Albert, De motibus anim., 1. I, tract. I, cap. iv. — Saint Thomas, Quest. available of anima, art. 16. — In quibusdam libris de arabico translatis, substantise separatae, quas nos angelos dicimus, intelligentise vocantur. In libris tamen de grseco translatis, dicuntur intellectus seu mentes (Summatheol.y I, qusest. lxxix, art. 10). — See also the 15th of the opuscules of Saint Thomas (vol. XVII of his works), De substantiis separatis seu de angelorum natura.

possible. Ibn-Roshd's answer is affirmative: If Man, he said, did not perceive these substances, nature would have acted in vain, since she would have created an intelligible without intelligence to understand it; "reasoning," he said Zimara1, which was refuted by Dr. Angélique and the Dr. Subtle2. It's, Zimara continues, as if one reasoned thus: Nullus horno currit; ergo nullum ani- "It went badly." But Ibn-Roshd was perfect in this- consequently, since he granted to man alone the faculty of perceiving intelligible things, and that, in its thought, speculative intellect was reflected only in the human This question, moreover, had for Ibn-Roshd a much greater importance than that which its Interpreters have attached it to 3. The reason being for him a cosmic principle, distinct from the individual, a xeywpiffjjLsvov, to ask whether the individual intellect can perceive the sub- separate stances, this calls into question the trans- faculty descendant of the human mind. To deny this power to to man, that would be to lower reason below the sensation; for the intellect would then only exist potentially, while the sensation, although only applying to the in particular, is always in action4. The understanding of more- Theirs is in exact parallel with sensation.

i. Soîut. contrad., f. 181 v° et seq.

2. Indeed, Saint Thomas refutes this reasoning in his Summa Theologica, Book I, quaest. lxxxvhi, art. 1.

3. De anima, III, digressio il, f. 175 et seqq.

4. Formae intellectuales sunt intellect» potentia ad differentiam sensus, quoniam sensus est sensus in actu, quia sensatum est sensatum in actu, and per hoc sensus esset nobilior quam iste intellectus which is in potentia quodammodo.... Sed materialis intellectus quamvis sit allus in potentia, tamen nobilior est sensu, and causa hujus est quod intellectus est univers-salis, et universale est in potentia, et sensatum est particulare, et particulare est in actu (Unpublished treatise on the possibility of union, ms. de Venice, f. 324- v°; Bibl. nat., anc. funds, 6510, f. 291 verso).

However, just as in sensation the external agent, Light, for example, is separated from the subject, similarly In the understanding, the agent intellect is separate or abstract;
so that the question of whether the intellect can com-Communicating with abstract substances boils down to knowing if the exercise of the intellect is possible1.

No problem has insisted as strongly as that of the Arabs on the objective existence of the intellect, and drew with such imperturbable logic the consequences of this principle. If the intellect is outside of us, Where is he? What is this being that makes us do what we do?
are, who contribute more than ourselves to our actions Intellectuals? Not even Aristotle nor his commentators have re-have answered these questions, or rather, have not thought to answer them.
to pose. It is with the twelfth book of the Metaphysics that The Arabs tried to fill this gap. According to them,
The agent's intellect is part of this hierarchy of pre-first principles that govern the stars and transmit Divine action in the universe 2.

The first is the one who presides over the most distant; the last is that of the most rap- sphere close to us. Active intellect comes next.3 It is necessary to admit, however, that this hierarchical order is not I completely agree with the doctrine that is attributed usually to Averroes, and which is indeed found expried in V Abridged Metaphysics, one of his ou-the most important works. According to this doctrine, the in-such an active form would be identical to the last of the intelligences.

1. From beatit. anïmœ, cap. mr.

2. Cicero had already heard Aristotle's thought in this sense [Acad.
Quœst., 1. I, chap. vn).

3. Et hoc est quod vocatur Spirîtus Sanctus {From beat, anim., f. 337). Ap-pellatur in lege Angélus (Destr. Destr., pars ai., disp. I, f. 332). These are These are undoubtedly glosses by the translator.

planetary, that is to say, closest to humanity1.

The Averroists, moreover, parted ways on this point from their master's doctrine. Several even identified the active intellect with God, although Ibn-Roshd formally- This opinion was strongly contested in Alexander II. One point At least one thing is beyond doubt: it is the active intellect, common to all humankind, as Ibn-Roschd, bears no resemblance whatsoever to the universal soul of the universe, which is found in several schools of the anTiquity, among the Stoics for example. If the personality of each man is seriously compromised by the system- In Arabic, the individuality of the human spirit is rather exaggerated rather than misunderstood, since it is transformed into a elementary principle, completely distinct from individuals those who participate.

Thus, the philosophy of Ibn Rushd appears to us as a very strongly linked system of naturalism in all its parts. The universe is made up of a hierarchy of eternal, autonomous and primitive principles, vaguely attached to a higher unit. One of them is the thought that constantly manifests itself on something point of the universe, and forms permanent consciousness of humanity 3. This immutable thought knows neither There is no progress or turning back. The individual participates in it to varying degrees various; all the more perfect, all the more happy as This participation is closer to fullness.

1. Epit. Metaph., f. 397 v°, 398 (ed. 1560). — Cf. Zimara, Tabula and dilucidations in dicta Arist. and Averr. (Venet., 1565), f. 75.

2. Cf. Zimara, Solut. contrad., f. 176.

3. This is how Cremonini heard it very well: “Putat Averroes speciem “humanam esse veluti quamdam sphseram proportione respondentem “sphœris cœlestibus, et putat quodsinguh” sphœrœ conjuncta is intelligent “gentia una, ratione eu jus talis sphœra movetur. » (Codd, S. Marci, (classis VI, cod. 70.)

What role will immortality play in this system? Logic could not allow for any hesitation in this regard.

§IX,

The extreme precision with which Peripateticism had separated the two elements of understanding, the elerelative element and the absolute element, should lead him to split human personality in the question of immorality tality. Despite the efforts of orthodox Aristotelianism, the philosopher's opinion on this matter cannot be doubted.

teuse1. The universal intellect is incorruptible and separable of the body; the individual intellect is perishable and ends with body 2.

All Arabs understood the thought in this sense of Aristotle. The active intellect alone is immortal; but the intelactive reading is nothing other than the common reason for Humanity: humanity alone is therefore eternal. The proDivine evidence, says the Commentator, has granted to the being perishable the force to reproduce, to console him and to give him, failing anything else, this kind of immortality 3. Sometimes, it is true, Ibn-Roshd's opinion can be... tend in the sense that the lower faculties (sensitivity, Memory, love, hate)* have no place in the other life, while the higher faculties (reason) survivewind alone at the dissolution of the body. That's about it.

4. Cf. Barthélémy Saint-Hilaire, Treatise on the Soul, pref., p. xl et seq. — Ravaisson, Essay on Metaphor, vol. I, p. 590.

2. Touto (Jl6vov aôdvaxov xai afôiov (De anima, 1. III, cap. v, § 2). — 'YtojjlIvei.... p) rcàca, àXV ô vouç • tïccsocv yàp àSuvarov 't'atoç (Metaph. A, chapter in). See, however, Moral, Nicom., 1. I, chapter 11; 1. X, chapter 11.

3. Sollicitudo divina, quum non potuerit facere ipsum permanere secundum individuum, miserta est ejus dando eivirtutem qua potest permanere in specie (De anima, f. 133 v°).

4. De anima y f. 121.

■the interpretation that Albert and Saint Thomas gave to Aristotle's sentiment. But the constant doctrine of Arab philosophers, to whom Ibn Rushd in general is far removed to soften, should serve to complete his thinking on this point, which he has never, it must be admitted, expressly dealt with. But the denial of immortality and resurrection, the doctrine that man should expect no other rewardthinks that the one he finds here below in his own perfection, constituted the main criticism that the Zealots of orthodoxy, Gazali and the Motecallemîn? opposed the philosophers.

I can only explain it by a manifest contradiction. certain passages of the Destruction of Destruction, where, so as not to compromise philosophy in front His opponents, Ibn-Roshd, seem to admit the immorality of tality1. I have already pointed out that it is not in this book in which one must seek the true thought of Ibn-Roshd. The soul is sometimes presented there as absolutely inde-hanging from the body2. "The old man's eyesight is weak, not because his eyesight is impaired, but because that the eye, which serves as its instrument, is weakened. If the old-Lard had the young man's eyes; he would see just as well. that the young man. Sleep, moreover, provides a clear evidence of the permanence of the substrate of the soul; for all the operations of the soul and all the organs that serve as instruments for these operations are as if annihilated during that time, and yet the soul does not It never ceases to be. Thus the scholar manages to share the Common beliefs about immortality. The intellect of all-theirs is not attached to any particular organ, while

---

1. In the dialogue entitled Eudemus, Aristotle similarly followed the opi-vulgar notion about immortality.

2. Destr. Dcstr. , leave at., disptlt. II, f. 344- v° and sqq.

that the senses are localized, and can be affected in the different parts of the body of contradictory sensations stories. » To consider only this passage in isolation, one might se-would have attempted to attribute to Ibn-Roshd the idea of immortality orthodox sentiments that the following page refutes He argues more clearly than ever that "the soul does not is not divided according to the number of individuals, that is one in Socrates and in Plato, that the intellect has no-no individuality, and that individuation only comes from of sensitivity.

However, it is not without some reason that plu-Averroist gentlemen of the Renaissance, Niphus for example-ple, invoked the theory of the unity of the intellect against Pomponat's absolute negations. Averroes he himself had sought by this trick to maintain a sim-a crevice of immortality. If the soul were determined and individual-Dualized within the individual, it would become corrupted along with him. like a magnet with iron. The distinction of the indi-Individuals come from matter, form on the contrary is composed common to several2. But what makes it permanent is Form, not matter.3. Form gives it its name to things; an axe without a blade is no longer a axe, but iron. It is only through abuse that/a body Death can be called man4. Therefore, as a plu-Once realized, the individual disappears; but as a participant to a common type, that is, as a species, it is immortal.

î. Destr. Destr., go away. , dispute. II, f. 349 v°,350.

2. Destr. Destr., depart ai., disp. III, f. 350. — Metapli. , VII, comm. xxvm.

3. Continuum. est non per suam materiam, sed per suam formam [De anima, 1. I, f. 46, ed. 1574).

4. Ibid., 1. II, f. 52 y° and sqq. —Cf. Zimara, Solut. contract!., f. 193 v°, 194 (ed. 1560).

Moreover, the individual soul perceives nothing without the i- imagination. Just as the senses only perceive in pre- Sense of the object? Similarly, the soul only thinks in front of Image 1. From which it follows that individual thought is not not eternal: for if it were, the images would be too. also. Incorruptible in itself, the intellect becomes corruptible by the conditions of its exercise.

As for popular myths about the afterlife, Ibn-Roschdne makes no secret of the aversion they inspire in him. "Among "Dangerous fictions," he said, "we must count those that..." tend to view virtue only as a a means of achieving happiness. Therefore, virtue is not nothing more, since one only abstains from pleasure in the hope of being compensated with interest. The brave man will not go seeking death only to avoid a greater evil. The righteous person will only respect the property of others in order to acquire... the double 2. Elsewhere he strongly criticizes Plato of having sought to represent to the imagination, through the The myth of Her the Armenian, the state of souls in the other life. "These fables," he said, "only serve to distort the mind of the people, and especially of the children, without having any advances real tage to improve them. I know men who share- morally upright, who reject all these fictions, and do not "They do not yield to those who admit them."

Ibn Rushd's opposition to the dogma of resurrection This also stems from his antipathy towards imaginings. too precise that we try to make about the other life. Resurrection is, in truth, only the Semitic form of the belief in immortality. The peoples of semi-

1. De anima, 1. III, f. 160 and 174 (ed. 1550). — De sensu et sensib. (t. VI, ed. 1560, f. 193, 194). — From beat, ariunœ, cap. m and iv.

2. Paraphrase. inRemp. Plat., f. 494 (Opp., t. III, ed. 1560).

3. Ibid.9t 520.

Ticks will never have conceived of human nature as formed by combining two juxtaposed substances, the body and soul; also, when these peoples arrived at more fixed ideas about immortality, did they have to imagineto invent some way of bringing these bones, this flesh, which was placed in the tomb. As a consequence, the the form of disbelief in the East has always been the zendikism, the denial of resurrection. In the book of Job, who represents for us the philosophical state of the East Semitic, around the 6th or 7th century BC, this dogma vaguely appears with the anxieties and the doubts that he already aroused. The same fluctuations refound among the ancient Arabs: some did tie a horse to their tomb so as not to be forced to walk on the day of resurrection[1]; the Others believed that a brain formed from the dead person's brain bird that visits the tomb once every century; others attributed everything to nature and rejected also creation and resurrection. The opposition manages to express itself clearly among the Sadducees and among freethinkers, whom the Talmud calls Epicunothing. We must see in Saint Paul (1 Corinthians, chapter 15) the argumentsubtle and original argument that he opposes them. At the ve, at the In the 7th century, Zendikism appears to have its center on the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates, and in the southern parts of the Sasanian Empire. In The Quran appears on every page, a concern of difficulties of this dogma and the incredulity it encounters trait 2. The same anxiety is betrayed throughout the theology-

---

[1] Abulfaradj, Dyn., p. 160. — Caussin de Perceval, Essay on history. Arabs, vol. I, p. 349.

2. See especially on 51, v. 57. It almost looks like a translation of the enThe aforementioned right of Saint Paul.

Muslim community, through the almost infinite number of treaties of the controversy that this subject provoked. As for the philosophers Arab philosophers, all without exception, rejected the resurrectiontion like a fable. This is one of the main criticisms that their address Gazali1. The ambiguous position where He found Ibn-Roshd facing this opponent, and he inspired some of the precautions that are imposed on oneself almost always those who defend the freedom of the thought against the orthodox. "The first ones," he said, Those who spoke of the resurrection were the prophets. of Israel after Moses, then the Gospel of the Christians, then the Sabaeans, whose religion, according to Ibn-Hazm, is the oldest in the world. The motif that has been so popular of founders of religions to establish this dogma, was the effi- the efficacy they attributed to this belief in order to moralize men and incite them to virtue by their own interest... I don't blame Gazali and the Motecalle- It is wrong to say that the soul is immortal, but to claim- to say that the soul is only an accident, and that man will take up the same body that has fallen into decay. No, he will get another one similar to the first. because what has once been corrupted cannot return to the life. These two bodies are one, considered in terms of essence- one piece, but they are two in number. Aristotle said so. said in the final lines of the Generation Treaty and of Corruption: the corruptible being can never to become identical to himself again, but he can return to the The specific variety to which it belonged. When the air comes out of water and that the water comes out of the air, each of these sub-

---

1. See the treatise translated by M. Schmœlders, Essay, p. 36, and the analysis of the Destruction of the Philosophers, in Hadji-Khalfa, vol. II, p. A66 and next. (ed. Fluegel). — Pococke, Philosophas avToZlotxy.TOç, ? p. 20.

2. Destr. Destr., depart ai., disput. IV, f. 351 et seqq.

stances does not return to the individual she once was, but to the species it was originally.1

§x.

Morality occupies very little place in philosophy. Ibn Rushd's philosophy. In general, Aristotle's Ethics, probably because they carry a much more distinctive character more Hellenic, did not have a fortune among the Arabs comparable to that of his logical, physical and metaphysics. Ibn Rushd's discussion with the Motecallemîn on the principle of morality, merits only to draw our attention. The Motecallemîn supported that good is what God wills, and that God wills it not as a result of an intrinsic and prior reason has its will, but only because it wants to. Garlic- We have seen them attribute to God the power of to realize the contradictions and transfer to his free will The entire government of the universe. This constituted a a very consistent system with itself, which Ibn-Roshd has never stopped fighting in all its forms. This time he has no difficulty in showing that such a doctrine in morale overturns all notions of right and wrong, and destroys the religion it claims to consolidate.2 Ibn-

Roschd also supported against the Motecallemîn the True philosophical theories on freedom. Man is neither absolutely free, nor absolutely predestined. Freedom, when considered in the soul, is complete and absolute; but It is limited by the inevitability of external circumstances. The efficient cause of our actions is within us; but the cause occasional is outside of us. Because what attracts us is independent of us and governed solely by natural laws,

1. To bother, and corr., 1. II, f. 313.

2, Paraphrase, Repue l. Flat,, f. 506, that is to say, divine providence. That is why the The Quran presents man sometimes as absolutely predestined, sometimes as the arbiter of his actions. This so-intermediate solution between that of the Djabarites and that of the Radarites is given by Ibn-Roshd, in his Treatise on the demonstration of religious dogmas, like a example of philosophical and eclectic interpretation that can be given to the doctrines of theology1. Similarly, he says elsewhere2, that the raw material is also suitable for receiving contrary modifications, Similarly, the soul has the power to choose between the contrary acts. This freedom, however, is neither the caPrice, nor chance. Active powers do not know not a state of indifference; equal contingency does not arise-against that in a world of passivity.

Ibn Rushd's policy, as one might expect, did not Not very original. She is entirely in her A paraphrase of Plato's Republic. Nothing more. It's strange to see it taken seriously and analyzed as a technical treatise, this curious fantasy of the Greek mind. The government should be entrusted to old people. It is necessary. to inspire virtue in citizens by teaching them rheToric, poetics, and topics. Poetry, that of the Arabs especially, is pernicious3. The ideal of the State is to needing neither a judge nor a doctor. The army has no other function than to ensure the safety of the people. Could it be that the sheepdogs were eating the sheep? Military fiefdoms are the scourge of states.<sup>4</sup> Women differ Men by degree, not by nature. They are suitable

1. Munck, From here, of the philological sciences, vol. III, pp. 171-172.

2. II, Phys., f. 31 v. —Periherm., f. 48.

3. Op. cit., f. 495.

4. Ibid., f. 497.

to everything that men do, war, philosophy, etc.
only to a lesser degree. Sometimes they surpass, as in music, so that the per-
The perfection of this art would be that the music be composed by a man and executed by a woman. The example of Some African states are proving that they are very capable to war, and there would be nothing extraordinary about that that they might come to power in the republic republic. Do we not see, in fact, that the females of sheepdogs guard the flock as well as the Males? "Our social state," adds Ibn-Roshd, "cannot to reveal all the resources within the women; it seems that they are destined only for to give birth and breastfeed their children, and this state of Servitude destroyed in them the capacity for great things.
That's why we don't see any women among us.
endowed with moral virtues; their life unfolds like that plants, and they are a burden on their husbands themselves-same. Hence also the misery that devours our cities; for Women are twice as numerous as men there, and do not can obtain through their work the necessary K » The A tyrant is one who rules for himself and not for the people. The worst tyranny is that of the priests. 2.
The former Arab republic perfectly reproduced-that of Plato. Moawia? by founding the autocracy The Umayyads spoiled this beautiful ideal and ushered in the era of the boule-payments, including our island (Andalusia), adds Ibn-Roschd is far from being out.

1. Op. cit., f. 501.

2. ibid., f. Si 3.

3. Ibid., f. 514 v°. — In general, this paraphrase is full of interesting details for the history of Muslim Spain.

S xi,

To what extent did Averroes truly deserve it?
to become the representative of disbelief and contempt of existing religions, that's what makes it difficult to deciding based on the distance we are at. Religion being the deepest expression of human consciousness nity at a given time, in order to fully understand the a century-old religious system, one would have to live off its life with a depth that even the most penetrating historiantant would barely be capable. Certainly, nothing prevents what minds as practiced as those of philosophers Arabs, and in particular Ibn Rushd, shared the religious faith of their compatriots. Indeed, religion dominant usually creates a privilege against the critick. Can we call into question perfect good faith of so many great minds of past centuries, who have accepted without question certain beliefs which, to others Do the times trouble a child's conscience? It is Therefore, it is very possible that Ibn Rushd believed in Islam. especially when you consider how much the supernatural is little attention paid to the essential dogmas of this religion gion, and how close it is to the most cult refined.

It is remarkable that Ibn-Abi-Oceibia does not leave room for doubt. No doubt was cast upon Ibn Rushd's orthodoxy. Al-Ansari, Abd-el-Wahîd and Leo Africanus, on the contrary, testifiedthey say that his religious beliefs were, on the part of His contemporaries were the subject of widely varying judgments. wrote works both for and against his orthodoxy. Leo or His translator claims to have had a poem in his hands in the form of a dialogue, where one of the interlocutors exclaimed the knowledge and virtues of Ibn-Roshd, while the other presented him as a heretic*. This latter opinionnion appears to have been that of a biographer cited by Léon. Relating the adventure of Ibn-Badja, freed from prison by Ibn Rushd's father, he added: "This father did not know not that his son would one day be an even worse hereticcore 2. » On the contrary, one of his close friends, a devotee character, whose words El-Ansari quotes 3, assured that these accusations were completely unfounded, and that he had seen the philosopher go to prayer several times and perform ablutions, "God knows what is the case," he said. another) it is certain at least that these are the intrigues of his envious rivals who had him condemned. As for him; he does not thought only of commenting on Aristotle, and of restoring agreement between religion and philosophy*.

While Averroes remained in the eyes of Christians the representativefeeling disbelief, it is above all, it must be said, because his name having erased that of the other philosophers Muslim scholars, he became the representative of the Arabs - bism, which, in medieval thought, was allied very close to disbelief. Ibn-Roshd makes no attempt to hide it not just some of his doctrines, but that of eternity of the world, for example, are contrary to teaching of all religions. His method is to philosophize freely, without seeking to offend theology, as also without bothering to avoid it. He doesn't attack the theologians only when they set foot on the ground of rational discussion. The Motecallemîn, who pretended to demonstrate their dogmas through dialectics.

---

1. Apud Fabricium, mil. gr., t. XIII, p. 228.
2.'/£«&,p.'279.

3. Additional Ms. ar., n° 682, f. 8.

4. Ibid., f. 8 v°.

are refuted on every page of his writings, i.e., Gazali especially, "this renegade of philosophy, this ingrate who drew everything he knows from the writings of philosophers, and "Is he turning the weapons they lent him against them?" attacked with a kind of fury.2 One cannot, he said, to attribute it solely to a change of mind, or to the desire to to reconcile with the theologians, to whom he was subjectpect, the composition of his book on the Destruction of Philosophers. Theologians have always been the enemies-
He put philosophers in charge, and he wanted to protect himself against their hatred. "For us," adds Ibn-Roshd, "at the risk of us to expose to the fury of the persecutors of philosophy, our mother, we will expose the poison hidden in his book 3. » Sometimes incredulous thought discovers itself with even more freedom. In the first book of Physics, after having sought to establish the impossibigiven the nature of the dogma of creation, he wonders what could have been the origin of such an absurd opinion. "Habit, rehe pondered. Just as a man accustomed to poison can taking with impunity, likewise habit can make acaccepting the strangest opinions. Now, the opinions of Vulgar expressions are formed only through habit. The vulgar believe what he keeps hearing repeated. And that's why His faith is stronger than the philosopher's faith; for he has not custom of hearing the opposite of one's belief, while that this happens very often to philosophers. Also seeWe frequently encounter men nowadays who, entering suddenly in the study of speculative sciences, per-

---

1. See especially the Paraphrase of Plato's Republic, p. 494, 520, etc.

2. Destr. Désir., disp. VI, f. 206 (ed. 1560).

3. Destr. Destr., Prol. Legal inimici reperiuntur philosophorum..., Our itr'itur lUorem persecutorum nostrœ ma tris charissimœ philosophiez gerentes.,. .

their religious faith, which they held only through habit, and become zendiks - »

Even the impious thought that, throughout The Middle Ages, weighed on Averroes, the idea of the three religions comparative gions, which is not found in embryo in its writings. These expressions: Omnes leges, eloquent trium legurn quse hodie sunt*, often return under its pen, and seem to imply in his mind a gene- bold realization. Indifference in religion is, moreover, one of the criticisms that Gazali levels at philosophers. ((The source of all their mistakes, he said in the pre- Facing its destruction is the confidence they have in the names of Socrates, Hippocrates, Plato, Aris- tote, the admiration they profess for their genius and for their subtlety, and finally the belief that these great masters were led by the depth of their minds to reject any religion and to consider its precepts as the work of artifice and imposture.3

Moreover, we possess two treatises where Ihn-Roschd sought to develop its religious system; one: On "V. agreement of religion with philosophy1", the other: On the true meaning of religious dogmas*. Philosophy is the highest goal of human nature; but little

4. Phys.,I, f. 17, 18 (ed. 1552).

2. Phys., 1. I, passim; 1. VIII, f. 196 v°.— Metapïi., 1. XII, f. 326 and 328v. — See especially Destr. Destr., pars ait. disput. IV. The expression In Averroes' translations, "loquentes" means theologians, correspondents. corresponding to Montecallemin. Lex and legal, likewise designates religion and the theologians,

3. The Arabic text of this preface can be found in Hadji-Khalfa, vol. II, p. 466 et seq.

4. In Hebrew, at the National Library, old collection, no. 345.

5. In Arabic, at the Escorial, n° 629. In Hebrew, at the Bibl. nat., fund of The Oratory, no. 111. — Mr. Munck has given an excellent analysis of these two treatises (Dict. des sc.phil., t III, p. 170-171).

of men can attain it. The prophetic revelation-The tic y supplants for the vulgar. Philosophical disputes Phictical arts are not made for the people, because they do not have These disputes only serve to weaken his faith. These arguments are with reasons defended, since it suffices for the happiness of the simple that they understand what they can understand.1 Ibn-Rosclid strives to prove against Gazali, through versets of the Quran, that God commands the search for the truth through science; which only the philosopher understands truly religion; that none of the sects that divide the Muslim world, Ash'arites, Batenians, Motazales does not possess absolute truth, and that in good faith one does not may force the philosopher to take sides between these differences different sects.

The same views are reproduced in the last chapter. pitting the Destraction of Destruction with a re-Remarkable firmness. Popular beliefs about God, angels, prophets, worship, prayers, sacrifices have the effect of inspiring men to virtue. The re-Religions are an excellent instrument of morality, especially by the principles common to all of them, and that they derive from natural reason. Man com-always begins by living by general beliefs before to live his own life; and even when it has happened to a more individual way of thinking, instead of to despise the doctrines in which he was raised, he must seek to interpret them in a positive light. Thus the one who inspires doubts in the people about their religion and He points out contradictions in the prophets, is heretic and must bear the penalties established in his re-religion against heretics. In times when several i.Destr. Destr., available III, p. 116 v° and available. Lively. 208 \°.

Religions are present; one must choose the noblest. This is how the philosophers who taught in Alexandrie embraced the religion of the Arabs, as soon as it came to their attention, and that the wise men of Rome became Christians, as soon as the Christian religion was known. Religions, moreover, are not composed exclusively of sively neither of reason nor of prophecy, but of the one and on the other hand in varying proportions. The figurative part-The real and material nature of their dogmas must be explained in the sense spiritual. The wise man does not allow himself any words against the established religion. He avoids, however, speaking of God in the equivocal manner of the vulgar. The Epicurean, who seeks to destroy both religion and virtue, deserves the death1.

Certainly, one would have expected more tolerance, after such a frank declaration of rationalism. But it is necessary remember that Ibn-Roshd, in his work on the Destruction of The Destruction, the philosophers' apology against their en-enemies, who accused them of impiety, had to show se-harsh for those whose boldness compromised the philosophy. His opinion on the agreement of philosophy and of religion, moreover, appears to have been professed by the most Arab philosophers. "What I do," said one of them, as staged by Gazaïi, I do not do it on the authority of no one; but, after having studied philosophy, I I understand very well what prophecy is. Wisdom and moral improvement, that is what it is about reduced. Its commandments aim to put a to restrain the common people, to prevent them from inter-destroy, quarrel, give in to evil I have inclinations. But as for me, who have nothing to do with I am not in common with this ignorant multitude. obliged to hold back: I belong to the wise, I cultivate the I know wisdom, it is enough for me, and I can with it to do without authority. That, adds Gazali, is what has-boutit the faith of those who study philosophy, as This is evident in Ibn-Sina and Alfarabi*. The theory ra-a nationalist of prophecy, explained as a psychic fact chological, a faculty of human nature raised to its the highest power, is found in all philosophers Arabs, and forms one of the most important points and the more characteristic of their doctrine 2.

1. Opp., t. X(ed. 1560), f. 351 et seq. — Oportet omnera îiominem recipere principia legis, et procul dubio ut exaltet eum qui posuite ea; nam negatio eorura et dubitatio in eis destroyed esse honiinis, quare oportet interficere haereticos [Ibid. , f. 335}. — See Ritter, Gesck. der christ. P/u7.,IVTh.,S. 117 ff.

We can see that we shouldn't demand extreme ri-resistance to Ibn-Roshd's doctrine on the relationships of the philosophy and prophecy: we will guard ourselves to reproach him for it. Logic leads to abyss-My point: inconsistency is an essential element of all Human affairs. Who can fathom the indiscernible? mystery of his own consciousness, and, in the great chaos of human life, what reason knows exactly where it ends

His chances of seeing clearly and his right to make a statement?

Orthodox doctors among Muslims have I perceived these nuances with great insight. They are suspicious of rational science because it ap- The inevitable consequence of not needing revelation is that...

1. Trans. by Schmœelders, p. 73.

2. Cf. Dcslr. Destr.f He leaves, dispute. I. — Avicenna, Aphonsmi of anima, g 28. — Ibn-Tofail, PJiilos. autoclul., sub fin. The Jews are concerned- They also borrowed heavily from the psychological theory of prophecy: Saadia Gaun, Muimonides, and Lci ben-Gerson treated it with great developments.

The foundation of these sciences, they say, is to believe in the necessity- to the city and to the eternity of the world, to deny the resurrection, the Final judgment, to live without restraint, surrendering oneself to his passions i. Often, it must be admitted, science rational put Muslims in a kind of materialism. They were philosophers, those formidable ones. Hashishmen, whose henchmen made everyone tremble the kings, and struck their blows right up to the person caliphs. Having retired to their castle of Alamut, they they spent their time composing treatises on philosophy Isophy; when the Tartars entered their nest of vulture, they found there a scientific establishment- complete file, immense library, a study of physics, an observatory equipped with the most advanced instruments perfected2. Philosophers, in general, passed for people of questionable faith. Ibn-Sina was a complete libertine, to the style of the poets of Muhammad's time, leading joyful life, drinking wine, loving music, and passing at night in orgies with his disciples. When it was objected to him The religious defense: "Wine," he said, "is forbidden because that it stirs up enmities and quarrels; but being pre- I take it for use in these excesses by my wisdom. sharpen my mind3." The Arab philosophers were therefore in the midst of their coreligionists, more or less what they were The libertines of the 17th century. One could not believe that Men so far-sighted do not see further than the vulgar in these dogmas that require mystery. “Often,” said Gazali4, “one sees one reading the Quran, as-

1. Treatise on Deliverance from Error, by Gazali, published by M. Schmoe ders, p. 29etsuiv.

2. V. Lenormant, Quest. histor., Part II, p. 144-145.

3. Gazali, op. cit., p. 73–74.

4. Ibid.

sister at religious ceremonies and prayers, praise the religion is just talk. When asked: If the proPheism is false, so why do you pray? He replies: It's a physical exercise, a custom of this country, a a way to save his life. However, he never stops drinking wine and engaging in all kinds of abominations "actions and impiety."

There can be no doubt that there is a great deal of exaggeration tion in these declamations of Gazali. It is possible that this enthusiastic, incapable of calmly philosophizing, and endrawn towards Sufism by his ardent imagination, he slandered his former colleagues to satisfy his passion and his taste for excess in everything. We often get irritated. to see others walking peacefully along the path that we were unable to maintain, and ardent spirits arrive at to imagine that one is only consistent in exextremes. Perhaps Gazali also hadn't absolutely wrong, and did the philosophers deserve the reproach of inconsequence or mental restriction. God knows.

PART TWO.

AVERROISM.

CHAPTER ONE.

AVERROISM AMONG THE JEWS.

If.

Arab philosophy has not really been taken to the sfools than by the Jews. Philosophers have never been within Islamism, only isolated, ostracized, and persecuted men... cut, and the two or three princes who protected them have incurred the condemnation of sincere Muslims. works are found almost exclusively in translations Hebrew or in transcriptions in Hebrew characters, Made for Jewish use. All literary culture The Jewish experience in the Middle Ages is merely a reflection of the culture Muslim civilization, much more analogous to their genius than civilChristianization. It was under Arab influence that manifested in the 10th century, in the academy of Sora (near Baghdad), the first attempt at rational theology, to which the name Saadia is linked. The domination Muslim women in Spain produced the same results. No conquerors ever ventured further than the Arabs. Spain's tolerance and moderation towards the vanquished. Also, from the 10th century onwards, Arabic was the common language of Muslims, Jews, and Christians1. Marriages

1. Manuscripts in Spanish written in script are found Arabic, and vice versa. See Journal des savants, year V, 16 Germinal.

Mixed marriages were frequent, despite opposition from the clergy. Latin and ecclesiastical studies had fallen into the most complete discrediting: we saw a bishop composing... kasicla, Arabic songs, observing all the de- subtleties of language and measure1. Alvare de Cordoue strongly criticizes his compatriots for preferring from Arabic letters to Christian letters, from ignoring the both their religion and their language, and to eagerly seek- the assonances and ornaments of rhetoric Muslim

The Jews accepted the conArab quest. This poor race finally found a little resting during his long journey, and like a sou- to come from Jerusalem. Spain had long been For the Jews, a second homeland. From Tan 125, under Adrien, a large number of families who escaped the disaster- stars of their nation had taken refuge there. Persecuted by The Visigoths and the Jews welcomed the Arabs as Liberators. Science and a taste for the same studies. completed the fusion of the two races: we saw Jews preside over the Academy of Cordoba.3 The community intellectual culture has always been the best way to establish tolerance.

Although Jewish philosophy, since Maimonides, does not that is a reflection of that of the Arabs, it must be acknowledged however, the initiation of the Jews of Spain into philosophy

,on .

Notices and extracts, vol. IV, p. 626 (articles by M. de Sacy). M. Viardot pointed out a very curious example at the Escorial [History of the Arabs and the Moors of Spain, vol. II, p. 186, note),

1. Gayangos, Thehistory of theMohammedan dynasties, t. Iev, p-157-161.

2. Cf. du Cange, Gloss. med. and inf. lat., prof., gxxxi.

3. Middeldorpf, De instituais literariis in Hisp, quœ Arabes auctores habuerunty p. 54, philosophy came directly from the impetus given to the studies from the East by Saadia. Hasdai ben-Schaphrout, Mede-the son of Hakem II, used the credit he enjoyed with from this caliph to make flourish among his coreligionists the rational studies inaugurated by the school of Sora1. Ibn-Gabirol (Avicébron) is one generation earlier than Ibn-Badja, the first Arab-Spanish philosopher whose the name has acquired true fame. Ihn-Gabirol, It is true, among his coreligionists he was only an appa-almost isolated 2. By his boldness he displeased theologians, and by the concessions he made to ortho-His dogma of creation led him to find himself overwhelmed. by the Averroist Peripatetics, successors of Maimonide. Hence the oblivion into which the Hebrew text had fallen.

of the Source of Life, while this work enjoyed in Latin of such great authority. Nevertheless, from the
In the second half of the 11th century, Aristotelianism was very active.
credited among the Jews, and the opposing doctrine of the Mo-Tecallemîn Arabs universally rejected theology.
took the alarm and attempted a reaction, represented above by the famous book Khozari or Cosri by Judah Hallevi.
A great disturbance entered people's minds;
all possible methods were tried to con-to reconcile Jewish dogma with reason. Then appeared the second Moses, the one who, summarizing by his genius the previous efforts, deserves to be considered as the founder of philosophical Judaism.

1. Munck, Dict. des se, phîl. , art. Juifs, p. 358. — Philoxène Luzzatto, Notice on Hasdaï ben Scliaplirout (Paris, 1852).

2. A Jewish philosopher of the twelfth century, whose mot-nography, R. Abraham ben-David Hallévi, however, makes great use of of the Source of Life. Cf. The Religions - Philosophy of the R. Abraham ben David ka-Levi, von Joseph Gugenheimer (Angsburg, 1850).

§n.

If we were to believe Leo Africanus1, Moses Maimonide would have been the disciple and even the guest of Averroes untilthan at the time of the latter's disgrace. Moses, then, for fear of seeing himself in the alternative or of surrendering his master or to refuse him hospitality, would have fled to Egypt. Mr. Munck[2] has demonstrated all that is impossible in this account. When Ibn-Roshd was proswritten, it had been more than thirty years since Maimonides had left Spain to escape persecution Almohads. Maimonides clearly states in the More Nebouhim. (II, 9) that he was a student of a student of Ibn-Bâdja; but nowhere in this work does he mention Ibn-Roshd. Moreover, we have the precise date on which it began to become acquainted with the writings of the Commentator, and This date takes us back to the last years of his life. In a letter addressed from Cairo, in the year 1190-1191, To his beloved disciple Joseph ben-Juda, he expressed himself thus: “I have recently received everything that Ibn-Roshd composed on the works of Aristotle, except for the book of Meaning and Sensibility, and I saw that he encountered the true, with great accuracy; but, so far, I haven't found the time to study his writings.[3] Therefore, Basnage[4] is quite wrong to claim that Maimonide learned from Averroes indifference in religion. MayMonide could not have been a student of Ibn-Bâdja either, as

---

i. Apud Fabr., Bibl. gr'u, t. XIII, p. 296.

[2] In his account of Joseph ben-Juda, disciple of Maimonides. DayAsian National (July 1842), pp. 31, 32.

[3] Munck, 1. c., p. 31.

[4] Hist. Jud.f 1, IX, cap. x.

Leo Africanus claims this, and as has been repeated after him, since he was only three years old when this philosopher died in 1138.

It is therefore only indirectly, through the new impulsesuch as he gave to Jewish studies, that Maimonides established the authority of Ibn-Roshd among his coreligionists. Maimonides and Ibn Rushd drew from the same source. and, each accepting on their own the tradition of the pe~ Arab ripatetism, arrived at an almost philosophy identical \ It is therefore not surprising that Brucker and the other historians of philosophy, struck by these ressemblances and strengths of Leon's authority, have placed Maimonides among the disciples of Averroes. He is especially in his polemic against the Motecallemîn that appeared-reflect the Jewish doctor's sympathies for the philosophers Arab pheasants. The hypothesis of atoms, the negation of natural laws and causality are energetically combated in his writings. If he does not support, as some Jewish Peripatetics, that matter is eternal nelle, and which Moses did not hear described in the first book He does not believe that Genesis's arrangement of things Nor is it that the eternity of the world is a very serious matter.

heresy. His doctrine on the hierarchy of the spheres and the divine action that links them together, is identhat of the philosophers. Like them too, he rejects any assimilation of God to creatures: one can to say of God what he is not, but one cannot say this that he is. He doesn't even dare to attribute existence and the unit, lest these attributes be considered

1. On the doctrine of Maimonides, see the excellent article by Mr. Franck, in the Dict. des se. phll., t. IV. However, has Mr. Franck not been inclined to see Maimonides more as a Jewish dogmatist than as a philosopher Arabic?

as distinct from the divine substance, and especially from fear of admitting something that resembles hy-Christian postases. This is the pure doctrine of the Moattils.
His theory of the intellect is barely distinguishable from that of Ibn Rushd. Above the material intellect depends-dependent on the senses, is the acquired intellect, formed by the emanating tion of the universal intellect, in perpetual act, which is God himself. Maimonides, however, seems to individualize-to read intelligence more than the Commentator does,
and, by attributing to the soul a distinct substantiality, to establish the condition of his immortality. Resurrection
It embarrasses him; he tries to explain it without getting anywhere.
satisfactory. It must even be acknowledged that its objectives-The tions sometimes go so far as to attack immortality. The
The perfection of man consists in cultivating and raising his Nature speaks science. Science is the true cult that one owes to God; through science, the beatific vision can to begin here below; but science is not accessible to all; God has provided for the simple, through the pro-Prophecy. Prophecy is a more perfect natural state, where a few privileged men arrive, more wealthy gifted by nature. Prophetic revelation does not differ-does not differ, as to the manner, in the infusion of the intellect active or the permanent revelation of reason.

S m.

For such a doctrine to be called Averroism,
The only thing missing was the name of Averroes. Under the high re-Maimonides' command, this name became almost instantly among the Jews the first philosophical authority sophistic. A curious letter from Joseph ben-Juda, dis-Maimonides' letter, addressed to his master, reveals in a word the importance that the Commentator, perhaps Even during his lifetime, he had acquired it among the Jews. "Yesterday, your beloved daughter, Pleiades, the beautiful, the charming, has She found favor in my eyes. The young girl pleased me, and I I became sincerely engaged to her, according to the given law on Sinai. I wed her through these three things: in him giving as a dowry the money of friendship; writing to him a contract of love, for I loved her; and in embracing her, as the young man embraced the virgin. And after having Having acquired her in all these ways, I invited her to the bridal bed.

of love; I used neither persuasion nor violence, But she gave me her love, because I had gave mine, and that I had attached my soul to the his own. All of this happened in front of two witnesses known friends, Ben-Obeid-Allah (Maimonides) and Ben-Roschd. But she was still in the bridal bed, under my power, that she had already become unfaithful to me and turned to other lovers[1]

This fiancée is philosophy, which Joseph ben-Judah had received in marriage from his master, and of whom he did not apparently did not withdraw all the desired satisfaction rable. We owe it to Joseph ben-Juda's taste for the allegories offer a no less curious explanation of the struggle of Jacob with the angel. It is the intellectual soul of Jacob that struggles and strives to reach the degree of Vin-such an active telect, represented by the angel; but she cannot to reach, as long as she is chained by the bonds of the body, and the struggle lasts until the rising of dawn, that is-that is to say, until the soul, delivered from the darkness of matter, having arrived at eternal light[2]. An in-interesting account, which has been preserved for us by Djemâl-ed-

---

[1] Munck, Notice on Joseph ben-Juda, p. 62.

[2] Munck, ibid., p. 55.

dîn al-Kifti, in his History of the Philosophers, and who was copied by Aboulfaradj*, which completes our understanding. to draw an analogy between the doctrines of Joseph ben-Juda and those of Ibn-Roshd: "I was connected with him," said Djemâl-eddîn, with whom I had a close friendship. One day I said to him: If it is true that the soul survives the body and that it is retained after death knowledge of external things, give me your parole that, if you die before me, you will come and tell me this As for him, and if I die before you, I will do the same. We received our mutual promises. He died, and It took several years. Finally, I saw him in a dream: "Doctor," I said to him, "didn't we agree that you "Would you come and tell me about your adventures from beyond the grave?" He turned his face away, laughing; I took him by the hand, and said to him, "You absolutely must tell me what "What happened to you, and what happens after death? — \hini-“Verselj,” he replied, “has joined the universe, and the par-

"This particular individual has entered the game." I understood immediately. What he meant was: that the soul, which is the element universal, had returned to the universe, while the body, which is the particular element, had returned to the center earthly; and having awakened, I admired the subtlety of his answer.

The entire school of Maimonides remained faithful to the peripatetic-Averroistism. This fact was so notorious that Guillaume d'Auvergne was not afraid to say that, among the Jews subjected to the Saracens, there was not a single one who had not abandoned the faith of Abraham, and who was not infected errors of the Saracens or those of the philosophers2.

1. Hist. Dïn., p. 462. The same text was reproduced by M. Munck (op. cit., p. 17-18) and by Wenrich, De auct. gvœc. vers., prof. , p. seen and so on.

2. De legibus (Opp, t. I, p. 25).

Such a pronounced rationalist movement could not fail to excite among theologians a lively opposition tion. Maimonides and philosophy were, for more for a century, the subject of a fierce struggle between the synagogues from Provence, Catalonia, and Aragon. From Both sides excommunicated each other; some were going even going so far as to invoke ecclesiastical authority against their opponents Siastic. Montpellier, Barcelona, Toledo condemned to the fire the writings of Maimon's son; Narbonne, a mo-She alone defended them. The treaties for and against Aristotle and Maimonides succeeded one another from year to year. In 1305, the leader of the theological party, Solomon ben-Adereth is still strong enough to condemn the philosophy in Barcelona, and to prohibit, under penalty of excommunication, to begin the study before twenty-five years. It took the authority of David Kimchi and the activity of... count of Schem-Tob ben-Palkeira, of Jedaia Penini of Béziers, by Joseph ben-Caspi, to definitively ensure-the triumph of Peripateticism in the synagogue, and make the Jewish people the principal representative of the ra-Nationalism in the Middle Ages.

S iv.

Two facts characterize this second period of the Jewish philosophy: 1° The theater changes: fanaticism of the Almohads, while at the same time stifling the philosophy-Phile among Muslims, constrained Jewish civilization to flow back into Christian Spain, into Provence, into Languedoc. Barcelona, Zaragoza, Narbonne, Montpellier-Lier, Lunel, Béziers, Marseille, become the centers

---

1. Cf. Hottinger, Bibl. orient., p. 41-42, SI. Wolf, I, 669, 876; 111, 796; IV, 920.

of this new movement; 2° Jewish philosophy takes on feature for feature, the physiognomy of that of the Arabs. Just-that to Maimonides, this philosophy, although essential-The peripatetic profession develops in a rather independent. Saadia j Ibn-Gabirol) Judah Hallévi raps They call the first scholasticism (Abelard, Roscelin, etc.), prior to the translation of the complete body of Aristotle's work lism; Moses Maimonides, Levi ben Gerson? On the contrary, recall the second scholastic period (Albert, Saint Thomas), encompassing the entirety of the Peripatetic encyclopedia.
The works of Aristotle, accompanied by the great commentary...
Ibn-Roshd's silence will henceforth be the exclusive basis of Jewish philosophy. It is to the Jews that Averroes is re-owes his reputation as a commentator. It's them that he received the title, since solemnly confirmed by the school of Padua, to 'As Soul and Mind' by Aristotle*.
Indeed, the pure text of Aristotle is very rarely encountered in the Hebrew manuscripts. On the contrary, the treaties accompanied by commentary, often even the paraphrases of Averroes, there they simply bear the name of Aristotle.

When the civilization of the Jews had emigrated from the...
Muslim loincloth in Provence and djms les regiojis^adj^- centês aulTPyrénées y^arabe^ which until then had been their common and scholarly language, ceased to be their "familtër7~eT they felt the need to translate everything into Hebrew Important writings in science and philosophy. These Most versions have outlived the originals. and are found in large numbers in libraries, so that knowledge of rabbinic Hebrew is far more necessary than that of Arabic for making history

1. Delitzsch, Anckdota zur Gèschichte der m'iUclalterlicJien Scholastik unterJuden xind Moslemcn (Leipzig, 1841J, p. 302.

History of Arab philosophy1. The method followed in these The translation is, moreover, quite simple. The text is traced rather than translated; often the interpreter... tries to put the Hebrew letters on the letters Arabic. Each Arabic root is rendered by the root corresponding in Hebrew, even though the meaning is different. They are common in both languages. When an Arabic form The Hebrew text is missing; the translator unscrupulously forges it. so that with some practice, one could reestablish without hesitation the Arabic text that the translator A Jew had it right before his eyes. One cannot imagine a loyalty more literal, or rather more radical*. This is not that in certain treatises of a particular character, like the Destruction of Destruction, the paraphrase of Rhetoric, of Poetics, of the Republic of Plato, which the translator allows himself to take the parole in its own name, to replace details special or untranslatable details by other more interesting details resentful in the eyes of his coreligionists, or to make to use more orthodox language with the author 3.

The main glory of this great work of translation tion which occupies the entire 13th century and the first halftied from the 14th century, belongs to the Tibbonid family, originaire of Andalusia and established in Lunel4. If it were necessary to believe the National Library catalogue, Judah

1. Richard Simon had already made this observation. [Supplement to Léon de TSlo- (dène, p. 121. Paris, 1710.)

2. Cf. Goldenthal, Averrols in Arist. Rhetor. how. Pref. in Hebrew, pp. 31-33, and in the Memoirs of the Vienna Academy (philosophy class) hist.), 1850, Grundzùge und Beitràge zu e'inem sprachvergleichenden rabbinisch-philosophischen JForterbuche, p. 422-23.

3. See Destr. Destr., f. 101 v°, 102, 119, 208 >} 344 v°, 352. — Paraphr. Rhet., f. 494.

[4] Cf. Wolf, I, p. 454.— Hist. lit. of France, t XVI, p 381-386.

Aben-Tibbon, the head of this hardworking family, surknown among his coreligionists as the prince of translators teurs, would have already translated Ibn-Roshd's commentaries on Physics, the treatise on the Soul, Meteorology (Hebr. 31 4). But that's a mistake. Judah lived at the end of the 12th century, at a time when there could be no question of translating Ibn-Roshd in Hebrew. It is also by mistake that Bartolocci and Wolf[1] attribute to Samuel Aben-Tibbon the translation of Ibn-Roshd's paraphrase on Physithat. All these works belong to the third TibboMoses Aben-Tibbon. Before Moses, however, a ProVençal established in Naples, and himself allied to the family of Tibbonides (he was Samuel's son-in-law) was the author of The first translation of Averroes. Jacob ben-Abba-Mari, son of Rabbi Simson Antoli, was one of those Jews who Frederick II was pensioning to support his vul- projects the regulation of Arabic science. At the end of his translation of Ibn-Roshd's commentary on the Organon, completed at In Naples in 1232[2], he extolled the munificence of Frederick, his love for science, and wishes for the Messiah to appear during his reign. Antoli is also the author of the translation Hebrew of the Abridged Logic. Finally, the librariesques of Paris, Turin, Vienna possess under his name a translation of the Abridged Almagest by Ibn-Roschd, completed in Naples in 1231.

It is likely that the versions of Antoli, made on-While the Latin translations were in view, they penetrated little into

[1] Wolf, I, 20.

[2] Wolf, I, 618; III, 531; IV, 751.— Bartolocci, I, 14.— Bibl. nat., anc. Hebrew funds, no. 303; Orat., 98, 101.— Uri, Irepart., p. 77.— Lambecius, I, p. 392, 404. — Pasini, I, p. 11, 48. — De B.ossi, Dizionario, p.^. “The same one, Codd. mss, 9 t. II, p. 43, 50. — Delitzsch, Codd. Hebr. Lips.f p 306. — Krafft, Codd. Hebr. Ficnn., p. 131 ff. Cf. Carmoly, Hist. Jewish medicines, p. 80 et seq.

Provence; for thirty years later, around Tan \ 260, we let us see Moses Aben-Tibbon give to his coreligionists an almost complete translation of Ibn-'s Commentaries Roschd[1]. Around the same time, in 1259, Salomon, son of Joseph, son of Job, originally from Granada, but established In Béziers, he translated the commentary on the treatise on Heaven.

and of the World[2]. In 1284, Zerachia, son of Isaac, of Barcelone, translates the commentaries on Physics, the treatise of Heaven and the World, Metaphysics [3]. Jacob ben MaChir translated the Abridged Logic in 1298, and in 1300, the comments on books XI-XIX of the History of Animals[4].

Thus, as early as the 13th century, there were up to three vers-different interpretations of the same comments, and yet, during the first half of the 14th century, we will see a host of new translators are at work. This double employment has nothing surprising about it; it was often It was easier in the Middle Ages to redo translations than to obtain those that existed. Several of these ver-The missions were made for this or that person, and did not go out were not from the province where they had been developed[3].

One of the most laborious translators of this short story The series was the Provençal Calonyme, son of Calonyme, son

1. Wolf, I, p. 19, 655; III, p. 13; IV, p. 752.—Bib. nation., n° 314, 327, 336, 350. — Pasini, Codât, taiir., I, p. 14. — Lambecius, I, p. 285. — Catal. mss. English. and Hib. p. 35.

2. Wolf, III, 14; IV, 752. — Pasini, I, p. 13 and 25. — ■ Delitzsch, p. 292.

3. Pasini, p. IQ, 52-53, 60.—Wolf, IV, p. 751.

4. Uri, Part I, p. 74, 77. — Krafft, Codd. Hebr. Vienna, p. 138. — Wolf (III, 15; IV, 751) mistakenly placed these translations in 1228, 1235.

5. Thus the translations of Zerachia, son of Isaac, were made in 1284, for Shabbethai, son of Solomon, who lived in Rome. Ten years later, in 1294, they were copied for another Jew in Rome (Pasini, I, p. 16 and 60).

of Meir[1]. In 1314, he translated the commentaries on the Topics, Sophistic Arguments, and Seconds Analytics[2]; in 1317, the comments on the Metaphysics music[3], on Physics[4], the treatise on the Heavens and the World[5], Generation and Corruption[6], the Meteors[7]. We find also under his name the translations of the commentary on the treatise on the Soul[8] and the letter on the Union of the intellect separated from man*.

The confusion that reigns in 'rabbi libraries-niques, makes it very difficult to distinguish the characters who were named Calonyme or Calo. Wolf [10] identifie with the previous Calonyme ben-David ben-Todros, which translated the Destruction of the Destruction in 1328. Bartolocci11 distinguishes them, but he stumbled upon this The book contains such errors that its testimony cannot to be worthless. What completes the confusion is that the name Calo Calonyme appears at the top of the Des*truction of the Destruction and of the letter on the Union of The intellect, separated from man, in the Latin editions, like the name of the translator who passed these two

1. Mr. Zunz gave in Geiger's journal (II, 313-320) some Clarifications on the life of this translator. — Cf. Delitzsch, Codd. Lips., pp. 288, 307, 325.

2. Pasini, I, p. 12 and 55-56.— De Rossi, II, p. 9.— Bibl. nat., no. 332. —Wolf, IV, 751.

3. Pasini I, 14 and 15. — Bartolocci, I, 13. —-Wolf, I, p. 19.—Bib. nat., no. 311.

4. Uri, Part I, p. 74. — Bibl. nation., n° 315. — Pasini, I, 52. — Wolf, I, p. 19.

5. Wolf, IV, 751.

6. Pasini, I, p. 13. — Wolf, III, 14.

7. Bibl. of Berlin, mss. Hebr., n° 292.

8. Fabricius, Bibl. gr., t. III, p. 237-

9. Wolf, I, p. 1006; III, p. 16.

10. Bibl. Hebr., I, p. 31, 1003, 1006.

11. Bib. rabbi.,1,?. 14, 131-132.

works in Hebrew and Latin. While waiting for research... more accurate ches have given some precision to the history In the literary history of the Jews, we must, it seems to me, preserve these three characters as distinct.

Rabbi Samuel ben-Juda ben-Meschullam, of Marseille, translated in 1321 the commentary on Morality to Nicomathat1, and the Paraphrase of Plato's Republic2. JoSeph ben Caspi translated, in 1330, the Abridged Ethics3.

Todros Todrosi (Theodore, son of Theodore), from Arles, translated in 1337 in the town of Trinquetaille, on the Rhône, opposite Arles, the comments on the Topiquestions, sophisms, rhetoric, poetics, and the Ethics4. This is the version that was published by Mr. GolDenthal. A host of other, more obscure translators, or whose date is uncertain, Schem-Tob ben-Isaac of Tortose (commentary on Physics, the treatise of the Ame3), Jacob ben Shem-Tob (Primary Analytics 6), Judah ben-Tachin Maimon (Physics, Treatise on the Heavens, on the Generaltion7) Moses ben-Taborah ben-Samuel ben-Shudai (treatise of Heaven8), Moses son of Solomon, from Toulon (Metaphy-

1. Pasini, I, 33.—Wolf, IV, 753.

2. Lambecius, I, p. 292 and 384. — -Pasini, I, 13. — Krafft, p. 142. — Labbe, Bibl. nova mss., p. 299. — Bartolocci, I, 14. — Wolf (I, 20) has it confused with Samuel Aben-Tibbon.

3. Lambecius, I, 292, 384. — Wolf, I, 20. — Bartolocci, III, 811. — Fabricius, Bibl. gV., t. III, p. 266.

4. Lambecius, \, 292. — Pasini, I, 12, 13. — Labbe, p. 306, no. 2270. —Wolf, I, 20.— Bibl. nat., anc. funds, n° 322, 335; Sorb., 257.— Fromlitzsch, p. 307. — Krafft, p. 134, ff. — De Rossi, t. II, p. 9-10.— The The Vienna manuscript was written in Avignon in 1460, which led Fabri- to say cius [Bibl. gr., t. III, p. 222] that Averroes had composed this commentary in Avignon!

5. Bible nat., n° 313.—Wolf, III, 13; IV, 572.—Delitzsch, p. 292.

6. Bibl. nat., n° 337.

7. Wolf, III, p. 13, 14.

8. Fabricius, vol. III, p. 2.31. In Vienna, at the Vatican.

sique1), Judah ben-Jacob (books XI-XIX of Animals 2J, Salomon ben-Mosé Alguari (De somno et vigilia 3), with which one should perhaps include Levi ben-Gerson and Moses from Narbonne, successively attached themselves to this immense work. The De Substantia orbis, composed of dissertations separated, translated from Arabic into Latin, was in turn translated from Latin into Hebrew by Judah ben-Mosé ben-DaNiel, from Rome, along with several other scholastic treatises d'Albert, saint Thomas, Giles of Rome4.

s y.

The 14th century was the era of sovereign authority Averroes among the Jews. The most illustrious of philosophers

From that time, Levi ben-Gerson, from Bagnols (Messer Leo), commented on the great Commentary and the works Averroes' own works, such as De Substantia orbis, the Treaty on the Possibility of Union*. For some parts, his gloss became inseparable from Averroes' text, as Averroes' own commentary had become one of them.
Aristotle's text. It seems that the Middle Ages preferred to the primitive texts these analyses of the second and third The doctrine of Levi is, moreover, the peri-Pure, unadulterated Arab pathos. Much bolder than Maimonides, he forces Mosaic dogma to yield to the demands of Peripateticism, and readily admits the eterunity of the world, the natural gift of prophecy, matter first, devoid of form, the impossibility of creation.

1. Bibl. nat., n° 310.

2. Berlin Library, no. 290.

3. Bartolocci, I, p. 13.

4. Cf. de Rossi, Mss. codd., nos. 315, 1174, 1342, 1376. De Rossi did not I did not understand the title of this work, which he translates as Robur coelorum.

5. Wolf, I, 728; 11,650.— Bartolocci, I, 481.— Delitzsch, Codd. Lips., p. 306, 325. — Pasini, I, p. lOetfollowed. —Hottinger, Bibl. orient.,^. 47.

Thus Averroes replaced Aristotle among the Jews;
it is this that is commented on, abridged, and... cut out for teaching purposes. Moses of Narbonne (Messer Vidal), a contemporary of Levi ben-Gerson was doing in Narbonne what Levi was doing in what-a few leagues away, at Perpignan. In]3AA, he comments the treaty on the Possibility of Union1; in 1349, the De Substantia orbis and other physical dissertations of Ibn Rushd2. Physics, Ethics, almost all parts of the Averroist program underwent A new reshuffle is in his hands. Several Translations of Averroes are also attributed to him, as well than to Levi ben Gerson. But one might believe that these two philosophers left it to others to translate the writings of Ibn-Roshd, and which have been considered as translations of the treatises they composed on those from commentator3.

The influence of Arab philosophy extends even to on the Raraïtes, and produced among them a series of free thinkers \ Averroes is often cited in the work by Ahron ben-Elia of Nicomedia, completed in 1346

Cairo, under the title Tree of Life, and where the author has sought to imitate Maimonides' Guide5. The theory

---

1. Wolf, I. 20-21. — Uri, I, 74.— Delitzsch, p. 308.

2. Pasini, I, 55.

3. Bibl. nat., nos. 307, 309, 321, 331, 344, 346, 347.— Fabricius, III, 266. —Wolf, I, 825, 883 j II, 802; IV, 923-924. — Bartolocci, I, 13; IV, 73, 224. Bartolocci committed the strangest acts against Moses of Narbonne errors; he made three separate characters. Wolf restored the identity; but due to a printing error (I, p. 826), he has him living in the middle of the 15th century. This error was copied by Brucker (vol. II, p. 854 note).

4. Cf. Ewald and Dukes, Bejtràge zur Geschichtc der altesten Auslegung from the Old Testaments, p. 29.

5. Published in Hebrew in Leipzig, by M. Delitzsch, in 1841.

Ahron's view on the intellect is, more or less, that of the Arab philosopher. Just as the soul is the form The acquired intellect, of the body, is the form of the soul. The soul, initially purely virtual, it only comes into effect through its union with the body; when the body dies, all that which in the soul was bound to the body perished; but the element pu-intellectual capacity, which constitutes the essence of man, is imperishable. 2. Ahron ben-Elia is not, however an Averroist like Levi ben-Gerson or Moses of Nargood. He even expressly refutes the opinion of the com-commentator on the simple, incorporeal and imperishable nature of sand of the sky, and seeks to prove the novelty of the world by the divisibility and the possible and accidental nature of the celestial body 3.

S vi.

The 15th century was the age of decline of scholasticism.
Jewish. The Provençal school is exhausted; the boldness of the phi-The philosopher has gone out of fashion. Verroes, however, is still studied; most of the Hebrew manuscripts that we
Some of his remaining works date from this period.
Ben Schem-Tob, from Segovia, wrote in 1455 a great commentary on Ethics; he teaches us in his preface that he did it to compensate for the silence of Ibn-RoschcP. He also commented on the Possibi-Union of V \ Schem-Tob, his son, Moses Pal-

1. Op. cit., c. 106.

2. Ibid., c. 108.

3. Ibid., c. 9, 10, 14.

4. Bibl. nat., funds of the Orat., 121, 122.— Mxmck, Dict. se. pkU.,%. III,
p. 162.

5. See Wolf. I. 571. — Bartolocci, r. III, 850.

keira1, Michel Haccohen2, also wrote treatises and Averroist commentaries. Finally, the poem di-Dacticus of Moses of Rieti, modeled after the Divine Comedy, and published in Vienna by Mr. Goldenthal (1851), contains substantial extracts from the philosophy of Averroes and Levi ben-Gerson.

Elie del Medigo3 is the last famous representative of Averroist philosophy among the Jews. He-He taught in Padua towards the end of the 15th century, and counted among his pupils Pico della Mirandola, for whom he Composed various philosophical writings? Among others a treatise on intellect and prophecy (1492) and a Commentary on De Substantia orbis (1485). His Annotations on Averroes, his Questions on Creation tion, the first engine, Being, the essence and the one,
were printed several times in Venice (1506, 1544, 1598) with questions from Jean de Jandun. By Elie del Medigo, Jewish philosophy, whose role is now but completed, it forms its link with the school of Padua, who, for his part, continued the Arab spirit and method.
I was able to confirm that even today the tradition
the teaching of the Middle Ages has not entirely disappeared among the Jewish scholars of Padua. The abridged Averroes' logic, published in Riva di Trento in 560, and reprinted several times, has remained a classic among the Israelites until recent times*,

In the higher regions of the intellectual movement-

1. Pasini, I, 48. The period in which this doctor lived is unknown to me.

2. Wolf, I, 759. It is also by conjecture that I place it at 15th century.

3. Wolf, I,p. 168; II, 107.— Bartolocci, I, 182.— Mimek, Dïct. se phihyt, III, p. 366.

4. Ad. Franck, Hist. de la logique, p. 219.

Among the Jews, Averroist Peripateticism falls,
From the 16th century onwards, it fell into deep disrepute.
Jewish theology that had lain dormant to leave to pass without anathema the rash doctrines of Levi Ben-Gerson suddenly wakes up. Joseph Albo, Abraham Bibago, Isaac Abravanel, defend against The philosophers of creation, revelation, and immortality... tality. Rabbi Mosé Almosnino (circa 1538) went to look for against them weapons in Gazali's arsenal, and comments on The Destruction of the Philosophers*. The influence Platonic, so opposed to Averroism and Scoelastic, shows itself, on the other hand, in the Dia-Love poems by Léon Hébreu. The way in which he exposes the emanation of love and its propagation of sphere by sphere, all the way to human intelligence, the care that he takes to explain the various nuances that the theory of the emanation had taken hold among the Arabs and the points on which points Averroes differs from other philosophers his nation, prove that the works of the commentator
2. But how well this metaphyromantic music, inspired by the Florentine school, is eloi-
The concept of the form and spirit of Peripateticism! The role
The philosophical thought of the Jews, so brilliant in the Middle Ages, ended on the threshold of modern times. Illustrious men, that Judaism will henceforth contribute to the history of the philosophy, will draw their inspiration, not from the tradition of a national philosophy, but in the spirit modern itself. Undoubtedly, among the most beautiful of These characters, Spinoza, Mendelssohn, the Jew feels Again: the first act of worship being the most pro-Ultimately, consciousness always returns, no matter what it does.

4. Wolf, I, 806.— Hottinger, Blbl. East. , p. 22-23.
2. Cf. Munck, Dict .se. p/iil., art. Leon Hebrew.

and whatever transformations it undergoes, to religion where she first sensed the ideal. That Spinoza, like It has been claimed that he drew his system from reading Rabbis and Kabbalah, that's certainly too much to say1.
But that he carried this into his Cartesian speculations hers a reminiscence of her early studies, nothing is no longer obvious to a reader even slightly initiated into the history of rabbinic philosophy in the Middle Ages. Investigate whether Averroes can claim anything in the system of the Amsterdam thinker, this would be decrossing the boundary where one must stop, in matters of lineage of systems, a legitimate curiosity: it would be voudormouse to find the trail of the stream when it got lost in the meadow.

1. See the dissertation by JG Wachter: Spincsismus im Judenthum (Amsterdam, 1699, in-8°), and Wolf, sm. Hebr. t. II, p. 1235.

CHAPTER II

Averroism in scholastic philosophy.

if.

The introduction of Arabic texts into Western studies dentales divides the scientific and philosophical history of the The Middle Ages in two perfectly distinct periods. In the first, the human mind has, in order to satisfy its curiously, the meager remnants of the teaching of Roman schools, piled up in the compilations of Martien Capella, Bede, Isidore, and in some treatises technical skills, which their commonplace nature saved from oblivion. In the second, it is again ancient science that recomes to the West5 but more complete this time, in the Arabic commentaries or the original works of the Greek science, which the Romans had preferred abridged versions. Medicine, initially reduced to Caelius Aurelianus, at the compilation of Gariopontus, finds HipPocrates and Galen. Astronomy, limited to a few treatises by Hyginus or Bede, to a few verses by Priscian, returns via Alfredan, Thabet ben Corrah, Albumasar, to the precision of ancient science. Arithmetic, limused for so many centuries with the simple methods of slaughtering that or of indigitation, is enriched with new processes. Philosophy, instead of a few scraps of the OrgaNo, from the apocryphal Categories of Saint Augustine, receives the complete body of Aristotelianism, that is to say the encycloEncyclopedia of ancient sciences.

In general, the first works translated from Arabic These were not philosophical works. Medicine, mathematics, astronomy, had attempted the curio-city of Constantine the African, of Gerbert, of Adelard from Bath, from Plato of Tivoli, before anyone even thought of to ask for philosophical teachings from mecreators like Alfarabi and Avicenna. The honor of this a new attempt, which was to have such a decisive influencesive on the philosophical destinies of Europe, apparent-ties to Raymond, Archbishop of Toledo and Grand Chancellor cellar of Castile from 11:30 to 11:50. Raymond trained at-around him a college of translators, at the head of which we find Archdeacon Dominic Gondisalvi (son of Gonsalve). Jews, the most famous of whom is Jean Avendeath or Jean de Séville, worked under his orders1.

This first essay focused primarily on Avicenna.
Gerard of Cremona and Alfred Morîay added to this, which-Several years later, various treaties from Alkindi and Al-farabi2. Thus, from the first half of the 12th century, some very important works of Arabic philosophy were known to the Latins.

One of the most singular phenomena in history literary activity of the Middle Ages, it is the activity of commerce intellectual, and the speed with which books were spreading throughout Europe. Philo-Sophie d'Abélard, during her lifetime, had penetrated as far as the the heart of Italy. The French poetry of the trouvères, in less than a century old, it included German translations, Swedish, Norwegian, Icelandic, Flemish, Dutch-Dances, bohemian, Italian, Spanish. Such a work, composed in Morocco or Cairo, was known in Paris and at Cologne in less time than it takes our

1. See Jourdain's excellent discussion on these three characters.
Research, chap. in, § 7.

2. Ibid., “6 and 9,

days to a key book of Germany to pass the Rhine.

Jews played a role in these relationships essential, and which has not been sufficiently taken into account in the history of civilization. Their commercial activity, their ease in learning languages made them inter-natural mediators between Christians and Muslims.
You must read Benjamin of Tudela's Itinerary1 to to understand the importance they had acquired on the Mediterranean coastline from Barcelona to Nice. The princes and lords, who needed their money and their medical knowledge, the favorites

they mocked; only the people held them in antipathy, and they infuriated storms were against them, hence this invincible race he went out with his ever-renewing taste for study and meditation.

Europe's relations with Muslims are operating would be on one side through Spain, and especially through Toledo; on the other by Sicily and the Kingdom of Naples. The tra-The translation process was carried out on these two points with with equal zeal and by similar methods. Press-that always a Jew2, often a converted Muslim, roughed out the work and applied the Latin word or the word vulgar on the Arabic word. A clerk presided over the work, He was responsible for the Latin elements and gave his name to the work.
Sometimes, however, the name of the Jewish secretary carried the...
was. Hence it is that the same translation is often attributed-

1. P.A, 5, etc. (Ed. Elzevir., 1633.)

2. The study of the Latin language was quite widespread at that time among the Jews. In 1280, Solomon ben-Adereth of Barcelona wrote a letter to the Jews of the synagogues of Provence to reprimand them for what they They studied the Latin language to the detriment of the law. (Pasini. I, pp. 61-62.)

3. The National Library possesses (nos. 7317, 7321) several tra-Latin translations that came from Arabic via Spanish.

fog to different characters. In the 12th and 13th centuries-cle, the translations were always done directly from Arabic. It was only much later that people began to translate the Arab philosophers on the he- versions braiques.

The nature of these translations is that of all the translations from the Middle Ages. "The Latin word there covers the Arabic word, just as the pieces of the chessboard apply-"Quent on the boxes1." The sentence structure is More Arabic than Latin. Most of the technical terms and the words that the translator did not understand are transcribed in the crudest way.2 The system literal versions are found everywhere in childhood Philology. The Orient and the Middle Ages have never I conceived of translation as a superficial mechanism.
where the translator, hiding behind the obscurity of the text, leaves it to the reader to find meaning in it.

The literary history of the Middle Ages will only be complete once when we have done the statistics based on the manuscripts Arabic works that were read by the doctors of the 13th and of the 14th century. It is important to note, in fact, that the quotations that are made from an Arab author by writers The vain figures of that era are not proof that one of them possessed the translation, since no one was making any I have scruples about quoting secondhand sources. That's why I think... that Avempace and Abubacer (Ibn-Tofaïl) are only mentioned according to Averroes. Alkindi, Alfarabi, Avicébron, Rosta Ben-Luca and Maimonides hardly seem to have been read.

1. Jourdain, Rexh. on the trads. lat, cfArist., p. 19.

2. Proper names especially, which in Arabic lack diacritical marks ticks or poorly punctured, became completely unrecognizable. Thus Thaïes becomes Belus; Hipparchus, Abraxis; cppevïriç becomes carabitus* Joracli, Semerion, Adelinus, Albrutalus, Loxus, authors cited at each page by Albert the Great, owe the day to the same process.

than in the 13th century. In the 15th century, Avicenna and especially Averroes take the place of all the others; finally, in the 15th century, Averroes remains the sole interpreter of Arab philosophy.

Su.

The first introducer, Averroes, among the Latins appears to have been Michael Scot1. This was an event in Aristotle's fortune, according to Roger Bacon, that the the moment when Michael Scot appeared, in 4230, with new new works of Aristotle and learned commentaries, cum expositoribus sapientïbus^, What are these commen-
The manuscripts that had remained unknown to the Latins until then? The writings tell us this. Michael Scot is expressly stated there. designated as translator of two works by Averroes: 1° of the commentary on De Cœlo et Mundo*\ 2° of the Commentary on the Treatise on the Soul 4. The first of these translations is dedicated to Etienne de Provins5, in these

1. Among the works attributed to him by the supposed Spanish chronicler Julianus Petri, there are some translations of Averroes (Antonio, Bibl. (kisp. vested, vol. II, p. 42, Bayer edition). The forger was very clumsy, because Averroes was barely born at the time when the pseudo-Julian was flourishing.

2. Tempore Micbaelis Scoti who annis 1230 transactis appeared, deferens librorum Aristotelis partes aliquas de naturalibus et matbematicis, cum expositoribus sapientibus, magnificata est Aristotelis philosophia apud Latinos. (Opus Majus, p. 36-37.)

3. Sorbonne, 924, 950; Saint-Victor, 171; Navarre, 75; Bibl. Saint-Marc in Venice, cl. vi, cod. 52.

4. Sorb. 932, 943; Saint-Victor, 17!; old collection. 6504. — We read in the Saiut-Victor manuscript: Incipit commentarius libri de ani“ma Aristotelis pbilosopbi, quem commentatus est Averroes in Greco (!), “and Michael Scotus transtulit in latinum. »

5. Mr. Félix Bourquelot, to whom I communicated the text of this dedicationcace, found the trace of this Etienne de Provins in a dean of Notre-Dame du Val, of Provins, which appears in several cbartes of 1211 to 1221, and is referred to in a document by Thibaut, Count of Chamloincloth, dileetaê clericus meus Stephanus 4th Provino (Proviniana, in the terms: “Tibi, Stéphane de Provino, hoc opus, quod ego “Michael Scotus dedi latinitati, ex dictis Aristotelis spe-“cialiter commendo, and if aliquid Aristoteles incomple-“tum dimisit de constitutione mundana in hoc libro, “recipies ejus supplementum ex libro Alpetrangii, quem “similiter dedi latinitati”; et es in eo exercitatus. » — These two comments are the only ones that fall within the manuscripts bearing the name of Michael Scot. But as almost We always find them following in a given order.

Comments on Generation and Corruption, on the Meteora, the paraphrases of the Parva Naturalia1 and the De Substantiel Orbis, one is authorized to attribute also the translation of these works to Michel Scot.
In manuscripts 943 from the Sorbonne and 75 from Navarre,
The aforementioned translations are accompanied by the commentaries Words on Physics and Metaphysics. The translation Does one of these works also belong to Michel Scot?
One would be inclined to believe it, since in a fragment of Michel, discovered by Mr. Hauréau, and about whom we speak-
We will soon, the doctrine of Physics and Meta-Physics is very clearly exposed. Mr. Jourdain, entirely-This should not have involved authorities, in the list of translations by Michael Scot, the catalogs provided by Baie and Pits2. It is obvious that these Provins Newsletter, February 7, 1852). Perhaps this person should be identified-swimming with Etienne de Reims (Mut. litt. del Fr., t. XVII, p. 232), who pa-He may have been born in Provins.

1. In issue no. 171 of Saint-Victor, the translation of the paraphrase The Parva Naturalia is attributed to a certain Gerardus. This cannot be Gerard of Cremona, died in 1187. This isolated indication must, therefore seems to be held responsible.

2. Bay, Script, ill. Maj. Brit. (Basel, 1557), p. 351 .—Pits, From English rebus.

p. 374.— Cf. Niceron, Mémoires, vol. XV, p. 95 et seq. — Fabricius, BibL med. and inf. Latin., t. V, p. 233.

two authors base their assertions solely on the de-Analysis of a manuscript similar to nos. 924 and 950 deSorbonne1, and that they had no other reasons for at-contribute to Michel Scot the translations of the comments on the treatise on Generation and Corruption, the Par va Naturalia, the Meteors, and the book De Substantia Orbis than those we ourselves possess. Their authority does not Therefore, it does not correspond to any new testimony.
and everything boils down to a conjecture drawn from the composition manuscripts. But as this composition was observed faithfully, in the Middle Ages, for several generations of copyists, we are allowed to look at the manuscripts where there is the dedication to Etienne de Provins as we representing the very edition given by Michel Scot and these new texts that he introduced, according to Roger Bacon, in scholastic philosophy around the year 1230.

This date probably indicates the moment when the Michel's work came to the monk's attention.
English. It seems certain at least that William of Au-Vergne and Alexandre de Halès knew, before this time, the commentator's works. Only one translation of Michel Scot, that of Alpetrangi, bears a date, and This date is the year 1217. Averroes' translations of-rent to be executed around the same time, because Michel Scot appears to have stayed in Toledo for only a few years.
Perhaps all of these translations together made up-he the philosophical dispatch that Frederick II addressed to the universities universities of Italy, with the famous circular which can be read in Pierre des Vignes' collection. "Compilationes varia?"

1. And this stripping they did with great carelessness. Thus Instead of Commentum Averrois, they read Contra Averrocm, an absurd lesson.
which led Bruckcr (III, 796) to believe that it was a refutation of A-Verroes; instead of Provino, they read depromoy etc.

» quae ab Aristotele aliisque philosophis sub graecis ara-

» bicisque vocabulis antiquitus editse nostris aliquando

» sensibus occurrerunt. »

It was in Toledo that Michael Scot completed the translations

tions that gave him so much importance upon his return of Spain, and they so graciously welcomed him to the Hohenstaufen court. He had as his assistant in this work a Jew named André[1]. Roger Bacon, in a In a moment of severity, he accuses him of plagiarism and reproaches him.
for having ignored the languages and sciences of which it is a question-tion in his writings. It is certain that the Latins who maintain-taking the trip to Toledo made no effort scruples about appropriating their secretary's work, and that in the Middle Ages, as in our time, the name of the
The translator was often a fiction.

Michel Scot, moreover, has other qualifications to be appelted the founder of Averroism, since Mr. Hauréau[2] discovered, in issue no. 841 of Sorbonne, some extraits that appear to belong to one of his works more important, which until now was only known by Albert's severe judgment of it: “Fœda dicta in» comes in the book which says Quxstiones Nicolai » Peripatetici. Consuevi dicere quod Nicolaus non fecit » librum illum, sed Michael Scotus qui in rei veritate » nescivit naturas, nec bene intellexit libros Aristotelis[3]. »
However, the fragment unearthed by Mr. Hauréau under this title:
Hsec sunt extrada de libro Nicolai Peripatetici, offer the most striking analogy with a digression from the com-commentary on the twelfth book of the Metaphysics, di-

---

[1] Probably a Jewish convert, since Andrew is not a Jewish name.
Judaizing. — Cf. Op. Tert. apud Jebbi prsef., p. S.

[2] From Scholastic Philosophy, vol. I, p. 470 et seq.

[3] Opp., t. II, p. 140.

aggression which often forms in manuscripts a separate booklet (see above, p. 53), and whose first words are: Sermo de quœstionibus quas acce-pimus to Nicolao, and our dicemus in his secundum nostrum posse[1]. The doctrine, which is expounded therein, is moreover, expressly attributed to Averroes.
((Omne coelum est circulare, and omne circulare est per-» fectum; ergo omne cœlum est perfectum: sed ullum » perfectum indiget motu; ergo ullum coelum indiget » motu. Partes autem sui quum videant bona quae non » habent, perpendentes se indigere illis bonis, in motum » prorumpunt, ut acquirant illa bona quae non babent. ...
» Ergo salus nostra est per quietem; cœli finis autem per » motum partium ejus: et hoc est quod says Averozt. » Michel Scot, through his role at the court of Frederick, where he represents the Arab spirit in such an original way, and through the diabolical connections that legend attributes to him-

pose, actually opens this series of ill-thinking men sants who, from the 13th century until Vanini, disguised-They professed their disbelief under the name of Averroes. Perhaps, the harsh words of Roger Bacon and Albert, and the rigor-Did the condemnation of Dante 2 stem from the repro-bation, the opinion of which was already striking at these suspicious behaviors.
We'll soon see how all this bad spirit was a fruit of the Hohenstaufen court.

s m.

Another translator of Averroes, Hermann the German mand3, was, like Michael Scot, attached to the house of

1. These words have disappeared from the printed editions. We have given, above, p. 82 et seq., the analysis of this important digression.

2. lnf., cant. XX, v. 115.

3. Jourdain, Recherches, chap. in, § 11.

Hohenstaufen. In chapter XXV of Opus Tertium, of which Mr. Cousin published analysis 1, which Roger Bacon describes as:
Eermannus Alemannus and translator Manfredi nuper a D, rege Carolo devicti. In general, Hermann appears having focused on the most neglected Aristotelian texts, Rhetoric, Poetics, Ethics, Politics, and, as with these works, the Arabic abridgments were more widespread or more accessible than Aristotle's text,
It was to these abridged works that Hermann turned his attention.
Thus, as an equivalent of Rhetoric, it traces-due to Alfarabi's glosses on this work, and as equivalent to the Poetics, the abridgment of Averroes2. “Having "Tried," he said, "to get my hands on the translation of the..."
Poetics, I found so many difficulties there, because of the difference between meters in Greek and Arabic, which I despise-I feared I would manage to finish it. So I picked up Aver-'s edition roès, oii this author has put everything he found of inteleligible3, and I rendered it as best I could in Latin.1» These two translations are dated Toledo, March 7, 1256.
Mr. Jourdain did not dare to decide whether it was the vulgar era or from the Spanish era. But the passage by Roger Bacon, which tells us that Hermann was in the service of Man-Fred, leaves no doubt in this regard.

In the prologue to Alfarabi's glosses, Hermann tells us learns that he had also translated the Ethics onto a

Arabic abridged, but that his work had been rendered useless tile by the translation of Robert Grosse-Tête, made on the Greek. This Arabic abridgment was none other than the commentary

1. Journal des savants, 1848, p. 299, 348.

2. Sorbs. 1779, 1782. — Bibl. Chigi, in Rome. Printed in Venice, 1481.
The Middle Ages only knew Poetics through this paraphrase.

3. Assumpsi ergo editionem Averod determinativam dicti operis Arisîotelis,, secundum quod ipse aliquid intelligibile elicere potuit ab ipso.

Averroes's means. The Laurentian Library possesses-a manuscript of this translation is available, and it can be read in all printed editions of the works of the com-commentator. In a final note 9, Hermann informs us that he finished this work in the chapel of the Holy Trinity Nité of Toledo, the third Thursday of June, 42401. On may have scruples about the accuracy of this date.
We recall, in fact, that the version of the Poetics is 1,256; Hermann would therefore have remained at Toledo, to do only two or three translations, this which seems difficult to admit.

The National Library owns, under numbers 1771 of Sorbonne, and 610 of Saint-Germain, a short abridgment of ten books of the Ethics, at the head of which one reads: Incipitsumma quorumdam Alexandrinorum, quam excerpserunt ex libro Aristotelis nominato Nicomachia, quam plures hominum Ethicam nominaverunt. And transtulit eam ex arabico in latinum Hermannus Alemannus. This abstract is quite distinct from Aver-'s average commentary Roes. Perhaps he represents to us X Abridged version of Averroes which has not reached us. Bandini and Mr. Jourdain have fallen, regarding these translations of Her-Mann, in a few errors. Bandini, not noticing not that the text of the Florence manuscript was that of the Averroes' average commentary, published as unpublished and under the name of Hermann, the epilogue that Averroes put following this comment, Mr. Jourdain reproduced this epilogue and Bandini's mistake. In the second edition-
The epilogue of his book was restored to Averroes;

1. Bandini, Calai, codd. Lat. B’M. Laur., t. III, p. 178. — Editions printed ones, that of 1560 for example, have mcclx, instead of mccxl.
This is obviously a mistake, since the version in the Ethics is prerieure to that of Poetics.

But, however strange it may seem to the new edition-It is interesting to see this epilogue of Averroes separated from the What was the rest of his comment? He didn't seem to notice... to know that the text which ended with this epilogue-
This was Averroes' commentary, often published.
What makes it more surprising in one or more cases is that... generally conscientious labor, these are the errors of !J1. Jourdain, regarding the manuscripts of the National Library. And first, Mr. Jourdain re-keeps the versions of the Ethics of the story as identical nudes in issues nos. 1771, 1773, 1780 of the Sorbonne. Now, the short abridged version contained in issue no. 1771, which alone bears the Hermann's name bears absolutely no resemblance to...
with the complete versions of issues 1773 and 1780.
Moreover, it was enough to compare the first lines of these various manuscripts with the incipits given by Bandini, to recognize: 1° that the Florence manuscript, which It bears the name Hermann, and resembles none of those of Paris; 2° that the two manuscripts from Florence, de-written by Bandini, one, t. III, p. 178, the other, t. III,
p. 405, are by no means identical to each other; that the
The first one alone bears the name Hermann; that the second is similar to nos. 1773, 1780 of Sorbonne; that Therefore, the date 1243, given by the second and which is also in contradiction with the date 1240 don-born by the first, does not apply to the translation of Hermann. Thus, instead of having five manuscripts of this translation, as Mr. Jourdain supposes, we don't have really only knows one, which is the manuscript of the Laurentian, described by Bandini, vol. III, p. 178.

Hermann himself acknowledges this in the preface to the Glosses d'Alfarabi, that he only had a rather small part in the work on his versions. Roger Bacon, who, in his Opus

Majus and his Opus Tertium, often criticized with vivacity Hermann's translations1, seized upon this passage:
“Hermannus,” he said, “confestus est se magis adjutorem » Fuisse translationum quain translatorem, quia Saraceni» cos tenuit secum in Hispania, which fuerunt in suis transla-"Main tionibus2." Several indicators show that Hermann employed Muslims for his work ses in the knowledge of scholarly language. Thus the nunnatlon and the casual endings are scrupulous-observed in the transcription of proper names: Ibn-Rosdin, Abj-Nasrin, Abubekrin, Ducadatin, Sceifa addaulati 7 Abitaibi, Alkameituz. The style of the rest, has only grown in barbarity; here is a specimen: Inuarikin terra alkanarnihy ■, stediei and baraki and castrum munitum destendedjn descenderunt adenkirati ubi descended super eos aqua Euphratis veniens de Euetin \ From this, we understand that Roger Bacon had deemed the tra- unintelligible and irrelevant Hermann's productions 8.

So? Around the middle of the 13th century, almost all the Important works by Averroes have been translated from Arabic. in Latin 6. Only the comments on the Organon and the

1. Opus Majus, -p. 21, 46, 59. — Journal des savants, 1848, p. 299, 348 (article by Mr. Cousin).

2. Opus tertium, apud Jebbi proef. p. 5.

3. P. 57v°, 58, 61v° etc. (ed. 1481). — The same peculiarity is observed serve in the translation of the commentary on Michel Scot's De Çœlo: Alfarcad, aljarkadin (p. 175 t°, 176, ed. 1560).

4. Ibid. p. 62.

5. “Maie translatus est,” he says, speaking of the Poetics, “nec potest sciri, nec adhuc in usu vulgi est, quia nuper venit ad Latinos et cum defective translations and squalore. » Opus Majus, p. 46.

6. The practice of attributing to Alphonse X the versions made from Arabic to The Middle Ages led the ancient critics to honor him with those of Averroes. (Cf. J. Bruyerin Champier, pref. of Collectanea, p. 81, ed.

Destruction of Destruction, do not appear to have were known in the Middle Ages. Yet there was an ancient version of this latter work; publishers of Venice, by printing the new translation of Calo Calonyme, they speak of another, older and less complete one, vetustiori posthabita. This work, moreover, does not part of the oldest editions of Averroes, and was im- awarded for the first time in 1497, with the commen- Niphus's silence.

As for Averroes' medical works, they did not- generally became known only after his philosophical works questions. Of all the physicians of the 13th century, including Mr. Littré gave the notice in volume XXI of Y Literary History of France, Gilbert Panglais (circa 1250), is the only who quotes Averroes 1, and it is still likely that he does not known only through his philosophical works. Sprengel It is true that Gilbert borrowed his

Theory of the heart considered as the source of life 2.
But this doctrine is not unique to Averroes that we are forced to assume that Gilbert had read the Colliget. Gérard de Berry, Gautier, Alebrand de Florence, who cite all the other Arabs, do not speak of Aver-Roes 3.

We have no information on the translation of the Colliget. The Arsenal Manuscript (Sciences and Arts, 61), door: Translatas de arabico in latinum. The words

1553. — Gassendi, Exercise. parad. adv. Arist. Opp., t. III, p. 1192. — Antonio, Bibl. hisp. vêtus, t. II, p. 83, ed. Bayer.) The works carried out under Alphonse's orders were purely astronomical.

1. fist. lit.,x. XXI, p. 399.

2. Sprengel, H'ist. de la me'd., t. II, p. 453.— Albert the Great [De anim.
1. III, tr. 1, e. 5) cites, under the name of Averroes, a book De disposîtlonllms cordis, which is unknown to us.

3. Hist. lia., t. XXI, p. 405, 413, 416.

Arabic, preserved in the text and a host of other par-These particularities, moreover, undoubtedly establish that This version was made from Arabic and not from Hebrew.1
It can plausibly be placed in the middle of the 13th century. The treatise De for madonna corporis humani, by Gilles de Rome (Paris, 4515), is not formed, in large Partly, there are extracts from the Colliget. It is remarkable yet the Colliget is never mentioned in the Conciliator of Pierre d'Abano, written in 4303, and where the cit-Interpretations of Averroes' commentaries abound at each page.

In 4284, Armengaud, son of Biaise, physician of Montpellier, translates or rather has translated from Arabic the Commentary on Avicenna's medical poem 2. It is necessary However, a translation already existed, since Raymond Martini cites this work, under its Arabic title, in the Pugio fidei*. An early translation of the treatise of Theriac is found in a manuscript from the Arsenal Library (Sciences and arts, 61). The Canones de medicinis laxa-The Tivis were translated from Hebrew in 4304, as we
I learned an interesting note that I extracted from issue no. 6949 (formerly funds): “Explicitiunt articuli generales proficientes » in medicinis laxativis magni Aboloys, id est Averoys, “translati ex hebroeo into latinum per magistrum Johannem » from Planis de Monte Regali, Albiensis dioecesis, apud

1. In Vexplicit, the author is always called Mehemeth Abenrosdin. Mr. Haenel (Catalogi, col. 497) mentions a medical manuscript in Vendôme. whose author is called Mechemet ab Jurosdin; it is undoubtedly the Colliget.

2. Tiraboschi (vol. V, p. 87) quite wrongly considers Armengaud as the First translator of Averroes. — Antonio (vol. II, p. 400, Bayer edition) places this translation in 1291; but manuscript 6931 (old collection) bears 1284.

3. P. 159 (Paris 16ol).

» Tholosam, anno Domini M0CCC°IIII0; interprets magistro Mayno tune temporis judaeo, et postea dicto Johanne, converso in christianum, in expulsione judaeorum "A regno Francese1." The translation of medical works Averroes' work is therefore largely the product of the school of Montpellier. The work was done, as usual, by the intermediary of the Jews. Numerous facts establish Montpellier's relations with the Saracens of Spain, the importance that the Jews had acquired there and the share that they had to the splendor of this great school2.

The abridged version of the Almagest was not known to the Latins. Mr. Littré3 noted important quotations from Averroes in Bernard of Verdun's Treatise on Astronomy (around \ 300), especially with regard to the theory of epicycles. But these matters are often dealt with in the com- philosophical commentaries, especially in Book XI and XII of the Metaphysics.

S iv.

We have just determined, in an approximate way the period when the Latin translations of Averroes. It is much more difficult to pinpoint the moment when the influence of these new texts is exerted on the teaching- the doctrines of the Middle Ages.

Pierre de Blois, continuator of the chronicle of In-

---

1. This is undoubtedly the Edict of Candlemas, 1290, by which Philippe the Fair expelled from the kingdom all the Jews who had come from Gascony and An- England [Ordinances of the Kings of France, vol. I, p. 317), or new edicts of proscription which followed one another in 1309 and 1311 (ibid., p. 470, 488).

2. Jourdain, Recherches, pp. 91-92.

3. Hist. lit. of France, t. XXI, p. 318-319.

gulphe, exponent of the order followed at the Cambridge school, verse 1 1 09, is expressed as follows: Ad horam vero jjrimam, F. Terricus, acutissimus sophista > logicam Arislotelis juxta Porphyrii and Averrois isagogas and commenta adolescentioribus tradebat. Launoy1, du Boula}''2, The literary history of France 3, copied this stepwise without noticing the obvious interpolation that he conholds4. Verroes was not born in 1109! Abbot Lebeuf5, adding misunderstandings to misunderstandings, wanted that in Orléans as in Cambridge, they taught at 11th century the dialogues (sic) of Aristotle according to PorPhyre and Averroes, and that John of Salisbury had them had it transcribed in Normandy by Richard Bishop, archdeacon of Coutances. Lebeuf confused with the passage of Pierre de Blois a letter from Jean de Salisbury, where he indeed asks Richard for works of Aristotle, but where, of course, it is not Question 6 of Averroes.

The first manifest appearance of philosophy Arabic within the bosom of scholasticism, takes place at the council of

1. De scholis celebrioribus, p. 150.

2. Hist. Univ. Paris., t. II, p. 28.

3. T. IX, p. 107.

U. Brucker (vol. III, p. 678.) and M. Jourdain (p. 28-29) have noted it.

5. Diss. on the state of science in France, since the death of King Robert, p. 78.

6. Jourdain, p. 253. — I will point out in this regard an oversight from Mr. Jourdain himself. We find in the works of Bede (vol. II, (column 213 et seq.) a collection of axioms of Aristotle and other philosophers, under the title of Sententiœ ex Aristotele or Authoritatum gencralium aliquot philosophorum tabula. Mr. Jourdain (p. 21) finding there quotations from Physics and Metaphysics, felt it necessary to attribute this compilationtion to Boethius or Cassiodorus. Mr. Barthélémy Saint-Hilaire, from another On the other hand, he concluded from the quotations found therein in the Politics that Bec Politics was born. Now, in this collection, we find quotations from Averroès, designated under the name of Commcntaior; which sets back its compositiontion in the 14th century.

Paris, in 4209. The council, after having condemned Amaury of Bene, David of Dinant and their disciples, adds: Nec libri Aristotelis de naturali philosophia, nec commenta legantiir Parisiis published vel secreto \ Certainly, one might be tempted to see in these Comments, the quintessential comments, the only ones that truly to speak of those whom the Middle Ages designated by this name, those of Averroes. Mansi, Mr. Jourdain, Mr. Hauréau adopted This opinion 2. It is not impossible, it must be admitted, that Averroes' commentaries were translated and studied ten years after the death of their author. However like Michael Scot, around 4217, seems to have been the as the first introducer of these new texts, he seems It is difficult to believe that Averroes could have faced condemnation. nation of the council of 1209. It should also be noted that the translation of Averroes is more than half a century old subsequent to that of the first philosophical texts Arabic, that consequently the texts translated by Domini- that Gondisalvi had to enter studies before those who had neither recommendations nor fame. In any case, what remains undeniable is that the The council of 1209 struck the Arab Aristotle, translated from Arabic, explained by Arabs.

The status of Robert de Courçon in 1215 is somewhat more explicit: Non legantur libri Aristotelis de metaphjsica et naturali philosophia, nec summa de iisdemy autde doctrina Magistri David de Dinant aut Almarici

---

1. Apud Martène, Thés, novus Anecd., t. IV, p. 166. — See. the excel- Mr. Hauréau's slow discussion on the scope of these words naturali philosophia. [From Phil. school,, t. I, p. 402-410.)

2. Mansi, ad Ann. eccl. Baronii, t. I, p. 289 (Lucse, 1757). - Daydain, p. 193-194. —Hauréau, t. I, p. 409-410.

nsceretici, aut Mauritii Hispani1. The expression surnma "de iisclem" would be very suitable for the abridgments of Avicenna. But who is this Maurice Espagnol, whose doctrine is akin to the pantheism of David and Amaury2? When did we see the name Averroes in the manuscripts? If strangely disfigured, becoming on the one hand Mahuntius (formerly funds, n° 7052), Me nbutius (formerly funds, 6949), Mauuicius (Arsenal, se. et arts, 61), on the other hand Avenryz, Benriz, Beuriz, etc., it's easy to believe that he could have become Mauritius. However, this is only one a conjecture to which we should not attribute too much high probability. The bull of Gregory IX, of 1231, merely reiterates, albeit with even less precision

the convictions of \ 209 and 1 21 5 3.

What is remarkable about these condemnationstions, that is, the cause of Arab Aristotelianism is there always identified with that of Amaury de Bène and David from Dinant. The often-cited passage from William the Bre-your, continuator of Rigord '*, that of Hugh, conti-Robert of Auxerre's author, cited by Launoy 5, supposed-feels the same connection. Must we really assume a Arab influence in the emergence of heterodox sects

1. Du Boulay, Hist. Univ. Paris., t. III, p. 82. — Launoy, De varia Arist.
fortuna in Acad. Paris., cap. iv.

2. It is highly improbable that this Mauritius has been linked to Hispanus of the Dominican Maurice, author of the Distinctiones ad proedicandum useful. Du Boulay, Hist. Univ. Paris., t. III, p. 699. — Antonio, Bibl. hisp. vet., t. II, p. 373. — Fabricius, Bibl. med. inf. lat., t. V, p. 57.

3. Launoy, chap. vi. — Du Boulay, vol. III, p. 142. — Literary History of the Fr. (t. XVI, pp. 100-101) assumes that it is expressly referring to the Averroes' comments.

4. Apud dom Bouquet, t. XVII, p. 84.

5. De varia Arist. fort., cap. i. — See Jo. Fr. Buddeum, De hæresibus ex-phil. aristotelico-scholastica ortis, in Observât. Ilalens'tbus (1700), t. I, p. 197 et seqq.

which stirred up the Paris school in recent years of the 12th century and the first of the 13th? We cannot deny the analogy between Amaury's realism and that of Avicebron.
David of Dinant's doctrine on pre-primer, formless, serving as a common substrate
In all things, it is indeed that of Arab Peripateticism.
one might believe that these two sectarians had in their hands the book De Causis, already known to Alain de Lille \ To this Up close, Amaury and David seem to me like nothing more than a reflection altered heterodox sects included under the name of Cathars. Some of their doctrines have a res-striking resemblance to those of the Orléans heretics of 1022, which MC Schmidt links, without hesitation, to the Cathar church 2; others are merely the pure Joachim-mism; others, finally, obviously fall under Scot Eriugena 3. The identity of all humankind in God, the Holy Spirit becoming incarnate in each of us, like the The Son was incarnated in Mary, God the material principle of everything, what could be more similar to the theories of A hibernating thinker? That's certainly more than enough. to avoid having to look to the Arabs for Amaury and David's backgrounds, especially if we consider Amaury's unique character deserves the recognition it deserves. realism, moreover, in asserting that individuals of a the same species participate in a single essence, which the intellect in general actually exists, preceded the theo-Averroist theory of universal reason and unity souls. Abelard had foreseen this consequence, and he had fought against it in his Little Glosses on Porphyry

1. Jourdain, pp. 196-497.

2. History of the Cathars or Albigensians, vol. I, p. 28; vol. II, pp. 151, 287

3. Cf. Saint-René Taillandier, Scot Érigène, p. 236. — Hauréau, vol. I, p. 405.

by the same argument that will later be used against Averroès*. Gilbert de La Porrée expressly denied the perhuman sonority. The example most often chosen Realists readily explain how the same essence can be common to 'several individuals, was that of Pameu.

It is in Alexandre de Haies that we must look for the the first completely obvious trace of Arab influence. Avicenna and Algazel are frequently cited in his Summa Theologica as philosophical authorities; Averroes is not included. although in a rather undefined way. It is indeed It is also recognized that this vast composition is one of Alexander's final years (from 1243 to 1245), and that it was not completed until around 1252, after his death 2. Alexander, therefore, must only have known Averroes in his old age, and this reading does not seem to have influenced its doctrines. Questions relating to his intellect does not extend beyond the terms same as Aristotle3.

The Arab influence is also very noticeable in Robert of Lincoln. Roger Bacon cites him as one of the masters to whom he heard the theory of the secular intellect professed adorned with man4; but no more so than Alexander of Hales, Robert does not appear to have known Averroes at the time of his first philosophical activity.

1. De Rémusat, Abelard, t. II, p. 98.

2. Hist. lltt. of France, t. XVIII, p. 316, 318.

3. Summatheol., pars II, quaest. 69, art. 3, p. 116, v. sqq. (Friet., 1576.)

-4. Fragments of Opus tertium, published by M. Cousin. (Journ. des Sav., 1848, p. 347.)

§V.

William of Auvergne was the first of the Scholastics.
in which one finds a doctrine that can carry the Averroes' name, I only found it once in his works the name of the Commentator; but Averroism is refuted on every page of his writings, sometimes under the name of Aristotle, sometimes under very vague names, as Expositores , sequaces Aristotelis ■; Aristoteles and sequaces ejus grœci and arabs 3, whichfamosioresfuerunt Arabum in disciplinis Aristotelis\ Avicenna et alii qui in parte ista A ris toteli consens erunt. William always puts the comments in the same category Greek and Arab authors. In general, the 13th century looked the Arabs as ancient philosophers, philosophi antiqui*) as opposed to Latin philosophi or philo-scholastic theologians. The simplest notions of chrono-nology was so little known that it seemed ignor-Which one, Alexander of Aphrodisias or Averroes?
lived before the other.

Averroes, in the time of William of Auvergne, was not so not yet become the representative of the doctrines dangerous aspects of Arab Peripateticism; but these doctrines were therefore perfectly known to the Latins, and

1. Opp. t. I, p. 699, etc. (Edit. Aurel. 1674.)

2. Ibid., vol. II, p. 20b.

3. Ibid., p. 95.

4. Ibid., vol. I, p. 618.

5. Ibid., 852, 53.

6. This classification is particularly striking in Ray-'s Pugiofidel mond Martini, and in the Directorium Inquisitorum by Nicolas Eymerics “Antiqui philosophi sunt platonici, stoici, pythagorici, epicurei, Aris] « toteles et peripatetici, Averroes, Avicenna, Algazel, Alundus (Alkind “Rabbi Moses. » (Dlr. Inq., p. 174, Romse, 1578.)

had many supporters. I. While Aristotle is vigorously opposed, while Avicenna is treated of blasphemer2, Averroes, is quoted by William like a very noble philosopher, although already one abuses his name, and that thoughtless disciples de-nature of his opinions. “Debes autem,” he said, “circum“spectus esse in disputando cum hominibus, which philothis sophi haberi volunt, et nec ipsa rudimenta philosophiae “adhuc apprehenderunt. De rudimentis enim philoso“phiae is procul dubio ratio materise and ratio forma?, “et cum ipsa ratio materiae posita sit ab Àverroe, phi“losopho nobilissimo, expediret ut intentions ejus et this aliorum which tanquam duces philosophiae sequendi and « imitandi sunt, hujusmodi men who of rebus phi-u losophicis tam inconsiderate loqui prœsumunt, appre-
u hendissent prius ad certum et liquidum3. »

The De Universo seems to present another quotation of Averroes; but the uncertainty and contradiction that one These observations prove how much philosophical individuality...
The commentator's physics was still largely unaffected in the spirit of the scholastics. On page 713 (Opp. t. I) of the From Universo, Guillaume quotes a passage from the commentary to Jbubacer on Physics. A little further on (p. 801), The same passage appears as if taken from the commentary to'dbumasar. But neither Abubacer (Ibn-Tofaïl), nor Abumasar They did not compose any commentary on Physics. Abuba-This, moreover, was only known to the scholastics through the quotations that Averroes made from it. It is therefore quite pro-

i. Multi deglutiunt positiones istas, absque ulla investigación discussionis et perscrutationis recipientes illas, et etiam consentientes illis, and pro certissimis eas habentes. [From anima, cap. 7, part III.)

2. De legibus, Opp. t. I, p. 54.

3, From Univ. Opp. t. I, p. 831.

It is possible that the passage cited by Guillaume belongs to the commentary by Averroes himself.

What is lacking, moreover?, in the writings of William that the name of Averroes, to make it the first and the the most ardent opponent of Averroism. The theory of the first intelligence, created immediately by God, and creator of the universe, is strongly refuted under the name d'Algazel1. The wisdom begotten by God, the logos teLeios, that is the true primary intellect, which no one has Neither the Arabs nor the Jews knew him, since they... made by the disciples of the Arabs, but worshipped by Plato, Mercury Trismegistus and the theologian Avicebron, whose For this reason, William became a Christian. The eternity of world is a damnable error of Aristotle and Avicenne2. At one point it seems attributed to Abubacer Sarracenus3'; but obviously William did not see whom he was striking under that name.

Averroes is not mentioned again in the long William's argument against the Averroist theory par excellence, the unity of the intellect. All this poleThe critique is directed against Aristotle, or against his followers. anonymous. “Debes scire quia eousque excœcati sunt, et “Each deficient intellect, ut crederent unam ani“mam mundi number quidquid in mundo est animatum “animare, nec aliud esse secundum essentiam et veri“tatem animam Socratis quam animam Platonis, sed ((aliam animam, et hoc ex alietate animationis et ani“mati4.” —“Of intelligentiarum number,” he said ailthis theirs, Aristoteles non tam errasse quam etiam insa-

---

1. De Univ, I» P, 24 et seq., I* II*, cap. 9, 23 et seqq.

2. Ia II-, chapters 8 and 9.

3. IIIa F, chap. 18.

4. De Univ., Opp. t. I, p. 801.

“Nissime delirasse videbitur evidenter1. » On next page vante, the same doctrine is attributed to Aristotle, Alfarabi and others; a little further on, 2, at Alfarabi, Avicenna and at those who embraced Aristotle's opinion on this point; Elsewhere, it is found that Aristotle imagined it to escape to Plato's archetypal world.3 So it is indeed realAristotle, who, in Guillaume's thought, is responsible for the monstrous doctrine of unity of the intellect. And yet, he expounds this doctrine with all the particularities that Averroes added to it, and of which No trace of it can be found in the Treatise on the Soul. This Active intelligence is the last in nobility of intelligences.

worldly ties 4; the happiness of the soul lies in its union with her3; all souls separated from the body identify-they merge and become one; the souls no longer differ only through body 7; the only difference in accidents makes the numerical distinction.8 The arguments that Guilthose whom Iaume opposes to this doctrine are those whom Albert, saint Thomas and all of Averroes' opponents will repeat to satiety. It destroys the human personality, it conduit kY imarmene, to fatalism9; it renders inexplicable progress and the difference in individual intelligences.
There are indeed general rules of truth that apply to all minds; but these principles have no reality

---

1. From Univ. y Opp. 1. 1, p. 816.

2. Ibid., pp. 852-53.

3. De Univ. ,1* IV, chap. 14.

4. Ibid., and De anima, Opp. t. II, p. 205 et seqq.

5. De Univ., Ia II", cap. 20-22.

6. Ia II", chap. 11.

7. Iar% cap. 25, 26.

8. De Unh., t. Ier, p. 802, 819, 859.

9. De Univ., IIP, I", cap. 21 et seqq.— Cf. Ibid, I* II-, cap. 16, 17, 18, 40,41; II* II", chap. 15.

substantial outside the mind. By a singular unknow-
In this sequence, Guillaume establishes, in his treatise De Anùna, that God is the supreme truth, illuminating all men1, and Roger Bacon was able to invoke his testimonygnage against those who claim that the active intellect makes part of the human soul 2. But William is a spirit shy and superficial. Anything resembling pan-Amaury's theism frightens him; Providence, freedom, the creation, the spirituality of the soul, immortality are always understood by him in their narrowest sense.

Not only were Averroes' doctrines, at the time,
In the time of William, these were introduced into scholasticism;
It seems that the impieties which were later to be covered up Rumors of his name were already beginning to emerge. In his
In his treatise on the Immortality of the Soul, William teaches us that this dogma encountered more than one skeptic. Some minds Those who were poorly made and dissatisfied with their time claimed that This was merely an invention of the princes to contain their subjects3. The 16th century had no bad thought that the 10th century had not had before him.

§ VI.

Although Averroes plays a role in the writings of Albertus Magnus a more defined role than in those of William of Auvergne, he has not yet reached the principal rank there which he must occupy during the second age of scholasticism.
Avicenna is Albert's great master. The form of his

1. De anima, chapter 7.

2. Opus tertium [Journal des Savants, 1848, p. 346, art. Cousin).

3. Dum enim se vide fraudari presentibus delectationibus, et alias non expectant, nullio modo suaderi poterit eis quod aliud sit honestatis persuasio quam imperatorum deceptio. Opp. t. I, p. 329. — Cf.
anima, cap. 6.

The commentary is that of Avicenna; Avicenna is quoted at every page of his writings i while Averroes is not that quite rarely, and sometimes to deflect criticism for daring to contradict his master. Albert, however, seems to have had all the comments in hand of Averroes that the Middle Ages knew, except those of Poetics and perhaps Ethics, which were not traproduced rather late by Hermann. One might believe that the
He also lacked commentary on Metaphysics.
ment: indeed, very few quotations are found of Averroes in his Metaphysics. Now, Albert is accustomed to to incorporate into his text everything he has at hand.
The doctrine of the unity of the intellect must already have gained considerable importance and gathered around her a a large number of supporters 2, so that Albert, not controlling to have fought her on several occasions, whether felt obliged to devote a special treatise to it3, which later He inserted it almost verbatim into his Summa. He told us he himself learns that it was in Rome, and by order of the Pope Alexander IV (circa 1255) composed it.5 distinction between recognized theology and philosophy like two contradictory authorities, a distinction which, throughout history, characterized Averroism, was already on the agenda6, and Albert to condescend to it

1. Averroes cujus studium fut semper contradicere patribus suis.

[Phjs. 1. II, tr. l, chap. 40.]

2. Hic error in tantum invaluit, quod plures habet defensores, et periculosus is nimis. (Opp. t. XVIII, p. 379-80.)

3. De unitate intellectus contra Averroistas. Opp. t. V, p. 218 (ed. Jammy.)

A. He's leaving, tr. XIII, quest. 77, member. 3. (Opp. t. XVIII).

5. Ibid., v. 394.

6. Quia defensores hujus hœresis dicunt quod secundumphilosophiam est, licet fides aliud ponat seeundum theologiam. [ibid. p. 380.)

obliges itself to solve the problem solely by syllogisms, disregarding all re- authority velée*. Thirty arguments support those who believe that of all human souls there remain only one after death. With scruple and im-Albert lists several examples of entirely praiseworthy bias One after the other, these thirty arguments. He even pushes the affability to the point of imagining evidence to support the thesis that he opposes, and to give to the means of his adversaries a strength they did not have in their own written. But thirty-six equally strong arguments supported hold the opposing doctrine; therefore the matter is clear; individual immortality has a major-the tenth of six arguments. It appears, however, that the truth-Romanism did not consider itself defeated by this arithmetic.
We will find the old athlete under arms when we will outline the struggles of Averroism in the Uni-University of Paris, around the year 1269.

In his booklet De natura et origine Animée 2, and in his commentary on the third book of the Soul (tr. II, (caption seen)3, Albert returns to this controversy again, and This time he treats his opponents more severely.
theory of the separate intellect, enlightening man by irradiation, prior to the individual and surviving the individual,
He now considers it an absurd and detestable mistake*,

i. In hac disputee nihil secundura legem nostram dicemus , sed omnia secundum philosophiam.... tantum ea accipientes quse per syllogismum accipiunt demonstrationem. T.V, p. 218, 226.

2. Opp. t. V, f. 182.

3. Cf. Ibid., tr. II, cap. 20; tr. III, cap. ll,sqq. — Summa de creaturis,

1. II, tr. I, qu. 55., art. 3. — Metaph., 1. XI, tr.I, cap. 9. — Isagoge in De anima, cap. 31 (Opp. t. XXI). —Cf. Hauréau, Phil. school, t. II. p. 69 and so on.

4. Error ommnoansnrdus et pessimus et facile improbabi!is (t. V, p. 202).

Since intellect is the form of man, if several indi-if vidus participated in the same intellect, it would follow that several individuals of the same species would participate in the same form, that is to say, the same principle of individual-duation, which is absurd. The active intellect is therefore not not distinct from the soul, and it can only be separated from it by abstraction. Reason, however, is universal, and Albert strongly opposes the Latin philosophers, that is to say, against contemporary scholastics, who,
by exaggerating the principle of individuality, have been justified that is to admit the existence of as many understandings as there are There are intelligent beings.

It must be admitted that Albert's doctrine does not offer always this firmness, which would later characterize the school Dominican. Sometimes Arab doctrines are surprising.
his orthodoxy. His doctrine of creation is chance-lante; the intellect sometimes appears as the source from which emanate intelligences *} the influence of superior beings on human intelligence is expressly acknowledged.
In the pamphlets grouped in volume XXI of his works, and which are at least from his school2, Arab philosophy invades from all sides. Within the active intellect, The intelligent and the intelligible are identical. In the in-
In the passive telect, on the contrary, this identity only takes place when the intelligent person thinks of themselves. The agent draws the species of matter, makes them simple and general; Thus prepared, the species move and inform the in-The possible. The active intellect unites with the possible.
like light to the diaphanous, and elevates it to dignity

1. Primum principium, indeficienter fluens, quo intellectus universa-liter agens indesinenter est intelligentsias emittens (De causa et pvoc. unh., tr. IV, 1). Cf. Ritter, Gtsch. der christ. Phil. IV Th., S. 199, 234.

2. Cf. Quétifa Eêhurd, Script. Qrd. Proer/., t. I, p. 178.

of speculative intellect. Speculative intellect in turn serves as a stepping stone for the soul to ascend to the intellect acquired (adeptus seu divinus). This last term is reached when the possible intellect has received all the intelligibles and became inextricably linked to the active intellect. Man is then perfect, and in some way similar to God. In this state, he acts divinely and becomes cacapable of knowing everything, which is supreme happiness contemplative1. Although the curious treatise, from which I extract This passage, far from representing Albert's thought, it proves at least how much the Arabic language and doctrines the most daring had penetrated the Albertist school2.

§ VII.

Saint Thomas is at the same time the most serious opponent that Averroist doctrine has encountered, and, one can see to say without paradox, the first disciple of the Great Commander liar. Albert owes everything to Avicenna; Saint Thomas, As a philosopher, he owes almost everything to Averroes. The most The importance of the loans he made to him is undoubtedly the very form of his philosophical writings.

It must be remembered that Averroes is indeed the creator of the form of the Great Commentary. Avicenna and Albert,

1. De apvehensione, pars V (Opp. t. XXI). Possibilis speculativa recipiens cnm eis lumen suscipit agentis, cui de die in diem made similior; And quura acceperit possibilis omnia speculata seu intellecta, habet lumen agentis ut forming sibi adhserentem — Ex possibili et agente compositus est intellectus adeptus, et divinus dicitur, et tune liomo perfectus est. And fit per hune intellectum liomo Deo quodam modo similis, eo quod potest sic operari divina, et largiri sibi et aliis intellectus divines, et accipere omnie intellecta quodam modo, et est hoc illud scire quod omnes appetunt, in quo felicitas consistit contemplativa.

2. Ibid., part VI, contains a psychological theory of prophecy, obviously borrowed with confidence from an Arab author.

his imitator, compose treatises under the same title and on the same subjects as Aristotle, but without distinguishing their gloss on the philosopher's text. Averroes and Saint Thomas, on the contrary, take member by member the Aristotelian text, and thus subject each sentence to the work of the most patient exegesis. Only one of the commentaries. Albert's comments, that of Politics, is composed following the method of Averroes and Saint Thomas; but We have the best reasons to challenge his work. It must be acknowledged, at least, that if this comment is Albert, he composed it after the others and after having seen those of Saint Thomas.

Albert is a paraphraser; Saint Thomas, on the contrary...
To milk, is a commentator. That's what Tolomé of Lucques meant when he tells us that, under During the pontificate of Urban IV, Saint Thomas commented on Rome the philosophy of Aristotle, quoclam singulari and novo modo tradendi*. From whom did Saint Thomas learn This new and previously unknown mode of commentary?
I don't hesitate to say it: he learned it from the commentator.
par excellence, by Averroes.

Thus, Averroes' dual role among the philosophers Scholasticism is already perfectly characterized in Saint Thomas. He is, on the one hand, the great interpreter of Aristote, authorized and respected like a master; that is, of the other, the founder of a damnable doctrine, the rep-Experiencing materialism and impiety, a heretic.
Guillaume de Tocco, the author of the legend of Saint Thomas, listing the heresies defeated by his master, puts first "that of Averroes, who taught-

---

1. Eut. eccl., 1. XXII, cap. 24, apucIMuratori, Scripi. rer.ita/,\o\.Xl, col. 1153.

He knew that there is only one intellect; subversive error of the merit of the saints, because from then on there would no longer be any
"The difference between men is..." We will see soon.
the triumph of Doctor Angelique over this infidelto come, under Dominican inspiration, the favorite theme painting schools of Pisa and Florence.

Saint Thomas, like William of Auvergne, like Albert, but with more elevation than the first and more the decision that the second one places all the effort of his controversy against the heterodox proposals of the peri-Arab patety: the raw and indeterminate material 2, the hierarchy of first principles, the intermediate role-diary of the first intelligence, both created and creativetrice3, the negation of providence4, and above all the im-The possibility of creation. Commentary on Book VIII of Physics is almost entirely devoted to refuting that of Averroes. To this reasoning that he attributes to the phi-Arab philosopher, and who, in fact, quite well summarizes his thoughtsée: Fieri est mutari; atqui mutari nequil nisi subjectum aliquod; ergo fie ri nequit nisi subjectum, he responds by denying the major. The universal production of being
"By God there is neither movement nor change."

4. Bolland. Acta SS. Sailor, t. I, p. 666. — Oudin, Of script, eccl., vol. III, p. 271. — this Mirum is, says the biography placed at the beginning of the works “Verses of Saint Thomas, quam graviter, quam copyiose S. Thomas “in illam vanissimam sentiam semper inveheretur. Urban Captabat “tempora, quserebat occasiones unde ipsam traheret in disputationem, « pertractam vero torquebat, exagitabat, monstrabatque non a christiana “solum, sed ab omni quoque alia, peripateticaque prsecipue philosophia dissentire."

2. Summa, 1% quest. 66, art. 2.

3. Ibid., 1% q. 45, art. 5; q. 47, art. l;q. 90, art. 1.— Opusc. XV, From substantiis separatis. (Opp. t. XVII, p. 86.)

4. Summa contra gent., 1. I, chap. 50, and the commentary of François de Ferra re.

but a kind of emanation1. Aristotle does not offend the faith in establishing that every movement needs a sumobile jet; this is true in the current state of the universe. The ancient philosophers, who only considered the specific changes and multiple phenomena, do not could only envision the future as an alteration of a pre-existing subject. But Plato and Aristotle, who are Having arrived at the knowledge of the first principle, they were able to to conceive of something other than movement in the universe and mutation; for, above action and reaction by examining secondary causes, they perceived the unity of the primary cause. Undoubtedly, Aristotle seriously deceived by supporting the eternity of time and the eternity of movement, but nothing authorized Averroes to conclude one of its principles is the impossibility of creation ex Jiihilo2. It is primarily against the theory of the unity of the intellect. that Saint Thomas deploys all the resources of his dialectique. Not content with constantly returning to it in the Summa theologica, in the Summa contra Gentiles, in the Commentary on the Treatise on the Soul, in the He composed on this subject: Questiones disputâtes de anima. one of his most important works, De Unitate intellectus, adversus Averroistas1'. We will discuss more Later, what are the adversaries that Saint Thomas has in seen in this treaty. But the forms of his polemic... reveal sufficiently that he resents an organized school sée, claiming to represent the true spirit of the peripas-

---

1. Productio universalis entisa Deo non est motus nec mutatio, sed est quœdam simplex emanatio. In VIII Phys. reading II. (Opp. t. I, p. 106, (edit. Venet.)

2. ttid.t p. 107, 108.

3. Opp. t. XVII, opusc. xvi. - Pamphlet xxvn, De œternitalc munc/i, Contra murmurantes, seems directed against the same adversaries.

tëtism against the Latin philosophers, that is to say against the orthodox scholastics, and attaching themselves to Averroes as to the supreme authority, superior even to that of faith*; Saint Thomas is indignant to see Christians To thus become disciples of an infidel? And to prefer to the authority of all philosophers, that of one man who deserves less the title of peripatetic than of cor-2. He therefore tries to refute it not by the authority of the Latins, which does not please point, he said, to everyone, but through arguments philosophical ideas borrowed only from the Greeks and the Arabs. Neither Aristotle, nor Alexander of Aphrodisias, nor Avineither Cenne, nor Algazel, nor even Theophrastus and Themistius, whose thought Averroes distorts, did not consider this document strange trine of the unity of the intellect. All looked The intellect as individual and unique to each man.
And without that, what would remain of personality and of the Human responsibility? The intellectual faculty does not would it not be destroyed, since man would not be in-intelligent that at the moment his intelligence is put to use act ?

For Averroes, the principle of individuation is form;
For Saint Thomas, it is matter. If individuation comes from the shape, the shape being the same in all beings of the same species, realism and Averroism have

1. Unde mirum est quomodo aliqui solum commentum Averroys evident, pronuntiare prsesumunt quod ipse dicit hoc sensisse omnes philosoplios greekos and arabs, prseter latinos. Est etiam majori admira - tione vel etiam indignatione dignumquod aliquis christianum se profîtens tam irreverenter de christiana fîde loqui prsesumpserit. (ibid.
p. 104 v°.

2. Minus volunt cum cseteris peripateticis recte sapere quam cum Averroy aberrare, qui non tam Tandi peripateticus quam peripateticœ philosodepraved phise.

The argument was successful. Albert had already offered to transport to matter the principle of individuation. But Saint Thomas-

but the first one determined on this point the domi- theory nicaine1. The form can be said to be of several; but the Matter can only be described as one. Therefore, it is the matter that determines the number of beings; not matter indeterminate, which is the same in several people, but the delimited matter, the quantum, individual. Such is the less the explanation given to the thought of Saint Thomas by Giles of Rome, and remained traditional in the school Thomist.

Certainly, Saint Thomas's argument is without re-explains, when he defends against the Averroists the person-Human nature. Reason says: I, like others faculties, and any system that cannot explain Findivi-duration and consequently the multiplicity of reason considered in the subject, thereby accuses its insufficiency-session. But the Thomist school fell into exaggeration equally dangerous by attributing to matter the power-to see how to determine the individual. In the eyes of a philosopher-a more complete philosophy, and in the eyes of Aristotle himself, the in-Individuality results from the union of matter and form:
A being is created at the moment when the indefinite substance enters in one of a thousand possible forms, and becomes by this A determination that can be named. The Orthodox school never responded satisfactorily to this Averroist objection: if there is an intellect for Each man, therefore, possesses multiple intellects; there are has a certain fixed number, no more and no less. The hy-

1. Yov. especially pamphlet xxix (Opp. t. XVII), De principio ind'widuationls; — Suvima contra gentiles, 1. II, cap. 73 ff. — Summa theol., Ia, Question 76, article 2; and Mr. Hauréau's excellent discussion on this point of Thomistic philosophy, vol. II, p. H 5 et seq.

The Scholastic thesis on the origin of the soul: creando infunditur, infundendo creatur, authorized this substitution bed. If, at some point, around the fortieth day After conception, as they said, God creates a
The soul, to inform the body, is therefore constantly being created.
souls; their number increases indefinitely. Now, this hypothesis was a consequence of the system which views man as a binary compound of two substances; a more fundamental notion of human unity was needed.
explicit, unlike the Middle Ages, in order to arrive at
to see that consciousness develops, like everything else, without special creation, through regular development divine laws of the universe.

Can we not even reproach Saint Thomas for having-see, through an exaggerated reaction against Averroism, undermined the absolute and universal nature of reason his? After acknowledging that the man participates in the intelect active as to an external illumination, it asks if this intellect is the same for everyone. And for that there remains no ambiguity about the seriousness of the The question he raises, let's listen to the argument he attributes to his opponents and to which he tries to respond. "Omnes “homines conveniunt in primis conceptionibus inteîlec- “you; /lis auteniunt assentiunt per iiitellectum agentem. “Ergo conveniunt omnes in uno intellecto agente. » Eh Well! To the question posed so clearly, he answers negatively. tively, and by an argument that gives cause for concern taken: “Inteliectus agens est sicut lumen. No autem is a ditto lumen in dà'ersis illuminatis. Ergo no is the same “Intellectus agens.” However, it does not appear that saint Thomas had foreseen the serious consequences of this solution

---

1, Summa, Ia, what is. 79, art. 2 and following,

tion. For, posing this question to himself: “Utrum “homo possit alium docere? » he criticizes with the most par- Averroes' opinion was correct. No doubt, he said, at If we only consider the unity of the object, science is the same in the master and the disciple; but the subjective fact of the knowledge diversifies with the subjects1.

Saint Thomas is no less opposed to AverRoes on the question of union with the active intellect2, and of the perception of separate substances. “Averroes, he said, suppose that at the end of this life, man can to come to understand the separated substances, by its union with the active intellect, which, being separate, perceives naturally the substances separated; so that united to us, he makes us understand them, just as the inpossible by joining us, makes us understand- to deal with material things. This union with the intellect The active process occurs through the perception of intelligible things. The more one The closer one gets to this union, the more intelligible things one perceives. If we manage to perceive all the intelligible things, the union is perfect, and then, through active intellect, one arrives at con- to be born all things material and immaterial, which is supreme happiness.3” To this theory of Averroes, Saint Thomas opposes the Peripatetic principle: We do not We understand nothing without images; however, the separated substances cannot be understood through a body image. Can we at least arrive at this knowledge through...

successive abstractions, as Avempace supposed, in increasingly stealing the data of sensation4?

1. Summct) what is. 127, art. 1.

2. The word ittisdl, which in Arabic designates the union of the soul "with the intellect' active, is rendered in Saint Thomas by continuatio, in accordance with the meaning from the Arabic root, which means to be contiguous.

3. Summa, Ia, what is. 88, art. 1.
\. lbîd.,àv\. 2.

Not yet; for the image, however refined, does not could not represent a separate substance. Gold-the methodology of the Thomist school should have been frightened by a pro-such an absolute position. Indeed, in the third part of the Somme1, which is not by Doctor Angélique, but which was collected by his disciple Pierre d'Auvergne de his commentary on the Fourth Book of Sentences, on proves, with the help of Saint Dionysius the Areopagite, that the in-Human intelligence can, in essence, lead us to see God.
And how does this vision operate? It is neither through a quiddity that the intellect would separate from substance, as Alfarabi and Avempace want it, nor by an impression that the separated substance would produce on the intellect, as Avicenna wants it. It is through direct union with this substance itself, as Averroes and Alexander wished of Aphrodisias. In this union, the separated substance plays the role of both matter and form; it is this which makes one understand and what one understands. Whatever it may be in itself from the other separated substances, the writer continues-In vain, Thomist, one must admit that the vision of essence divine action operates in this way. When the intellect perceivesto perceive the divine essence, this essence is to the intellect what Form is to matter what light is to colors. theirs. Material substances cannot thus become the form of the intellect, because matter cannot become the form of another substance. But this is possible, from that it is the being in whom everything is intelligible, and that is That is why the Master of Sentences said that union
The union of the soul with the body is the image of the union of the spirit with God. — One may doubt that Saint Thomas had pushed like his disciple, tolerance to the point of accepting Averroes' explanation of a theological dogma.

i. Qusest., 92, art. 1.

The attacks against Averroes obviously sell out among Saint Thomas and in the Dominican school, a tactical who was not lacking in skill: saving the orthodoxy of the Peripateticism, by sacrificing the interpreters and especially the Arabs. Hence, this perpetual attention to showing that Aristotle believed in the immortality of the soul1 and others dogmas of natural religion. Besides, apart from what-These harsh words are found in the treatise De ZJnitate intellectus, Saint Thomas is far from treating Averroes as impious, and to testify against him this rage that we will find so characteristic in Raymond Lull and Petrarch. For Saint Thomas, like Dante, is a wise man; Averroes is a sage. a pagan worthy of pity, but not a blasphemer (winks) of execration. He owes him too much to damn him. Averroes moreover, he had not yet become the standard-bearer of disbelief, and had not taken place in the bolge of Hell.

S VIII,

This vigorous hatred that the Dominican school confessed to Arab doctrines, one can follow it throughout history. The history of scholasticism. The propositions that Raymond Martini, in the first part of his Dagger, at-Tribute to the Moors, are nothing more than theories of Arabic philosophy, and in particular of Averroes, which he took for the pure doctrine of Islam. The arguments-Raymond's contributions are almost all borrowed from Algazel 2; for, he said, it is good to refute philosophers \. Summa contra gentilles, 1. II, cap. 79-81. — In I Phys. reading xir. — In XII Metaph., lect. mr. — Quodlib. x, quest. 5, art. 1.

2. Raymond cites three works by Algazel, the Ruina philosophorum, an Episiola ad amicum, and the work entitled Almonkid min addalcl, which is none other than the treatise published by Mr. Schmoelders. — Raymond lived in by a philosopher1. There is, to prove the eternity of the world seven reasons taken ex parte Deij seven others taken ex parte creatures, and four taken ex parte factionis; eighteen reasons in all. But these eighteen reasons are overturned by eighteen other reasons of equal strength;

The balance is therefore perfectly equal so far. A re-five new reasons come to mind when deciding the victory in favor of the thesis of the novelty of the world.
But these five reasons are not entirely conclusive.
ques, and, in truth, faith alone can in this regard give-
2. The theory of the unity of souls is a train-ted by Raymond with less tact 3: it is not The point is not about Aristotle, it's about Plato. Aben Rost borrowed from him.

this extravagance. Raymond also refutes, with a a vast apparatus of dialectics, the opinion that seeks to to limit Providence, and to deprive God of knowledge sance of inferior things (vilia and mqlciïf.

Raymond Martini, like Saint Thomas, places the principle of individual diversity, not in the body, but in proportion, in the reciprocal relationship of the soul and the body. Gilles de Lessines6, Bernard de Tri-the milieu of Jewish studies in Aragon and Provence, and knew Arabic works that did not reach other scholastics.
Since he knew Hebrew very well, he was perhaps quoting from the tra-Hebrew translations. The particular transcriptions of the name Aver= roès [Aben Resc/wd, Aben Resched] which are found in his writings, seem even assuming that he had worked on the Hebrew versions of the com-liar.

1. Pug'w jidei adversum Mauros et Judœos (Paris, 1651), p. 167-169.

2. Iapars, cap. 6-12.

3. Ibid., chapters 13 and 14.

4. PugiG, p. 182. Quod quidem est phreneticorum deliramentis simillimum.

5. Impars, cap. 15-16,25.

6. Hauréau, Phil. scol., t. II, p. 251-52, lia1, Hervé Nedellec2, fought with no less energy for the Thomistic doctrine of individuation and against the unity of the intellect. The Questions of Ber-Trilia's nard on the soul are just a long proa gram of Arabic questions, always resolved in one opposite in meaning to that of the faithless philosophers. Durand of Saint-Pourçain, although a declared opponent of the tho-mism also combats the Averroist thesis, as giving a hand to realism3. Henry of Ghent himselfeven, a dissident within the Dominican school, shows strongly opposed to the theory of the separate communicative agent screwing science to the human mind, like the stamp imprints its type on the wax. The intellect is a part of ourselves. Science is the result of work and of experience4. In his Summa Theologica, in his Quodlibeta, he repeatedly fights against the com- intellect mun. He himself tells us that he was part of the as-meeting of theologians which took place at Bishop Tempier's house in 4277, and where Averroism was condemned3.

Dante, finally, who belongs in so many respects to the school Dominican, felt obliged, like all doctors or-Statius comes to deliver his spear blow to Averroes.
to explain to him the mystery of generation 6, “But com-
"How does an animal fetus become a man?" he adds.
You don't see it yet; this is the point that caused the error.

1. Hist. lîtt. de la Fi\, t. XX, p. 137.— Hauréau, t. II, p. 252 et seq.

2. Jean de Baconthorp [In II Sent. Dist.21,, qusest. l, art. 1] presents it thus Hervé's argument: “Anima intellectiva est forma substantialis liomi-“nis. Sed mulliplicatis principiatis oportet principia intrinsica multi-“plicari; igitur una anima intellectiva non est in omnibus. »

3. Hauréau, vol. II, p. 412.

4. Hauréau, vol. II, p. 274.

5. Quodl. aurea, II, what is, 9.

t). Purgat., cant. XXV, v. 01 et seq.

more learned than you; — for, by his doctrine, he separated of the soul the possible intellect, because he did not see it attached to an organ. ■ — Open your heart to the truth, and know that as soon as the brain's joint is by-made in the fetus, — the first engine turns joyfully towards this masterpiece of nature, and inspires a breath new, full of virtue, — which attracts in its substance everything he finds there that is valuable, and creates a unique soul that lives, feels, and reflects upon itself. — And so that these If the words seem less surprising to you, look at the cha-their sun that turns into wine, combined with the humor that distill the vine. — When Lachesis has no more flax, the soul detaches itself from the flesh, and carries away with it the human and the divine. — The other powers then become like mute: memory, intelligence, will there at the con-
"Milking, they become much more active."

Who is this philosopher that Dante recognizes more More knowledgeable than him? Benvenuto from Imola2 tells us that he This concerns Averroes, and he takes the opportunity to explain to us in all its details, with remarkable clarity, the Averroist theory of the intellect, a false theory, he adds-Is he, like all those of the same philosopher, and who
The name of its author (Averoys cioè senza) is well justified.

verita3.) Dante, however, like the entire dominant school-

i. Quest' è tal punto

Che più savio di te già à fece errante.

2. Bibl. nat., suppl. fr., no. 4146 (formerly 70022). This is a translation Italian commentary on Benvenuto. See Columbus of Batines, Bibliografia dantesca (Prato, 1835), t. I, leaves. I and II, p. 588 note and 610, which corrects Marsand's assertions (/ Mes. ital. délia regia bibl. parigina, t. I, p. 807). See. Append. III.

3. Ms. cited, f. 273. Jacopo della Lana knows Averroes less well. Here is how he speaks of it in relation to chapter IV of Hell: "Questi fue “great maestro in medicine, and commented tutta la philosophya natu-

Nican, distinguishes in Averroes the great commentator1, the authorized interpreter of the philosopher, of the hetero- author The dogma of a dangerous system. The commentary on the The treatise on the Soul is honorably cited in Corwito 2. Dante may have studied it on Rue du Fouarre, under Siger, and, grateful as he was to his masters very, he placed Averroes in this honorable region of hell, where he regretfully placed men of great a value that his faith forbade him to save.

Euclid geometra e Tolommeo, Ippocrates, Avicenna and Galieno, Averrois che '1 grand comento feo s.

Six.

Gilles, from Rome, deserves to be listed after Guillaume d'Auvergne, d'Albert and de saint Thomas among the most outspoken opponents of Averroism. His The treatise De Erroribus philosophorumk n is only a list of heretical propositions drawn from Arab philosophers, Alkindi, Avicenna, Averroes, Maimonides. The doctrine Averroes' work is presented here in a completely new light.

“ray; vero è che in many ways egli si parte dalla sentia d'Aristo- “tile, second V uso dei moderni. » (Ane. funds fr. nos. 7235, 7259, given wrongly attributed to Marsand as to Christophe Landino. Cf. Columbus of Batines, 1. c.)

1. Fu un altro Aristotle. (Benvenuto, ms. cited, f. 25.)

2. Cf. Ozanam, Dante, p. 189.

3. Inf., cant. IV, v. 142 et seq.

4. Mr. Hauréau having found this treatise without an author's name, in the tus.
694 of Sorbonne, published fragments of it [Phil. scol. I, p. 363 et seq.].
I have since recognized that it belongs to Giles of Rome, that it was printed under his name in Vienna, in 1482, and inserted by Possevin in his Bibliotlieca selecta, t. II, 1. XII, cap. 34 ff. However, the primitive edition being untraceable, and Possevin's reproduction being neither complete nor con-in the form of our manuscript, I will publish according to the manuscript of the Sor-Good, the article relating to Averroes. (Appendix II.)

For Giles of Rome, Averroes is already the despiser of the three religions, and the first author of this doctrine that all religions are false, although they may-feel useful. His exposition of Averroes' opinions is, moreover, designed from a rather personal point of view.
Gilles simply read, pen in hand, the comment-to remain silent on the twelfth book of the Metaphysics, and to put stringing together the propositions he did not understand or which sounded bad to his ears.

In addition, among the works of Giles of Rome, we find a large number of treaties directed specifically against each of Averroist's errors: Of celiac material, Averroem countered. — De intellectu possïbili qusestio aurea contra Averoym (Padua, 493, and Yenise, 1500), etc. 1 Gilles collected these different theses in his Quodlibeta. The article in this work devoted to the question of the unity of the intellect2, had a certain importance in the history of Averroism, in what it has been about during For a long time, those who have spoken about life and doctrines of Averroes. Leibniz himself does not appear to have known Averroes, as in this passage. He quotes almost verbatim the reasoning that the Augustinian theologian attributes here To commentator 3: the world being eternal, if it were necessary to attribute to each man an individual intellect, there would have had from the beginning an infinite number of intelli-agencies; and if we were to admit that these intelligences are

1. Cf. Ossinger, Bibl. Augustinianorum (Ingolstadt, 1768). — Hain, Repert. bîbliogr. t. Ier, part. I, p. 15 et seq.

2. Qaodl. II, quest. 20, p. 101-102. (Leuven, 1646.)

3. Opp. t. I, p. 70 (ed. Dutens). Gerson repeated this reasoning.
(Tract. 9, super Magnificat. Opp. t. IV, p. 402. Antv. 1706). It is equally-According to Giles of Rome, Averroes' hyperbole was quoted: Quod Âristoteles fut regula in natura, in quo scilicet natura ostenderit suum posse.

immortals, we would be led to posit V as infinite in action, this which implies a contradiction. While arguing that Aristote recognized the individuality of the intellect, Gilles de Rome admits that it did not adequately respond to this difficulty. After all, he was a man, he may not have I didn't see all the consequences that came out of his principles. cipes. But his commentator Averroes, who lived in a century in which the Christian faith was widespread, since we saw his sons at the court of Emperor Frederick, would have liked had to perceive the inappropriateness of this doctrine1. We we will demonstrate later that Gilles de Rome or his The interpolator picked up a false noise, relative to The stay of Averroes' sons at the Hohenstaufen court. Gilles no less vigorously rejects the theory of the union, in the terms in which the commentator had posed it tator2. Man cannot understand the subseparate stances. Indeed, the intellect cannot surpass the sensitive species. However, there are no species for the separate substances. We are to them as the colorblind person, with this difference yet we know that they are, ignoring their quiddity, and that we can syllogize from it, instead of

---

î. Strong ista inconvenientia philosophus non previdity. Ipse enim leaks liomo, nec oportet quocl previderit omnia inconvenientia qu’se posient accidere ex positionibus suis; imo is vaide probabile quod istud inconveniens non viderit de infinitate intellectuum. Nam commentator ejuice Averroes (filii cujus dicuntur Fuisse cum imperatore Frederico, who tempporibus nostris obiit, one of observation flees tempore quo fides cliristiana erat valde dilatata, et quo observation quod apud christianos esset solemnis mentio de statut aniinarum separatarum), Averrois, inquam, debuit videre hoc inconveniens. Et tamen ipse commentatorFUit hujus opinionis assertor quod esset unus intellectus. Aristotelis vero temporibus non erat ea solemnis mentio de statu animarum separatarum. (Op. cit., p. 102.)

2. Op. cit., i). 36.

The blind person, being blind, does not know colors nor existence nor quiddity, and cannot syllogize it1.

Gerard of Siena, disciple of Giles of Rome, continued-He countered his master's attack, and maintained his position during the prefirst half of the 14th century the anti-Arab traditions of the augustine school2. The Directorium Inquisitorum of

Nicolas Eymeric is not the same, with regard to the Arab philosophy, and especially Averroes, which a re-almost literal production of the De Erroribus philoso-phorum by Gilles de Rome3. Eymeric hardly puts himself into Metaphysical costs. The doctrine of the unity of souls is a heresy, because it would follow that the damned soul of Judas is identical to the holy soul of Peter. Already the Avert-
The true Roes has completely disappeared behind the Averunbelieving Roes. This impious man denied creation, the provisiondence, supernatural revelation, the trinity, efficacy of prayer, of almsgiving, of litanies, of immortality, the resurrection, and placed the supreme good in pleasure.

§x.

But the hero of this crusade against Averroism Raymond Lull was undoubtedly the leader. Averroism was at His eyes saw Islamism as a philosophy; but the destruction of Islamism, as we know, was his lifelong dream.
From 1310 to 1312 especially, Lulle's zeal reached its peak.
roxysm; it is found in Paris, Vienna, Montpellierto link, in Genoa, in Naples, in Pisa, pursued by this idea fixed, refuting Averroes and Muhammad by the combination magic circles of his Great Art. In 1311, at 1. Quodl. I, what. 17, and quodl. III, what. 13.

2. Fabricius, Bibl. med. and inf. lat., t. III, p. 43-44. (Eclit. Mansi.)

3. Direct, Inq,, pars II, quest. 4, p. 174 ff. (Roniae, 1578.)

At the Council of Vienna, he addressed three requests to Clement Y:
the creation of a new military order for the destruction the theory of Islamism, the founding of colleges for the study from Arabic, the condemnation of Averroes and his party-without 1. Raymond wanted the absolute suppression in the schools of the commentator's works, and that defense was
It is made for every Christian to read them.2 It does not seem that the
the council took none of these requests into consideration.
Paris was above all the scene of Lull's exploits against the Averroists. He recorded in a multitude of small treaties, dated from the years 1310 and 1312, the minutes leases of his disputes4. The most ingenious, it is said, of these factums was the one entitled: De lamentatione duodecim principiorum Philosophise, contra Averroïstas, dated Paris, 1310, and dedicated to Philip the Fair.
Ptaymond, in accordance with the taste of the time for allgories, introduced Lady Philosophy, complaining of errors that the Averroists uttered in his name, and especially of this damnable doctrine that certain things are false according to natural light, while they are true according to faith. Philosophy solemnly declaredlying before the twelve principles that she had never

1. Thrown SS. Junii, t. V, p. 668.

2. Ibid. p. 673 and 677. Tertium ut pestiferi Averrois scripta in cliristianis gymnasiis doceri prohiberentur, cujus erroribus infinitis, quia moventur infirma pectora, deberent sacri theologi non solum fidei, verum et scientiae armis obsistere.

3. Ibid., p. 667, 672. Parisios rursus adiit, ubi et Artem suam denuo legit, etquamplurimos libros absolvit, presecipue contra Averroem, quibus docebat indignum esse christiano uti illius viri commentariis in Aristotelem. Nempe illos adversari catholiese fidei, ac refertos esse impiissimis erroribns, qui juvenum mentes facile pervertebant, suoque judicio dignos esse illos ultricibus flammis.

4. Ibid., p. 668, 677 et seq. —Antonio, t. II, p. 128, 129, 133, 134 (/•dit. Bayer). — Natulé, Apologie, p. 37o (Paris, 1625).

— 20.5 —

had such a crazy thought. "I am," she said, "only the humble servant of Theology. How can I claim that I can To contradict her? Unfortunate woman! Where are the pious scholars who will come to my aid?” A host of other traitors are cited. Raymond's arguments were also directed against the Averroists. and which are mostly unpublished at the convent of Saint Francis of Majorca: a Liber Natalis or De Natali pueri Jesu, dedicated to Philip the Fair, and mentioned by Raymond's biographers as one of his lithe most energetic and beautiful arguments against Averroes; — Liber de reprobate errorum Averrois; — Disputatio Raymundi and Averroistde de quinque qusestionibus. Inc. Paris ius fled mdgna control 'sia...; — Liber contradictionis inter Raymundum et Averroistam de centum syllogismis circa mysterium Trinitatis (Paris., February 1310.) Inc. Accidit quod Raymundista. . . ; — Freedom from existentia et agentia Deiy contra Averroem (Paris, 1311); — De ente simpliciter per se, contra errors Averrois, made at the time of the Council of Vienne; — Ars theologies and mystical philosophy, against Averroem; — — Liber contra ponente s seternitatem mundi; — Liber of efficient and effected (Paris, May 1312). Inc. Parisius Raymundus and Averroista arguing...; — ■ Liber utrum fidelis can solve and destroy omnes objectiones, quas infidels possunt jacere contra sa ne ta m fidem catholicam (Paris, August 1311)...; — Statement per modum dialogi, edited contra ducentas decem et octo opiniones erroneas aliquorum philosophorum, et damnatas ab episcopo Parisiensi1. His biographer mentions even sermons against Averroes2. It seems that what

1. These are the proposals condemned in 1277, which are indeed in number 218.

2, Jeta SS, Jun.y t. V, p. 670,

Raymond Lulle was particularly outraged by the doctrines of For the Averroists of Paris, it was the distinction of truth distinction between theological and philosophical truth1 which we will see highlighted with such warmth by Italian Averroism of the Renaissance, and which was, since From the 13th to the 17th century, the breastplate of unbelief. Lulle supported this with a decision that was not lacking of boldness that if Christian dogmas were abunreasonable and impossible to comprehend to take, it was impossible for them to be true to one another point of view2. The most absolute rationalism and the extravagances of mysticism followed one another like a mirage in the dialectical hallucinations of this certroubled calf.

S xi.

Thus the most respected doctors of the 13th century agree to combat Averroism, and the forms Their controversy does not allow us to assume that For them, this was nothing more than a pointless and meaningless dispute. versaries. There can be no doubt that there were, vis-à-vis Orthodox scholasticism, a school that claimed to cover his flawed doctrines of the commentator's authority. But where to look for this school, of which no writing exists? has reached us? I hope to demonstrate that, without exaggerating From the conjecture, we can designate the two foci.

1. Raymundus errorem illum tolerare non poterat quo Averroistae diCimt multa esse vera secundum fidem, quœ tamen falsa sunt secundum philosopliiam.... Dicentes (idem christianam quantum ad modum intelligendi fore impossibilem , sed eam vera m esse quantum ad modum credendi, quum siut christianorum oollegio applicati. [Ib'ul., p. 667 and 677.)

2. Si fides catholica intelligendi sit impossibilis, impossibile est quod sit vera. (Ibicl.)

of Averroism, in the 13th century, the Franciscan school and especially the University of Paris.

In general, the Franciscan school appears to us as Much less orthodox than the Dominican school. Released of a very irregular, very little popular movement clesiastical, very little in line with the ideas of discipline and of hierarchy, the Order of Saint Francis never lost the feeling of its origin. While the Dominicans, faithful to the direction they received from Rome, couwould scour the world like true bloodhounds of the Church to detect the heretics and wage a fierce war against heterodoxy syllogism and the stake, the family of Saint Francis did not ceased to produce ardent spirits, which maintained that the Franciscan reform had not yet given its full benefits results; that this reform was superior to the Pope and to the dispensations of Rome; that the appearance of the seraphic François was nothing more and nothing less than the advent of a a second Christianity and a second Christ, similar In every respect, the first, superior even in poverty. there these democratic and communist movements ratstriving almost all to the Franciscan spirit, and laterrelatively, to the old leaven of Catharism, of Joachimism and of the Eternal Gospel: Third Order of Saint Francis, heguards, lollars, hizoques, fraùcelli, spiritual brothers, humiliated, poor people of Lyon, exterminated by the walltion and the burning of the Dominicans. From this comes this long a series of bold thinkers, almost all of them quite hostile to the court of Rome, which the order never ceased to produce: John d'Olive, Duns Scotus, Okkam, Marsilius of Padua, etc. The fierce struggle that had to be waged at all costs against Wasn't Thomism already a beginning? of emancipation? Was it really safe to attack a doctor also authorized, whose system had become that of the Church, and of which a pope, a Dominican it is true, had said: Soon fecit miracula quot scripsit articulos?

Alexandre de Haies, the founder of the Franciscan school Caine, was the first of the scholastics who accepted and propagated the influence of Arabic philosophy. John of the Rochelle, his successor, followed the same traditions and adopts for its own account almost all of the psyAvicenna's ology1. Mr. Hauréau observed with accuracy that most of the proposals condemned to Paris by Etienne Tempier, in 277, belonged to the Franciscan school, and that they had been borrowedtipped by the most audacious disciples of Alexander of Hales to the glosses, long disreputable, of Avi-

Aven and Averroes[2]. The same year, the Dominican Robert of Kilwardby, Archbishop of Canterbury, in a council held in Oxford, the center of the Franciscan school, censored almost identical proposals, and where the in- Averroes' influence could no longer be ignored.[3] It is therefore reasonable to believe that some of the philosophers against whom William of Auvergne, Albert, saint Thomas expresses himself with such severity, apart- were born into the order of Saint Francis.

An important passage from YOpus tertium, published by Mr. Cousin confirms this conjecture. The doctrine of the active intellect separated from man is presented there as traditional in the Oxford school. "Intel- active reading is on the front line God himself, and in Second line, the angels who enlighten us. God is at

---

[1] See Hauréau, Phil. scol., t. Ier, p. 475 et seq.

[2] Jbid.jt II, p. 215, 217.

[3] Following the Sentences of P. Lombard, and in ms. 331 of Sorbonne and 33 of Montpellier. Some of these proposals are found- wind literally in Averroes. Cf. II De anima, f. 53, ed. 1571.

the soul is to the eyes what the sun is to the eyes, and the angels, what are the stars. I'm not saying this, Bacon adds, to I'm only stating my personal opinion, but to combating one of the biggest mistakes that exist in Theology and philosophy. The moderns (that is to say- (as the Dominican school says) say that the intellect that acts It illuminates our souls and is part of the soul. is false and impossible, as I have shown by others authorities and convincing reasons. All philosophers pheasants of the past generation, some of whom live Again, they identified the active intellect with God. Two I once heard the venerable pontiff of the church of Paris, Sir William of Auvergne, in front of the university, ras- seemed to condemn these innovators, to argue with them, and to demonstrate to them using the same reasons I have given, that they were mistaken. Sir Robert, Bishop of Lincoln, and Brother Adam of the Marsh[1], the greatest clerics of the world, and consummate in divine and human knowledge- Maine, as well as the elders of this monastery, were from Same opinion. A few presumptuous Franciscan friars having asked Brother Adam, to tempt him and to mocking him: What is active intellect? he would reply to them- pondit: This is Elijah's raven, meaning that "It's God or an angel."[2] In Opus Majus, Bacon, discussing the same question, openly adopts the opi-

4. Cf. Opus Majus, p. 48, 64, etc.

2 Opus tertium, cap. 23 (Journ. des Sav., 1848, pp. 348-47). — These deTails are not found in the Opus Majus, as published by Jebb. But They are read in almost identical terms in a copy of this work. owned by the Library of Saint Gregory in clivo Scauri in Rome: “Nam, Universitate Parisiensi convocata, bis vidiet audivi Ven, antistitem Gulielmum, Parisiensem episcopum felicis memorizes, coram omnibus pronuntiare quod intellectus agens non potest esse pars animaï, et “D. Robertus episcopus Lincolniensis, and frater Adam de Marisco, and “hujus monasierii majores hoc idem firraaverunt,” he

union of the Arab masters i. The human soul is by itself- even incapable of science; philosophy is the result- state of an external and divine illumination. The intellect active, principle of this illumination, is not a part of the soul, but a substance separate from the soul, as the craftsman is of matter, the light of the coutheirs, the ship's pilot2.

The respect with which Roger Bacon speaks of Averroes, also proves that he had found it in his order, on the commentator, of traditions all different from those of the Dominican school. "Avicenna," he said, "has the first brought Aristotle's philosophy back into the spotlight, but he faced harsh attacks from those who followed him. Averroes, the greatest after him, has contradicts it excessively. Verroes' philosophy, long neglected, rejected and condemned by the most céfamous doctors, today obtains unanimous suffrage wise men; little by little his doctrine, quite worthy of esteem in In general, although it can be criticized on several points, was appreciated.3" — "After Avicenna," he said elsewhere, Then came Averroes, a man of sound doctrine, who corrected- He echoed the statements of his predecessors, and added much to them. although on certain points it needs to be corrected, and on many others completed4. » Bacon cites expressly the comments on Physics5, on the treatise on the Soul6, on the treatise on Heaven and the World7. The translations

1. He only names Avicenna and Alfarabi, and does not mention Averroes only by these words: Expositoves famosi et majores.

2. Op. maj., p. 26, 27.

3. Ibid., pp. 13-14.
\. Ibid., p. 37.

B. lbid., v. 12.
G. Ibid., p. 36.
7. Ibid., p. 27. — Mr. Arago [Friend. from the office. lengths. for 1852, p. 449-

Hermann the German also seems to preoccupy him a lot. Unfamiliar with theological disputes, and tou-indulgent days for anyone who teaches him something However, he doesn't see the poison in these works, and repro-he urged his contemporaries to stick to old authors without merit, instead of taking advantage of this new aid offered to philosophy1.

The subtlety, the confusion of logical order and onto-logically, the tendency to realize abstractions, which ca-characterize the Franciscan school, establishing more than one a link between this school and Arabic philosophy. The general chapter held in Assisi in 1295 saw forced to severely repress the tastes of youth order for subtleties and exotic opinions*. Although several Franciscan doctors, William of Lamarre and Duns Scotus fought against Taverroism, and Saint Thomas was even criticized for giving it a foothold through his theory of individuation 3, realism led them to for-cementally towards Averroist theses. God, says Saint Thomas But, he could not create matter without form. Duns Scotus declares, on the contrary, that matter can exist without the form, and that the first act of all generation is Informable matter, that is to say, matter capable of receiving All forms, but uninformed. This matter unique and universal, it is the same in all beings. as Avicebron wished. If Duns Scotus departs Averroes' comments on points of detail, such as on the... quiddity arising from the form, on the three dimensions

450) presented Averroes' opinion on the scintillation of stars, according to Pioger Bacon.

i. Op. maj., p. 21.

2. Cf. duBoulay, Hist. Univ. Paris, t. III, p. Sif,

3. Hauréau, t. II, p. 231 et seq.

essential information on the material before the addition of the
In form, these secondary details cannot be overlooked.
to emerge the identity of the fundamental thesis: anteriority generic material, in which all participate beings, in antithesis to the pure creation of Saint Tho-
"But Pierre Auriol drew the ire of the school"
Dominican for a very similar doctrine 2.

As for the thesis of the separate intellect, Duns Scotus finds it so absurd that the author seems to him worthy of being Outcast from humankind.3. It had to be. Duns Scotus pushes the doctrine of plurality to its extreme of souls, and the multiplication of psychological entities.
He almost, like Origen, led the way souls in space to search for bodies. Duns Scotus and Okkam, admitting that Aristotle did not believe in the immortality of the soul, and that this truth cannot be to demonstrate that, through revelation, they were preparing, moreover, the way to dangerous boldness4. We shall see, in Indeed, in the 15th century, the most determined Averroism emerged of the two directions traced by Duns Scotus and Okkam5..

The mystical school itself, which is connected by so many of features at the Franciscan school, makes fairly extensive use of Arab psychology. The German mystics of

i. Hauréau, p. 327, 338 et seq.

2. Bayle, art. Aureolus.

3. Nec breviter invenitur aliquis philosophus notabilis qui hoc dicat, licet ile maledictus Averroes, in fiction about the anima, quœ tamen non est intelligibilis nec sibi nec aliis, ponat.... Error pessimus, which proprius est et solius Averrois, non tantum contra veritatem theologiæ, sed etiam contra veritatem philosophy, and per consequens talis errans esset a communitate hominum et naturali ratione utentium exterminandus. — In IV Sent. dist. 43, quscst. 2. (Antverpia?, 1620, t. II, p. 427, 431.)

4. Hauréau, t. II, p. 305, 472.

:>. Patrizzi, Discuss. perip.y t. I01-, 1. XIII, p. 162, ff. —Brudker, t. VI, p. 622.

14th century, Master Ekhart in particular, liked to have served the hypotheses of the active and passive intellect in the demonstration of their theories of union with God1. In a treatise from this school, composed in German in the 14th century, on the active and possible intellect*, Averroes (Arverios) and Aristote(Her Steotiies) are cited as serious authorities.

S xii.

But it is especially in Garlande and on rue du Fouarre
It seems to me that we must look for the source of the errors.
Averroist theories so often condemned in the course of 10th century.3 Already, in 1240, William of Auvergne, then Bishop of Paris, had several proposals censored.
tions imbued with Arabism, and which seem extracted from the book De Causis\ In 1269, it is formal Averroismexpressed ment that we will see under the influence of the an-Theme 3. Etienne Tempier, Bishop of Paris, having...
The council of masters of theology appeared on Wednesday.
before the feast of Saint Nicholas (December 6), condemned, in concert with them, thirteen proposals > which are not almost all of the familiar axioms of Averroism: “Quod intellectus hominum est unus et idem number.
• — Quod mundus est œternus. — - Quod nunquam flee

4. Ritter, Gesch. der Christ. PhiL, IV Th. S. 513-514.

2. Published in BJ Docen, Miscellaneen zur Gesch. der teutschen Literutur. (Munich, 1809, p. 138 et seq.)

3. Scimus enim quod temporibus nostris Parisiis diu fut contradictum naturali philosophizes and metaphysics Aristotelis, by Avicenna and Averrois exposed, and ob densam ignorantiam fuerunt libri eorum excommunicati, students eisper tempora satis longa. {Opus Majus\p. 14.) Bacon wrote this in 1267, therefore before the condemnation of 1269, where Averroism is, for the first time, specifically named.

4. Errores Parisiis condemnati, ad calcem Sentent. Petri Lombardi. — BihL Max. Patrum, t. XXV, p. 329 ff.

5. Du Boulay, Hist. Univ. Paris., vol. III, p. 397. — Crevier, Hist. de F Univ. of Paris, t. II, p. W.—BibL Max. Patrum, t, XXV, p. 351 et seq.

primus homo. — Quod anima, what is forma hominis?
secundum quod homo, corrumpitur corrupto corpore. — Quod Deus non cognoscit singularia. —Quod humani actus non reguntur providentia divina. — Quod Deus non potest dare immortalitatem vel incorruptionem rei corruptibili vel mortali. »

These were the bold doctrines that were stirring up in Paris at mid-13th century, and so that no doubt remains Regarding their origin, some manuscripts present us with... include the censorship notes of Etienne Tempier attached to the works of Averroes, as the remedy alongside the disease.1 All condemnation in ecclesiastical history presupposes a professed error, as well as any reform measure presupposes a relaxation. It is therefore necessary to consider that, towards the In the middle of the 13th century, the faith of many was shaken in the University of Paris, and the scandalous proposals of Averroism found an echo among some masters very. One can even assert that Albert's pamphlets and of Saint Thomas Contra Averroistas were person- directed against the teachers of the street of Fouarre, and contributed to the condemnations of 12692. No doubt is permitted in this regard, when We see a preaching friar from Paris, named Gilles, Perhaps Gilles de Lessines, addressing this period to old Albert, retired from the struggle, eleven proposals avert-Roist theories, taught by the masters of the University, and almost identical to those that had been condemned3.

1. Thus, number 33 of the Library of the School of Medicine of Montpellier.

2. Idem error Averrois iterum pullulavit Parisiis post mortem Alexandri papa, ita ut magni doctores ibidem contra Averroistas frequentius disputarent: quorum disputatio per Alberti sentiam robur accepit, licet absens esset corpore. Petrus of Prussia, Vita Alb. Magni, p. 239. (Antv. 1621.)

3. Venerabili in Christo.... Articulos quos in scliolis proponunt ma-

Albert wrote a special treaty against these proposals. Liber determinatw us adParisienses, now lost, but that Pierre de Prusse, his biographer, had between the hands and from which he gives the first words1. We do not one might also doubt that the treatise of Saint Thomas Contra Averroistas, not directed against the same adVersaries. Guillaume de Tocco, his biographer, says so expressly: "Quem errorem," he said, speaking of the doctrine of the unity of souls, quum essent schoîares Imitating Golardises, which Averrois erant communiter sectants, poterat praedictus error plures inficere, whichbus potuisent praedictum errorem sophisticis rationibus persuadere2. » Quétif and Echarcl rightly observe-The sound that should be read in this text is Garlandise instead of Golardiœ. The same bibliographers tell us that the booklet of Saint Thomas sometimes carries for title Contra Averroistas Parisienses3. A list of books from the convent of Saint Catherine, in Pisa, almost contemporary of Saint Thomas, attributed to the doctor angelique a Liber contra Magistros Parisiense$\ 11 It is very possible, in truth, that this book is nothing other than something that one of the occasional writings that Saint Thomas published in the struggle between the Beggars and the University, by gisîri Parisus, qui in philo.sopliia majores reputantur, vestrse Paternitatij tanquam vero intellectuilluminato, transmittere dignum duxi, ut eus jam in multis congregationibus impugnatos, vos otio vestri imperii terminatis, Primus est quod intellectus omnium hominum est anus et idem numero, etc. (Ibld.)

1. Ibid. 239-40, 293 Quétif and Echard, I, 179, 180, 372. — fflst. (excl. djlaFr., t.XIX, p. 350.

2. Acta SS. Martii, t. I, p. 666.

3. Script, ord. Prœd., t. I, p. 334. In other editions, this treatise is, it is said, entitled: Contra quemdam Averroistam, or, what is more singularbind, Contra quemdam militem in Golardia.

4. Archives of Yieusseux, vol. VI, part 2, p. 412.

example Opus contra pestiferam doctrinam retrahentium homines a religionis ingressuy directed against GuilSaint-Amour lamp, and which is found among the OpusSaint Thomas's buttocks immediately after the Contra Averrohtas. But isn't this very rapprochement not Significant? Isn't it also quite remarkable that in remuneration of heretics defeated by Saint Thomas, Guillaume de Tocco places Guillaume de Saint-Amour immediating after Averroes!? Let us also note that Saint Thomas composed his treatise Contra Averroistas, in the last years of his life8, therefore towards the era of the condemnation of Averroism under TemPier, around the time Albert composed his answers to Brother Gilles, against the professors of Paris. Finally, the the final words of the treaty seem to be a challenge to the narrow and humble schools on rue du Fouarre: "If quis autem gloriabundus de falsi nominis scientia, velit contra haec quae scripsimus aliquid dicere, non loquatur in angulis nec coram pueris which nesciunt de causis ardais judicare, sed contra hoc scriptum scribat, if audet, et inveniet non solum me, which aliorum sum miniums, sed multos alios, which veritatis sunt cultores, per Quos ejus errori resistetur, vel ignoriœ consuietur. »
The small number of famous works that he bequeathed to us The University of Paris in the 13th century did not allow for to determine which masters this was addressed to proud threat. This Siger, who syllogized dimpor-

1. Peter of Prussia, in his life of Albert the Great, makes a similar comparison the Wdlclmlsts of the Averoites, p. 293. (Antverpiae, 1621.)

2. Contra quem errorem jampridem multa conscripsimus..., (Init. tract.) — Bernard the Iubeis] supposes that this treaty was written in Paris, after 12G9, when Saint Thomas was rector for the second time of the house on rue Saint-Jacques. (Adaot. previa^in edit. Veixet., 1787, 8°, t. XIX, p. 225.)

moon truths, and that Dante, out of gratitude without doubt for the lessons he had received from it, place in the Paradise next to Albert and Saint Thomas; this Siger remained obscure, because he did not have the means to arrive at the renamed the support of a religious order, and that one of its learned heirs were to rescue from oblivion*, is he not a masters whom the Mendicants found good to insult in their poor hovels? Indeed, he quotes as-He often quotes Averroes and Moses Maimonides, and in his Treatise De Anima intellectwa 2, Averroist questions on the corruptibility of the soul3 the multiplication of the prin-
The concept of thinking with bodies is very clearly posed.
The donations of books made to the University of Paris in 4271 3, Siger and Géraud d'Abbeville attest to another
On the other hand, their penchant for Arabism. The Sor- fund good, which represents the current studies of the University the city of Paris in the 13th and 14th centuries, contains up to nine manuscripts of Averroes, while the Saint- collections Victor and Saint-Germain only own one or two.
Some of these manuscripts bear traces of a daily use in teaching: thus no. 942 con-contains lessons extracted word for word from the great commen-silence; at the end of issue no. 943, we read this note from the owner: Commentaria ista constituentunt florenos XXX, pretio inestimaôilia, quum in eis veritas philosophiez natu-realis et philos ophiee award-winning contineatur tota et perfecta.
But what proves better than anything else how much Averroist doctrines gained favor with the masters of Paris, it is that after the numerous condemnations

1. Hist. litt, from Fr., t. XXI, p. 96 et seq. (Art, by M. Victor

The Clerk.)

2. Sorbs. No. 963, f. S3v°.— Hist. lit. of the Fr.tl c., p. 123.

3. Ibid.,^. Ail.

nations to which they had been subjected, after the warning given in 1271 to the rector of the University and to the procurator the faculty of Arts' desire to no longer tolerate that one dealt in schools with the issues that had already been raised raised so many storms1, we find them in 1277 stirring of new university and provoking a condemnation more explicit than the previous ones. This sentence was again rendered by Etienne Tempier, after a discussion a very lively sion that took place at the bishopric2. Here are some- One of the condemned propositions: "Quod Deus non potest facere plurals animas in number. — Quod Deus nunquam plures creavil intelligentias quam modo creat.

— Si non esset sensus, forte intellectus non distinctionet inter Socratem and Platonem, distinguish between and inter hominem and asinum. —Quod intelligentia, animus vel anima separata nusquam est. - — Quia intelligent no habent materiam, Deus non posset plures ejusdem speciei facere. — Quod intellectus est unus number omnium, licet omnino separetur a corpore hoc, non tamen ab omni. —Quod motus cœli sunt propter animam intellectivam. — Anima separata non est alterabilis secundum philosophiam, licet secundum fidem alteretur. — Quod scientia magistri et discipuli est una number. — Quod intellectus agens non est forma corporis humani.

—Quod inconveniens est ponere aliquos intellectus nobihores aliis: quia quum illa diversitas non possit esse a parte corporum, oportet ut sit a parte intelligentiarum. Error, quia sic anima Christi non esset nobilior anima Judah. — Quod non fut primus homo nec ultimus erit.

l.DuBoulay, t. III, p. 398.

2. We can see the long list of proposals condemned this year in du Boulay (III, 433), in the Biblïoth. Max. Pair. (l. c.) and at the continuation of the Sentences of Peter Lombard.

—Quod mundus est seternus. — What is impossible is solvererationes phiiosophy of œternitate mundi. — Quod naturalis phiiosophus simpliciter debet negare mundi novitatem, quia nititur causis et rationibus naturalibus: faithfully autem potest negare mundi œternitatem, quia nititur causis supernaturalibus. — Quod creatio non est possibilis, quamvis contrarium sit tenendum secundum fidem. — Quod corpora eœlestia moventur prineipio extrinseco, what is anima. — Quod non contingit corpus corruptum redire unum number, nec idem numero resurget. — Quod resurrectio futura non debit credi a philosopho, quia impossibilis est investigari per rationem. Error, which phiiosophus debet captivare intellctum in obsequium fidei. »

But here are some even stranger suggestions: “Quod sermones theologi sunt fundati irifabulis, — Quod nihil plus scitur propter scire theologiam. - — Quod fabulse et falsa sunt in lege christiana, sicut et in aliis.. — Quod lex christiana impedit addiscere. — Quod sapientes mundi sunt phiiosophi tantum. — Quod no estexcellentior status quam vacare philosophiae. — Quod non est curandum de flde, si dicatur esse aliquid haerctieum. » As we can see, a huge step has been taken since 1269 and since Saint Thomas. It is not a more than some more or less daring interpretation of the philosopher's thought: it is faith itself which is openly dismissed as a fable; the Christian religion- Yours is a religion like any other, mixed with fables. like the others. Taverrism's grand tactic Paduan, the opposition of the philosophical and theo- order Logic, reveals itself with its false appearances of respect. "They claim," the synod said, "that there are things that are true" according to philosophy, although they are not according to faith, as if there were two opposing truths, and as if, in opposition to the truth of Scripture, the The truth could be found in the books of damned pagans. of which it is written: "I will lose the wisdom of the wise." John XXI, by a bull addressed to Tempier, orgives the power to search for and punish the supporters of if dangerous opinions. It seems, however, that the error was far from being stifled; for from 1310 to 1312, we have seen Raymond Lulle struggling in Paris against the averroists, and especially against the principle that served as a covergreen to all their boldness. Petrarch wanting to designate the places where Averroist Peripateticism is most prevalent Vogue, names Contentiosa Pariseos in the front line ac strepidulus Straminum vicusK

Undoubtedly, we can only assume doctrines However bold those of the University of Paris might have been, whole. These propositions: Quodnihil plus scitur propter scire theologiam; Quod lex christiana impedit addiscere; Quod sapientes mwidi sunt philosophi tantum, clearly demonstrate a reaction from the secular spirit against the theologians. I am therefore inclined to believe that the The Averroists of Paris were much more than just masters. the arts than masters in divinity. The Sorbonne in The general was a Thomist. Godefroi des Fontaines, one of the the most distinguished doctors of the University of Paris, expressly rejects the Averroist theory on the individual duality, and goes further than Saint Thomas himself the reaction against realism and the Franciscan school2. 11 is very difficult, amidst the quarrels that are tearing apart would at that time the philosophical world of grasping

1. From sui ijuitu and mult. ignore. Opp. t. II, p. 10ol (ed. Ilenricpetri), 2.Hauréiiu, Phïl. tcol, t. If, p. 290 et seq.

precisely the nuance of the different parties. This nuance. Was she even properly stopped? Aren't there days when chaos where words lose their original meaning, where friends can no longer find each other, where enemies seem- Can they join hands? When, in a few centuries We will write the history of the quarrels of the 19th century, will it be easy to distribute the roles, and to define exactly the Various factions from different camps? The second half The 13th century was a time for the University of Paris analogous! The Mendicants, strengthened by the support of Rome (in In six or seven years they had obtained up to forty bubbles of Alexander IV), and the favor of a king whom their re- Knowledge was raised so high, the Beggars demanded shouting for liberty and equality, so that they may reign alone. Their perpetual effort in this struggle tended to make pas- to serve the University for heterodox. It was not at that time a clatter of condemnations across the entire surface of the scholastic world. Averroism could be a weapon powerful in this debate

Between the Saint Dominic people And those who read logic;

it could serve, like so many flexible and formidable words in the hands of slander, to cast suspicion on those who We wanted to lose. We saw Guillaume de Tocco and Peter of Prussia almost associated the courageous William from Saint-Amour, the Malleus menclicantlum, to Averroes among the heretics crushed by Saint Thomas and Albert. Simon of Tournai did not atone for the crime any less dearly.

i. To grasp the true scope of these debates, see the scholarly articles by Mr. Le Clerc on Siger of Brabant, William of Saint-Amour, Gerard or Géraud d'Abbeville, and M. LajardsurGodefroi des Fontaines, in Volume XXI of the Literary History of France.

for having defended the University. The Beggars satisfied their hatred for this unfortunate man. According to Mathieu Paris, he– He came mute and idiotic, and it was only after several years– born that, with God's anger having subsided, he could learn– to tell his son, still a child, to babble the Lord's Prayer and the I believe. Thomas of Cantimpré's account is more terrible. again: right there in the pulpit, at the very moment when Simon had just... to pronounce the blasphemy of the Three Impostors, the eyes They turned around, he began to roar like an ox and to he rolled around in an epileptic fit; from then on he forgot everything his science, and lived like an animal, not knowing how to– to name no other than that of his concubine. That's it. how the Beggars took their revenge. Perhaps something Did a natural accident give rise to these terrible histories, which frightened the imagination of schoolchildren. Géraud d'Abbeville died paralyzed and leprous. Siger, that Dante saw in the eternal light beside the of the most revered doctors, what has remained in the tradition? tion? an infidel, a blasphemer, an impious convert through a vision of hell and finally taking the pants; another way of taking revenge that the L. brothers were fond of. All their enemies converted to the Order, or mou– would be associated with the warning signs of damnation, § XIIÎ.

The condemnations of 1277 already show us the Averroist propositions associated with incredulity, and this Incredulity is clearly linked by Etienne Tempier to the study of Arabic philosophy[2]. We tou– pigs in the time when Averroes is no more, in the eyes of the

---

i. Hist. read. of Fr. Vol. XXI, p. 112 et seq.

2. Errcres prœdictos gentilium scripturis inveniunt, quos, proh dolor! ad sua m imperiliam assert. (Du Boulay, t. III, p. 433.)

a large number, that the author of a dreadful blaspheme, and where all his works will be summarized in the word from the Three Impostors.

The reign of faith seems, at first glance so absolute in the Middle Ages, that one would be tempted to believe that for a thousand years, since the disappearance of the ancient rationalism until the appearance of rationa– modernism, no protest has arisen con– between the established religion. But a more careful study of the history of the human mind during this curious era, leads to a significant tightening of the period of absolute faith. It is undoubtedly important to distinguish here the boldness of thought which, accepting the revealed dogma, focuses on the interpretation of this dogma, on the attack against revelation itself. John Scotus Eriugena, for example-ple, is obviously a very bold and very- unorthodox. Yet, is Scotus Eriugena an unbeliever? Dule? No, certainly not. Saint John the Evangelist, Saint Paul are, for him, revealed authorities. True thought- Completely incredulous, the rejection not of this or that dogma, but from the foundation of all dogmas, the belief that All religions are equal and are all impostures. res, is not well characterized until the 13th century. This is understandable: the idea of comparative religion could not to be born only in a century where people had some basic knowledge on the various religions of the world. Now, the first half of the Middle Ages only had the vaguest ideas on cults foreign to Christianity and Judaism Daism. All were lumped together under the vague name of pa-organization. As long as Muhammad was regarded as an idol beloved in the company of Apollin and Tervagan, he was not It is hardly possible to consider comparing Christianity to... Such ridiculous superstitions. Things were no longer the same.

when the works of Peter the Venerable and Robert of Retinas on TAleoran, the crusades, the books of polemique, composed by the Dominicans, would have given a a more accurate idea of Islamism. Muhammad then appeared like a prophet, founder of a monotheistic cult, and we arrived at this result: that there are three in the world religions, founded on similar principles, and all three melee of fables1. It was this thought that translated in popular opinion by the blasphemy of the Three Imposters.

This is the quintessential incredulous idea; like all the new ideas, it corresponded to an enlargement- The knowledge of the universe. For the virgin faith In naive times, there was only one religion. Or one ignores that others exist; or, if one knows of any existence, these cults seem so perverse that their sectateurs barely deserve to be counted in the species human. What a shock to consciences, the the day we realize that outside of religion that Your teacher, there are others who are not after all completely devoid of reason! The honesty with the- which the Church undertook the refutation of Judaism and of Islamism also acts powerfully in this direction. Refute It's about raising awareness. How many people haven't been introduced to it? to the heterodoxy that the Solvuntur objected to in the treaties of theology! 2 Did we not see the Florentine traveler Ri-

1. Nicolas Eymeric mentions heretics who supported in Aragon: Qiiod secta iniqui Mahomet i est œque catholica si eu fiel es Jesu Christ'; [Direct. Inquis., p. 198. Romse, 1578). A miniature that is found under-Wind at the forefront of Raymond Lulle's manuscripts, depicts him knocked unconscious at Candle by the Muslims, which he provokes with these words: "Quod sola christianorum religio is vera. » (Ms. funds of Saint-Germain, 619.)

2. Secular common sense understood this well. See in Joinville the A charming account of the Clugny dispute. [Collection of the histories of Gaul and coldo of Monte Croce, the author of the Cribvatio Alcorani, publish a book De variis religiombus*? What didn't I learn rent point the refutation of the Alcoran of Peter the Venerable-maple, Pugio fidei, Capistrum Judseorum of Raymond Martini? Tolerance, common sense, spirit The criticism shown by the Dominican Brocard in his itinerary in the Holy Land will always be a subject of discussion.

Surprise 2. Travels and crusades hastened the same result. Hadn't we seen a Saladin, an infidel, su-superior in good faith, loyalty, and humanity to these troops of adventurers who represented the faith in the East Christian3?

Thus, the 13th century arrived by all means at the idea of comparative religions, that is to say, indifference and to naturalism. That is what one finds no It had left its mark in the preceding centuries. We had clearly seen sectarians claim, in the theological discussion of dogma, the degree of freedom to which the human mind never gives up. Bérenger especially had shown something more than a heretic; his discussion had been almost an attack. Gaunilo, in his Liber pro insipiente, had dared to defend the fool who He said in his heart: There is no God. What to think of this terrible sophism of Sic and Non, and in this way

(from the Fr., vol. XX, p. 498.) “I also tell you,” the king said, “that no one, if he is not a very good clerk, should not argue with the Jews; my lawful (secular) man, When he spoke ill of the Christian law, he should not defend the law Christiane, not but of the sword, of what he must give among the belly
"Dens, as long as she can get in there."

1. Mansi, ad Fabr. Bibl. med. and Inf. lat., t. VI, p. 91.

2. Hist. lit. of the Fr., t. XXI, p. 187.

3. The Christian chronicler, continuator of William of Tyre, does not does not hide his predilection for Saladin, and agrees with him in all circumconsistency.

to play with the most formidable dogmas? Ortho-Doxie herself took on the uncertain nuances of the epoquestions troubled by doubt. Guillaume de Champeaux, Gilbert de La Porrée and Pierre Lombard were auxiliaries.
suspects, which are only accepted after they have been previously condemned. But none of this could be called Incredulity. These are theological disputes, pure logic exercises, very dangerous indeed, because one does not irritate this delicate fiber of belief with impunity.
and it is then difficult to take the dogma seriously that we have thus handled, tormented.

This is therefore the century of Saint Louis, the century that we would like to represent us as the ideal of civilization-Christian tradition, which signals the revival of the Middle Ages incredulity. Works which, nowadays, reproduce-would show the license and contempt for holy things that affected-tent Rutebeuf, the romances of the Rose and the Fox, se-would barely be tolerated. Is this really a 13th-century poet?
that one thinks one hears in these verses:

Non dubito superos falses adducere tested,
Nil audet magnum qui putat esse Deos *?

What doctor today, at the Sorbonne, would dare to wave the Impossibilia of Siger2? and what to think of a bicycle where one sees a good and frank nature, like that of Joinville, almost coming to confide in us of his temptations of unbelief3?

1. Gela de Vital de Blois [Bibl. de l'École des chartes, IIe série, t. IV,
p. uOO). This couplet is missing from Cardinal Mai's edition (Classici (Actors, vol. V.) In a piece from the Carmina Burana, from the 13th century, I read similarly: A'on semper utile est Diis credere. {Bibl. des liter. 7'ereins, Suiltgard, 1847, p. 58.)

2. Jlist lilt. of the Fr., t. XXI, p. 121-121

3. Collection of hist. of Gaul and France, vol. XX, p. 197.

Italy, like France, participated in this great upheaval.

element of consciousness. The proximity of antiquity paganism had left behind a dangerous seed of revolt.
against Christianity. At the beginning of the 11th century, we had seen a certain Vilgard, a schoolmaster in Ra-venne f declare that everything the poets said an-
That was the truth, and that was what one should believe.
in preference to the Christian mysteries*. From the year 1115, In Florence, there is a fairly strong faction of Epicureans.
to provoke bloody unrest there 2. The Ghibellines were generally considered materialistic and people without religion. Arnaud de Bresse was already translating into movement-political, philosophical and religious revolt.
Aniauld de Villeneuve was considered a follower of a sect Pythagorean poetry, widespread throughout Italy. The poem of the Descent of Saint Paul into Hell speaks with terror of a secret society that had sworn destruction of Christianity3. The Epicureans, imprisoned alive in coffins occupy a special circle in Hell.
Dante. Cavalcante from the Cavalcanti, Farinata from the Uberti 4
They are included with Frederick II, Cardinal Ubaldini and others thousands of others.5 Guido Cavalcanti himself was passing by

1. Rad. Glaber, apud dom Bouquet, t. X, p. 23.

2. Ozanam, Dante, p. 48 (2nd ed.).

3. Ibid., p. 47, 345.

4. “Farinata,” said Benvenuto d’Imola, “was the leader of the Ghibellines and believed,” Like Epicurus, he believed that paradise should only be sought in this world.
Cavalcante's principle was: Unus est interitus hominis et mare or um. » (Ms. Bibl. nat. suppl. fr. n° 4146, f. 47, 48.)

5. Quicon piu di mille giaccio. Inf. cant. IX and X.— Benvenuto ob-to serve that the heresy of the Epicureans is by far the most numerous [E chussi poteano say rain of centomillia migliara), and that these are generally element of men of good condition {Jxuomirà magnificï). L. cf 46, 47, 30. One of the heresies reproached by Philip the Fair to Boniface VIII was not believing in the immortality of the soul.

for logician, physicist, epicurean, atheist. "When the Good people, said Boccaccio, saw him as abstract and dreamy.
in the streets of Florence, they claimed that he was looking for a series of arguments to prove that there is no God*. The Middle Ages, preoccupied with its ideas of suffering France, must have been tempted to regard them as unbelievers The wealthy, worldly people, leading a joyful life. Those those who suffer, in fact, experience a greater need to believe, and readily assume that the fortunate ones of century people cared little for the afterlife. Heresies ever-emerging from Lombardy in the 13th century, these Cathars who never tired of being burned, represented on their side, there can be no doubt, feel a protest resistance against the absolute rule of the Church, and an aspirationtion towards freedom of conscience.

S xiv.

But how do these heterodox trends, which workmilks spread throughout Europe in the 13th century, did they manage to to align themselves with Arabism and to cloak themselves in the name of AverRoes, that's what we need to look for the explanation for in the court of the Hohenstaufen.

Frederick II's predilection for the Arabs, which He was so bitterly reproached by his enemies, he held at the very core of his views and character. 2. The idea The dominant characteristic of this great man was civilization in the most modern meaning of this word, I mean the development noble and liberal development of human nature, in opposition to this taste for abjection and ugliness which

---

1. Cesare Balbo, Vita di Dante (Torino, 1839), p. 92.

2. See on this subject a fine page by M. Villemain, Tableau de la Literature in the Middle Ages, 10th lesson.

had captivated the Middle Ages, rehabilitation, in a word, of everything that Christianity had too absolutely tainted by the name of world and worldly vanities. Supélaugher to Charlemagne himself by the elevation with theHe had understood this ideal, but it came to shatter against an invincible obstacle, the religious institutions of his century. We will never fully understand everything that happened. anger in the heart of this man, when from his palace from Capua, surrounded by the wonders he had created, he saw his work halted a few leagues away by a bishop and mendicant monks. Now, the Arabs, that Frederick counted a large number of his subjects The Two Sicilies, corresponded much better to his views. He couldwould say, like Philip Augustus: "Happy Saladin, who had no pope! His insatiable curiosity, his analytical mind, his truly extensive knowledge stakeholders were expected to bring him closer to this engineered race nieuse, which in his eyes represented freedom of thought, rational science. He loved the Arab cities of Lucera, from Foggia, with their mosques, their schools, their bazaars, and even their harems. It was certainly a

What a strange spectacle this crusade was, where one saw the most cordial union reigns between the emperor and the chief infidels, much to the chagrin of their fanatical armies *
The scandal reached its peak during Frederick's visit to Jerusalem. He did not appear in this place, the holiest of the Christianity, rather than openly mocking Christendom Christianism; the minister of the mosque of Omar who acted on it companion recounts the jokes by which this A strange pilgrim marked his visit to the holy places. He passed-knows how to spend his time discussing mathematics and phi-philosophy with Muslim scholars, and addressed to Sultan of very difficult problems on these different sciences: the sultan, for his part, sent as a gift to the emperor an artificial sphere that represented the movements of the heavens and planets*. That is what passed through Egypt, twenty years before Louis IX dreamed a crusade in a century already dominated by disbelief.

Frederick's court, and later Manfred's, thus became an active center of Arabism and indifference-religious ence. Cardinal Ubaldini, friend of Frederick, openly professed materialism. 2. Orthodoxy of Michel Scot and Pierre des Vignes was very soup-connée. People of ill repute flocked to this court.
There were eunuchs, a harem, and astrologers.
from Baghdad with long robes and long beards3, and Jews richly pensioned by the emperor for translate Arabic scientific works*. All of this... transformed into popular belief in relationships
guilty along with Astaroth and Beelzebub:

Amisit astrologos and magos and vates, Beelzebub and Ashtaroth, proprios penates f Tenebrarum consulens per quos potestates, Spreverat Ecclesiam et mundi magnates;

said the Guelph poet who celebrates the victory of Parma in 12488.

This is undoubtedly the origin of the tradition that makes Living the lives of Averroes' sons at Frederick's court, a tradition

---

1. Bibl. des Croisades, chroniques arabes par M. Reinaud, p. -426, 431 and following. — De Raumer, Geschichte der Hohenstaufen, t. III, 7thS Buch, S" und 6eS Haupstuck.

2. Benvenuto d'Imola, ad In/, cant. X, v. 120.

3. Muratori, Script, rer. ital., t. XIV, col. 930-931.

4. See. above, p. 148, and Krafft, Codd. hcbr. Vienna, p. 128. — From Rossi, Codd. heùr., t. II, p. 37-38.

5. Apud Albert Beham, Registrum epist.f p. 128. {Biblioihek des liter, rereins, Stuttgart, 1847.)

which Gilles de Rome echoed. The passage of this the author we mentioned above (p. 202) has gave rise to serious misunderstandings. It has been said that Gilles de Rome had seen at Frederick's court two sons of Aver-Roes, Naudé, Vossius, Bayle and those who copied them, they even assumed it was Frédéric Barberedhead \ Now, Gilles de Rome is only reporting a vague tradition which he does not support with his testimony, and this circumstance quidiebus nostris obiit proves evidently-The fact that it is Frédéric IL The unnatural way whose passage into questiou is brought about would even lead to to believe that it is a marginal gloss, introduced into the text. In any case, this noise, too easily adopted, is in clear contradiction with what Ibn-Abi-Ocei-Bia tells us about the sons of Averroes. Arab tastes Frédéric's love of science, distorted by the hatred of beggars and by this natural suspicion what the people feel for rational science, don-gave rise to the strangest rumors and slander.
the most extravagant 2.

1. Naudé, Apologie, p. 354 (Paris, 1625). — Bayle, Dîct. crit., art.
Averroes, note A. — Jourdain, p. 150. — De Gerando, Hist. comp^
t. IV, p. 462.

2. Terrible things were said about his experiences: that he had even-men were sent to study the phenomenon of digestion; that he had raising children in isolation, to see what language they speak They would sing first. These poor little creatures died for lack of songs.
to put them to sleep! His menageries also greatly displeased the beggars.
and to the people. — Cf. de R au mer, op. cit. p. 489 et seq.

§XV.

The heterodox movement of the Middle Ages is divided into two very distinct currents, one of which is characterized by The eternal Gospel includes mystical tendencies and communists who, starting with Joachim of Fiore, after having filled the 12th and 13th centuries, with John of Parma, Gerard of San Donnino, Ubertin of Casale, Peter of Bruys, Valdo, Dolcino, the brothers of the free spirit, continued in the 14th century by the German mystics 4 and the other, summed up in the blasphemy of the Three Imposters, represents materialistic incredulity, prove- dedicated to the study of the Arabs and using the name A- Verroes. It was, it must be admitted, neither a chance nor a a whim of popular imagination, which establishes a close connection between this disbelief and Muslim philosophy- mane. Islamism, which emerged from a very deliberate movement and relatively quite modern, contained a collection of naturalism that was to bear fruit \ A book like that of Shahristani, impartially exposing the state religious and philosophical sects that share the world, by recognizing the good sides of each of them, was hardly possible in the Middle Ages except in within Islamism. It is a surprising thing that the ease with which religions can be compared presents itself to the minds of Muslims. "Christians," says Aboulola, wander here and there in their path, and the Muslims- men are completely out of the way; the Jews are not more than mummies, and the Persian Magi of dreams- "Wors..." "Jesus," he says elsewhere, "came, who abolished the the law of Moses; Muhammad followed it, who introduced the five prayers per day. Tell me now, since you Live under one of these laws, enjoy it more or less of the sun and the moon*? The Sufis professed the same indifference: "When there is no longer a me or a you7 What then does the Muslim's mosque, or the synagogue, matter? "The Jew's gallows, or the Christian's convent?" Finally, the Arab historians speak without much surprise of peoples who have no religion, or men who, like Batou and Tamerlane, stood outside of all established cults.

{ . Cf. Ch. Lenormant, Questions historiques, II* part. p. 126 et seq.

The mixing of religions in Andalusia was due to inspire similar thoughts. From this arose deism. Maimonides, and that curious book Khozari where the author makes the theologians of the three religions, Jewish, Christian and Muslim, and a philo- Sophie. We have seen the expression boldly eloquent trium legum to reappear often in the writings of Aver- roès. There can be no doubt that this expression has no doubt- this blow contributed to the reputation for incredulity that weighed on him throughout the Middle Ages. "Averroes," said Giles from Rome in his De Erroribus philosophorumz1 renew all the philosopher's errors, but he is far less excusable, because he attacks more directly- our faith. Regardless of the errors of the phi- The philosopher is criticized for having condemned all religions. gions, as can be seen from the second and eleventh books of the Metaphysics, where he criticizes the law of the Christians and that of the Saracens, because they admit the creation ex nihilo. He still blames religions in the beginning.

1. D'Herbelot, at the word Aboulola,

2. De Sacy, Journ. des Savants, January 1822, p. 12.

3. See Appendix. II, and Possevini Bïbl, select. >t. II, 1. XII, cap. xxxvi tt suiv« from the third book of Physics; and, what's worse, it calls us, us and all those who hold for a religion, talkers, chatterers*, people devoid of reason. At VHP's book on Physics, he still blames religions, and calls the opinions of theologians fantasies, as if they conceived them on a whim and not out of reason." Two pages later, Gilles de Rome, summarizing the Averroes' heterodox theories lead him to say: Quod nulla lex est vera, licetpossit esse esse utilis. Nicolas EymeRie repeats the same accusations identically and the same misinterpretations 2.

It is clear, therefore, that this is not without some reason that Public opinion blamed Averroes for the criminal thinking of parallel between religions and the saying of the Three Impostors. This thought, which pursues like a painful dream, all the twelfth century, was at least the result of Arabic studies, and the result of the Hohenstaufen court spirit. It blossoms anonymously, without anyone daring to admit it; She is like temptation, like Satan hidden within the very heart of this century. Adopted by some as a blasphemy, taken by others as a slander- denies it, the word of the Three Impostors was in the hands of Beggars, a terrible army, always in reserve for to lose their enemies. Did they want to defame someone, in to create a new Judas in the public eye, he had said that there three imposters... and the word remained like a stigma. All the brothers' enemies had soon uttered this

1. Gilles took the expression "Loquentes" as an insult, by which The Latin translators rendered Motecallemïn (theologians).

2. Hic secutus est errores Aristotelis, et cum majori pertinacia defensavit... Vituperât legem christianorum et sectam Sarracenorum.... Vituperait our Christians, asserens our esse garrulatores and sine ratione our moving. — Leave IIa, queest. 4a. {Direct, Inquis., p. 174, sqq., Rom", 1578.)

blasphemy1. Frederick's opponents could not imagine nothing better to make this prince the precursor of the Antichrist.2 “This king of pestilence,” wrote Gregory IX, asserts that the universe has been deceived by three imposters (tribes baratorïbus); that two of them died in glory, while Jesus was hanging on a cross. Moreover, he clearly and loudly supports, or rather He dares to lie to the point of saying that all of them are fools who believe that a God created the world and everything- May the mighty be born of a virgin. He supports this heresy. that no man can be born without the commerce of man and woman. He adds that one should not absolutely- to believe that what is proven by the laws of things and by natural reason 3. To make a greater impact In the popular imagination, the word became a book. AverRoes, Frederick II, Peter of the Vines, Arnauld of Villenew, Boccaccio, Poggio Bracciolini, Pietro Aretino, Machiavelli, Symphorien Champier, Pomponat, Cardan, Bernardin Ochin, Servet, Guillaume Postel, Campanella, Muret, Jordano Bruno, Spinosa, Hobbes, Vanini were succes- the authors of this mysterious book, which personne didn't see it (I'm mistaken, Mersenne saw it, but in Arab!) which never existed.4. Often the century dares to He can hardly admit his bad thoughts to himself, and loves to cover them thus with a borrowed name, on which he

1. Father Barletta, who is not very scrupulous about chronology, assumes that It was Porphyry who first had the idea of comparing Moses, Jesus and Mohammed! — See. Menagiana, t. IV, p. 286.

2. Gaudet se nominari praeamhulum Antichristi. Gregorii IX Epist. apud Labhe, Concïl.y t. XIII, col. 1157.

3. Ibid. Mathieu Paris repeated the same accusations. (Vol. IV, p. 4993) 524, trans. Huillard-Bréholles.)

4. See La Monnoie's dissertation in the Menagiana, vol. IV, pp. 283-312.

then discharges his curses, for the acquittal of his awareness.

This is the same process that governed the formation of the The legend of the incredulous Averroes. There are three religions, he had said this impious man, one of which is impossible, it is the Christ-Tianism; another is a religion of children, that is the Judaism; the third, a religion of pigs, is Islam-misme1. Then everyone glossed it in their own way, and made it say to Averroes what he dared not say in his own name. Why is Christianity an impossible religion? The great stumbling block, the mystery before which Even reason, when tamed, has always cried out: Get away From me this chalice! The Eucharist, then appeared to the A shaken conscience. Averroes called the Christian religion-hold a religion that is impossible because of the Eucharist. One day, it was said, this unbeliever entered a Christian church. He saw the faithful there, feeding themselves. of their God. "Horror!" he cried, "is there in the world a sect more insane than that of the Christians, which man-"The God they worship*?" It is from this moment that the The unfortunate man ceased to believe in any religion, and said, in parodying Balaam's words: May my soul die of the death of philosophers! Others were making people travel to Averroes encompassed all degrees of unbelief. He had com-He began as a Christian, then became Jewish, then Muslim. man, then renounced all religion.4 It was then that he

---

1. Cf. Bayle, Dict.t art. Averr.^ note H, — Mcnagîana, t. IV, p, 378. — Brucker, vol. III, p. 109.

2. There was perhaps a reminiscence of Cicero here; “Ecquem “tain amentcm esse putas, qui illud quo vescatur Deum credatesse? » [De nat, Deor,, 1. III, cap. xvi.)

3. Moriatur anima mea morte justorum. (Num. 23, 10.)

4. Anton. Sirmundus, De Immortalitatc animœ, p. 29.

wrote the book of the Three Impostors, Each one was doing Aver-Roès interprets his doubt and disbelief. He does not He didn't believe in the Eucharist, some said; he didn't believe "Not the devil," said another; he didn't believe in hell. supported a third. Averroes thus became the scapegoat emissary onto whom everyone unloaded their incredible thoughts dule, the rabid dog which, driven by an exec- fury Crab, never stopped barking against Christ and against the Catholic faith 2.

To what period should we attribute the formation of this singularity? A legend? No well-defined trace of it can be found. It was ridiculed neither in Albert nor in Saint Thomas. On the contrary, Gilles de Rome, Raymond Lulle, Duns Scot, Nicolas Eymeric, the paintings of Orcagna, Traini, Gaddi, we already see Averroes as the master of Incredulity. Duns Scotus constantly calls it Me maie-Averroes's clictus. The epithet "impossible," which Averroes, According to legend, it applied to Christianity, and is found already mentioned in Raymond Lulle as one of the blasphemies of the Averroists \ It is therefore probable that the Most of these stories originated around the year 1300. Petrarch certainly had the aphorisms in mind impious acts that were attributed to the Arab philosopher, when he speaks of his intention to refute it, by rasseeming to utter his blasphemies* from all sides. Gerson did not refers to it by these words: the cursed one, the enraged Xaboyeur,

---

1. Naudé, Apology, p. 320.

2. “Ganem illum rabidum Averroem, qui furore actus infando, contra Dominum suum Christum, contraque catholicam fidem latrat. » Petrarch. Epist. sine titulo, p. 636.

3. In IV Sentent., Dist. 43, quœst. 2.

4. Acta SS. Junii, t. V, p. 667.

5. Collectig undique blasphemiis ejus (1, c). ~

Y, the most bitter enemy of Christians*, and attributes to him expressly blasphemy against the three religions and on the Eucharist2. Benvenuto of Imola commenting on the Canto IV of Inferno, expresses astonishment that Dante could have placed in an honorable stay without severe punishment, a impious like Averroes, who was the proudest of philosophers, struck all religions with the same contempt, and regarded Christ as the least skillful of imposeurs, since he had only succeeded in getting himself crucified3.

S xvi.

It is especially in Italian painting of the Middle Ages It is at this age that the role of Averroes appears with originality, envi-portrayed as a representative of unbelief. The sign-The scholastic approach of the Dominicans had so deeply penetrated... all the intellectual culture of the time, including art itself It borrowed its subjects and characters from it. The chapter

Santa Maria Novella is, in this respect, a monument unique, a painting of the Summa Theologica of Saint Thomas. AmBrogio Lorenzetti was both the pride of the school Sienese and learned scholasticism. Scholasticism was pareverything. At the Campo Santo in Pisa, Buffalo (other (as Pietro d'Orvieto says) represents the mystical circles worldly intelligences, according to Ptolemy's system mée and the Areopagite. In Padua, it is the science of Occcult and mysterious of Pierre d'Abano who inspires the

1. Maledictus iste.... Adversarius noster procacissimus. — Tract, in 31agnificat. Opp., t. IV, col. 401, 438. (Antverp. 1706.)

2. Cognitum est quid latrator iste démens evomuerit adversns leges omnes, quod malse sunt, Christiana vero pessima, qusе Deum suum quotidie comedit. [Iùid., col. 400.)

3. Ms. bibl. nat. 4146, suppl. fr., fol. 25. — The anonymous commentary nyme 70024 (Bibl. nat.) repeats almost the same observations.

alchemical and astrological frescoes in the vast hall Della Bagione, and those of Guariento to the Hermits, plus bizarre again. In Siena, Taddeo Bartolo represents at Signoria palace, the great philosophers of the antiquity, Aristotle, Cato of Utica, Curius Dentatus; there philosophy even found its place in the famous chiaroscuro mosaics of the Dome: Hermes Trismegistusgiste presents his Pimander to a Christian and a pagans who also accept it; Virtue is based on a steep mountain that Socrates climbs with effort and Crates. The Perugino school followed the same traditions: It is still the philosophers of antiquity who appear on the walls of the admirable Cambio hall in Perugia, and at the very moment when painting renounces all habits of the Middle Ages, Raphael summarizes again, with less naivety perhaps, all the philosophical ideas questions of his time in the School of Athens.

The first painting to feature Averroes is Hell. by André Orcagna, in the Campo Santo of Pisa, executed Around the year 13351. The drama of the afterlife, the judgment last and the three states of souls beyond the grave, had become the framework for all religious conceptions religious, philosophical, poetic, satirical works from Italy of the Middle Ages. Pisa, Florence, Assisi, Orvieto, Bologna, Ferrara and Padua each had their own hell or their own judgment last, full of local allusions and personal mischiefnelles of the painter. In that of the Campo Santo, the remnants-

1. This unique composition was engraved in the early days of the printing press, and perhaps served as a frontispiece for the earliest editions from the D'mne Comédie, with the following inscription: Questo è Vinferno del Campo Santo di Pisa. This print is important because it shows the work-Orcagna's house as it was before Sollazzino's alterations in 1530, is found in the Pisa illustrata by Alessandro da Morrona (t. II, 2nd ed.).

Dante's origins are undeniable. One cannot However, it should be noted that Orcagna offered himself for the position, as he... made later in Santa Maria Novella and Santa Croce, from to reproduce the entire Dantean topography, taken as a geographical revelation of the land beyond the grave. While the division into bolgias is reminiscent of the Divine Comedy, the detail of the infernal categories is far from corresponding dre to those of Alighieri*. Among these bolgia, the two those occupying the upper compartment are intended to the proud, and the proud par excellence are the heretics. Arius appears first, followed by his sec-Then come the magicians and soothsayers, Erigone to their head; then the simoniacs. But the right-wing Bolgia seems reserved for more exquisite tortures, and the three characters who are tormented there obviously emerge of the plebeians of the damned1. First, there is Muhammad, cut to pieces by demons, who devour before his eyes the sections of his limbs; then the Antichrist, flayed alive; then a third character lying on the ground, huddled in the folds of a snake and characterized by his turban and his Long beard: that's Averroes3.

Thus Muhammad and the Antichrist, Averroes, these are the three names on which Orcagna, interpreter of ideas of

1. This idea of infernal categories is found in the representations figurative representations of all peoples. See the Ruthenian hell reproduced by d'Agincourt, Hist. de Part, painting, plate CXX, and the Yama cycle depicted in an old Tibetan painting in the Borgia Museum. (Pau-Saint-Barthélémy flax, Systema bralimanicum, p. 177, ettab. xxnr.)

2. Inscriptions leave no doubt as to the characters that] the the painter wanted to represent.

3. GP Lasinio, Pilture a fresco del Campo Santo ai Pua (Firenze, 1832), tab. XV, png. 17. — G. Rosini, Lettere pittoriche sul Campo Santo (Pisa, 1810), p. hO-51.— G. Rosini, Storia debt pîttura italiana (Pisa, 1840), vol. II, p. 80 et seq. — Vasari, Lives of the Painters (trans. Leclan-(ché), vol. I, p. 394. — Ampère, Voyage Dantesque, p. 219,

His time, discharges all the odiousness of unbelief. He It must be remembered that Dante saw in Muhammad only the author of a schism and within Islamism that a sect arienne[1]. Averroes obviously represents alongside the false prophet, the unbeliever, the blasphemer, he who dared toto develop in a triple insult the religion of Moses, of the Christ and Muhammad.

This role, as we can see, is by no means in keeping with tradition of Dante. Dante, with remarkable tolerance, had placed the Arab philosopher, the one he had so vividly fought, in a region of peace and melancholy rest, among these great men

Spiriti magno,
Che di vederli in me stesso n' esalto.

Here, on the contrary, Av Averroes is now merely the companion of the tortures of the Antichrist. The same data is found-would probably see in other Hells of the same era that. The church of Saint Petronius in Bologna offers, in a from its chapels, a composition attributed to Buffalomaco, and very similar to that of Campo Santo[2]. My cu-Laughter was keenly aroused when, upon examining this In the painting, I saw Muhammad depicted on one side, and on the other a

1. Inferno, eant. XXVIII, 11. — Ozanam, Dante, p. 189.

* Who flees hœresiarcha, potentior Arrio, »

(Poems on the victory of the Pisans; Edel. du Méïil, Popular Latin Poems, vol. II, 1847, p. 248.) — "Unde verius hœretici quam Sarraceni nominari deberent. » (Oliv. Scholast., Hist. damiatina, apud Eccard, Corpus lùst.
med. œvi, t. II, p. 1409-10.) Cf. Jac. by Vitriaco, ed. Bongars, 1. III,
p. 1137.

2. In the Bologna museum, one can see an exact but very-reduced version of the Saint Petronius fresco, a reproduction attributed also in Buffalo.

a character whose name was now reduced to an initial, and
This initial was precisely that of Averroes' name.
But, having brought in a scale to examine Closer to the trace of the erased letters, I recognized the word Apostata i.

Averroes' role is no less characterized in a another order of compositions, inspired by the dominiCains, I mean the Disputes of Saint Thomas, where the commentator invariably figures among the hereticsoverturned asses at the feet of the scholastic master. That is in the church of Saint Catherine, in Pisa, all resplendentthe health of Saint Thomas, next to the pulpit where the doctor Angelica, it is said, taught that the most cua remarkable monument to this theme so dear to the schools of Pisa and Florence2. This painting, which must have been executed around 1340 3, is by Francesco Traini, one of the besttheir 14th-century painters. In the center of the painting, at the In the middle of beams of light, it stands out in strong

1. Next to him is another character called Nichota... He is the chief of the Nicolaitan heresy, which was confused in the Middle Ages with Mahomet. See Bayle, art. Mahomet, note X.

2. MG Rosini, from Pisa, was the first to point out the importance of this taBleau. A very beautiful reproduction of it can be seen in the plates which accompany his History of Italian Painting (table XX). — - Cf. Storia della p. lit. italiana, vol. II, p. 86 et seq. — Vasari described it with a extreme inaccuracy [Flies des peintres, vol. 1, p. 387]. Under the feet of Saint Thomas, he said, we see Sabellius, Arius and Averroes, with their books Torn apart. There was clearly a confusion of memories in Vasari's case. with the fresco by Taddeo Gaddi in the Spanish Chapel. Da Morrona (Pisa illustrata, ed. 2% III, 106), Lanzi [Storia pittoresca deW Italia, t. I, p. 82), and M. Valéry [Voyages en Italie, 1. XI, chap. vn), have repeated the same mistakes. Mr. Ampère is much more accurate (Dantesque Journey, p. 222). See also M. Poujoulat, Tuscany and Rome, Letter IV.

3. See the research of Mr. Bonaini of Pisa, on Traini, in the Annali dellc università tuscane, t. I* (1846), p. 429 et seq.

The proportions of Saint Thomas's head are very much in keeping with the type. received. Vasari even claims that the preaching friars of Pisa brought the portrait of Saint Thomas to Traini from the abbey of Fosseneuve, where he had died, in 274. That's good old Brother Thomas, that big Dominican friar. the puffy-faced, mute Sicilian ox, ruminating whatthat article of his Summa. At the top of the painting, God, source of all light, surrounded by seraphim, spreads its rays on Moses, the evangelists, Saint Paul, etc. Suspended in the clouds. All these rays are reflected. on the forehead of Saint Thomas, who also receives three direct rays from God. On both sides of the painting, a a little below the resplendent head of Doctor An-

In the Gelic period, Plato and Aristotle appear. Plato holds in by hand the Timaeus; Aristotle, the book of Ethics, and, from each- In one of these books, a golden thread rises towards the face of Saint Thomas, and there merges with the waves of light Divine gifts from on high. Saint Thomas, seated In his chair, he holds in his hand the volume of saints Scriptures, opened with these words: Veritatem méditabitur guttur meum, et labia mea detestabuntur impium (Prov. xvi, 7)1. On his knees are spread his various works, and likewise the head of the saint served from meeting point to all beams of light emanating of God, of Moses, of the evangelists, of Saint Paul, of Plato, Aristotle, his voluminous writings serve as starting point for another series of rays that will spread over all the grouped doctors of the Church Two sides at its feet. Only one ray seems to stray.

i. These words are the first of the Summa contra gentiles.

2. Herein lies the most serious error of most of those who have described this painting. However strange it may seem to see Saint Thomas illustrated- To undermine the doctors of the Church, it is quite certain that the rays which on an isolated figure in the foreground of the painting, and upside down at the feet of Saint Thomas. This character, this impious man What the doctor's lips hate is Averroes. He is there, in the attitude of proud meditation, rises-leaning painfully on his elbow, irritated, grumbling, like the impious man he is, estranged from God and from the men. His Great Commentary is beside him, orgreen, but upside down, and as if pierced by the ray that emanates from Saint Thomas.

Such is this painting, which has come down to us intact through five centuries, and which could be called the monument the the most original philosophical painting of the Middle Ages, if art, religion, science, and pleasure had not created Santa Maria Novella, this charming summary of florid life rentine, with its poetic, artistic, scientific memories technical and gallant.

Here again, between Pampinea and Marsile Ficino, Ginevra From Benci and Savonarola, we will encounter Averroes. sacrificed to the triumph of Saint Thomas. Santa Maria ISTOVella is a Dominican church, and the most prominent monument of the influence that the preaching brothers have practiced in Florence until the day they arrived at the governed by brothers Girolamo and Domenico da Pescia. It is this triumph of the Dominican order that Taddeo Gaddi and Simone Memmi undertook to represent to enter the chapter house adjoining the church, and

They start from the knees and are emitted by the saint. Mr. Rosini is mistaken about anoth on the side, assuming that the rays of Plato and Aristotle originate from Saint Thomas; because the rays from the head are all convergent. It is also necessary to re-to point out that the ray which comes to strike the Great Commentary, is not An illuminating ray, but a reproach, a refutation. Which...
The proof is that the beam strikes the back of the Great Commentary, while that all other rays originate from the open front of the book.
1. His name is written next to him: Averrols.

known today as the Cappellone degli Spagnuoli 1,

Around the universal Church represented by Santa Maria del Fiore, Cimabue, Giotto, Arnolfo, Petrarch, Laura, Fiammetta, who have become symbols like Beatrice, re-display the attributes of the Church Militant. At the feet The Pope's flock of the faithful is represented by two dogs; two dogs, representing feeling the order of Saint Dominic (Dornini cani), watch over him. Wolves (the heretics) attack the flock; but the Lord's dogs speckled with black and white (the colors of the Dominicans) tear them apart has beautiful teeth. Besides the pursuit of heretics, is depicted the more peaceful work of preaching. Here the heretics (perhaps Averroists) subdued and defeated they throw themselves to their knees, and tear their books to shreds with all the marks of penitence. Above the church, military Aunt, the calm of the triumphant. The soul, represented by a child being led by the hand by a woman, y It rises gradually, detached. Above, glory and the joys of heaven.

Memmi depicted in this admirable fresco the Theological triumph of Saint Dominic; Gaddi tried to represent, in contrast to, the philosophical triumph of his order, by the great mastery of Saint Thomas. The doc-The angelic figure occupies the center of the painting; his throne

i. Gaddi executed the fresco depicting Averroes from 1337 to 1340, which-a few years after Orcagna had portrayed the Commentator at the Campa Santo, and perhaps the same year that Traini's painting was painted in Pisa.
The frescoes by Memmi and Gaddi, in the Spanish Chapel, have been reproduced by Mr. Rosini in the plates accompanying his His-History of Italian painting (tables XIII and XV). See the text, vol. II, p. 96 et seq. — Vasari, vol. I, p. 357. — D'Agincourt, painting, Plate CXXII, p. 136 of the table of plates, and p. 111 of the text. — Ampère, Voyage Dantesque, p. 238. — Valéry, 1. X, chap. xi.

dominates all others. At her side sits an honorable and fine company; they are ten characters from the Old Testament and from the New Testament, Moses, Isaiah, Solomon, the king David, Job, the evangelists, Saint Paul. At his feet, on a kind of proscenium, as if unworthy of appearing in Such a noble choir, are the heretics he crushed. Arius, Sabellius, Averroes, immersed in a sort of gloomy reverie, like people dissatisfied with the truth, and whose pride is not diminished by refutation. Averroes, as in Traini's painting, is characterized adorned by the turban and relies on his Grand Commander silence. Below, Gaddi listed the seven on two lines secular sciences and the seven sacred sciences, with their main representative: Grammar and Priscian, the Rhetoric and Cicero, Dialectic and Zeno, the MuMusic and Tubal-cain, Astronomy and Atlas, Geometry and Euclid, Arithmetic, and Abraham holding the abacus. Then Civil Law and Justinian, Canon Law and CleV, Practical Theology and Peter Lombard, the Speculative Theology and Saint Dionysius the Areopagite, Boethius and Demonstrative Theology with its triangle (represent(considering the three terms of the syllogism), Saint John DaMascenae and Contemplative Theology, Saint Augustine and Scholastic Theology, holding in its hand the bow of the controversy 1.

Such is this grandiose composition, where with an art The marvelous Gaddi managed to bring all the elements together philosophical ideas of his century. Averroes retains his

1. In the fresco recently discovered in Le Puy, and depicting alsoof the seven arts, Logic holds in its hand a lizard or a scorpion. Compare similar representations that can be seen in Palma on the tomb of Raymond Lullc, and which were reproduced by the Bollandists (June 30).

role: there as everywhere he represents the heretic, the ill-thinking man, overthrown at the feet of rigor Scholastic and Orthodox of the Dominican school. From The fact remains of the dispute of Saint Thomas... continued for a long time in the school of Pisa. More than one century after Traini and Gaddi, at the time when Pisa was rising again of its disasters, we find the same subject under the brush of the immortal decorator of the Campo Santo, BeGozzoli's house. This painting, which was once placed at the

the dome of Pisa, behind the bishop's seat, is still-nant at the Louvre Museum ' It is evident that Gozzoli set out to reproduce, feature for feature, the idea of the ta-Traini's Bleau. The layout and the characters are identical: Saint Thomas in the center, his works on her knees, in her hand an open book on this terrible menace: Labia mea detestabuntur impium [2], in high, Christ, the evangelists, Moses, Saint Paul; of the On two sides, Plato and Aristotle; below, the Pope and the doctors enlightened by Saint Thomas[3]; at his feet, a a character stretched out at full length, leafing through a big book.

A consistent tradition has hitherto seen in the per-reversed ringing that Saint Thomas seems to reject outside the picture plane, Guillaume de Saint-Amour. In

---

[1] It's the second painting on the left as you enter the main gallery, No. 233. The painting is on wood, in tempera, and formed the panel of a cupboard. See. Vasari, vol. III, p. 90.

[2] On the other page of the book, we read the nominalist axiom: Multitudinis asum in rebus nominandis sequendum philosophi censent communiter; and to two sides of Saint Thomas: Vere hic est lumen Ecclesiæ. — Hic ad invertit omnem vlam disciplinée.

[3] Gozzoli abandoned the gold threads which, in Traini's painting, represent the path of light rays, and give his painting such a distinctive face.

Indeed, we have seen that Guillaume plays in the legend Saint Thomas played a role parallel to that of Averroes, and is like him, sacrificed to the triumph of the Dominican doctor. It also seems that the painter intended to represent in the lower part of his table the a-the assembly of Anagni in 1256, presided over by Alexander IV, and where the doctrine of the University of Paris was condemned on monastic poverty. The characters who appear there-Besides the Angelic Doctor, there are Saint Bonaventure, Jean des Ursins, Hugues de Saint-Cher, Albert the Great, Humbert de Romans K However the rapprochement of paintings of Pisa and Florence that I mentioned earlier, does not allow, it seems to me, any doubt that here again May Averroes be cursed. And first of all, the character of Gozzoli, like Traini's Averroes, wears a turban, and the large volume he has in his hands looks very much like more to the Grand Commentary than to the small books of William of Saint-Amour. Furthermore, it is evident that Gozzoli obeyed no inspiration in this painting alive, which he simply set out to reproduce with some variations the Traini table; how to assume that he had modified a tradition of which he had no not the original meaning, and that he introduced into his work a character completely foreign to the school of Pisa, and which he himself probably didn't know?

There is an impossibility here for someone who knows the laws of iconographic tradition in the Middle Ages.

What could have been the origin of this theme for so long?
preserved by the schools of Pisa and Florence? We have assuming that Gaddi had only created it in paint

t. See the catalogue of paintings in the Louvre. Italian School, by Mr. Villot, p. 86.

at Santa Maria Novella the ideas communicated to him queries by Domenico Cavalca. There can be no doubt less so, seeing Averroes play exactly the same role in three paintings executed on the same point and almost the same year (1335 and 1340)*, as Orcagna, Traini and Gaddi did not draw their inspiration from the same source.
source. Now, this source can be determined with certainty-study; it's the legend of William of Tocco. We recalls that William, listing the defeated heretics Saint Thomas Aquinas places Averroes in the foreground.
painters received from the monks a libretto which theyhad the plan of the composition, with the characters who They were to be included, and this written outline was not ordinary-the reproduction of the legend that was in use.
The canonization of Saint Thomas, which took place in 1323, and in which William of Tocco played a large part, had sharply turned attention to this side 2. I do not hesitate Therefore, the origin of William is not to be seen in the legend.
of the role that Averroes plays in the disputes of saint Thomas. As for his place in Orcagna's hell, perhaps-Raymond Lull, who twice stayed in Pisa, and who in 4307 finished his Ars brew's* there, was he not foreign to this concept.

S xvii.

Thus, throughout scholastic philosophy, Averroes supports a dual character; on one side, it's the Ave-

i, Another painting from Pisa, by Getto di Jacopo, one of the last Painters of the Pisan school depict the dispute of Saint Thomas on the mystery of the Incarnation (Rosini, vol. II, p. 181). It was impossible for me I can see it, and I cannot say if Averroes is featured in it.

2. Thrown SS. Mavtii, t. I, p. 666 et seqq,

3. Thrown SS. Junii, t. V, p. 647-48.

Roes, who wrote the Great Commentary, interprets it by The philosopher's excellence, respected even by those who on the one hand, they fight; on the other, it is the Averroes of the Campo Santo, The blasphemer of religions, the father of unbelievers. He It may at first seem strange that in an age of faith absolutely, these two roles did not exclude each other. three, and that the same man could have been the master at the same time classic of Catholic schools and the precursor of the AnChrist. But in general, the Middle Ages were not made atwithout any scruples about asking for philosophy lessons from those whom his faith compelled him to damn. The profound seThe comparison that Ton established between philosophy and the revelation, suggested that pagans might have survived to pass the Christians into natural light. The historian should not be too surprised to see bishops, perhaps to even be a pope, to graduate from the school of Toledo, that the arThe cheologue is not one, when he finds treasures in the Medieval ecclesiastical ornaments made of fabrics Arabic and covered with verses from the Quran.

It was especially in the 14th century that the authority of the CommenSilence became absolute and undisputed. In the 11th century, Averroes still remains in the public eye below Avicent. Humbert de Prulli, in 4291, listing the commentators that he used to his advantage for his exhibition of Metaphysics, places it only in fourth position*, During the 14th and 15th centuries, on the contrary, Averroes is the quintessential commentator, the only one we comagpie, the only one mentioned. Petrarch regards it as the first, perhaps the only one, to have commented on the works complete works of an ancient author[2]. Patrizzi considers it as

---

1. Hist. read. of the Fr., t. XXr, p. 88 and 89.

2. De sut ipsius et mult, ignor., Opp. t. II, p. 1053.

the father of all scholasticism and the only commentator that the Middle Ages had known.[1] When Louis XI enteredIn 1473, it was decided to regulate philosophical education. the doctrine he recommends is that of Aristotle and of his commentator Averroes, long recognized- time for healthy and assured9-. In a letter dated from Haiti (October 1498), Christopher Columbus appoints Avenruyz, according to a quote from Pierre d'Ailly, as one of the authors who made him guess the existence of the New World 3.

It has been noted that in the 13th century this was not without However much trouble we have recognized the Averroists. The refutations of the Dominican school, the furies of Raymond Lulle alone revealed their existence to us. It would be impossible to name just one of the masters who confessed to these doctrines. There are no more of them. even in the 14th century. We find there a school which definitely bears the name of Averroes as its flag; this philosophical group, which we must consider as the natural antecedent of the Padua school, presents sufficiently fixed characteristics: substitution of the Com-Averroes' commentary as the text of lessons to treatises of Aristotle; countless questions about the soul and about the intellect; abstract, pedantic, unintelligible manner4.

---

i. Discuss. Peripat., t. I, 1. XIII, p. 106. (Venet., 1571.)

2. Statuimus et edicimus quod Aristotelis doctrina eunce commentatoris Averroys.... aliorumque realium doctorum, quorum doctrina retroactis temporibus sana securaque comperta est, tam in sacrœ theologiaa quam artium facultatibus, deinceps more consueto legatur, doceatur, dogmatizetur, discatur and intimitur. — Order. kings of France, t. XVII, p. 610. — Cf. du Boulay, t. V, p. 708.

3. Navarete, Coîeccion de viages y descubrimientos, t. I, p. 261. (Ma(drid, 1825.)

4. This is the school that Patrizzi had on the street when U speaks of the

The Carmelite John of Baconthorp (died in 1346) is the the most prominent figure in this school. His name always appears accompanied by the epithet prince of Averroists*. Baconthorp was provincial of the Carmelites in England, and became a doctor of his order, as Saint Thomas was that of the Dominicans, Duns Scotus, this-He was of the Franciscans, Giles of Rome, he was of the Augustinians. Through him, Taverrism became traditional in the school of Carmelites. We see indeed that, in the first In the 18th century, a religious man of this order, Joseph Zagaglia of Ferrara had the idea of renewing the Baconthorp's method, and to apply it to the theolog-gie2, Baconthorp, moreover, is less interested in supporting the heterodox doctrines of Averroism than to remedy them heterodoxy. He rejects the unity of the intellect, but after having previously shown how much the arguments of Saint Thomas and Hervé Nedellec's findings are inconclusive. against the true sentiment of Averroes. Averroes did not claimed to establish as true and proven a hypo-

a thesis that would contradict its own principles
pes. It was merely a fiction on his part, an exercise in logically, a thesis proposed for discussion and susceptible-capable of highlighting other truths.8 Theories

second generation of scholastic doctors: u Ingens ab his philoso-phorum numerus ac successionio manayit, quse in Aven Roicis hypothesibushabitavit.... India dubitationum ac quaestionum sexcentorum millium manavit number. » (Discuss, Perip.t t. I, 1. XIII, p. 106. Venet., 1571.)

1. Averroistarum princeps dictus. Bibliotheca caneïitana (Aurelianis, 1752), col. 743. — Omnes Averrois sentias mordicus tenuit, et illius scholœ suo tempore quasi princeps baberi voluit. (Pits, From M. Engl.
script., p. 451. — Du Boulay, Hist. Univ. Paris., t. IV, p. 995. — Naudé, Apology for Great Men, p. 496. Paris, 1625.)

2. Memoirs of Trévoux, 1713, p. 1661.

3. Quomodo commentator viliter defect in boc in pbilosopbia. And Averroists of the perception of separate substances, of celestial intelligences, the influence of heaven on things sublunar, of the eternity of the world1, are generally explained in the gentlest way. It is by the great the use he makes of Averroes and by the authority he grants him rope, much more than by his doctrine, than Baconthorp deserved to be considered the representative of the aver-Romanism in the 14th century, and to be adopted as a classic in the school of Padua. We will see the singular later This reputation inspired Vanini to lie.

Waiter Burleigh should be placed in the same group philosophical. Zimara frequently cites him as a Averroist2, and indeed it was widely copied in Venice and Padoue during the 15th century3. Pierre Auriol and all the fasti-scholastic goddess of the 14th and 15th centuries, Pierre de Ta-Rentaise, Nicolas Bonnet, Gabriel Biel; the Okkamist school Above all, Buridan and Marsilius of Inghen belong to the same type. Thought no longer has enough originality.
neatness to establish a classification between these masters, sufficiently close in appearance due to their pale features and dull.

Averroism is, in a sense, merely the character of this exhausted scholasticism of the Questiones and Qaodlibeta, who drags himself along, painfully expiring from old age and nullity until the advent of modern philosophy.

arguo contra opinionem in se, probando videlicet quod non solum erra-lives in se, sed erravit contra principia philosophiæ.... Nullus debet reputare istam opinionem esse veram, quam ipsemet opinans non reputat nisi fictionem, et solum ponit eam propter exercitium, ut veritas completius inquiry. In II Sent. Dist. xxi. (Cremonse, 1618.)

1. In II Sent. Dist. I. — Quest. quodl., 1. I, quest. 14-; 1. II, quest, 7.

2. Burle'ius and aliï averrolstœ. (Solut. contrad,, f. 188.)

3. Cf. Minciotti, Catal. dei codd. mss, by S. Antonio di Padova, p. 97, 98, 100, 104, 107, 135.

The only reaction attempted outside of Italy against the pedant-Averroistism, is that of Jean Wessel de Gans-strong, cultivated mind and already a philologist, an isolated reflection of Petrarch, Marsilio Ficino, Poliziano, Bembo in the midst of barbaric Europe. Jean Wessel, like all Averroes hated these humanists; he sought to oppose them
Plato to the routine of Arab Peripateticism, and to the theo-
The doctrine of Saint Augustine, based on the single intellect:
The 7 nus is magister Deus. ...In lumine tuo videbimus lumen1.

1. Brucker, t. III, p. 8b9, ff. ; t. VI, p. 61 i.

CHAPTER III.

AVERROISM IN THE SCHOOL OF PADUA.

§1-

The University of Pacîoue deserves a place in history of philosophy, less as having inaugurated a original doctrine, which, as having continued longer-as long as no other school retains the habits of the Middle Ages.
The philosophy of Padua, in fact, is nothing other than Scholasticism, surviving itself, and extending onto an isolated point its slow decay, more or less like
The Roman Empire reduced to Constantinople, or the domination

Muslim in Spain confined within the walls of GreNade. Arab Peripateticism, personified in Averroes, confines itself, so to speak, to northeastern Italy, and dragged its existence out into the 17th century. Cremonini, who died in 1631, is, strictly speaking, the last scholastic.

How could this insipid philosophy have been so vibrant, despite Petrarch's mockery, despite the athumanist tasks, in the country that first tookWhat shaped modern culture? This question requires an answer to... dre, it seems to me, that the Renaissance movement was a literary movement, and not a philosophical movement losophical. Barbarian Europe had found in its within itself the impulse of scientific curiosity, but no the feeling of the beauty of forms. She made them by hand. honing his rhetoric in the school of the ancients. The representativesmany of the Renaissance movement did not seize Never quite right in philosophy. This teaching-and so remained stuck in the old rut: the traditions The pedantic and crude manners of the Middle Ages persisted there. The intelligent people departed from this house of disputes. and in bad taste, where a barbaric jargon was spoken and where charlatans were cutting down the master. The truth in everything being extremely delicate and tenuous, it is not not to the dialectic that it is given to reach it. In geometry, in algebra, where the principles are extremesimple and absolutely true, one can to indulge in the game of formulas and combine them indefinitely animated, without worrying about the realities they representtemp. In the moral and political sciences, at the conmilking, where the principles, through their insufficient expression and always partial, they only half-heartedly rely on the truth, at half on the false, the results of the reasoning are not legitimate only if they are controlled at every step through experience and common sense, the exclusionary syllogism every nuance and the truth being entirely in the nuances, the syllogism is a useless tool for finding the truth in the moral sciences. Penetration, Flexibility, a multifaceted intellectual culture, that's the real thing Logic. Form is, in philosophy, at least as important. important than the content; the twist given to the thought is the the only possible demonstration, and in a sense, it is true to say that the Renaissance humanists, in apParents solely preoccupied with speaking well, were more The Averroists of Padua were truly philosophers. The Paduan school, it is true, is not the only one to... pable of this strange anachronism. It is not accurate to consider scholasticism as ending in the 15th century or in the 16th, nor even in the 17th century. Didn't we see an order famously made Descartes the most vehement opposition to the name of Aristotle, I mean the Aristotle of the schools, that is to say notebooks that generations of teachers have passed down were they passing from hand to hand? It would be easy to show that scholasticism continues even today in more than one teaching1. Nothing equals the bizarre contra- which present in this respect the rotuli, or programs from the 16th and 17th centuries, which the university of Padua still preserves it. Alongside true science, represented by the Fallope family, the Fabrice family of Acquapendente, we find the theology taught by a Dominican friar... cundurn viam S. Thomæ, and by a Franciscan, secundurn viam Scoti. Cremonini announces to his listeners that he will expound the treatise on Generation and Corruption, the treatise on Heaven and the World 2, with a treatment of two thousand florins, while Galileo, with a treaty- a much lower level, will explain the elements of Euclid 3. The school in Padua is a teacher training college. All that remains are lessons, and lessons, in those days, they didn't yet know how to become books. Also this Has the school left nothing that supports reading, or may be of some value in the current state of mind human. The philosophy of Padua is Padua itself. even. Compared to the Tuscan cities, this city is mediocre and lacking in genius. All the beautiful things, Y Arena, the Baptistery, the Ragione, the Santo, were built there by foreigners. What is Saint Anthony, the flower of

1. I was assured that in some seminaries in Lombardy they follow Again, for philosophical teaching, notebooks from the school of 16th century Padua.

2. The division of professorships was determined by the titles of the aristocratic treatis totelical; there was the chair of the treatise on the Soul, the chair of the Analyti- questions, the chair of Sophisms of Hentisberus, etc.

3. It is still said at the University of Padua that after the discovery satellites of Jupiter, Cremonini judging this contrary to Aristotle, stubbornly refused to look through the telescope anymore.

Padua, the true Paduan creation, compared to Fran-

Pope Francis of Assisi, to Catherine of Siena? His miracles are of the poorest invention; its entire legend is due to worst style.

The intellectual movement of northeastern Italy, BoIgno, Ferrara, Venice, are all entirely connected to that of Padua. The universities of Padua and Bologna do not they really only do one, at least for teaching philosophical and medical. They were the same professors. sisters who, almost every year, emigrated from one to the other to get a raise. PaDoue, on the other hand, is only the Latin Quarter of Venise; everything taught in Padua was printed in Venice. It is therefore understood that by the Pa- school doue, here we mean the whole philosophical development from northeastern Italy.

§11.

It was primarily the study of medicine that contributed to to establish the Arab kingdom in Padua. Peter of Bano In this respect, it deserves to be considered the foundation dating of Paduan Averroism[1]. The Conciliator differsrenûarum philosophorum et medicorum } prelude already to the trials of Zimara, of Tomitanus, to put in place Aristotle and Averroes. A strange thing indeed! Pierre d'Abano knows neither the Colliget nor the works Averroes' medical texts: all the quotes he makes from These are borrowed from the author's philosophical works. But in another respect, I mean by its reputation suspect and his equivocal orthodoxy, Pierre d'Abano

---

[1] Tiraboschi (vol. V, 1. II, cliap. n, § 3) wants Pierre d'Abano to be the The first author to have quoted Averroes in Italy. That's a huge exaggeration.

He deserved the name Averroist far more. Impious thought of the horoscope of religions, later taken up by PomPonat, Pico della Mirandola, Cardano, Vanini, is stated for the first time, it seems to me, in his writings with a surprising boldness, “Ex conjunctione Saturai et “Jovis in principio Arietis, quod quidem circa finem 960

((contingit annorum totus mundus inferior commuta-

“tur, ita quod non solum régna, sed et leges et prophetae “consurgent in the world. ... sicut appeared in adventu Nabuchodonosor, Moysi, AlexandriMagni, Nazarei, Machometi[1]. » This was written in 1303. Pierre d'Àbano he died while his trial was underway; the inquisition took its revenge by burning its bones[2], and its the name remained in popular memory laden with machinainfernal scenes, and surrounded by mysterious terrors.

All of Paduan medicine is now devoted to Averroism[3]. At that time, physicians trained In northern Italy, a wealthy, independent class, viewed unfavorably by the clergy, and which appears to have had religious influence fairly free opinions. Medicine, Arabism, Averroism, astrology*, incredulity, became almost synonyms. Cecco d'Ascoli was condemned in 1324 by the Inquisition of Bologna to get rid of all his books

---

1. Council. controv., f. 15. (Venet., 156o.)

2. His tombstone can still be seen at Les Ermites, with this inscription: Petri Aponi cineres. Ob. Ann. 1315. this. 66.

3. Nec aliter medico philosophandum putabant, quam Averrois et Avicennae doctrina. Facciolati, Fasti Gjmnasii Patav'mi, Ia pars, p. xlix. — Tiraboschi., t. V, 1. II, cap. n, § 2 ff.

4. Astrology was closely linked to the Arab mindset. It was believed However, it was at this time that Averroes had fought against the claims of this imaginary science. “Dicam ergo cum Averroe: Astrologia nostri temporis nulla est. Sed statim says astrologus (scil. Petrus Aponus): Averroes non scivit astrologiam; sed astra non mentiuntur. » Benvenuto d’Imola ad Inf. cant. XX, apud Muratori, Antiq., t. III, col. 947.

of astrology, and to attend the sermon every Sunday in the Dominican church, because he had spoken rudely against faith[1]. The positive and mate-- mindset Realism, which dominates in northern Italy, is revealed, the Strong minds are multiplying, and here, as everywhere, dearThey wish to cloak themselves in the name of Averroes. But the forms somewhat rigid in their peripatetic style and the barricades of the school Arabs caused the Averroists to fall into a perverse arrogance. Dante, who was bound to displease the spirits more cultivated in Tuscany. The delicate instinct of PéTrarque grasped this nuance with admirable finesse: Antipathy towards medical Averroism is one of the traits essentials of his life, and one of the most amusing quips of that charming spirit.

S nor.

Petrarch deserves to be called the first moderne, in the sense that it inaugurated among the Latins the sentimentdelicate aspect of ancient culture, source of all our civilization. The Middle Ages, on several occasions, had indeed sought to reconnect the broken thread, and to reattach itself to the classical tradition. But the Middle Ages, despite its adhis fascination with antiquity, he never understood it in this that it has of life and fertility. Petrarch, at the conmilking was truly an ancient art. The first, he had the awareness of that indefinable something noble, of genereux, of liberal, who had disappeared from the world since the triumph of barbarism. Petrarch was therefore obliged to Quent, to hate the Middle Ages and everything associated with it. But Arab science appeared to him as a remnant of the The pedantry of that era. While the sources original knowledge of ancient science had been sealed away. for the West, the Arabs had made it uncontestable services. But, in the presence of antiquity itself, These unfaithful interpreters were now nothing but a nuisance. The fanatical enthusiasm of their admirers could notwould almost produce a strong reaction in a nature as delicate and irritable as that of Petrarch.

1. Cf. Tirabosclri, t. V, 1. II, cap. n, §15.

This aversion is found on every page of his writings. Petrarch doesn't even want to be cured by advice from Arabic medicine, nor by remedies that carry Arabic names \ "Please," he said to his friend John Dondi 2, as far as I'm concerned, is not to hold any I don't count on your Arabs any more than if they didn't exist, I I hate this whole race. I know that Greece produced some learned and eloquent men: philosophers, poets, orators Theorists, mathematicians, they all came from there; there too The fathers of medicine were born. But the doctors Arabs!... you must know what they are. For me, I contheir poets; one cannot imagine anything more soft,

more agitated, more obscene.3 I will hardly be made

To believe that something good could come from the Arabs! And yet you, learned men, by I know not what In their weakness, you shower them with undeserved praise; to such an extent

1. Contra medicum quemdam invect., t. II, p. 1093, 1097. — Rer. sen. XII, p. 907. (Ed. Henricpetri, 1554.)

2. Senile. XII. Ep. 2 (t. II, p. 904). — Seclusis Arabum mendaciis. (Contra med. quemdam invect., p. 905.)

3. How could Petrarch have been familiar with Arabic poetry, of which the The Middle Ages had absolutely no concept of it?

4. Unum, antequam desinam, te obsecro, ut abomni consilio mearum rerum tui isti Arabs arceantur atque exulent: odi genus universum.... Vix mibi persuadebitur ab Arabia posse aliquid boni esse. (Volume II, p. 913.)

point that I heard a doctor say, with the consent- his colleagues said that if he found a modern equal to Hippocrates, it might allow him to write, if the Arabs had not written; a word which, I will not say, burned my heart like a nettle, but pierced it like a stylus, and that would have been enough to have me thrown into the fire all My books... What! Cicero could have been an orator after Demosthenes, Virgil the poet after Homer, Livy and Sallust, historians after Herodotus and Thucydides, and After the Arabs, it will no longer be permitted to write! We will often have equaled, sometimes surpassed, the Greeks, and consequently all nations, except, you say, The Arabs! Oh, madness! 6 vertigo! 6 genius of Italy as- "supplied or turned off M"

Petrarch's hatred of astrologers and doctors 2 came from the fact that each and every one represented in his eyes they perceived the Arab spirit, the materialism of fatelist and incredulous. It also seems that at all times medicine had the privilege of stirring up the Humanists and a certain class of honest minds. The hatred of doctors became almost an obsession for Petrarch in his later years. He had had some disputes in Avignon with the Pope's doctors, who affect- they used to disdain poets, as useless people and without a profession 3. It was in this context that he composed his

1 Arabiculis, ut vos velle videmini, duntaxat exceptis! O infamis exceptio! O vertigo rerum admirabilis! O Italica vel sopita ingénia vel extincta. [Ib'ul.]

2. Cf. Tiraboschi, t. V, 1. II, cap. in, § 1, ff. — Sprengel, t. II, p. 477-78. — Andres, DelF origin, etc., t. I, p. 153 (Parma, 1782), and an essay on Petrarch considered as a critic of medicine of his time, in Janus, a journal of the history of medicine, published in Breslau, by AWE Th. Ilenschcl, t. I" (1846), p. 183 et seq.

3. Senile. 1. XII, ep. 1 el 2 (t. II, p. 900, 908, 914). — L.XV, ep. 3 (p. 951, sqq.)

four books to 'Invectives against a doctor', voluminew declamation in which he gathered against medicine every imaginable grievance, to arrive at this result that there is no doctor in the world that can be trusted 2. In a letter to Boccaccio 3, he maliciously describes the char- Latinism and the vanity of the doctors of his time, which did not appear in public only superbly dressed, mounted on magnificent horses, with golden spurs, an air of authority, her fingers resplendent with rings and precious stones4. "They are almost," he said, "not they usurp the honors of triumph; and indeed they They deserve it, because there is no one among them who has not killed at least five thousand men, the number required to have "Right to these honors." In another letter to Pandolfe Malatesta, he recounts, or perhaps he invents in support of His thesis, the most cheerful anecdotes. It seems, moreover, that the brilliant minds of Padua were grateful to him stakeholders in this campaign against the pedantry of doctors cins, since much later we see a Paduan to propose erecting a statue of him in the Prato at his own expense Delia Valle, provided she is allowed to write there:

Francisco Petrarclis Medicorum hosti infensissimo.

Petrarch's antipathy for anything that smacked of

1. Opp. t. II, p. 1086, sqq. — Compare the critique of Louis Vives, De Causis corruptarum artium, 1. V. (Opp. t. I, p. 413, sqq., Basel, 1dd5.)

2. De medicis non modo nil sperandum, sed vaîde etiam metuendum. (Opp., t. II, p. 801.)

3. Senil., 1. V, ep. 4. (T. II, p. 796 ff.)

4. Medieval medical treatises did not hesitate to to advise the doctor on the means of the most shameless quackery, in order to to assert oneself. Cf. AWE Th. Henschel, Janus, vol. I, p. 307 ff. Daremberg, Voyage médico-litt. en Anglet.,^. 14.

5. Senil., 1. XIII, ep. 8. — Cf. Ibid., 1. XIV, ep. 16. — L. XII, ep. 1 and 2. — L. III, ep. 4.

His charlatanism led him to misunderstand what service the school provided. medical science, despite its absurdities, restored to the human mind, by establishing secular and rational science. All the the time Italy wanted to react against the superstition poPulaire, she fell into a kind of materialism harsh, rigid, exclusive. Averroes and the Arabs were not at this era for the freethinkers of northern Italy than a password. One could not aspire to the title of an ingenious philosopher unless you swear by Averroes. Petrarch himself tells us some curious things about this Anecdotes 1. He received one day in his library in Venice the visit of one of these Averroists, who, according to custom Some modern philosophers believe they have done nothing. if they do not bark against Christ and his supernatural doctrinereal. Petrarch having dared to quote in the conversation After hearing a word from Saint Paul, this man frowned. eyebrow with disdain2. "Keep some for yourself," he told her. doctors of this kind. For me, I have my master, and I know who I believe in. 3. Petrarch tried to defend the apostle. The Averroist began to laugh: "Come on," he said? remain a good Christian; for my part, I don't believe a word of all these fables. Your Paul, your Augustine, and all these people you care so much about were just bavards. Ah! If you were capable of reading Averroes!... You "I'll see how much better he is than all those clowns!"

1. Threshold., 1. V, ep. 3 (vol. II, p. 796). — Cf. Tiraboschi, t. V, p. 190 etsuiv. (Éclit. Modena.)

2. Ule spumans rabie, et contemptus supercilio frontem turpans: Tuos (worried) and Ecclesiœ doctorculos tibi babe....

3. These words, quoted derisively from the Second Epistle to Timothy (I, 12), applied to Averroes.

A. Ad hœc ille nauseabundus risit: “And you (worried) esto Cbristianus bonuses; ego horum omnium nihil creed. And Paulus and Augustinus tuus, hique omnes alii quos prœdicas, loquacissimi homines fuere. Utinam you Petrarch could hardly contain his anger; he took the averhe was a roist by the cloak, begging him not to return. On another occasion, Petrarch, having taken the liberty of quoting Saint Augustin to one of these strong minds: "What a pity, he continued, that such a great genius should have allowed himself to take to such childish fables / But I have from you better hope, and one day no doubt you will be among ours.

It seems, in fact, that for some time Petrarchwhich was subject to the obsessions of the Averroists.2 His treatise Of sui ipsius et multitorum ignorantia3, is only the story conversations he had in Venice with four Averroists of his friends, who did everything they could to attract him to their party. Petrarch first recounts the efforts they tried to approach him, either individually or in groups nis, and the resentment they felt seeing him take to take his religion seriously and to quote Moses and Saint Paul as authorities. Finally, they held a council to determine if it weren't a waste of time to try to... convert, and summed it up by calling him a good man without literature: Brevem diffinitivam hanc tulere sententiam, scilicet me sine litteris virum bonum. A manuscript from the library of SS. John and Paul provided the names of these four Averroists; they were, it is said, Leonard Dandolo, Thomas Talento, Zacharie Contarini, all three from Venice, and Master Guido da Bagnolo, from

Averroim pati posses, ut videres quanto il tuis his nugatoribus major sit. » Exarsi fateor, et vix manum ab illo impuro et blasphemo ore continui

4. T. II, p. i0$5.

2. Neque illis ignota est bibliotheca nostra, quam toties tempting me ingressi sunt. (T. II, p. 1054.) ^ _.

3. Opp. t. II, p. 1035etsqq.

Reggio *. Averroism had become fashionable in the Venetian high society, and one had to make a profession of it. if one wanted to pass for a man of good character- gnie 2. Now, hidden beneath this name was the most incredulity decided, if they did not fear the tortures of men far more than those of God, they would dare, says Petrarch- that, attacking not only the creation of the world according to the Timaeus, but also the Genesis of Moses, the Catholic faith and the sacred dogma of Christ. When this apprehension no longer holds them back, and they can speak without con- In their struggle, they directly fight the truth; in their In secret meetings, they laugh at Christ and worship Aristotle that they don't hear. When they argue in public, They protest that they are speaking without regard to faith. that is to say, they seek the truth by rejecting the truth, and light by turning your back on the sun. But in secret, there is no blasphemy, sophistry, or joke- health, sarcasm that they don't spout, to the great applause from their audience. And how could one not Wouldn't they call us illiterate people when they

They call Christ our master an idiot? For them, They go on, puffed up with their sophisms, pleased with themselves.
themselves, and boasting of being able to argue about everything without having learned anything.” Petrarch then outlines the subtle questions they raised about the Problems of Aristotle3, and the difficulties they raised on the

1. Primus miles, secundus simplex mercator, tertius simplex nobilis, quartus medicus pliysicus. P. degli Agostini, Scritt, Venez., t. I, p. 5.
— Tiraboschi, 1. c. — De Sade, Memoirs on the Life of Petrarch, vol. III,
p. 752.

2. Cogitant se magnos, et sunt plane omnes divites, quee nunc una mortalibus magnitudo est. (T. II, p. 1038.)

3. Quot leo pilos in vertice, quot plumas accipiter in cauda, ut adversi coeunt elephantes, etc. — Quaedenique quamvisvera essent, niliil penitus creation, the eternity of the world, the omnipotence of God, the supreme happiness of man. "Immortal Gods-

"Such!" he exclaimed. "One does not deserve the title of learned man." In the eyes of these people, unless one is a heretic or a rebel, foolish, and if you don't go through the streets and public squares arguing about animals, and showing himself to be stupid.
The more furiously one attacks the Christian religion, the more one In their eyes, he is ingenious and learned. Do we allow ourselves to...
To defend oneself, one is nothing more than a weak mind and a fool who covers his ignorance with the veil of faith. For me, he adds Petrarch, the more I hear the faith of Christ decried, the more
The more I love Christ, the stronger I become in his teachings.
it happens to me as to a son whose filial tenderness would have chilled, and who, hearing an attack on the honor of his father, feels the love that seems to rekindle in his heart-
It is extinguished. I attest to Christ, often blasphemies.
"Christian heretics made me a very Christian person."

Petrarch was not content with these edifying protests tations. He had undertaken a refutation in the form of Averroist errors; but he could not finish it. Also re-was he doubling his efforts with one of his friends, Luigi Marsigîi, an Augustinian friar, to encourage him to take charge of this work. "I ask you for one last favor, him."
he writes1; it is to want to, as soon as you enjoy Some leisure, to turn against that rabid dog of A-Verroes, who, carried away by a blind fury, never ceases adbeatam vitam (p. 1038). Solebant illi vel aristotelicum problema, vel de animalibus aliquid in medium jactare: ego autem vel tacere, vel jo-curry, vel ordinari aliud, interdumque subridens quserere quonam modo id scire potuisset Aristoteles, cujus et ratio nulla est et experimentum impossibile. Stupere illi, et taciti submitsci, et blaspliemum velut aspicere. (P. 1042.)

1. Epist. ultima sine titulo (Opp. vol. II, p. 732). — Cf. Tiraboschi, t. V, 1. II, cap. i, g 23. — De Sade, t. III, p. 761.

to bark against Christ and the Catholic religion.
As you know, I had started collecting money on the side and on the other hand, his blasphemies; but more nominal occupations-more than ever, and the lack of time, as well
So much science has turned me away from it. Apply all the forces of your mind to this undertaking, which until now has been so shamefully neglected, and dedicate your little book to me, be whether I live or die.

We would misunderstand Petrarch's character if we believed that this opposition to Averroism stemmed from a strict orthodoxy. He who, precursor of the most vivid aspirations of modern times, exclaimed nearly two centuries before Luther:

Dell' empia Babilonia ond' è fuggita Ogni vergogna, ond'ogni bene è fori, Albergo di dolor, madré d'errori, Son fuggit' io per lungar la vita, the one who addressed the letter De Capes- to the Roman people senda Libertate, and exclaimed, in his enthusiasm for Cola de Rienzi: Roma mia sarà ancor bellal was not a man who is alarmed by the emancipation of minds. But Petrarch resented the haughty arrogance of the averRoists. This Tuscan, full of tact and finesse, could not suffering the harsh and pedantic tone of materialism veNitian. Many delicate minds prefer to be believers rather than unbelievers of bad taste.

S IV.

It was Averroes' fate to lead in the history-to have a dual destiny, one in teaching classic, the other among the people of the world and the liber-These two roles, however, were not without their constraints.

connection with each other: the misuse of the name Averroes was encouraged by the magisterial authority he obtained in schools. The habits of scholasticism degenerate had somehow naturalized the Great Commentary in Upper Italy. From the first month- from the 14th century, Gregory of Rimini, Jerome Ferrari, Jean de Jandun and Fra Urbano of Bologna present us- perfectly characterized the teaching that must be extended in Padua until the middle of the 17th century.

Few authors have been more frequently cited and then more quickly forgotten. than Jean de Jandun*. Yet this is one of those masters to whom the emphasis of the school had awarded the title of monarch of philosophy and prince of philosophers. Although born in France, although having prospanked with great fanfare at the University of Paris 2, Jean de Jandun truly belongs to the Paduan school: it is there that his name has remained famous 3: it was there that he met Marsilius of Padua, and perhaps Peter of Abano, with with whom he maintained close ties from Paris, and who kept him informed about Averroist productions. He sided, along with Marsile, with Louis of Bavaria, in

4. Jandun is a village in the canton of Signy-l'Abbaye, department of the Ardennes. This name has given rise to a host of alterations, Jandunus, Joannes of Gandavo, of Gan, of Ganduno, of Gonduno, of Gandino, de Gedeno, de Jandano, de Jandono, Joannes Jando, etc. — Zirnara {Solution. contrad., f. 107 v°, 170 v°, 214) and Antoine Brasavola of Ferrara, in his commentary on De Subst. Orbis, even calls him Joannes Andegavensis.

f. 2. D'Achery, Spicil., t. III, p. 85 (edit. ait.). It is also taught in Perugia. Wouldn't we have read Perusiœ for Parisius?

3. One of Dino Compagni's sonnets, recently published by M. Ozanam [Docum. ined. to serve the literary history of Italy, pp. 319-320), is addressed to Maestro Giandino, philosopher and physicist, whose poet praises science and writings. One could, without implausibility, identify- Proud of this character, Jean de Jandun. Dino lived until 1323.

the quarrel of this emperor with John XXII, cooperation to the famous work Defensor pacis, and saw himself condamned by the Pope in 1328 | His Questions and his Commentaries on Aristotle and Averroes, and in particular on the De substantia orbis, have been printed several times- They were sent to Venice in 1488, 1496, and 1501. The Library national (former fund, 6542) possesses a volume of him minor unpublished commentary on Pierre's commentary d'Abano on Aristotle's Problems. It was through the en- Marsile's treasury, which Jean de Jandun had first knowledge in Paris of the work of Pierre d'Abano2. Zimara3 and the Coimbras4 put Jean de Jandun in the namebr of the Averroists. He is, in fact, by the method and the habits of his teaching; Averroes is in his eyes perfectus and gloriosissimus physicus, veritatis amicus and defensor intrepidus', As for the doctrine, Jean de Jandun doesn't have a well-defined one. In his commentary on In De substantia orbis, he defends the thesis of necessity and the incorruptibility of celestial matter, and refutes the moderns, who claim that the sky, being composed of the

---

1. Cf. Martène, Thésaurus novus Anecd., II, col. 704 et seq. — Fabricius, Bibl. med. and inf. lat., t. IV, p. 77. — Bandini, Bibl. Leopoldina Laurent., t. III, col. 103. — H. Wharton, Appendix ad Hist. Utt. Guill. Cave (Oxon., 1743), p. 36. — Oudin, t. III, p. 883. — Du Boulay, Vol. IV, pp. 163, 205, 206, 974. — Boulliot, Biographie ardennaise, Vol. II, pp. 52-56.

2. Et ego Joannes de Genduno, who, Deo gratias, credo esse primus inter Parisius regentes in philosophia ad quem prsedicta expositio pervenit per dilectissimum meum magistrum Marcilium de Padua, illorum expositioneni manibus propriis mihi scribere dignum duxi, ne malorum scriptorum corruptiones dampnosse delectationem meam in istius libri studio minorarent, librumque praenominatum, scilicet illius gloriosi doctoris summas propono, Deo jubente, scolaribus studii Parisiensis verborequired to explain. (Ms. cited, f. 1.)

3. Solution. contrad., f. 210 v°.

4. In 1. II De anima, cap. i, quest. 7, art. 1, p. 59.

same matter as the sublunar world, does not hold its necessation due to an external cause. In his Questions on the treatise on the Soul, he merely presents, with a lot of subtlety, the pros and cons on the questions Averroist notions of the intellect1: The active intellect Does it necessarily exist? Is the agent intellect part of of the human soul? Does the possible intellect fully comprehenddays the active intellect of the same intellect? On the The crucial question is: Is intellect unique in all men? he struggles to decide between the opposing reasons- Yes, because if there were several intellects, reason one man's would not be that of another; yes, for in This hypothesis posits that the intellect would be individualized by the body; However, it is absurd that a substance that exists before being united to the body, or individualized by the body. "No, because The same reasons would prove that intelligence is identical in everyone, which is absurd. No, because the intellect being the first perfection of man, the self would be constituted by what makes up the essence of an individual other2. No, because it would follow from this that the same subject can to support contrary modifications. No, because the intellect being eternal, and the human species being eternal, the intellect would already be perfect and full of intelligible species3. "For me," he said, "although the commentator's opinion..." and that Aristotle's opinion is explicit, and that this opinion cannot to be refuted by demonstrative reasons, I think that The intellect is not unique, and there are as many in-

---

i. I quote from the Saint-Marc manuscript, classis VI, no. 101, and 381 of Saint Anthony of Padua.

2. Ego essem per esse tui, and tu per esse mei.

3. Quum intellectus sit ab seterno, vel ab seterno fut humana species videtur quod jam est omnino perfectus et plenus speciebus intelligibilibus.

such as human bodies l. » Jean de Jandun repushes forward with much more decisiveness an opinion that he distinguishes from that of the commentator, and according to which a single eternal soul would individualize itself in each one by a kind of metempsychosis. He states without hesitation, and, in accordance with theological dogma, that the soul is forbrought about by a direct creation of God at the time of the generation. On a large number of other issues rerelated to the intellect and the intelligible, Jean de Jandun... also deviates from the commentator's opinion.

The servile friar Urbano of Bologna is another example of those religious figures who, like Baconthorp, affifearlessly utter the name of Averroist. Mazzuchelli8 and Mansi3 want him to have taught theology in Paris, in Padua and Bologna. But Tiraboschi 4 observes that Father Giani, annalist of the Servite order, and The old documents he used speak for themselves. the school of philosophy that Fra Urbano held to Bologna. The principal of his works dates from 1334, and He himself tells us that he was then advanced in age 6. This work, which earned him the nickname Father of philosophy, is a voluminous commentary on Averroes' commentary on Aristotle's Physics. AnToine Alabanti, general of the Servites, had it printed at Venice in 1492, under this title: Urbanus Averrolsta, phllosophus summus, ex almlfico servorum BMV \. Ipse est numeratus in diversis secuiidum numerationem corporum liumanorum. — We read in the margin: Opinio sacroe fidei.

2. Scriit. ital., t. II, p. III, p. 1479.

3. Ap. Bibl. med. and inf. lat. (continu.), t. VI, p. 308.

4. T.V, 1. II, cap. n, n° 3.

5. Annales Servorum BMVt vol. I, p. 271.

6. Mansi (1. c.) makes it much more modern, but without citing any authority.

ordine, commentorum omnium Averoys super librum Aristotelis de Phjsico auditu expositor clarissimus, with a preface by Nicoietti Yernias*. The author anannounces in the prologue the intention to compose a semblabbery commentary on the commentary of the Treatise on Heaven and of the World. Averroes, as we can see, has already replaced Aristote; it is his text that is being commented on, instead of that of the philosopher. Frà Urbano, according to Tiraboschi, who had seen a copy of his commentary in the biEste's library in Modena, did not support any of the Averroes' guilty opinions. Moreover, it does not appear that he exerted a great influence; for one does not find No manuscripts of his works are found in libraries. from Venice and Lombardy.

Around the same time, Zacharie, a professor of rhetoric (eloquentiæ latinse didascalus) in Parma, written a thesis De tempore et motu contra A 'verojm, which se found in no. 1749 of the Sorbonne collection2. The ouThe work is of little value; but it testifies to how much the Averroist questions were on the agenda in the schools of northern Italy, at the beginning of the 14th century 3.

Paul of Yenisei (died in 1429)4, one of the doctors

---

1. Hain, vol. II, part II, p. 496-497.

2. No author of literary history, that I know of, not even Affô, has spoke of this Zacharias of Parma. The Sorbonne manuscript contains two of his works, the aforementioned thesis, and a very interesting Latin rhetoric, dedicated to Cardinal G. of Parma and to Nicolas, Dean of the Church of Paris, undoubtedly the one mentioned in the Gallia christiana (t. VII, p. 20a), around the year 1300.

[3] This manuscript, along with many others, comes from the donation made to the Sorbonne by Master Jacques de Padoue.

[4] Cf. Ossinger, Bib. Augustine. , p. 922 ff. — Tiraboschi, t. VI, Part I, 1. II, cap. n, g 2. — Baldassare Poli, Supplementi al Manuaie by Tennemann. , p. 537 et seq.

more authorized of his time, as evidenced by the great number of editions and handwritten copies of his works, Paul of Venice, nicknamed by common agreement excellentissimus philos ophorum monarcha\ admits, with a frankness that one has the right to be surprised by in a Augustinian religious, the latest consequences of the theo-Averroist theory. "The moderns," he said, "claim that the intellectual soul multiplies according to the multiplication of individuals, that it is generated, but not subject to the corruption; and they maintain that such is the opinion of Aristotle. But Aristotle's true opinion is that he there is only one intellect for all men, contrained in the commentator's interpretation, and afollowing this principle that nature never abounds in superflu, as she never lacks the necessities. This does not However, this does not mean that the same soul is at the same time happy and unhappy, learned and ignorant, all These qualities are merely accidents in the soul. The inthat human being is uncreated, impassive, incorruptible; It has neither beginning nor end; it cannot be counted. the number of individuals. Indeed, everything that is susceptible to digital individuality participates in the matière. Now, the intellectual soul is free from all concreteness. material tion. The intellectual soul is the last of the worldly intelligences; it is specific to the species human, while the spirit soul (sic), by which Man is an animal, is of the same species as the soul of other animals: this one is begotten and corruptible2.

---

[1] These titles of monarcha sapientiæ, philosophoi'iim suœ cetatis facile princepSy gave themselves with singular ease to men in Padua the most mediocre. Another was entitled: Aristotelis anima, go Hippocrates, summus Italia philosopltus, Aristotelis genius.

[2] This theory is taken from the Summa lotius philosophiæ, by Paul of Venice.

Paul of Venice must therefore be counted among the the most resolute Averroists. He argued in Bologna, before the general chapter of the Augustinians, composed of more than eight hundred religious, and with a grand display of solemnitynity \ the Averroist theses against Nicolas Fava. His His skill in dialectics did not save him from defeat. Ugo Benzi from Siena, a personal enemy of Fava, who witnessing the argument, he couldn't help but exclaim: "Fava is right, and you, Paul, are defeated. — Good God!" Paul of Venice resumed, "Now Herod and Pilate are becoming—" "They are friends!" At these words, a general laugh arose which The session was adjourned. Paul of Venice is represented to us. by his contemporaries as an insolent scholastic and presumptuous; Fava, on the contrary, a friend of Philelphe, already belonged to the Hellenistic school, which was to, a century later, to dethrone Averroes.

Paul of Pergola, Onofrio of Sulmona, Henricus ab Alemannia, John of Lendinara, Nicholas of Foligno, Magister Strodus, Hugh of Siena, Marsilius of Saint-Sophie, Jacques de Forli, Thomas of Catalonia, Adam Bouchermefort, were all renowned masters in their time l9 and zealous supporters of aver- scholasticism roist. Admittedly, it is difficult for us to understand the sethe influence that this philosophy could have on the studious youth flocked to Bologna and Padua. The man devoted to intellectual pursuits experiences a great sadness, when, browsing through the archives of these After centuries of study, he finds these buried in oblivion. heaps of outdated work, of which nothing remains, except this

1. Most of these authors were revealed to me through the examination of manuscripts writings from Venice and Padua. I intend to publish them under the title of Unpublished documents to serve as a history of the School of Padua, excerpts that I brought back from this exploration.

These are just a few names that nobody cares about anymore. to remember. But he consoles himself by thinking that the exercise of the mind has its independent and absolute value, that each one of these manuscripts of Jean de Jandun, of Paul de Venice, bearing so carefully the name of its possessionsthe date of his studies, and the date of his studies, served to maintain the traedition of the mind, and entered in part into this a great education of human reason, where nothing loses. The primer in which Goethe learned to read has not been A useless book.

§v.

Gaetano de Tiene (1387-1465) is usually presented as the founder of Paduan Averroism1. This is not that's the exact point, since Averroes' authority was already established. blie in Padua for over a century, when this master He began teaching there in 1436. However, Gaetano, through his wealth, social standing, education and His writings contributed powerfully to increasing his authority of the Great Commentary. Born into an illustrious family of In Yicence 2, Gaetano became one of the most important figures from the University of Padua, and died there-Nobility of the cathedral of this city \ Its library

1. Primus Averroi auctoritatern in gymnasio Patavino conciliasse dicitur, ejus commentaria in philosophando unice secutus (Facciolati, Fasti gymn. Pat., pars II, p. 104). In explicando, omissis aliorum interpretum opinionibus, solum Averroem, fidissimuni philosophicommentatorem sequebatur, eo ingenii acumine ut primus ei in gymnasio auctoritatern conciliaret. (Tomasinus, ///. vir. Elogia, t. II, p. 34-35.)

2. The Tiene family wanted, in memory of the famous professor, a of its members always bore the name Gaetano. That is how our philosopher is the namesake of the blessed Gaetano de Tiene, founderdater of the Theatines.

3. See for the life of Gaetano the notice by Calvi (in religion, Angiol-Gabriele di S. Maria), Biblioteca e Storia di quei scrUtcrï cosl délia città corne delterritorio di Vicenza (Vicenza, 1772), vol. II, part I.

passed, along with his own writings, to the Abbey of San Giovanni in Verdara, one of the main centers of the averRomanism, and from there to Saint Mark's, where it still is today Today, a vivid picture of the studies of that time. an extraordinary number of copies of Gaetano's lectures which can be found in the libraries of northern Italy, the luxurious calligraphy sometimes displayed there*, and the numerous editions it obtained in the early The years of typography 2, attest to the vogue of which it enjoyed, during the second half of the 15th century, in the schools in Italy and even throughout Europe.

One should not ask Gaetano for any original doctrine. Less bold than Paul of Venice, he rejects all the heterodox consequences of Peripateticism. In his commentary on the treatise on the Soul, completed in 1448? Averroist questions are pursued in their most subtle distinctions. Gaetano seeks to reconcile the imMortality according to the Aristotelian theory of perception: He only succeeded through the most bizarre of hypotheses.3 In a psychological thesis defended at Padua 4, Gae-

Tano discusses a question that seems to have a lot

1. Almost all of these copies were made during his lifetime, often the year-born in the very place where he had taught the course that is the subject of this study. T Saint Anthony of Padua has several luxury copies including Gaetano himself paid homage to Saint-Antoine. Cf. Minciotti, Catal.
dei codd. man. di S. Ant., p. 96-97.

2. Panzer, Ann. typogr., p. 366 ff. — Hain, vol. II, part. II,
pp. 412-413.

3. Intellectus intelligit post separationem a corpore per species et habits which in eo remanserunt, non in actu completo, sicut dum erat unitus corpori, which quantum ad illud dependset a fantasmatibus, sed in actu semipleno and incomplete, secundum quem modum^posset non dependente a fantasmatibus et perpetuari.

4. Printed in Venice, 1481. I quote from the manuscript in Saint-Marc.
(Classis VI, no. 74<7.)

preoccupied the school of that time, namely: whether it is necessary to admit a sensus agens to explain sensitivity, likewise that we admit an in te lié tus agens to explain the intelligence. Some, says Gaetano, claim that the in-such active ingredient produces sensitive species, which become the elements of sensation, and they attribute, But Averroes held this opinion wrongly. Others, with Jean de Jandun, suppose in the sensitive soul as in the intellectual soul two orders of powers, the ones passive, the others active. And still others, and these are closer to the truth, do not admit existence of a sensus agens, and think that sensible objects, on the one hand, are sufficient to produce the species, and that the species, on the other hand, are sufficient to explain the sensation, without the intervention of a special agent. In another thesis, where Gaetano raises the question of the per-
The petrification of the intellect can be summarized as follows: the intellectual soul tive is produced by an immediate creation, then infuses to matter. The intellect considered in isolation is therefore in-kin and corruptible. But the human soul, considered In all her faculties, she is immortal.
This, as we can see, is indecisive and lacking character.

Averroes is now in Padua the master of those who know. Michel Savonarola, in his book De laudibus Palavii, composed in 1440, calls him Me ingenio divinus ko/no Averroes philosophers, Aristotelis operum omnium commentator “The library of Jean de Marcanuova, bequeathed by him to the Abbey of Saint John in Verdara in 1467, and now in St. Mark's Basilica in Venice, is entirely composed of Averroist works. List all the Paduans or Bolognese who in the 15th century com-

1. Muratori, Rcrum liai. Script., t. XXIV, col. lioo.

To understand Averroes, it would be like drawing up a list of all the proprofessors from Padua and Bologna. Claude Betti*, and TiBère Bazilieri of Bologna 2, Laurent Molino of Rovigo 3, Apollinaire Offredi, Barthélemi Spina, Jérôme SabioNetta4, saw their lessons adopted as an easy Interpretation of the Great Commentary. The famous Thomas Vio Cajetan himself taught according to Averroes, and Patin, so well acquainted with the traditions of Padua, wouldwould lead one to believe that it was from his teaching that Pomponat fired his venom. In 1480, the learned Cassandra Fedele of Venice supported Averroist theses in Padua, and obtained the laurel wreath of philosophy. 6. The opposition barely shows. The thesis of the Franciscan friar Antoine Trombetta against the Averroists 7, did not take anything away from their boldness. The last years of the 15th century are the years of Averroes' absolute reign in Padua.

Among the most determined Averroists of this In time, we must place the Theatine Nicoletti Vernias, who taught in Padua from 1471 to 1499. Much bolder that Gaetano, Yernias unreservedly supported the theory

1. The library of the University of Bologna has its course in fifteen enormous volumes.

2. Tiberhis Bacilerius. Lectura in octo libros de Aud'itu Naturali Aristotelis et sui fidissimi commentatoris Âverrois quam Mo legente scholares Papienses scripiitarunt anno 1503. (Papise, 1507, in-fol.)

3- Facciolati, op. cit., p. 114.

4. Mittarelli, Appendix ad Bibl. S. Michaelis prope Murianum, col. 448, 449.

5. Patiniana, p. 98-99 (ed. 1701).

6. Facciolati, 1. c, p. 89. — Tomasini, Elogia, t. II, p. 343 ff.

7. Tractatus singularis contra Averroystas de humanarum anim arum plurîficatione, ad catholicœ fidei obsequium. 2nd title: Exhnii sacrœ theologiœ metaphysicœque monarch/iœ, Magistri Anton'à Trombete, Patacini, Ordinis Minorum provinciœ S. Anton'ù ministri, Quœstio de animarum humanarum pluralitate contra Averroym et sequaces, in studio Patayino determinata.

(Venice, 1498.)

of the unity of the intellect, to such an extent that he was accused of asee all of Italy infected by this pernicious error1. It was at his school that Niphus learned Averroism. 2. VerNias later renounced these dangerous opinions, and wrote in favor of immortality and the plurality of souls book which appeared in 1499 3. The work was dedicated to Dominique Grimani, patriarch of Aquileia, to whom Yernias admitted that he was ready to trade his title of philosopher against that of canon, sperans se non super philosophi sed canonici titulo aliquando usurum \ This song the movement was due to the friendly exhortations of Doge Augustin Barbarigo and Pierre Barozzi, bishop of Padua, who later saved Niphus from the Inquisition, and carried him also to correct its mistakes. The debate is already growing, and moves beyond the narrow circle of logical questions to ento enter the field of moral philosophy and regieuse. We are approaching the glorious moment of the school from Padua, to that of Niphus, Achillini, Pomponat.

1. Falsam illam et ab omni veritate alienam opinionem Averrois de unico intellectu confirmare argumentis attempted, usque adeo ut plebeii et minuti philosoplii, which liebeti and rudi ingénie* contrariam opinionem, quamvis verissimam, defendere non poterant, in vulgus jactarent eum totam pen2 Italiam in hune perniciosum errorem compulisse. Riccobonus, From Gymn. Patav., p. 134 (Patav. 1592). — Naudé, From Aug. Niplio Judicium, p. 27, at the head of the edition of Opuscula moralia et politica, by Niphus (Paris 1614). — Papadopoli, Hist. gymnasium. Pat., t. I, p. 291.

2. Naudé, 1. c. — Niceron, t. XVIII, p. 54.

3. Volens occurrere rumori false qui ab invidis et malevolis excitatus fuerat, et venenatum susurrum tollere qui de eo in angulis fiebat.... Averroem maleficœ opinionis perfidum et vanum auctorem certissimis argumentis refellere aggressus est (Riccoboni, op. cit., p. 135). — Cf. Facciolati, Fasti gymn. Pal., leaves 11% p. 106. — Tomasini, Gymn. Pat., p. 280, 309 (Utini, 1654).

4. Riccoboni, ind.

8 vi.

In 1495, the old Vernias, who, by a unique privilege, had obtained permission to teach without an antagonist, neglects himself; His students murmur; they oppose him to wake him up Pierre Pomponat *-. With Pomponat, a new era begins- new for the school of Padua. Up to this point, philosophy Paduan held herself in the terms of a metaphysics very harmless. Paul de Yenise, frà Urbano, Gaetano de Tiene, Yernias himself are only commentators No life, no thought circulates beneath this hard shell. The boldness is only in the words; the philosophical language, twenty times quintessentialized, is having come to conceal nothing: psychology is now nothing more than a a clattering of sonorous words and realized abstractions. Pomponat, on the contrary, truly represents the thought living in its century. It is the personality of the human soul. Maine, it's immortality, it's providence and all the truths of natural religion that are being called into question, and become the subject of debate in northern Italy more lively. While explaining Aristotle and Averroes As expected, Pomponat knew how to interest young people, and to philosophize in truth. Paul Jove speaks with admiration of the variety of tone he was able to display in his lessons: He is no longer a scholastic, he is already a mo- man last.

To cover this new trend, a new A name was needed: they found that of Alexander of Aphrodisias. From now on, Averroes will no longer reign alone: Reduced to sharing the school, he will have nothing left but...

1. Facciolati, II'pars, 106, 109.

a few names, and these names will not always be the most illustrious.

This is the origin of the two philosophical factions, known as Alexandrians and Averroists. He However, one should not attribute to this distinction too much importance. Mr. Ritter went so far as to re-to question the existence of these two parties. It is certain at least that the demarcation does not have the precision that one might be tempted to assume \ and that there are very few masters in the 16th century, that one can definitively classify among the Averroists or the Alexandrians. The true division of the Peripatetics-Renaissance scholars are among the Arab Peripatetics and in Hellenistic Peripatetics. However, this division does not coincide-not at all like that of the Alexandrians and the Aver- The Hellenists, like Leonicus Thomœus, They excluded themselves from these scholastic disputes. That is Therefore, it is quite wrong for some historians of philosophy to have Phile, Tennemann for example2, have attached a great importance to this division, which is hardly founded on on a passage from Marsilio Ficino3, and to which one does not would not be led by the study of sources.

The immortality of the soul is ordinarily considered as the point of divergence between the Alexandrians and the Averroists. Immortality, in fact, was, around 1500,

1. Gesch. the new Pkil. I"Th. S. 367 ff.

2. Gesch. der Phil. t. IX, p. 63.

3. Totus fere terrarum orbis a Peripateticis occupatus in duas plurimum sectas clivisus est, Alexandrinam and Averroicam. llli quidern intelectum nostrum esse mortalem existingimant, hi vero unicum esse contentdunt: utrique religionein omnem funditus aeque tollunt, prsesertim quia divinam circa homines providentiara negare videutur, et utrobique a suo etiam Aristoteles dies. (Prof. in Plot.) — Cf. Pic. Mirand. Apologia, p. 237.

the problem around which the philosophical mind was preoccupied than in Italy, and when the students of a university want- from the very first lesson, they were able to appreciate the doctrines They shouted at a professor, "Tell us about the soul!" The great upheaval that moral conscience had received from the spectacle of the political world in the 16th century. had turned the anxiety of minds in that direction. The aver- The Roists saved appearances by arguing that the intellect, after death, returns to God, and there loses his individuality. Pomponat embraced Alexan-'s opinion Dr., who outright denied immortality. In his book De Immortalitate animœ, affecting In a respectful tone of orthodoxy, he fights the adversary roism as a monstrous error, precisely reproven by Saint Thomas 2, and far removed from the pen- Aristotle's view. The unity of souls seems to him a fiction absurd, nonsense (Jigmentum maximum et inintelligibile, monstrum ab Averroe excogitatwn). The Napo- Simon Porta, a student of Pomponat, who wrote, to his master's example, against immortality, like him also, very vehemently attacked the Averroists, their reprosong of reducing knowledge to memory, and of sup- to posit the child's intelligence as perfect as that of man; exactly what Locke's school criticized to Descartes' innate ideas 3. Finally, we will see soon it would be his task to refute Pomponat, entrusted to him by Leo X

1 Chr. Bartholmess, art. Pomponace, in the Dict. des se. phil., p. 164,

2. Tarn luculenter, tam subtiliter adversus banc opinionem sanctus doctor invehitur, ut,isentia mea, nihil intactum, nullamque responssionem, quam quis pro Averroe adducere potest, impugnatam relinquat; totum enim impugnate, dissipate and annihilate, nullumque averroistis refugium relictum est, nisi convitia et maledicta in divinum et sanctum virum. (From Immort. anim. p. 8 and 9.)

3. Poli, Supplementi, p. SS1 et seq.

to the Averroist Niphus. Thus, by a strange reversal-role ment, the Averroists who, until now, have represented-felt the negation of human personality, become-They briefly clashed with Pomponat, the defenders of immortality and the pillars of orthodoxy. Compared to the absolute materialism of the Alexandrians, Averroism It did, in effect, represent a certain spiritualism. The theolaughter of the active intellect, by maintaining the superior origin and the objective reality of knowledge, ruled out the Sensualist hypotheses. Thus, around the middle of the 16th century, a proponent of tabula rasa, Vito Piza, in his book De dwino ethumano Intellectu (Padua, 1555) to vigorously combat Averroism, in the name of

Y

empiricism

It was therefore by mistake that Pierre PomPonat and Simon Porta among the Averroists, and that one wanted to link their doctrine on immortality to that of Averroes,' since, on the contrary, Pomponat did not apppela to the authority of Alexander than to counter the Averroists2. However, this confusion, which Bayle and Brucker rightly pointed out, it was not without some foundation. Italian philosophy, emerging from the abstract discussions of the Middle Ages had come to to summarize in a few questions of strong materialism Simply put: the immortality of the soul was invented by the legislators to maintain the people; that the first Man was formed by natural causes; that the effects-miraculous feats are nothing but impostures or illusions.

1. ¥o\i, Supplim., p. 561.

2. Sccutus Aphrodisoei placita, cujus dogmate ad corrumpendam juventutem dissolvendamque Christian» vitœ disciplinam, nihil pestilentius induced potuit. (Pauli Jovii Elogia, cap. lxxt, p. 164.) Cf. Brucker, t. IV, p. 162. — Bayle, art. Pomponace, note B.

ions; that prayer, the invocation of saints, the worship of Relics are of no efficacy; that religion is not made than for simpletons[1]. That's what they called Averroism, that's what intelligent people maintained. in the courts and in literary circles, affecting to place the representative of this doctrine above the evangelists and apostles, and to make his writings their Favorite reading [2]. This Averroism of the men of the world is indeed Pomponat's. He almost renews it. The blasphemy of "The Three Impostors [3]." The appearance religions (leges), and their decadence are an effect of the influence of the stars[4]. Christianity has already cooled; He no longer has the strength to perform miracles.[5] What to say about this dilemma against Providence, in which he delights with An obvious act of malice? "If the three religions are false, everyone is deceived; if, out of the three, there is none that one is true, there are two false ones, and consequently- that the majority is always misled. Isn't that back in the day when we were discussing the question of whether to- Which of the three legislators was the most successful and won the

---

1. Campanella views Machiavellianism and Averroism as two parallel offshoots of Aristotle's doctrine. Cf. Brucker, vol. IV, p. 472-73; t. V, p. 140.

2. Audivirnus Italos quosdam qui suis and Aristoteli and Averroi tantum temporis dant, quantum sacris litteris ii which maxime sacra doctrina delectantur, tantum vero fidei quantum apostolis et evangelistis ii which maxim sunt in Christi doctrinam religiosi, Exquo nata sunt in Italia pestifera illa dogmata de mortalitate animi et divina circa res humanas providentia, si verum est quod dicitur: nihil enim preeter auditum habeo. (Melchior Canus, De locls theol. 1. v.)

3. Of immorl. animoe, cap. xrv.

4. Hujusmodi legislatures, which Dei fîlii merito nuncupari possunt, procurantur ab ipsis corporibus coelestibus. [De Incant., 1. XII, p. 293.)

5. Quare et nunc in fide nostra omnia frigescunt, miracula desinunt, nisi conficta et simulata, nunc propinquus videtur esse finites. (Ibid.y p. 286.)

no more followers1? The very expression of leges &l législatures, which Italian philosophers use to designing off on religions and their founders is borrowed to the translations of Averroes, where the word lex represents always the Arabic word dîn (law, religion). The passage of the Destruction of Destruction, where Averroes insisted with the most boldness in drawing parallels between religions, is titled in the Italian editions: Sermo de legi~ bus, and noted by the annotator with an obvious intentiondent2.

The opposition between the order of faith and the philosophical order sophistic, which we found throughout the the Middle Ages as a distinctive feature of the Averroists, is also the basis of Pomponat's system. Pomponat, philosopher, does not believe in immortality, but PompoNat, a Christian, believes it. Some things are true. theologically, which are not philosophically truely. Theologically, one must believe that the invocation Saints and relics have great efficacy in diseases; but philosophically, we must recognize that the bones of a dead dog would have just as much, if They were invoked with faith.3 For four centuries, the free thinkers could not find a better subterfuge to excuse their boldness in the eyes of the theologians. Compression always produces subtlety; the conScience protests, and takes its revenge with ironic respect. constraints that are imposed on him.

1. Menagiana, t. IV, p. 286 et seq.

2. Opp. t. X, p. 331 (ed. 4560).

3. Quœ omnia, quanquam a profano vulgo non percipiuntur, ab istis tamen philosophis, which alone sunt dii terrestrial and tantum distant to cseteris, cujuscumque ordinis sive conditionis sint, sicut homines veri ab hominibus pictis, sunt concessaet demonstrata. [From incant. p. 53.)

Therefore, if we apply the name Taverroists to this faa thousand thinkers, worried and exasperated by the constraint, so numerous in Italy during the Renaissance, and which covered itself true to the Commentator's name, Pomponat must be placed at the forefront among the Averroists, and Vanini Petrus Pomponatius, philosopherphas acutissimus, in cujus corpus animum A ver rois commigrasse Pj'thagorasjudicasset1. But, if we tends by Averroist a supporter of the doctrine of unity of the intellect, this name suits Pomponat so poorly, that His entire life was nothing but a perpetual battle against Achillini, the champion of Averroism2. Averroes, moreover-their, is treated in his writings with extreme setruth: he finds his opinions so extravagant and so-clouds of meaning, which he doubts anyone ever had taken seriously, and that Averroes himself understood them sockets3.

Pomponat is presented as the founder of Alexandrianism, although in truth one does not notice in he had no systematic attachment to Alexander, the symmetry dictated that Achillini should become the leader of the aver-Rooists. This classification would be entirely artificial, if we claimed that Achillini actually supported the unity of the souls and collective immortality. While recognizing-knowing that, on these two points, the doctrine of Averroes is consistent with that of Aristotle, Achillini expressly rejects

1. Amphith. Exercise vi, p. 36.

2. This moment in the history of the Paduan school gave rise to many-a series of misunderstandings. Bayle (art. Pomponace, note B) pointed out the error which placed Pomponat among the Averroists. Brucker (vol. I, p. 826) had he first made the same mistake; later (vol. III, p. 162) he rectified it.
Leibniz (Opp. t. I, p. 73) also fell into some confusion on this point.
regard.

3. Cf. H. Ritter, Gesch. der neuern Phil., I Th. S. 393.

these theories are presented as being opposed to the faith.1 But, at From another point of view, Achillini deserves the name of aver-ROIist, I mean by the importance he gives to Grand Commentary, by its scholastic and pe-Dantesque. The School of Padua has nothing more famous.
than the struggles of Pomponat and Achillini. Achillini the em-carried in public theses; but the public don-Pomponat was right, as people flocked to his le-Lesson 2. The League of Cambrai forced them both, in 1509, to transport their battlefield to Bologna.
The fight continued until both combatants died.
tants, around 1520.

Achillini is really just a disputer, a continua model of the old Paduan school, where the master does not was only worthwhile because of his skill in public exercises, by his audacity in pressuring an opponent, and by the assurance of his answers. Like all Averroists, he sought-chait to appear orthodox, constantly invoking the distinction between the theological order and the philosophical order phique. He shows himself to be much freer in his hau-His epitaph at San Martino Maggiore in Bologna:

Hospes, Acliillinum tumulo qui quœris in isto,

Falleris; ille suo junctus Aristoteli Elysium colit, et quas rerurn hic discere causas

Vix potuit, plenis nunc videt ille oculis.
You modo, per campos dum nobilis umbra beatos

Errât, die longuin perpetuumc[\ie Vale.

---

1. H. Ritter, Gesch. der neuern PhiL, I Th. S. 383 f.

2. Niceron, t. XXXVI, init. —— Tiraboschi, t VI, p. 492.— Papado-poli, Hist. gymn. Patav., t. II, p. 298. — The works of Achillini have been printed several times in Venice, in 1508, 1545, 1551, 1568. It is sur-taking into account that one reads in the Dict. des se. phil, that he left no writings that has reached us.

§ VII.

Thus, these doctrines which, in Petrarch's time, were reduced to hiding and conspiring in the shadows, had become, at the beginning of the 16th century, the almost official philosophy of all Italy. The discus-discussions on the immortality of the soul were on the agenda of day at the court of Leo X. Bembo, his secretary, did not ca~ I don't know his preferences for Pomponat. It was he who saved the philosopher from the stake, and took it upon himself to appease the inquisition, to correct the De Immortalitate animœ. It was again under his protection that Pomponat published His Defensorium against Niphus. All the old sayings from incredulous Averroism, that hell is an invention princes, that all religions contain fables, that prayers and sacrifices are inventions "Priests," repeated the most established people. at court. He is an Averroist, this unbeliever of the Mass of Bolsena. The Middle Ages would have given it horns, to that unbeliever who dares to doubt before the blood of Christ. Look at the difference! Raphael makes him a gallant person-swimming, pleasantly eyeing the miracle, like a man of wit who knows the reason for things, and who has read his Averroes.

It's not just to save appearances, we don't Pomponat, and underhand he was supported. Niphus was paid for to refute it, and Pomponat was encouraged to respond to Niphus. What seriousness could one expect from a bubble?

countersigned Bembo, and ordering belief in the immortal tality? It was, moreover, only an almost imperceptible nuance-
The sand that separated the Alexandrists and the Averroists.
The first ones frankly admitted the consequences of their doctrine, from which the latter escaped only by subtle lies. On both sides, the method, the es-He took it, the irreligious tendencies were the same. Marsile Ficino, JA Marta[1], Gaspard Contarini[2], later Antoine Sirmond countered with the same arguments, and the the Lateran Council envelops them in the same condemnation nation.

The Lateran Council was merely a futile effort to stop Italy in the path it had embarked upon,
and hence the great reaction provoked by the upheaval-
The reform alone could pull it off. Certainly, without going into it-Looking at the terms of the bubble, one would think that it is The zeal of the purest orthodoxy. All the subterfuges from the school of Padua are planned there. The council condemns and those who say that the blade is not immortal, and those who claim that she is unique among all men[3], and those who argue that these opinions, although contrary-res a la foi, sont vrais philosophicalment[4]. He orders in in addition to philosophy professors refuting the opinions heterodox unions, after having set them out[3], and enjoined

---

i. Apologia de an'imœ immortalîtate, cum digresslone, quod intellectus sit multipUcatus, joined as a refutation to De Anima et mente liumana of Simon Porta.

2. Contarini, writing against Pomponat, also felt obliged to to refute the unity of the intellect. (Poli, p. 550.)

3, Council. Later. V, session wine. (Labbe, Concîl, t. XIX, col. 8-42.)

A. Quumque verum vero minim contradicat, omnem assertionem veritati illuminatse fidei contrariam omnino falsam essedefinimus. [ibid.)

S. Insuper omnibus et singulis pliilosophis districte prsecipiendo mandamus, ut quum philosophorum principia aut conclusions, in quibus a recta fide deviare noscuntur, auditoribus suis legerint, quale hoc est de animated mortalitate aut unitate, et mundi seternitate, ac alia hujusmodi, teneantur veritatem religionis cliristianse omni conatu manifestam facere, ac omni studio hujusmodi philosophorum argumenta, quum omnia soluexisting bilia, pro viribus excludere atquc resolvcre. [ibidA to prosecute, as heretics and infidels, the fau-authors of such detestable doctrines. Finally, he forbids them clerics to devote more than five years to the study of philosophy Sophie and poetry, if they do not add to it the study of the theology and canon law.

This papal bull is dated December 19, 1512. However, it is precisely in the years that followed that the contro-The verse, excited by Pomponat, reached its highest degree.
of vivacity and boldness. The lively De Immortalitate appeared in Bologna in 1516. The Lateran decree did not have So, not very effective. A few voices were raised in protest.
even timidly in the council in favor of the doc-condemned trines1. Contelori mentions, it is true, a order dated June 13, 1518, by which he is enjoined to prosecute Pomponat as a rebel against the Council of Latran2; but it does not appear that this order had any
As a result, the decree was taken much more seriously. in Spain. The author of a biography of Raymond Lull, who living around that time, attests that every year we was reading solemnly at the University of Palma3 and that he-even, to express his joy at this happy event-ment, composed a piece of verse, in which Leo X was \. RP D* Nicolaus, episcopus Bergomensis, dixit quod non placebat sibi quod theologiimponerent philosophis disputanîibus àeveritate (1. uni-tate) intellectus, tanquam de materia posita de mente Aristotelis, quam If Averrois imponit, lieet seeundum veritatera talis opinio est falsa. And RPD Thomas, generalis ord. prsedicatorum, dixit quod non placet secunda pars bullse, prœcipiens philosophis ut published persuadendo do-ceant veritatemfidei. (Labbe, col. 843.)

2. Petrus de Mantua asseruit quod anima rationalis, seeundum j>rin-cipia philosophise et mentem Aristotelis, sit seu videatur mortalis, contra determinationem coucilii Lateranensis. Papa mandate ut dictus Petrus revocet, alias contra ipsum procedatur. Jun 13 law 8 (apud Ranke* History of the Papal States, vol. 1, chap. n, g 3.)

3. Thrown SS. Junii, t. V, p. 678.

equaled to Ferdinand the Catholic for his zeal against heresy:

Ule reos fidei flammis ultricibus arcet,

Toque peregrinum dogma vagumque premis.

Your duo sufficitis gestis et voce Leones, Omnia sub Cliristi mittere regna jugo.

This excellent pope certainly did not deserve a such praise. He was too engrossed in the debate to even consider it.
to burn the combatants, and it was much less for the
to conclude that for the pleasure of seeing it last that it consent a refutation of Pomponat to his theologian of Trust, Augustin Niphus.

S vin.

Niphus had begun as a determined Averroistmined1. Upon leaving the Vernias school, he wrote his treatise De Inteltectu et dsemonibus, which caused a scandal in Padua. There he supported his master's opinion on the unity of the intellect, and strove to prove that there is no other separate intelligences than those that preside to the movements of celestial bodies. The arguments of Saint Thomas and Albert against Averroes were there.
treated with so little respect that the protection of the pious and tolerant Barozzi, evokes Padua, for ar-to expelling the author provoked the fury of the Thomists. Barozzi engaged him in gea, to calm the riot, to remove a few steps*

1. All those who have spoken of Niphus, Nicero, Bayle, Bruclter, Tir-Boschi, etc., have done little more than reproduce the notice that Naudé put in at the head of his edition of Opuscula moralia et politica by Niphus (Paris, 1614). The date of Niphus's death is very uncertain. Naudé makes observer that he was still alive in 1545, since in that year he dedicated a ouwork to Paul III. 11 could even have said in 1519, since in the title of the edition of his commentary on Physics, dated that year, on reads: .... Post multas editiones per ewudem auctorem in uhïrna cjus œtate sum-via d'digentia Vecognila alque pila! has.

wise men from his book, and it was with these corrections that The work was published in 14921. This misadventure made him wiser. He embraced orthodoxy and became a zealous Catholic.
lique. Padua, Salerno? Rome, Naples, Pisa saw him successively under the names of Suessanus, Eutyehius, Phiîotheus, to teach a mitigated Averroism. His com-Comments on De Substantia orbis, on De Animée beatitudine, and especially on the Destruction of the Destruction j took their place in all editions alongside the texts by Averroes, not to mention a host of pamphlets which he had succeed one another year after year. He himself made editor of Averroes, and in 1495-1497, published under his direction a complete edition, frequently reproduced since. From

At that time, booksellers liked to include with the books ancient, some illustrious recommendation among the contemporary. The name of Niphus thus became inseparable of Averroes. Averroes alone understood Aristotle; Niphus alone understood Averroes:

Solus Aristotelisnodosa volumina novit

Corduba, and obscuris expressed illa nodis.
Gloria Parthenopes, Niphus bene novit utrumque,

And nitidu m media plus facit esse die2.

Niphus, moreover, was very keen not to fall out.
with theologians. In his commentary on the Des-Instructing Destruction, he pretends to use it without cease these expressions: At nos christicolæ..,. at nos

1. Niphus, however, asserts in his preface that he had nothing to erase which was contrary to the Catholic faith. "Satis mihi sit," he adds, "Peter Barotium, episcopiun Patavinum, Christianoruni nostrse selatis deeus et splendorem, et cui non minus infîde quam in philosophia tribuo,...
"defensorem habuisse."

2. Verse placed by Jerome Paterni at the beginning of the commentary on Niphus on Book XII of the Metaphysics. (Venice, 1518.)

catholici . . . . His marginal notes are often vivid ironies: Non potest intelligere Averroes quod Deus sitin omnibus: o quam ruclis1! — Maie intelligis, bone vir, sentiam Chris tianorum-! In Rome, he had many a stroke of success; Leo X created him Count Palatine and granted him permission to...
It was his wish to take up arms against the Medici. His book, De Im-animated mortality, refutation of that of Pomponat, appeared in Venice in 1518. Niphus appears to have been one of these literary knights of industry so common in Italy in the sixth century. He knew, like the parasitic Italian, how to amuse his masters, through his boasts of debauchery, accept the A ridiculous role and paying his dues with witty remarks. His treaties Political and moral ideas were in vogue. Charles V granted him his favor, and he had the honor of to please the princesses of his time3.

This lightheartedness of character does not allow one to take

He took Niphus's philosophical doctrine very seriously. psychology is essentially Thomistic psychology, which had initially fought. The intellect, the form of the body, is capable of numerical plurality; it is created at the mo- It lies or it is united with the sperm, and survives the body.4 Nor Neither Aristotle nor Averroes knew of creation; however- while he does not reject the principles of Peripateticism that God produces something new, not through variation of itself, but by variation of the object cause tive. What Aristotle absolutely rejects is creation lF 302 (edit. 1560).

2. Md.,î. 119, 175 v°, 206 v°.

3. His treatise On Beauty, dedicated to Jeanne d'Aragon Colonna, is intended for to prove that this lady's body was the standard of beauty archetype, which it offers in all its equivalent proportion. Bayle has gra- He discussed where he might have acquired his knowledge on this point. also special. (Art. Jeanne (V Aragon, notes B, C, D.)

4. /// Php, ausculi. p. 47 v° (Venet., 1549). — Deintellectu et dœm.,\ . II.

in time; however, nothing prevents us from supposing the creation eternal, by granting to nothingness a conceptual priority tuelle1. Niphus varied greatly on this point: in his book De Immortalitate animas and in the latest editions In his comments, he went so far as to argue that Aristotle's principles were not averse to creation in time, and that this philosopher had admitted the creation-tion of the intellect.

Niphus has generally been considered one of the leaders of the Averroist school2. Mr. Ritter observed that On a multitude of points, he combats the doctrine of the commentateur, and that in his commentary on the Twelfth book of the He treats metaphysics with the most affected contempt: ((Averroes in praesenti commento fere dicit early errata

((quot verba Magno miratu dignum est quonam pacto

“vir iste (Averroes) tantam fidem lucratus sit apud Latinos in exponendis verbis Aristotelis, quum vix unum "verbum recte exposuerit3. ... "He calls his commentaires gossips confusiones that one exposiùones, and he declares to adopt this author only because he is famous and because the students do not want to hear about another teacher4. It is true that elsewhere he bestows the highest praise upon him.8

1. In Phys., f. 45 y0 and 47.

2. Averrois sectatores qui nostro hoc sevo adhuc spirant, inter quos unus and caput is Suessanus,,.. etc. (Ant. Brasavola, hiDesubst, orhis, ms, (Bibliography: Ferrais, no. 30-4, p. 407.)

3. H. Ritter, Geseh. derneuem Phi!., I Th., S. 381 f.— Cf. Comment, in Destr. Destr. f. 60, 64, 177 v°, 211 (ed. 1560).

4. Quum barbarus sit, Graecorum mentem ad plenum intelligente non potuit.... sed quia nostro tempore famosus est, ita ut nullus videatur peripateticus nlsi Averroïcus, cogor ipsum exponere. Adest proterea rogatus nostrarum scholarum, cui non parère difficult videtur. {Philos ophorum hac nostra tempestate monarchœ, Augustinï Niplù Suessani, In duoclecimum Metoph., f. 2 etproœm. Venet. 1518.)

5. Hic ex Greecis enarratoribus perinde atque ex optimis fontibus phi-and shows no mercy to his detractors.1 This would

It is a futile effort to try to reconcile these differences.
And Niphus would probably be the first to smile about it.

Six.

Niphus's harmless Averroism was throughout the 16th century, the official teaching of Padua. The word Averroism no longer represented a doctrine, but the confidence placed in the Grand Commentary in the inter-Aristotle's prediction. Now, far from the theologians were contrary to this teaching, there was in this a respect for authority and established texts, which should to please them. They were the innovators in philosophy and in literature that was irritated by this routine and this barbarity. Even the most Catholic men wanted to be called Averroists in this sense 2, I saw in Rome, at the neck-wind from the Chiesa Nuova, in a cupboard containing the books that belonged to Saint Philip Neri, and that we keep as relics, a beautiful handwritten copy Averroes' writing. The Church highly approved of the study of Aristotle; Cardinal Pallavicini went so far as to say that Without Aristotle, the Church would have lacked some key figures. of his dogmas. Now, Averroes was, by general admission, the best interpreter of Aristotle. The ccùtoç ecpa of the disci-
The teachings of Pythagoras, said a contemporary, have nothing that should surprise us, since nowadays we see losophiam visus est non tam hausisse quam expressisse; qua e re solus commentatoris nomen sibi comparavit. Dii immortals! quantum is boour sequi authors. [In Phys. auscult., prsef.)

\. Quidem Averromastici, quorum studium potissimum est in repreliendendo Averroe. (Ibid., f. 51 v°, 53 v°.)

2. Viros catholicos se et esse et dici velle averroistas, said the cardinal Tolet. (Apud Bruckerum, t. VI, p. 710.)

Everything Averroes said passed for axiom in the eyes cie those who philosophize \ The most splendid titles were lavished upon him: Solertissimus peripateticw disciplined interpres. —Altividus aristotelicorum vestigator penetralium. — Magnus Averroes, philosophers consummatissimus. — Primarhis rerum aristotelicarum commentator.

Marc-Antoine Zimara, of San Pietro, in the kingdom of Naples, gained a great reputation in schools through the care he lavished on Averroes' text. His Solutions to the contradictions of Aristotle and Averroes, its indexes, its concordances, its marginalia- Did his analyses become like the works of Niphus, integral parts of all editions of A- Averroes. Averroes was undergoing treatment at the school in Padua. out of all the classical masters. In the text of his works- We preferred contemporary summaries, more manegligible, more common.

Subtlety and dryness are common flaws of all the Averroists. But none, it must be said, of them has reached as far as Zimara. This barbarity... was starting to tire, even in Padua. We have already seen public favor abandons the pedantic Acliillini and to bear on Pomponat. Zimara suffered the same disgrace. 11 became ridiculous and unbearable to the students, and could not to teach that three years 2. Bembo, in a letter dated

t. Prof. Junt. (edited 1553) f. 3 v°, 6 v°, 12. Cur omnibus bene philosopliantibus viris adyersabimur, qui tantum uno ore Averroi tribuunt, ut neminem qui non averroîta sit bonum unquam fore philosophum pra> dicent,... nec quemquam prorsus philosophum putent qui liuic audeat contradictory. — Cf. Mantinum, prsef. in libr. On the part, and hinder, anim. — L. Vivem, Decausis corr. art., 1. V, Opp. t. T, p. 410. (Basel, 1555.)

2. Facciolati, III* pars, p. 274.

of the G October 1 525% expresses with finesse, the mood that He was inspired by this outdated method. "He calls Otranto2, he wrote to Rannusio, è già da ora tanto in odio di questi scolari tutti dall' un capo ail' altro clie se ne ridono con isdegno. Perciocchè dicon che ha dottrina tutta barBara and eonfusa, ed è semplice averroista.... E costui pare che sia tutto barbaro et pieno di quella feccia di dottrina, che ora si fugge horn la mala ventura. Siat sicuro che thisest povero studio quesf anno, quanto aile arti, non ara four scolari, e sarà Tultimo di tutti gli studj. Mea nihil interest; se non in quanto essendo io di cotesta patria, mi duole di veder le cose che sono d'alcun momento alT onor pubblico, andareper questa via lontano so what if you want and get it. »

The Sohitiones contradictionum Àristotelis et Averroisz composed largely after Zimara, and re-These, gathered by the Juntas, are nevertheless not without interest. because of the numerous quotations from the masters that can be found there favored in Padua. It is curious to see paraded on chaone of the questions then being debated by Gilles de Rome, Walter Rurleigh, Baconthorp, John of Jandun, Gregory of Rimini, Paul of Venice, James of Forli, Gaetano of Tiene, Pomponat, Achillini, Niphus. What is more curious iscore, these are the anecdotes relating to the arguments of the University of Padua, which are reported there, and which we are, so to speak, attending the discussions of this school famous4. The doctrine of the unity of the intellect is adopted there

---

1. Opera, vol. III, p. 118. Venice, 1729.

2. San Pietro, Zimara's birthplace, is a small town near Otranto. In Italy, men were often referred to simply by the name of their city. natal: Si/rssn, for Niphus; Cordulta, for Averroes.

3. Opp. Averr., t. XUcdit. 1560).

4. For example, f. G2 v°, 13-4 v°, 1 10, 212 v°.

in the sense of the unity of the common principles of the spirit1, but openly rejected, in the sense that there would only be one the only substantial principle of human reason. Zimara enters into subtle distinctions on the various nuances those that this theory had adopted from the school of Padua, and on the efforts that had been made to reconcile it with faith2. But always respectful of the ComAs a liar, he aspires less to refute it than to prove that The errors attributed to him are not his fault.

The primary intelligence gives being to the primary motive, and through it to the universe. The first driving force is form beings, as the master is the form of his slave 3. The active intellect is not God himself, as would have it Alexander, not a mere faculty of the soul, but a substance superior to Famé, separable, incorruptible4. Form is the principle of individuation: form in effect presupposes matter, while the reci- proposition that is not true.3 The intellectual soul is separable and immortal 6. Truth comes to us in two ways, the prophets and the philosophers; in doubt, the prophètes should preferably be raw 7.

---

iF 177 v°.

2. Isti sunt medii inter Averroem et Cliristianos: volunt enini tenere miitatem intellectus cum Âverroe, et volunt eam defendere cura principes Christianorum, et ista non possnnt stare Erubescant ergo mendacio velle killi unitatem intellectus, imponendo ei illud quod non dixit — ut ipsa tandem veritate coacti nullo pacto defendant unitatem imo potins fatuitatem intellectus. [lbid. f. 210 and y0.)

3. lbld., f. 120.

4. IbicL, f. 172 v°.

5. Aid., f. 147 v°, 193 v°.

6. Ibid., f. 132.

7. Lieetigitur Aristoteles ista non viderit, nec philosophi, viderunt tamen ista prophetœ, who in superiori gradu sunt consîituti quam pliilosoplii? secundum sapientes, etideo stantediscordia, in talibus potius pro-

A host of hardworking professors competed with Niphus and Zimara in the elucidation of the works of Averroes. Antoine Posi de Monselice published a more comprehensive index. maple-like even more so than that of Zimara (1560, 1572). Julius Palamedes provided a third table of the same kind (Venice, 1571). Bernardin TomitanusdeFeltre, composed of the Solutiones contradictionum in dicta Aristotelis and Averrois, similar to those of Zimara, and arguments Regarding Averroes' questions, Philippe Boni composed another concordance of the same kind. A great number of common books, under the titles of Methodus legendi Ai'erroem, Thesaurus in Averroem, Concordantia in Averroem, etc., were eagerly sought after students2. Marc-Antoine Passeri, Vincent Madio, Chrysostome Javello, Jean-François Burana, Jean-Baptiste Bagolini, Jérôme Stefanelli, student of Zimara, the two Trapolinis, Victor Trincavelli, through their lessons and their writings continued the tradition of the same teaching throughout the first half of the 16th century.

sx.

This extraordinary trend led to a reorganization. general translations of Averroes. Since the first edition (Padua, 1472), they had simply reproduced- to translate the old versions made from Arabic in the 13th century, pretty much as they are found in the manuscripts. Niphus and Zimara had tried their best to correct them and to make them intelligible, but there were only mediopliciis creclciuUim quam pliilosophis, quum ipsi intentiores Doo sint quam fuerint plulosoplu. {Ib'uL, f. 207 v.)

1. Following the republication of 1574. — Cf. Tomasini, Elog'ia, t. Ifr, p. 66 sqq.

2. Cf. Antonio, Ilibl. hisp. hairy, t. II, p. 401.

It was a success. From the beginning of the 16th century, one began to make new Latin translations on the tra- Hebrew translations. It must be remembered that the manuscripts Averroes' Arabic writings then, as today, were extremely rare, and that Arabists were not hardly less, while Jewish translators were plentiful. Avicenna suffered the same fate: first translated from Arabic by Gerard of Cremona, it was subsequently translated from Hebrew by Mantino, André Alpago de Bellune, Jean Cinq-Arbres, etc. However, it must be admitted that the goal we set out to achieve proposed was not achieved, and that these new tra- Translations made from Hebrew are more barbaric and more obscure even more so than those of the 12th century

These new versions had been circulating for a long time. handwritten documents, when the Juntas formed the plan of a large complete edition of Averroes, to which they entrusted the care of Jean-Baptiste Bagolini from Verona, known in Pa- gifted as a philosopher 2, and in Venice as a doctor. A very large part was given to new translations; the old versions were kept for a few treatises, such as the commentaries on Physics, the Treatise on the Heavens, Metaphysics, Nicomachean Ethics. Sometimes, as with certain important parts of the treatise on the Soul, both versions were printed parallel in two columns. Often the texts an-

The old and new versions were corrected one by one.
the other. Some paraphrases that have remained unpublished until now were translated for the first time. The marginal notes-Zimara's national classifications were maintained; a classification

1. Cf. Possevini Blbl. selcct., t. II, 1. XII, cap. 16 and 18.—Richard Simon, Suppl. to Leon of Modena, p. 12i (Paris, 1710).

2. Cf. Facciolati, IIP pars, p. 302. — Maffei, Vercna illustr., part IIa, col. 163-169 (Verona, 1732).

a better one was established ; the paraphrases and the commentaries
The middle sections were divided and placed after the texts.
Bagolini displayed great zeal in this work, and me-Rita received this supreme praise from her contemporaries:

So united and Aristoteles Bagolino and Corduba stand, Quantum humus agricolse debet operta rubis '.

He died of exhaustion before completing his work.
Marc Oddo presided over the publication, which took place in the years 1552-1553.

The Jew Jacob Mantino, born in Tortosa, Spain, and physician to Paul III, was the most laborious of the translators those who undertook, in the 16th century, to reform the Averroes' text, based on the Hebrew. He lived again on his own.
almost all the comments. Bagolini took in his pa-piers the parts he deemed suitable, and neglected the remains. We will see, in fact, that the work of these newinterpreters often performed double roles, and that the same work was translated in several places at the same time.

Abraham of Balmes, born in Lecce, in the kingdom of Na-Ples, and a doctor in Padua, quite well-known among the Jews
As a grammarian, he focused primarily on logical works.
Averroes's questions, in Rhetoric and Poetics3. Bago-Lini used his versions to correct those of Man-Tino, and preferred them for Topics, Arguments Sophistics, Rhetoric, De Substantiel orùis\

1. Edit. 1553, f. 11 v°,

2. Marini, Degli Arclààtri Pontifie} (Rome, 1784), vol. I'1', p. 292, 367.—Wolf, T, p. 06G; III, p. oi5. —Antonio, t. 1", p. 467 — Carmoly, History of Jewish Physicians, p. 145 et seq. — Wolf took pon-original works and some of Mantino's translations.

3. Cf. Wolf, I, p. 70.—Richard Simon, lllst. has. Jet. Test., p. 536.

4. His translation of the paraphrase of the Poetics can be found in the edition Bagolini had preferred Mantino's, according to IliGO.

Jean-François Burana of Verona, professor at Padua1, is the only Christian who appears on this list of translations-authors. It is highly probable that Burana appropriated the work of some Jew; for one cannot believe that At that time, a Christian could have known Hebrew fairly well. rabbinic to translate, even poorly, texts also difficult: why bother, anyway? when you had Jews around you all ready to do the besogne per alcuni danari? 11 seems that one also attributed at Burana, knowledge of Arabic is at least of unpublished documents that Maffei had in his possession, that he translated several Greek authors. In any case, Burana appears in the Juntes edition for the great comments on the Analytics, on which we had not before him, average exposures. His work had already printed in 1539. Marc Oddo complains vehemently of the defectiveness of this translation, which he was forced to corrected by that of Mantino 2.

Paul the Israelite gave a paraphrase of the treatise on Heaven and the prologue to the twelfth book of the Metaphysics; Vital N issues, the paraphrase of the treatise on Generation; Caio Calonymus, a doctor from Naples, appears as a translator of the Destruction of the Destruction, and of the letter on X Union of V separate intellect1. Its version is more com-more complete than that which was done with Arabic in the Middle Ages, and on which Niphus composed his commentary. To this In reality, this work does him little credit. I don't know if he

1. Facciolati, IIa pars, p. 115. — Maffei, Verona illusrata, parte 11% pp. 426-127. — Maffei and Facciolati, misled by the title of the edition of 1539, took Averroes and Àlubidus Rosa- for two different authors dis [sic).

2. Praef. edit. 1553, f. 7 v.

3. See. above, p. 150-151.

There is a less intelligible text, and Pococke1 said with the reason why it doubly deserves the title of Destraction [lion versio sed destruction) . Wolf also credits Calo the translation of Averroes' Physical Questions, with

Moses of Narbonne's commentary

A manuscript from the National Library (old fonds, 6507) contains a Latin version of the comment-a middle ground on Physics, based on the Hebrew text of Zerachia, son of Isaac, which remained unpublished, and was completed on January 7th life 1,500 by Vitalis Dactilomelos, master of arts and doc-specialist in medicine, by order of Cardinal Dominique Grimani, patriarch of Aquileia. This translator is, from the rest is completely unknown.

Elie del Medigo is also counted among the Jews who sought to give the school of Padua a more intelligible of Averroes. He translated, it is said, the De sub-Stantiel Orbis, the Commentary on Meteors3, the Questions on the Prior Analytics, printed in Venise, among the Aides (1497), and the Middle Commentary on the first seven books of the Metaphysics, printed first appeared in the 1560 edition.
Death prevented him from finishing this last task. He
It may also be that we have viewed them as translations rather-gentlemen of the commentaries he composed on the treaties Averroist.

Averroes' medical works tested the the same fate as his philosophical works. One felt, around

---

1. Ad Portant Mosis, p. 118.

2. Bill, liebr., I, p. 19. — By a bizarre error, Tennemann (art.
Averrohs (in the Encyclopedia of Ersch and Griüber) indicates as translator of Destruction V editor Bonetus Locatellus (Venice, 1497).

3. Bartolocei, t. I, p. 14. — Pasini, I, p. 55.

4. It is wrong for publishers to present this translation as done from Arabic.

the mid-16th century, the need to translate them from new calf, to complete them, to correct them. Jean-Baptiste Bruyerin Champier, nephew of Symphorien Champier, physician to Henry II, translated, or rather had translated from Hebrew, books II, VI, VII of Colliget, which he brings together under the name Collectanea medica. Mantino retraalso read some chapters of the book V. André Alpago de Bellune revisits the commentary on the poem by Avicenna. The treatise on Theriac was published according to the papers of André delia Croce, surgeon of Venice.
The Juntas, in their later editions, did not that of 1553. Their prefaces attest that these books were in high demand. Each edition it took two or three years, as with the classics the most common ones.

§XI.

Such an absolute reign could not fail to provoke to provoke a violent reaction. Arab Aristotelianism, personnified in Averroes, was one of the great obstacles that those who were then working so actively encountered how to found modern culture on the ruins of Middle Ages. The revolutionary spirit in Italy never Aristotle soon became a poisonnero, an obscurantist, the executioner of humankind, who lost the world with his pen, like Alexander You lost with his sword. The majesty of Averroes was in turn raped. This Arab, this barbarian, became the the target of sarcasm from all cultured minds proud to have rediscovered the authentic Greece, the philologists, Hellenists, Platonists, Hippocrats became supremely contemptuous of this Greece falsified, pedantic, the kind one found among the masters Arabs. This bristling scholasticism, these categories offleshy, this savage jargon must have seemed more than never intolerable to minds brought back by culture classic in its beautiful form and healthy manner To think. Petrarch already found Aristotle unpleasant upon reading*. The humanists of the 15th century declared all in one voice, Averroes, unintelligible, meaningless, inworthy of capturing the attention of a cultivated mind. Its obscurThe trait became proverbial, and its followers were considered people who want to find meaning in what has none step 2.

Scholasticism, by continually moving away from Aristotle's text, putting the commentator in the place of the philosopher, and the professors' notebooks instead From the commentary, he had created a conventional Aristotle. who resembled the real Aristotle much like Y HisPierre Comestor's scholastic treatise resembles the text Hebrew of the Bible. The inadequacy of the translations, the incorrection of manuscripts and first editions of fifteenth century, had made the reading of the text continuous Aristotle's view was practically impossible: people were content with bringing together sentences that offered meaning and some principles that were generally attributed to Aristotle, to build a system with this. 3. Highlighting The discovery of Aristotle's Greek text was truly of a new text, and all the good minds declared

1. From sui ïpsius et mult. igrior. (Opp. t. II, p. 1051, ed. Henricp.)

2. Ipsum ohscurum, jejunum, barbare and borride omnia seribentem, refugiendum putant — (Av. Opp. Prsef., edit. 1552, f. 6.)

3. Are quidam plerique ex duobus vel tribes Aristotelis dictis dog-my manufacturing integrum. Ex omnibus tamen qui eonstruxerit neminem vidi. (Patrizzi, Discuss. perip., 1. XIII, f. 113 y0. Ven., 1571.)

since there was only one thing left to do, it was about leaving the translations and the medieval commentaries, to search within the text only authentic Peripateticism. But routine does not never considers herself beaten. The old translations and the old comments still retained many partisans, when already Theodore Gaza, Georges de Trebizond, Argyropulus, and Ermolao Barbaro had re-The ancient Lyceum was revived. Hence this fierce struggle of Arab Aristotelianism, seeking Aristotle in Averroes, and Hellenistic Aristotelianism, seeking Aristotle in his text and in the Greek commentators, Alexander of Aphrodisias, Themistius, etc.

On April 4, 1497, Nicholas Leonicus Thomaeus ascended in the chair of Padua to teach Aristotle in Greek 1. Bembo celebrated this great event in verse, which seemed to usher in a new era in teaching philosophical. Leonicus, by the liveliness of his polemic against scholasticism, through its medical teaching, all Hippocratic, by the beauty of its style and its ma-Ciceronian tradition deserves to be considered as the founder of Hellenistic and critical Peripateticism2. The dou-
The core of his character protected him from insults; he even

1. That is to say, according to the Greek text. The opinion that leads to teaching Leonicus in Greek, is not worth discussing. (Facciolati, I leave,

p. LV-LVI.)

2. Philosophiam ex purissimis fontibus, non ex lutulentis rivulis salubriter hauriendam esse perdocebat, explode penitus sophistarum disciplina, quse tune inter imperitos et barbaros principatum in scholis obtine-bat, quum doctores, excogitatisZ>ar£ara^£fr///Q/efigmentis,... and juventus in gymnasio Jrabum et barbarorum commentes secuta, a recto munitoque itinere in confragosas ignorantise crepidines ducerentur. (Paulus Jovius, apud Brucker, t. IV, p. 156-157.) — Cf. Patrizzi, Discuss. perip., 1. XII, f. 106 (Fri., 1571). — Tiraboschi, t. VII, 2nd part., p. 422 (Modena edition).

the courtesy of finding Averroes a distinguished interpreter: Averroes exquisiteitissimus Aristotelis interpres (Grœcos semper excipid). Moreover, it relies on the psy-Averroes' chemistry for reconciling Aristotle and Plato, and to establish the pre-existence and immortality of souls*.

All the distinguished minds of the 16th century never ceased to preach the crusade against the barbarians in philosophy and in medicine 2. Youth, abandoning the sophistry scholastics, thought of nothing but learning Greek to read Aristotle, and the pedantic Zimara could barely find listeners for his Averroes. // quality "autore," says Bembo in his letter to Rannusio, already cited, asked if lascia a parte dai buoni dottori, ed attendes} wing sposizioni of* commentagreci, ed a far progressa born* testi 3. The same revolution took place in me-Medicine. Hippocrates and Galen were no longer infallible. than in Greek. "Our ancestors," says Thomas Gionti in the preface to his edition of Averroes, found nothing of ingenious people in philosophy or medicine who did not come of the Moors. Our age, on the contrary, trampling underfoot Arab science only admires and accepts what is drawn from the treasures of Greece; he worships only the Greeks; He only wants Greeks as masters in medicine, in philosophy, in dialectics; he who does not know Greek, does not

---

i. H. Ritter, Gesch. last Phil.\ I Th. S. 377.

2. In the title of the edition of Aristotle (Paris, 1531, ex officina Simonis Colinsei), we read the following exhortation: “Nunc ergo, o juvenes, ex Aristotelico operates, ceu ex proprio fonte purissimas haurite delibateque aquas, peregrinas autem tanquam viles laeunas insalubresque Trinaeria-lacus devitate. Omne enim malum studiis inseminatum fere est , quod authorum lîteris dimissis, ipsisque authoribus, ad vana glosscmata sese totos contulere, and eos qui non essent authores (ae si apes fucos sequerentur) pro ducibus et delegerunt et secuti sunt. »

3. Operates, t. III, p. 118vVenczin, 1729;.

knows nothing. Hence these brawls, these heated quarrels between philosophers and doctors alike, so that the ma- The women, not knowing which sect to devote themselves to, die more "More hesitation than illness."1 Jean Bruyerin Champier, in the preface to Averroes' Collectanea, written in 1537, also tells us that the youth of his time he hated Arab doctors, and did not want them milk plus hear quote2.

S XII.

The revival of Hellenism, which was heralded in Padoue, in Venice and northern Italy by the return to the true text of Aristotle, manifested itself in Florence by a return to Plato. Florence and Venice are the two poles of philosophy as well as art in Italy. Florence and Tuscany represent the ideal in art, the Spiritualism in philosophy; Venice, Padua, Bologna, Lombardy represents realism and rationalism. the exact and positive spirit. Plato alone was suitable for the inter- hold of Careggi and the Ruccelîai gardens; Aristotle 5 to Venetian institutions are well thought out. One might be surprised at At first glance, it looks like a heavy and pedantic school the one whose history we are trying to outline, was the official school of a city that the imagination delights in surrounded by such a poetic halo. But looking at it Up close, one can see that this school is in perfect agreement with the Venetian character, and that it is exactly in Philosophy is what Titian and Tintoretto are to painting. Philosophy and poetry stem from the same fundamental source.

1. Ed. 15S2, f. 2-3.

2. Plerique omnes juniores medici jam intolerabile in Arabum Mauritanorumque dogmata odium conceperunt, ut ne nominandi citandive locus relinquatur: principles enim Hippocralem atque Galenum habere no3 preacher.

principle; philosophy is merely a genre of poetry like any other, and poetic countries are philosophical. Now the essential trait of the Venetian character It is neither art nor poetry, What is Saint Mark com- Compared to the dome of Pisa? Who can look at one of the ma- Venetian houses after having seen those of Siena and Perugia? Analyze these strong personalities from the Venetian ceremonies. like those of Gentile Bellini or Paris Bordone. Is it the In thought, is it the ideal that breathes there? No; it is the fer- Mete, that's action. Instead of this flower of youth which flourishes eternally on the banks of the Arno, here it is the maturity of the man made, the exact and firm sense of earthly things. Certainly, with regard to freedom of In terms of thought, Florence had nothing to envy Venice for. None apart from freedom of opinion and irreverence for things Saints were not carried so far during the Middle Ages: Skepticism was pushed to the point of not believing in miracles of Saint Catherine of Siena, attested by all The Sienese! The impious thought of the parallel between religions has it ever been expressed as brazenly as in the third novella of the Decameron? But the answer of The Jewish Melchizedek to Saladin, a response found so wise by Boccaccio, and who, in the rest of Europe, would have ignited The pyres, in Florence, only elicited a graceful smile. instead of that pedantic toga in which Venetian incredulity was draped Florentine incredulity, lighthearted and carefree, abandoned gave to the intoxicating pleasures of a life perfumed with youth and gaiety. Venice arrives at philosophy through the habitsstudies of demanding and rigorous skills that the handling provides business acumen and practicality; Florence, through serenity of a consciousness where all the elements of the ideal are penetrated thirty with harmony, and by this air of freshness and joy that one breathes at the foot of the Ficsole hills.

Marsilio Ficino himself tells us that it was by reaction against the Averroist Peripateticism of Venice that he undertook to revive the Platonic tradition. The inHis credulity seemed so deeply rooted that he saw only two means of defeating it: miracles or a phi- religion losophical. If he translates Plato and Plotinus, it is because he hopes that, as philosophers, they will find a better reception from the public than the saints and the prophets[1]. Averroes, the representative of heterodox Peripateticism, is treated with the deepest contempt. He didn't know how to Greek, and understood nothing of Aristotle. Book XV of the Platonic Theology is entirely devoted to the refutation of the Averroist monster, the unity of the intellect. Ficino's argument is neither lacking in clarity nor in subtlety. In the Averroist hypothesis, perception, he says, would not belong to any personal subject; the free act, the Their will would be inexplicable. Astrology itself provides him with arguments: souls are not identicalticks, since there are some of Saturnian, Martian, of Jovians, of Mercurielles[3]. The Averroist theory of Providence is also vehemently refuted. God sees everything. in its own essence; always attentive to making prevato benefit the most general good, he does not need to deturning big things around to see the small things.

---

[1] Ut hac theologia in lucem prodeunte Peripatetici quam plurimi, id est philosophi pêne omnes, admoneantur non esse de religione, saltem communai, tanquam de anilibus fabulis sentiendum. (Prsef. in Ploti- (num.)

2. Averroes — grsecse linguse ignarus, Aristotelicos libros in linguam barbaram and grseca perversos potius quam conversos legisse traditur — Resipiscant igitur quandoque Averroici, et cum Aristotele suo consent- so much. [Theol. plat., Opp. t. I, p. 327, 342, ed. Henricpetri, 1376.)

3. Ibid., f. 339.

A. Ibid., 1. II, f. 104. — An ignoras, impious Àverrois, bonum ipsum ordinis universi esse cujuslibet parti ordine prsestantius?...

Gemist Pletho and Bessarion, before Marsilio Ficino had shown the same antipathy, and rejected the theo- Averroist theories in the name of Platonism. L. Patrizzi is more severe again. Imagining himself, based on a common mistake repeated, which the scholastics only knew through Aristotle Averroes, in his eyes, is responsible for all the flaws of scholasticism, and of this chaos of questions subtle ones that had invaded the field of philosophy2.

§ XIII.

To understand the aversion that Peripateticism has averted... Rooist inspired the brilliant minds of the Renaissance; it is necessary having known from experience this style bristling with bar- words these subtle discussions, this unsustainable prolixity- ble, which are the characteristics of the Averroist school. “Other- At times, said Louis Vives, nothing was more charming than the contemplation of the garden of this universe; but these, at In a place of trees and flowers, they erected crosses there for to torture the human mind.4" Indeed, consider the impression that the Bar- were to make on the Valla family Baro, the Bembo, phrases like this: this Queelibet “anima intelligit primum et se, hoc est suum esse, quod “Dehaath appellatur; of seconds vero intelligit Zobar,

---

1. Theol.plat., Opp. t. I, p. 327. — Brucker, t. IV, p. 47.

2. Discuss. peiipat., 1. XII, p. 106 (Venice, 4571).

3. Here is a curious example. In Book XII of the Metaphysics, The word allastogia is used several times (f. 337 v°, sqq.). I de- asks what meaning this word should have offered to the doctors of Padua, who did not sa- They probably didn't know that it was the word <TTor/sîa preceded by the Arabic article (al-stouchia).

4. Nihilolim amoeniushabebalurcontemplatione hortihujusnaturœ....
At isti, pro flosculis philosophise et arboribus placidissimis, crucem in-gçnjis will fix. — De causis corr. art., 1. V (Opp. t. I, p. 413; Basel, 1553).

“quod ddit sibi suum esse1.” This is the case with Pic from the Mirandola: “Age, damus hoc vobis, ut non sit ves-“trum ornate loqui2, sed vestrum est certe, quod nec « praestatis, Latin ut saltem, ut, si non floridis, suis tamen “verbis rem explicetis. Non exigo a vobis orationem “comptam, sed nolo sordidam; nolo unguentatam, sed “nechircosam; non sit lecta, sed nec neglecta; non qua> “rimus ut deîectet, sed querimur quod offendat3. » Nizolius's Antibarbarus, and the extreme insistence that cultivated minds tended to argue that philosophyphye must have no other language than computer language naire and must forbid itself the technical style, which we learn-peeled the style of Paris4, was not then a thesis childish or simply a rhetorical scruple. There was no There is no more urgent reform than that of language: the
The first condition of progress was to rid the thought of this intolerable constraint of the scholastic style, which forbade him any delicacy.

The man of this century in whom the
The struggle between these diverse feelings is certainly the essence of the Pic de la

1. De animœ beat., f. 357 (ed. 1560).

2. The Averroists used to say, in order to excuse the barbarity of their language, that philosophers should imitate Aristotle's style, and despise the words to think only of things. (Cf. Prof. Marci de Odis, ed. 1552,
f. 6. — Niphum, In XII Metaph. Proœm.)

3. Epist. ad Herm. Barbarum, inter Opp. Politiani; Paris, 1512, vol. I, f. lv.

4. Cf. Vivem, In Pseudodialectîcos (Opp. t. I, p. 272 ff.).

5. Nizolius summarizes his Antibarbarus in these two propositions, seu de verisprincipiis et vera ratione philosophandi, contra pseudophilo s opho s: “Ubi-cumque et quotcumque dialectici metaphysicique sunt, ibidem ettotidem esse capitales veritatis hostes. — Quamdiu in scholis philosophorum regnabit Aristoteles iste dialecticus et metaphysicus, tamdiu in eis et falsitatem et barbariem, si nan linguse et oris, at certe pectoris et cordis re-gnaturam. » (P. 354, ed. Leibniz.)

Mirandola. Pico was not initially free from Arabism.
His teacher was Elie del Medigo, the Averroist, and he did not
He never completely got rid of this bad leaven.
Among the nine hundred questions he proposed for his grand philosophical tournament, barbaric scholasticism, and Averroes, in particular, holds a prominent place. "Is “apud Arabas,” he says in his Apology, in Averroe fir-“mum et inconcussum; in Alpharabio grave et medita-((tum; in Avicenna divinum atque Pîatonicum. » Elsewhere he calls Averroes "will celebrate in Aristotelis familia phi“losophum et rerum naturalium gravera sestimatorem1,” and he proposes to reconcile him with Avicenna, as Aristotle with Plato 2. Therefore, the people of Coimbra count him among the Averroists 3. Pico, however, felt some in-better fluences. A letter he addresses to Ermolao Barbaro contains the expression of his new sympathies old women and his regrets about being converted again. "Hac “proxima tua ad me epistola, in qua dum barbaros hos ((philosophos insectaris, quos dicis haberi vulgo sordidos, “rough, uncultured, quos nec vixisse vives, nedum ex-“tincti vivant, et si nunc vivant, vivere in pœnam et con-« tumeliam4, ita Hercules sum commotus, ita puduit me ((piguitque studiorum meorum(jamenim sexennium apud

1. L. I Adv. astrol. (apud Antonio, vol. II, p. 395, Bayer ed.).

2. De hominis d’ign., p. 324 ff. — ApoL, p. 118.

3. In 1. II De anima, cap. i, whats it. 7, art. 1.

4. “Hermolaus rebukes him for having, after tasting so many delights, con-Having studied Greek and Latin, he went and defiled himself by reading the barbaric doctors, who, although they were in great reputation of several beings in authority and however much they may be esteemed by

Grand and petit, ignorant of good letters, are not so through sca-vantz, judging them unworthy to live or walk on earth: puts ranc of these Averroes, Aubertus the Great, Saint Thomas Aquinas, and countless others.
(Bonnivard, Advis et devis des lengues, in the Bibl. de l'École des Chartes, (2nd series, vol. V, p. 357.)

“illos versor), ut nihil minus me fecisse velim quam in “tam nihili facienda re tam laboriose contentenclisse. Lost-(c derim ego, inquam, apudThomam, Joannem Scotum, “apud Albertum, apud Averroem meliorcs annos, tante tas vigilias, quibus potuerim in bonis litteris fortasse “nonnihil. Cogitabam mecum ut console me, if who “ex illis nunc reviviscant, habituri-ne quidquam sint, ((quo suam causara, argumentosi aliqui homines, ratione aliqua tueantur1. >5 Pic de la Mirandole nevertheless knew how to to maintain a wise eclecticism; the exaggerations of the The humanist party almost led him to find some good in Arabic scholasticism. “Quamvis, dicam quod sentio, “move mihi stomaehum grammatistse quidam, who “quum duastenuerintvocabulorum origins, itase osten-« tant, ita sevenditant, ita circumferunt jactabundi, ut “prae se ipsis pro nihilo habendos philosophers arbitrators-“tur. Nolumus, inquiunt, hasce vestras philosophias\ “And what about mirum?” nec Falernum canes. » It seems, moreover, that this apology did little to satisfy the Averroists, and made the con-

to make the Hellenists triumph, who called it the Apology Scythians and Teutons. <c Ab amicis quos habeo Pa-“tavii,” Ermolao wrote to him, “certior factus sum apologiam “tuam quœ Scytharum et Teutonum est inscribi cœpta, “quasi Typhonis et Eumenidum laudatio, molestissimam “accidisse majori eorum parti quos defendis2. »

All the declamations of the most ardent humanists Born in opposition to Arab philosophy, they pale in comparison to Louis Vives' energetic dithyramb. This apostrophe, the harshest, without a doubt, that Averroes had es-soot, occupies no less than four folio pages in

1. InterOpp. Politiani, Paris, 1512, vol. I, f. lv, and in Bernays, Flo-rilegium renascentis latinitatis (Bonn, 1849), p. 17.

2. lbid., Bernays, Floril., p. 23.

I treated De Causis corruptarum artium*. “Nomen is u Commentatoris nactus, he exclaims, homo qui in Ans-this totele enarrando nihil minus explicat, quam eum ip-k sum, quem suscepit declarandum. Sed nec potuisset “explain, etiamsi divinoFUisset ingenio, quum esset ((humano, et quidem infra mediocritatem. Nam quid u tandem adferebat, quo in Aristotele enarrando posset ((esse probe instructus? Non cognitionem veteris memo-“riœ, non scientiam placitorum priscœ disciplina? And « intelligentiam sectarum, quibus Aristoteles passim sca-“tett.” Itaque videos eum pessime philosophos omnes an-this tiquos citare, ut qui nuîlum unquam legerit, ignarus ce grœcitatis ac latinitatis. Pro Polo Ptolomseum ponit, “pro Protagora Pythagoram, pro Cratylo Democritum; “libros Platonis titulis ridiculis inscribit, et ita de iis this loquitur, ut vel cœco perspicuum sit litteram eum in “illis legisse nullam. At quam confidant audet pronuncc tiara hoc aut illud ab eis dici, et quod impudentius est, “no dici; quum solos viderit Alexandrum, Themistium this and Nicolaum Damascenum; and hos. ut apparatus, versos ce in arabicum perversissime ac corruptissime! Citât enim “eos nonnunquam, et contradicit, et eum eis rixatur, “ut nec ipse quidem qui scripsit intelligat. Aristotelem this vero quomodo legit? Non in sua origin purum et in“. tegrum, non in lacunam latinam derivatum (non enim “potuit linguarum expers), sed of latino in arabicum this transvasatum2; in qua transfusione ex Graecis bonis “facta sunt latina non bona; ex latinis vero malis arathis very bad. » Vives then quotes a passage which does not justifies his excessive sarcasm, but whose responsibility

---

i. Opp. t. I, p. 410 sqq.

2. There is no need to point out the enormous mistake that is being made here Vives. Huet copied it, De clarls interprets p. 126 (Paris, 1680).

Literacy, it must be admitted, must fall much more on the Arabic translator than the commentator. “Aristo-“telessi revivisceret, intelligerethaec,” he exclaims, “aut poser set vel conjecturis castigare? O valentissimis men “stomachis which haec devour potuerunt and concoquere, “et in haec tam ab Aristotelis sentia ac mente abhor“rentia auscultare quae Aven Rois commentator commi-i< niscitur: favete linguis viro tanti nominis et alteri “Aristotle.” The unfortunate sect of the Herculeans1
This provides him with an opportunity for endless jokes. "Haec “sunt tua, an Herculeorum, ut tu vocas? You sunt, who “adeo es impius ut impietates insert vel tuo vel alieno “nomine semper gaudeas. Atqui hic est Aben Rois quem “aliquorum dementia Aristoteli parem fecit, superiorem “divo Thomee. Rogo te, Aben Rois, quid habebas quo “caperes hominum mentes, seu verius dementares?” This“perunt nonnulli multos sermonis gratia et orationis le-“nocinio; te nihil est horridius, incultius, obscœnius, “infantius. Alii tenurunt quosdam cognitione veteris “memoriae, you nec quo tempore vixeris, nec qua œtate “natus sis novisti, non magis praeteritorum consultus, “Quam in silvis et solitudine natus et educatus!” Admira-“tone atque omnium laude digni sunt habiti qui prae-u cepta tradiderunt bene vivendi: te nihil est scelerai<tius aut irreligiosius: impius fiât necesse est et aÔeoç “quisquis tuis monimentis vehement sit deditus. Jam “die ipse, quare quibusdam placuisti?” Audio, teneo, “non tua culpa est, sed nostra: non tu adferebas quo “pieces, sed nos adferebamus quo non displiceres.
“Suavia erant obscuris obscura, inanibus inania, and “quibusdam pulchra sunt visa quae non ipsi intelligent-

1. See above, pp. 38-39.

“rent. Multi te non legerant, alienum judicium sunt sert cuti; aliquibus propter impietates Fuisti gratus: nam “and Aben Rois doctrina et Metaphysica Àvicennae, denier que omnia illa arabica videntur mihi resipere delira“menta Alcorani and blasphemy Mahumetis insanias: ni-“hil fieri potest illis indoctius, insulsius, frigidius... . »

I wanted to quote this long declamation, to make to understand the tone of the enemies' anger of Averroes. Caelius Rhodiginus is hardly less se-vere1. Bernard Navagero, who cultivated literature, and made some of Averroes, is presented as a literary phenomenon of its century 2.

Finally, the moderate minds who, frightened by the boldness of Italian Peripateticism, were linked to the principles of reformed Christianity, Melanchthon, Nicolas Taurel, were also very averse to teaching An Averroist, Erasmus was convinced of the profound impiety of Averroes. Ambrogio Leone, professor at the university the city of Naples, writes to him that he has just completed the impospressure from his work in forty-six books against Commentator 4. Erasmus congratulates him. TJtinam, exclaims he, prodisset ingens illucl opus adversus Averroem impium xon rpiç */.a7apa7ov 3! In general, humanists showed less boldness of spirit during the Renaissance than the scholastic peripatetics. Apart from a few ha-pagan customs, quite harmless, they remained, for

i. Antiquœ Lecl., 1. III, cap. n, p. 110.

2. Prof. Junt. (1852), f. 20 t°.

3. Cf. Brucker, t. IV, p. 308.

4. Epist. Jun 19 1518. Opp. t. III, pars I, col. 324 (Leiden, 1703).
— The work had appeared in Venice in Law 7, dedicated to Leo X, under this title: Amlros'ù Leonis Notant, Mar'ini fdi'i, Castigationum adversus Averroem, ad Augusùss'imum Leonem X, Pont. Max. more libri.

5. Epist. Oct. 15, 1519. lùid., col. 507.

the core, attachments to Catholic orthodoxy or Protestants aunt. Petrarch already offers a curious example of this dual trend.

S xiv.

Strange tenacity of routine! This bar- teaching bare, unintelligible, having become ridiculous, continues a century again, in the midst of learned Italy and the spirit modern already triumphant. Averroes, it is true, does not reign more in such an exclusive way; the hermetic meansneutics spread, and the authority of the Greeks against-increasingly launches that of the Arabs*. But the ques-Averroist ideas still stir up the school, and serve program to teaching. From 564 to 589, Jac-Zabarella continued the traditions of the chair of Padua 2. Averroes is his guide in the interpretation difficult passages; he quotes it with the deepest respect, although on several points he seems to be getting closer-dear to the Alexandrians. He thinks with Averroes and Achil-Lini, against Avicenna, argued for the necessity of an absolute being does not demonstrate the existence of God, that heaven for-This first principle could be that there is only one decisive proof of God's existence, the movement from the sky. Zabarella, moreover, quite often distinguishes he India cœptum aliud mixtionis in philosophando genus, uti Aven Kings and Latinis grsecos admitted interpreters. (Patrizzi, Discuss. perip.y 1. XII, p. 106.)

2. How surprised I was to walk down a deserted street in Padua, and climbing the steps of the small church of Santa Caterina del Torresin, formed of sepulchral stones, to read on one of these broken stones obli-[Qually]: Jacobo Zabarel... civilis elec... probitat..., et..., Ludo...——Tq-Masini (I, p. 139) informs us, in fact, that Zabarella was buried in this church; but he had not been able to discover its inscription there: Nulla, quod observe potuerim, memoria clarus.

between the opinion of Averroes and that of his supporters.
In psychology, he strongly opposed the theories that Roists. According to the hypothesis of the unity of souls, he said, The intellect in man would only be like the pilot in the ship. Now, intellect is the informing form of Man, that by which man is what he is. The intel-The reading therefore multiplies according to the number of bodies. All-Zabarella times, in accordance with the doctrine of Saint Thomas Aquinas established a difference between the activity proper to the mind and the active intellect itself, which is the intelligible or God considered as the universal driving force.

If one objects to Zabarella that he thus destroys the personality of the intellect, a personality he wanted to establish against the Averroists, he responds by distinguishing the perception of primitive of subsequent perception. In the first, Nothing personal; the enlightenment comes from outside. More Later, on the contrary, the intellect is acquired, it becomes ours, in the sense that God, constantly spreading his light, is always at our disposal whenever we want to think. By its very nature, the individual intellect would be perishable; but made perfect by divine illumination, it becomes immortal l. Zabarella's thought on this point seems to be from remains largely unaffected. He thinks, like the entire school of Padua, that the immortality of the soul is not in the principles of peripatetic physiology. In this it was an Alexandrian, and that is the judgment that was made of him contemporaries, deterrimam alexandreorum sente ntiam palam professas*. The disputes of Zabarella and François Piecolomini recalled to Padua, during the second half of the 16th century, the exploits of Achillini and de Pomponat; Piecolomini had been a pupil of Zi-

1. Rittcr, Gesek. (1st nenern Pkit.t ITh., S. 718, ff.

2. Brucker, vol. IV, p. 202.

mara, and seems to have moved closer to the Averroists, towhich, moreover, were linked to the scholastic forms of his teaching1.

Frédéric Pendasio of Mantua, a very re- professor named in his time2, is very close to the Zabarella way. The library of the universe the city of Padua3 possesses the handwritten text of its leunpublished lectures on the treatise on the Soul. Few books are also helpful in explaining the method and the teaching habits of Padua. The text of AVerroes is discussed there line by line, with the utmost care meticulous. However, by adopting Averroes for the based on his lessons, Pendasio refers, on the question-The development of the intellect, according to the doctrine of Alexander. The intellect multiplies, depending on the number of individuals. Undoubtedly, The principles of reason are common to many; but images, which are necessary for any intellectual act tuel, are multiple and varied 4. The reason is unique and eternal, considered in the human species that participates in it eternally*, it is fleeting, considered in such or such an individual3. The Averroists maintain that the plurality

i. Brucker, t. IV, p. 208. — Tomasini, t. I«r, p. 208, ff.

2. Naudœana, p. 105. — Bayle, art. Cremonin, note Y. • — Brucker, t. IV, p. 2il ; t. VI, p. 718. — Facciolati, pars III, p. 275, 280.

3. No. 126-4. — I have in my hands a copy of two of the most important, which I owe to the kindness of the learned Mr. Samuel Luzzatto.
The Ravenna municipal library also possesses a manuscript of these lessons. (Se. 141, or. 5, X.) See Appendix IV.

4. In seternitate in specie omnes conveniunt... Hinc fît ut cognitio quse est in hoc intellectu non sit una number, sed solum una specie, quia pending a phantasmatibus which has more than one number. (Lect. 33.)

5. Sunt seterna, quia intellectus unicus est, in quo semper conservatur eadem cognitio: nam omnes homines conveniunt in cognidone primo-rum principiorum, omnes conveniunt ut homines sint seterni... Written in-digital technology is limited to matter, and that if the intellect were Multiple, it would be material. Not at all, replies Pendasio.

The intellect is meant to unite with the body, but it does not depend not of the body, "like a shoe is made to fit" at the foot, and yet does not depend on the foot1!

Pendasio is therefore a pronounced Alexandrianist. Cremo-Nini, Louis Alberti2, and his disciples also counted among the most determined defenders of Alexandrianism.
In general, all the professors of Padua in the 16th century,
whose name has remained in the history of philosophy,
belong to this nuance, and while making Aver-Roès, the text of their lessons, severely condemn the unity of the intellect. It would be difficult to name one.
the only one who, since the Lateran Council, has frankly defended the Commentator's opinion on this point. All-at times, seeing the insistence that Pendasio puts into refuting On each page, the Averroists, one is forced to suppose that This opinion still rallied a certain number of people in Padua.
of supporters.

The extreme rarity of purely Averroist texts... attaches a certain importance to a comment unpublished material on the twelve books of Metaphysics, which possesses the library of Saint Anthony of Padua (no. 424). This This comment is attributed to a certain Maglster Calaber^ otherwise unknown. Father Minciotti, author of the cata-the catalogue of the manuscripts of Saint-Antoine, thinks that this for-could well be Onofrio Calaber, to whom Gaetano de Tiene tem facta et corruptibilis hœc cognitio, respecta hujus vel illius particuLaris. (Lecture 33.)

1. See appendix IV.

2. Naudé (1. c.) is among the disciples of Pendasio Zabarella and Fortunio Liceto. But Zabarella was teaching at the same time as Pendasio, and Liceto was too young to have heard it.

addresses his book of the Soul K This conjecture is inadmissible, since Magister Calaber cites Achillini, Niphus, Zimara and Simon Portius, a century later than GaeTano. In any case, the doctrine expounded in this book is the purest Averroism. The raw material is a and common*. The first cause necessarily acts and as much as she can act, because she cannot help but 3. Communicating one's goodness. Nothing comes from absolute non-being. Saint Thomas and the Latin philosophers overturned all the principles of Aristotelian philosophy, in suppos- 4. The intellect is eternal, because it is unique and because it is not involved in the corruptibility of the individual. Averroes' entire theory of the heavens is adopted as the last word of cosmology5.

In Bologna, Naples, Ferrara, as in Padua, one commented Averroes. Nicolas Rissus, Nicolas Vitigozzi,

i. Catal. del Codd. husband, di S. Ant. di Pad. p. 112.

2. Quod materia has a probatur number. Illud is nnum number quod non habet pluralitatem formarum individualium. Ergo.... — Quod materia communis sit pluribus probatur. Illud dicitur commune pluribus quod non habet formam unamnumber per quam illud sit unum number. Sed materia non habet unam formam. (Lect. 14.)

3. Probavimus secundum philosophos quod prima causa necessario movet et operatur, et non potest non operari, quia bonum non potest quin communicatet aliis bonitatem suam. Insuper movet necessary and quantum potest. {lbid., lect. 31.)

4. Latini ex hoc textu Nil prohibet intellectum separarl, duo coiligunt, primum quod animus noster est immortalis; secundum colligit Beatus Doctor quod intellectus non est unus, sicuti sensit Averroes. Opinio Latinorum, secundum placita philosophorum et maxim Aristotelis nullo modo sustineri potest, quum prsecipua fundamenta philosophise evertit: Ex non ente simpliciter nihil fit, et aliud ita famosum: Ex nihilo nihil fit. Dico igitur quod unus est intellectus et immortalis. If remanet, igitur preecedit^ nam seternum ex una parte ex alia quoque seternum est. [Ibid^ lect 14.)

5. Lecture 39.

The Frenchmen Longus and Scipio Florillus1 published their lessons on the substantial Orbis and other parts of the work of the great commentator. The libraries of the northern Italy contain an immense quantity of ma- manuscripts belonging to this cycle of studies; because very often These school notebooks couldn't be printed, and... They transmitted copies; the court of Este did not know of another philosophy. Antoine Montecatino, whom Duke Al- Phosus II appointed his philosopher, on the salary of twenty-four lire a month, commented Aristotle and Aver- Roes 2. The Ferrara library (no. 304) possesses the autograph manuscript of unpublished comments from the me- Doctor Antoine Brasavola on Averroes, dedicated to Hercules d'Esté and Renée of France 3. Verses in praise of the author, placed at the beginning of the book, according to Italian custom? are a tribute to Averroes:

Corduba Tergemino felix jam sacret will honor.
Commentatoris dogmata docta sui, etc.

In his commentary on De substantiel Orbis, Dedicated to Francesco Gonzaga, Duke of Mantua? Bra- Savola also demonstrates a deep knowledge of the writings of the Averroist school, which he divides into ancient and modern- last 4. He discusses each sentence of Aver-

1. Antonio, Bibl. hisp. vet., t. II, p. 397, 399 (Bayer ed.).

2. Brucker, vol. IV, p. 231.

3. Only the preface and the index are printed.

4. Nec nostra aetate nec apud antiquos averroistas hoc unquam dubitatum fut.... Animadvertendum est duas esse in hac materia opiniones extremas, imam quam antiquiores averroistœ, Johannes Scotus, sanctus Thomas (quamvis amhiguus videatur), Johannes Bachonus and Herveus sequunlur; aliam vero precedenti opposite recentiores averroistse sequuntur. (Ms. Ferr.) — Brasavola, as well as Patrizzi, approx. Averroes is wise here as the father of all scholastics, and it is in this sense that he places Saint Thomas among the Averroists.

roès the opinions of Bacontborp, Jean de Janclun, Gré-Goire of Rimini, Trombetta, Gaetano of Tiene, INiphus, Zimara, etc. Brasavola, however, seems inclined towards Alexandrianism, and sometimes severely censors the opinions Averroes's ideas. We will perhaps be more surprised to learn to assume that Tasso was an Alexandrian, and that one of the books that he prays the Younger will send him in his prayer His is Alexander's commentary on the Metaphysics1,

S xv.

The last representative of Averroist scholasticism is César Cremonini, Zabarella's successor in Padua. Cre~ Monini has so far been appreciated in a very incomcompleted by historians of philosophy. It was not judged than through his printed writings, which are merely dissertations minor matters, and cannot in any way a way to convey the colossal renown of the-which he achieved. Cremonini is only a professor: his His courses are his true philosophy. Also, while his printed works sold very poorly % the editors-The principles of his teachings spread throughout Italy and even beyond the mountains. We know that students prefer often to the printed texts the notebooks that they have thus collected from their teachers. Condemned In fact, like Vico, like almost all Italians distinguished from the 17th and 18th centuries, to live off his rhe-Cremonini found publishers for his son-

1. See the dialogue // Cattaneo, ovvero délie coiiclusioni, Opp. t. VII (Pisa, 1822), and Lettere inédite, ccxcn.

2. Illud nobis mirandum, quod elaborata ipsius opera typis excusa in officinis hactenus evilescunt, scripta vero peripati more discipulis ab ipso wandering dictata sic excellunt, ut niliil ad arcana philosopliiœ detegenda perfectius ac suavius desiderari possit. (Imperialis, apud Brucker,
t. IV, p. 226.)

nets and its occasional pieces: Clorinda e Vallier o, Il ritorno di Damone, and couldn't find any for his serious works. Generally, it's in the beautiful notebooks-more than in the printed sources that it is necessary to study the school of Padua. For Cremonini, this task It's easy, because there are countless copies of his lectures. in northern Italy. The most complete example is without a doubt that of the Saint-Marc library of Venice. It consists of twenty-two large volumes.
(classis VI, codd. 176-198), written in the same hand, and containing Cremonini's lessons year by year

on all aspects of Peripatetic philosophy These manuscripts come from the Council of Ten, to which Cremonini had indeed sent his works, such as This is proven by a letter found at Monte Cassino, and which he will be discussed soon.

Cremonini is, in truth, neither an Alexandrian nor an Averroist, although he leans much more towards the alexan-Drism 3. Averroes and John of Jandun are the authors which he uses most often, and which provide him with the text of his lessons; the other masters of the Averroist school appear one after another in these tedious discussions sions. Cremonini seems to be making a decision between them by a superficial eclecticism. Like Césalpino and Zabarella, he is linked to an opinion that was then generally considered a point made by Averroes, namely that the existence of God does not

1. The catalogue lists them as autographs. But this feeling pa-This is difficult to maintain, because it contains treatises composed according to Cremonini by his students.

2. I have in my possession extensive extracts from these lessons. But I I must limit myself here to what relates directly to Averroism.

3. Fortunio Liceto recounts that, having resumed his attempt to refute the feeling of Alexander on immortality, Cremonini and Louis Alberti threatened him to write against him. (Bayle, art. Crémonin, note Y.)

can be demonstrated only through physical consideration of the movement of the sky. It admits without restrictions imoraunts Averroes' theories on celestial intelligences and Providence \ All sublunar things are governed by heaven; there is a universal agent to whom belongs to the entire efficient universe 2. God does not perceive nothing outside of himself. Cremonini criticizes with more than severity, Averroist psychology. The principle of Averroes: Recipiens debet esse denudatum has natural receptiveness He finds it completely false on point 3. He does not accept it any further the theory of the unity of the intellect4, although he recognizes-It was born that immortality must be sought within the species and not in the individual. The active intellect is God himself.
even, as Alexander wanted. 11 is necessary-distinct from the powers of the soul, simple, subsistso much by itself; for the active intellect is in act all the intelligibles, and that alone is intelligible which is simple, separate, subsisting by itself b. Everything is in somehow full of soul; God is the very life of the universe, penetrating everything in the quality of active intellect 6.
The world is in a state of eternal flux; it is not; it is born.

and he dies constantly. 7.

1. The treatise De intelligentiis (manuscript of Saint-Marc, classis VI, no. 184) is merely a long exposition of this theory, and of incredible subtleties the laws that the Averroists had introduced there.

2. Tractatus De cœli ejficïentia. (Ms. de Saint-Marc, nos. 176 and 182.)

3. In librum De anima. (Ms de Saint-Marc, n° 191.)

4. Tract. De intelligentiis, sub fin. — In librum III De anima.

5. In librum III De anima, lect. 74, cod. 192. It is necessary to compare the code 70, which represents the course of Cremonini in 1592, that is to say his first lesson.

6. Ibid., lect. 79 and 80.

7. The Monte Cassino library possesses the opening lecture of Cremonini in 1591, on this text: Mundus nunquam est; nascitur semper and die.

These are the doctrines that Cremonini taught during seventeen years in Ferrara, and for forty years in Pa- They certainly don't lack boldness, as we can see, and It was only through persistent protests of orthodoxy that Cremonini managed to avoid persecution.1 The preamble his commentary on the Ame2 treaty is at this in this regard, a masterpiece of skill. "Know," he said to his listeners, I do not claim to teach you what You have to believe in the soul, but only what Aris- said tote. Now, everything in Aristotle that is contrary to faith, Theologians, and especially Saint Thomas, have extensively... I answered correctly. I'm warning you once and for all. so that, if you hear anything pro- awkward position, you know where to find the answer. For, in order to conceal something of Aristotle's thought, I would be failing in all my duties if I did that. Each "A dangerous proposition," he hastened to add, "Notice although I'm not telling you my own feelings (my The only possible feeling is that of our holy mother. Church), but that of Aristotle3. » The tactic by which The philosophers of that time sought to claim to some extent independence, was to expound the doctrines compromising under the name of others, by disavowing them, and even in refuting them; but taking care that the refutation-

i. Bayle, art. Cremonin. — “Cremonin cleverly concealed his true intentions by Italy ; nihil habebat pietatis et tamen pius haberi volebat. » Naucloeana,

p. 55.

2. Mss. of Saint-Marc, nos. 190, 191, 192. See Appendix V.

3. In hoc diximus non quod nos sentimus de anima et de intellectu agente, sentimus enim id quod sentit nostra mater Ecclesia, sed diximus id quod videtur sensisse Aristoteles. (Cod. 192, init.) — Qua; philosophy dicta, ut sœpe diximus, non sunt retinenda, quia de anima illud est senstiendum non quod sentit Aristoteles, sed quod sentit veritas christiana. (IbiJ.y lect. 79, sub fin.)

tion was weak and sufficiently betrayed the true thinking of the one who was speaking. It resulted from an interesting correspondence dance that I found at the Monte Cassino library, that this maneuver is not enough to cover Cremona L On July 3, 1619, the Grand Inquisitor of PaDoue wrote to him to remind him of the decree of the Council of LaTran, who orders the professors to seriously refute the errors they point out, and he asks him for a retractiontation, citing the example of Pendasio's docility. In a remarkably firm letter, CremoNini replied that it was not up to him to chanto publish his writings, which had received the approval of the senate, and that, being paid to explain Aristotle, he would feel obliged to return his fees, if he taught something other than what he believes to be the true thought of Aristotle. someone is tasked with writing against him, like NiPhus was tasked with refuting Pomponat, and he agreed to Not responding: that's all he can promise and all that we will obtain from his condescension

Thus it continued into the heart of modern times. dernes and in one of the most brilliant scientific centers Europe's education and controversies Middle Ages. In 1828, Gabriel Naudé still found the aVerroism dominant in Padua 2. The death of Cremonini (1631) can be considered the limit of the reign of this philosophy. Scholastic Peripateticism will no longer have any supporters of anything value. Fortunio Liceto (died in 1656) did not save it the debris that, by allowing the spirit of philosophy to penetrate it, modern philosophy. Bérigard, more daring, will try to

4. See Appendix VI.

2. Cf. Leibniz, Opp. t. I, p. 73.

to replace Peripateticism with Ionian physics. In 1700, Fardella taught Cartesianism without opposition. nism in Padua. Averroism had resisted, for nearly of three centuries, to the attacks of Platonism, of the humanists, theologians, of the Lateran Council, of the council of Trent, of the Inquisition; he died the day he appeared the prestigious, reputable school, the scientific school, the one that opens with the genius of Leonardo da Vinci, continues by the Aconzios, the Erizzos, the Jordano Brunos, the Pauls Sarpi, the Telesio, the Campanella, and is consumed by the genius of Galileo. This great school of learning, the true crown of Italy, and which rightfully claims a share of Bacon's somewhat exaggerated glory, this truemodern and completely free, finally, from the barbarity of The Middle Ages, alone, could put an end to a de- Aristotelianismcrackles. The true philosophy of modern times^ is the Positive and experimental science of things. Science positive alone had the strength to sweep away this mass of sophisms, childish and meaningless questions that he had scholasticism piled up. Only positive science could gueto awaken the human mind to this singular disease, and the rato lead to the right path, to the contemplation of things, to a keen sense of reality.

This revolution, however, can be considered at a a completely different point of view: if on one side she was the triumph of the rational and scientific method, it was on the other hand a victory won by the theological spirit gic. Paduan Averroism, insignificant as a philoSophie acquires genuine historical interest when one

---

1. This is what Mr. Mamiani of Rovere, in his beautiful work Del rinnovamento délia fdosofia antica italiana, part I.

he views it as having served as a pretext for independence of thought. This apparent contradiction has nothing that This should be surprising. Haven't we seen Jansenism, the most narrow of all sects, to represent in its own way the cause of freedom? Venice was, in a way, the Holland of Italy; freedom of thought was exploited there as a a very productive branch of commerce: all books Protestants came from there.1 The Morosini meeting, formed largely composed of Cremonini supporters, was a a hotbed of very bold opinions2. Even the miracles of Saint Anthony is among those who were suitable for a center of disbelief. This is the heretic Àlerdin (notice this (Arabic name) converted by the miracle of a glass of water;

He is a blasphemer of the Eucharist, convinced by an ass; these are the fish more docile than the heretics-questions to the word of God. The people and the monks found-It was amusing to teach these superb people a lesson in this way.
doctors who so proudly jostled their beliefs.
However, this libertinism of opinions which gives a physiosuch an original economy in northeastern Italy during the 16th century, disappears with Arab Peripateticism in the first half of the 17th century. All intellectual activity dies at the same time. Venice, which has covered the world Venice no longer has a publisher for his books, and the Aids are reduced, in order to avoid bankruptcy, to printing breviaries! In general, the effects of an intellectual reaction lectual only become noticeable after a generation. The Catholic restoration that followed the aborted-The reform in Italy simultaneously halted the Italian movement; and yet the impetus given

---

1. Maccrie, Hist. of the Reformation in Italy (Italian trans., p. 83).

2, Bartholmess, Jordano Bruno, t. I; p, 373.

continued for more than half a century: Italy, in 1600, con-to still serve some purpose in his life during the reign of Leo X, So complete, so free, so fulfilled. Then the cold, gaining ground.
Gradually, it reaches the heart. Art does not pro-
It is more than Bernini's coquettishness, the extrava-Borromini's gances; human thought serves no other purpose than to
to write sonnets and cicalates for the academies; Everything falls asleep as if under a spell. In 1650, Italy has no other concern than the station and X Ave Maria, its oratories and their confraternities.

S xvi.

It is because they failed to take this double into account acceptance of the name of Averroes, which has been ranked among the Averroists, men quite foreign to the rest of the faa thousand of the Peripatetics of Padua, such as Caesarpin, Cardan, Vanini, Bérigard.

Césalpin is too original a mind to be con-embedded in a school whose defining characteristic is to lack of originality. Through certain points of his doctrine, he
It is true that it is close to Averroes, but in spirit and in
In this way, it has nothing to do with Paduan Averroism. Norcolas Taurel, his adversary, finds his doctrine more more surly and impious than that of Averroes. Caesarpin is, Indeed, a true predecessor of Spinoza. There is no that only one life, which is the life of God or of the unified soul-Verselle. God is not the efficient cause, but the cause Constituent of all things. Divine intelligence is unique; but human intelligence multiplies according to the number of individuals; for human intelligence is not in action but also in potential.1 Thus, while retaining the

1. Cf. Brucker, t. IV, p. 221 ff. ; t. VI, p. 723 ff. — Ritter, Gesch. der neuem Phil., I Th., S. 6Î33 ff.

Cësalpin avoids the dogma that forms the basis of Averroism confusion which produced such a long series of errors. The object is identical, but the subject is multiple, and it is permissible to say that the object multiplies by individual consciousness according to the number of subjects.

Cesalpin lived through the harshest period of the Inquisition without being bothered. He was even the Pope's physician, profess-Sister to the Wisdom, and saw Jordano Bruno burn at Cbamp de Flore. He used a rather clever trick to to escape censorship: "I know very well," he said, "that all These doctrines are full of errors against the faith, and these I reject my mistakes; but it is not for me to to refute them; I leave that task to more pro- theologians funds than me1. »

Cardano's doctrine is not without analogy to that of Caesarpin. All individual souls are vir-actually contained within the universal soul, like the worm in the plant on which it feeds. In the treatise De Uno, one of the first he composed, Cardan admits without restriction the Averroist hypothesis of the unity of the intellect. Later in De Consolatione, he retracted his first feeling, and expressly acknowledged that he There can be no single intelligence that applies to all. animate beings, that is, for all men. He argues that Intelligence is as personal to us as sensitivity. and that souls are distinct here below, as they see it-will be in the next life. Finally, in a third writing, the Theonoston, or the Immortality of the Soul, Cardano s-the ability to reconcile these two contradictory opinions. Intelligence is unique, but can be considered in pairs.

1. Fateor in rationibus deceptionem esse; non tamen in presentia meuni is lisec aperire, sed iis qui altiorem theologiam profiteer. (Apud Bayle, art. Césalpin, note A.)

points of view, either in relation to its eternal existence and absolute, either in relation to its appearances in the time. Unique in its source, it is multiple in its manifestations1. Excellent solution, which will require always come back to the explanation of the fact of the intellicense.

Despite this variation in doctrine, which he himself admitted- Even so, Cardano is nonetheless treated as an Averroist. in the diatribes of his fierce adversary, Julius Caesar Scaliger 2. By his way of philosophizing and by the form From his writings, Cardan does not belong to the family at all professors from Padua. But by his position vis-à-vis of theology, he is indeed one of the representatives more pronounced than what in another sense was called Averroism. The passage from De Subtilitate (1. XI) where he pits the supporters of religion against each other Christian, Jewish, Muslim and pagan communities, and which ends abruptly, without conclusion, with this formule: Igitur his arbitrio victorix relictis.*.. did it to be among the authors of the book The Three Impostors. One of the familiar demons that appear to his father boasts of being an Averroist: llle vero palam averroistam se projîtebatur 3, an idea which seemed very impertinent to Gabriel Naudé, since Averroes did not believe in the demons4.

It is also wrong to have classified among the aver-

---

1. See Mr. Franck's learned article on Cardano, in the Dict, des se. phil.

2. Exotericavum exercitationum de subtil, adv, Cavdanum liber XVn*. Exercise cccvn, nos. 14 and 16.

3. Subtle., 1. XIX, p. 682.

4. Apology for Great Men, p. 232 (Paris, 1669). — Bavle, AverRoès, not. F.

roists Claude Bérigard \ Brucker 2 has it completely absolved of this reproach. Bérigard, on the contrary, must be counted among the opponents of Peripateticism in general and of Averroism in particular. He admits the infusion of the individual soul at the moment of birth, and by

Consequently, the plurality of souls. However, one understands that his resolute naturalism, his bold negations have given a place among the Averroists, in the sense broader than the opinion attributed to this word.

But the most original type of Averroism thus en-Tense, it is undoubtedly the unfortunate Vanini. Himself He assures us that he had a Carmelite friar, Jean, as his tutor. Bacon, known as the prince of Averroists, who did not make people swear his pupil than by Averroes 3. We here take fault Vanini's veracity: the character he wants to talk about is undoubtedly John Baconthorp, who died in 1346, two hundred and forty years before his birth! 4! It seems from The fact remains that Vanini took it upon himself to mystify the public on the name of his masters. He constantly presents himself as Pomponat's pupil; however, Pomponat died in 1525, and

i. Leibniz, Opp. I, p. 73.

2. Hist. crit. phil, t. IV, p. 472, 482, ff.

3. Amphit. Exercise. IV? p. 17. Duce Averroe, in cujus verba jurare Joannes Bacconius? averrostarum princeps, meritissinius olim prsecep-tor, coegerat.

4. What's most bizarre is that this enormous anachronism has Vanini was accepted with confidence by almost everyone who spoke about him. Mr. Cousin [Fragments of Cartesian Philosophy, p. 20] thinks that Vanini wants It should be said that in his youth he had studied the writings of Bacon. But lies of this kind are frequent in Vanini. It would be wrong to take everything as autobiographical details what he says about himself, either in his Dialogues or in its amphitheater. It was a common practice at that time to tell the story as having happened to oneself, the anecdotes with which one wanted to brighten one's book. So do Cardan, Cœlius Calcagnini, Montaigne himself.

Vanini was born in 1585. Vanini hadn't even read with great attention the books of his divine precept-theorist, as he calls it; for far from concluding that in by virtue of metempsychosis Averroes had to pass in Pomponat's body, he would have found at each page the refutation of Averroes. Vanini didn't look at it so closely. This strange mind took to everything that could use his boasts of impiety. In the 30th of In his dialogues, he recounts that one day, while preaching on this Question: Why was man created by God? resolved by this famous Averroes scale, by virtue of which there must be a kind of gradation from the most humble of all beings to the most exalted being, who is God or the raw material \ In Genoa, Vanini also wanted to teach according to these principles; but, says his biographer, no one was prejudiced in favor of Averroes, and he was forced to leave.2 His favorite authors, he said, were Aristotle, Averroes, Cardano, Pomponatus3, and for example of his supposed master, John Bacon, he placed no other book that Averroes placed in the hands of his students \ Evi-

The Averroes mentioned here is not the great commentator, but the imaginary author to whom impious and easily readable works were attributed to him.
ture. Vanini, however, knew the Great Commen-He remains silent. He refutes the theories with affected severity.

1. Materia prima, secundum averroistas, sola poteniia, actus punishes, Solus Deus. (Dial. XXX.)

2. The life and feelings of Lucilio Vanini, by David Durand (Rotterdam, 1717), p. 47.

3. Il<id.,p. 18.

A. Quum a me primis philosophiæ sa cris initiaretur, nullius juravit in verba magistri, scd Averrois libros a me ohlatos avid excepit, et in eis perlegendis adeo profecit ut balbutientium scholasticorum ineptias confutare sit aggressus. [Ampluth., p. 350.)

Averroists of the eternity of the world, of intelligences, of Providence, the unity of souls. But Vanini must not not to be taken seriously in his doctrines; the opinion The one he refutes is almost always the one he wants to instill. However weak one may feel despite oneself, this mind, so flexible, so elusive, and in particular for the piquant philosophical sketches that he has intitled Dialogues, one cannot deny that this verve, this subtlety, that cunning, that real penetrating wit astonishing, they do not harbor the most absolute skepticism, the the most brazen materialism. Instead of the cheerful and spiritual frankness that characterizes French incredulity 18th century, the Averroist incredulity of the 16th century is dark, Contemptuous, hypocritical, without dignity. We used to make books to defend the dogmas that we wanted to attack. We prefelt the objections in all their force, when discussing Wretched and foolish were those who made them; then one responded in a derisive manner, or else they confessed that it is impossible to answer it with reason. What a grip had the inquisition on a man who was advocating for The Council of Trent deserved the approval of the Sorbonne. titled a book: Amphitheater of the Eternal Providence

dence, divi no- magic, christiano-physics, astrolo-Catholicism, against the ancient philosophers, the Atheists, Epicureans, Peripatetics, Stoicsciens, etc., and ended his most notoriously tirades impious by these words: Ceterum sacrosanctœ Romands ecclesiœ me subjicio?

Perhaps the 16th century, like the 13th, also exaggerated-Was he deliberately playing on the malice of the Averroists, and did he take pleasure in i

---

1. Cf. Amphith. Exercise. i, 4, 33, 35, 36, 37, 41. — Cf Cousin, Frag-Philosophical commentaries on maps, p. 27. — X. Rousselot, Philosophical Works of Van'ini Notice, p. vi.

to accumulate on some types of impiety all the evils fleeting thoughts that ran through the air, and of which each had to admit guilt. The first time the pen-Thus, a disbelieving thought arises in the soul of the believer; he is frightens, and likes to blame others for its problems temptations abounded. The Three Impostors were back, as a nightmare, to terrify the conscience. "The mockery" that the world has been seduced by three con artists, said La Mondrowned, continually beaten by libertines, will have gave one of them the opportunity to say that there there was certainly enough there to exercise his mind, and that it would a great subject for a book1. » Then, all the parties, Catholic-Ques, Protestants, etc., hurled it at each other as an insult. Bodin, making them argue against each other partisans of various religions, does not give the advantage to None: the ill-intentioned even thought they noticed that Christians were almost always at a disadvantage in his book, and that the answers were never so for-Your objections2. Postel claimed that religion perfect would be composed in equal proportions of chris-Christianism, Judaism, and Islam. As for Vanini, that wicked scoundrel, that seeker of French revelry-Ches, that madman, the most devilish villain who ever lived (Garasse), had, it was said, given a new edition

---

1. 31enagiana, vol. IV, p. 283 et seq. The perpetual preoccupation of This book, however, must have prompted me to write it afterwards, and to initiate the liindeed, in the 18th century, one finds some wretched writings under this title; one, among others, backdated to 1598, another where the Spinosa's name. Cf. Brunet, Man. du libr., t. IV, p. 512 and 520 (qua-third edition), and Voltaire's beautiful invective (epistle cxi, ed. Beucbotj.

2. Colloquium heptaplomeres de abdltis retnn subt'dium arcanis. This or-

The original work was never printed, but copies of it are very widespread. Saint-Germain No. 621 was used by Huet for the refutation he had of it made in his Gospel Demonstration.

of this execrable book \ The word that all the witnesses ocuLaires lend him, as he walks to his execution, that he dies in philosophy*, there even seems to be a reminiscence of Averroes: Moriatur anima mea morte philos ophorum.

§ xvn.

In general, Averroism proper, that is to say the study of the Great Commentary, spread little outside of Italy. Patrizzi gives as a characteristic feature of ecothose from France and Spain, let them explain the text Pure Aristotle without commentary3. Nomadic Italians, François Vimercati, for example4, alone bring someWhat a noise on this side of the mountains! Jean Bruyerin Champier (in 1537), attests to the passing popularity that these foreign masters with their new book: Postquam ex Italia terra in Gallias nostras philosophi quidam corwolarunt, magna cum laude pari ter et frequenti auditorio commentaria Averrhoi in dristotelis volumiria interprèteantes* . Averroes, however, never A brilliant fortune in France. Copies of Our libraries bear no trace of reading; slices of it are intact, and I still haven't found any cut the leaves that had escaped the blade of the bookbinder. Lyon, however, shows some trace of aver-

---

1. a He brought back to life, says Rosset in his Tragic History, the villain and an abominable book entitled The Three Impostors, which is printed at the sight and to the great scandal of Christians. What a pity that the place and The date should not be indicated!

2. Cousin, op. cit., p. 89 et seq.

3. Discuss. Perip., 1. XII, p. 106 v.

4. Vimercati is given as an Averroist by the Coimbrois (In 1. II De anima, cap. i, whats it. 7, art. 1.)

b. Prsef. in Averrois Collée t. mea1., p. 81 (ed. 1553).

roism1. Several editions of the medical works were published there. the philosophical works of Averroes, "which books and treaties, says the privilege of the Most Christian King Henry II, are plain and decorated with beautiful and unique authorities of philosophy to the good and profit of the public good our kingdom; and for the benefit and instruction of them who will want to see and read them,” This royal recommendation The donation was not widely heeded. Averroes, in the 16th century, has definitively left French schools[2], and it is necessary to believe that Reckermann was expressing a completely staff when he insistently asked that the typo-Medici script, which had published the Arabic text Avicenna's, similarly gave that of Averroes[3].

Spain and Portugal, where scholasticism was established... continued almost to the present day, also saw the continuation of Averroes' authority lasted longer. Antonio collected the praise he received from a large number of Spanish and Portuguese doctors[4]. He is nevertheless judged in a very severe manner by the Jesuits of Coimbra[8].

t. I find printed in Lyon, in 1582, a treatise Isidori Isolant in Averroistas, De aeternitate mundi, in four books.

2. Théophile Raynaud, speaking of Raymond Lulle's efforts to to condemn Averroes, is expressed thus: “Congruentior et exauditu faeilior futisset petitio, pro quanunc, quœ Dei henignitas est! no is satagendum: nimirum ne Averroes oraculi loco esset in scholis; quod quum superiori seculo et paucis anteriorihusinvaluisset, prœsertim inltalia, oceasio fut magnorum in oris illis errorum et inutilis diligentiaï,... quod indignissimum Fuisse Nemo non videt. Nnnc Averrois in scholis depontanus evasit. » [Erotemata de ma lis ac bonis libris, no. 340, p. 200, Lugd. 1653.)

3. See Bayle, art. Averroes, note I.

4. Bibl. hisp. vet.,\. II, p. 395 (Bayer ed.). Averroes more quam commentator, seu malleus medicorum verius appellandus — vir acutissimus, suhtilissimus; — Philosophus post Aristotelem admirandus; —Post Galenum medicus summus.

5. Hœc commentatoris seu commentitoris potius de unitate intellectus sentenlia adeo stulta est, ut merito Scotus in iv Sent., d. 43, q. 2, dixerit

Elsewhere, relegated among the "books of the scholastics, which are no longer used except for wrapping anchovies or in "to pack boxes[1]," Averroes strangely disfigures himself in public opinion. These weighty comments, which one might expect-It would be easy to consult them, one imagines them like pamphlets full of blasphemies. Surprising thing-

Nantes! Neither Bayle nor Brucker[2], who devote themselves to Averroes extended articles, where they collected the stories
The more reckless rumors circulating about him, the more they didn't even consider it.
to open his works. It looks like they are books unpublished or rare, which we are obliged to discuss as con-trust. Naudé, who should have learned to trust him better.
born during his stay in Padua, represents him as a staunch atheist, and applies Tertullian's saying to him:
Sub pallio philosophorum patriarcha hsereticorum}'.
In Duplessis-Mornay's judgment, Aristotle is not very religious.
pious, but Averroes, his interpreter, is not at all impious'*.
Duplessis even went to the trouble of formally refuting it the theory of the universal intellect[3]. Campanella, and after Bérigard, he regards Averroes as the first author of the blasphemy of the Three Impostors.[6] I don't know what honor-

dignum esse Averroem qui ob lias ineptias ex hominum comimmione averruncetur; alii vero hoc ejus figmentum monstrum vocarint quo nullum majus Arabum sylvse genuerint. Certe hoc unum sat esse debuisset ad eos coarguendos qui filium Rois tanti faciunt, ut ejus animam Aristotelis anîmam esse saying. (In 1. II De anima, cap. i, quest. 7, art. 2.)

[1] Eonivard, Advis et devis des langues. [Bibl. de l'École des chartes, 2nd se-(rie, t. V, p. 356.)

[2] Illi define quibus plus est temporis, otii atque patientiœ ad evol-Venda scripta nostro tempore plane inutilia. (Bruck., t. III, p. 108.)

[3] Naudœana, p. 21 (ed. 1701). — Apologie, p. 232 (ed. 1669).

[4] On the truth of the Christian religion, chap. xx, f. 258 v°, 259.

[5] Ibid., chap. xv.

[6] Propterea exiit liber de Tribus Impostoribus in Ger mania juxta Averrois and Aristotelis dogmata, volentium. legislatures esse impostores,

A clear English theologian calls him a monster of a man.
the secretary of hell*. The famous word: Moriatur anima mea morte philosophorum, is enough for Vossius to to make it a free libertine[2], and to La Monnoie for the eto become a fanatical detractor of all religions[3].
Gui Patin seems much less scandalized, and the range simply among the deists.[4] Another believes himself authorized by a passage from Garasse to attribute to Averroes the-
This is a strange policy: "For men (this is the opinion-(Vanini's union that we are exhibiting) we should do as "The lumberjacks do this every year in the large forests:"
"They go in to visit them, to identify the woods"

"dead or green wood, and to thin the forest, cutting back"
"everything that is useless, superfluous, or harmful, for
"only keep the good trees or young saplings"
"of hope. All the same," said that wicked atheist,
"We should conduct a rigorous annual inspection of all
"the inhabitants of large and populous cities, and put
"Death to everything that is useless and prevents us from living"
"The rest: like people who have no
"a profession beneficial to the public, the decrepit old people, the "Vagabonds and lazybones; we should make nature effeminate,"
"to clear the cities, to put to death every year a thousand
"lion of people, who are like brambles or the

and proceed, ut said Averroes, Christum, Moysen and Maliumetem. (Of kind, non retinendo, p. 3.1.) — Averroes writes against very legislatures, Christum, Mosem et Mahumetum, deditque materiam scriptori impio of Tribus Impostoribus. (Jt/ieismus triwnphatus, seu reductio ad /W/g/onem, cap. n / A. 19.) — Cf. Berigardum, in Presef. Circulation. Pisan., p. 5.

1. Menagiana, vol. IV, p. 299.

2. Quam parum viderit tantus philosophus in vera et unica salutis via arguit illud quod diceret, malle se animam suam esse cum philosophas quam cum christianis. (De philos, sectis, cap. xvn, p. 91.)

3. Menagiana, p 286 (ed. 1715).

4. Patiniana, p. 96-97 (ed. 1701).

"(horties of others to prevent them from growing *."
"There you go," exclaimed one of the biographers after quoting this passage. Phes of Vanini, these are fruits of the school of Averroes 2! Finally, in the 17th century, some Jesuits still had The brilliant idea of refuting Averroes. Antoine Sirmond, in his book against Pomponat (Paris, 1625, exactly one hundred years after Pomponat's death!) vigorously foughtment against the single intellect3. This hypothesis renwould hold God responsible for the errors of men; she assumes, moreover, that the same subject is susceptible to opposing changes. That if Averroes only I've heard about God's influence on intelligence. Sirmond has no objection to the primary cause; but he cares little whether that was actually the case his thinking4. Possevin, his colleague, is much more severe. In his eyes, Averroes is the choreographer of impiety; the edition of the Juntas and Bagolini, a work of Satan3. He transVives' long diatribe, written in its entirety, and cannot conceive that a Christian would even think of asking lessons to an impious man who, amidst the floods of light-

1. Garasse, Curious Doctrine, p. 815.

2. David Durand, The life and feelings of Lucilio Vanini, p. 52-54.

3. De Immort alitât e animœ demonstration phjsica et arislotelica adversus Pomponatium et aseclas, p. 368 ff.

4. Restât ergo ut suum istud somnium integrum Averroes somnii loco and mendacii haberi sinat, aut certe interpretetur ipse de actione intellecttus divini.... An ita possit accipi non disputo, illud contentus ostendisse quod nisi quid simile sonet ejus doctrina, inanis ac stulta sit; if what abouttem simile, nepilum quidera nobis adversantem habeat. (ibid.)

5. Cernunt qui non sunt omnino cœci hsec a satana paulatim obtrusa piis mentibus et adeo privilegiis subdole objettis confirmata, fructus illos peperisse acerbissimos; unde magna Europe pars per hsereses et atheismum, isto hominum generates tanquam cborago prseeunte, prorsus ad veritatem, that altrix is pietatis, obstupuit. {Bib. salt., t. II, 1. XII, (chapter xvm.)

the beginning of Christianity, eleven hundred years after Jesus-Christ pushed voluntary hardening to the point of to remain in his perfidy K

Moréri, d'Herbelot, Bayle, Rapin[2] only did acto accept the common tradition regarding the impiety of Averroes. The 17th and 18th centuries confidently repeated the same fables. Leibniz regards him as an author pernicious, which has done the greatest harm to the Christian worldtien[3], and Vico as the representative of the fund of impiety inherent to Peripateticism[4]. By a strange coincidence, the The word attributed to him about the Eucharist became a weapon in the Protestant controversy. Duplessis-Mornay[5], Daillé[6] and Drelincourt[7] used this as justification to prove the The harm that Catholic dogma did to the Christian religion tienne in the opinion of the pagans. It was the destiny of AVerroes to serve as a pretext in the struggles of the mind

[1] Quum toi potuisset divinse sapientise oracula miraculque vidisse, ac tamen perstitisset in perfidia sua impius, ecquid tantum christianse menyour ex turbido impietatis cœno piscari sese posse existimarunt? [Bibl. salt., t. II, 1. II, chap. xvi.)

2. Reflections on Véloq., poetry, history and philosophy § xv.

3. Opp. t. I, p. 69 ff. (Dutens edition).

4. Memoirs, cited in the introduction by Mrs. Belgiojoso to Science nou-Vico's velle, p. xviri.

5. Treatise on the Last Supper, p. 1106.

6. "The wise men of the world have not forgiven you for this strange thing claim; witness the word of the philosopher Verroes, which he did not find of a sect worse or more frivolous than that of the Christians, who eat and de-
"They themselves worship the God they adore." [Reply to Father Adam, p. 116.]

7. We cannot forget the lamentable example of this philosopher pagan, who, having seen the sacrament that had been worshipped eaten, said that he had not I've never seen a sect crazier and more ridiculous than that of the Christians.
who adore what they eat; and it is in this regard that this unfortunate he exclaimed: "May my soul be with that of the philosophers, since the Christians-
"They love what they eat." [Dial. IX, against the missionaries,
pp. 305, 306.)

human, and to cover with his name the doctrines to-which he certainly thought the least of.

The history of Averroism is not, strictly speaking, that the story of a vast misunderstanding. Very literal interpreter Averroes, a proponent of the Peripatetic doctrine, finds himself inter-lent in turn in an even freer manner. Alter-tion in alteration, the philosophy of the high school is reduced to This: Denial of the supernatural, of miracles, of angels.
demons, divine intervention; explanation of religions and moral beliefs through imposture. Cer-Yours, neither Aristotle nor Averroes thought much of anything but This would one day reduce their doctrine. But in the men elevated to the dignity of symbol, it is always necessary distinguishing between personal life and the life after the grave, this what they actually were and what public opinion has made of them.
For the philologist, a text has only one meaning; but, for the human spirit that put its life and all into this text his indulgences, for the human spirit which, at each hour, experiences new needs, the interpretation The philologist's scrupulousness cannot suffice. 11 It is necessary that the
the text he adopted resolves all his doubts, satisfies all his desires. Hence, the necessity of the contradiction in the philosophical and religious history of humanity" misinterpretation, in times of authority, is like the re-revenge that the human mind takes against infallibility from the official text. Man does not relinquish his freedom on a
The point is that he can regain it on another. He knows how to find A thousand leaks, a thousand subtleties to escape the chain that it has established itself. We distinguish, we comment, we add,

This is explained, and that is how, under the weight of the two the greatest authorities that have reigned over thought, the

Through the Bible and Aristotle, the mind found itself free once again; it is as well as there is no proposition so rash that it does not have was supported by some theologian, claiming not to not to stray from the bounds of orthodoxy, that it is not of such a mystical doctrine that it could not have occurred under the covered by Aristotle's interpretation. What would have becomenaked humanity, if for eighteen centuries, it had I heard the Bible with the lexicons of Gesenius or of Bretschneider? You can't create anything with a text that you I understand too precisely. The interpretation really fruitful, which in an authority accepted once for everyone knows how to find an answer to the demands constantly rebirths of human nature, is the work of the awareness much more than philology.

APPENDIX

i.

FRAGMENT OF THE UNPUBLISHED TREATY ON THE POSSIBILITY OF UNION WITH ACTIVE intellect.

(According to the manuscripts of the National Library 6510, old collection, folio 291, and Saint Mark of Venice, classis VF, no. 52, f. 324 v°.)

Incipit epistola Aoe?roys de intellectu,_

Intentio nostra in hac distinctione est quod prsebeamus omnes vias claras et demonstrationes fîrmas quœ faciunt scire quaastionem magnam and fortunium sublime, scilicet si conjungatur intellîgentia operans cum intellectu materiali, donec est in corpoie, adeo quod in hac manerie opus hominis sit ipsius ista proprietas ex omni parte, secundum quod ipsum est esse intelligentiarum primarum abstractarum. And haee est illa quœstio quam philosophus in libro de Anima promiserat declarare; and adhuc no pervenit ad nos illud, et quod ponam in hac demonstratione est id quod recipiam a Domino, cui det Deus longam vitam. And if rationabilia fuerint hœc quae dicentur hic, referantur ad ipsum, et si inventum fuerit aliquid non rationale, referatur mihi. And ego dico quod locus iste non est meus, sed induxit me ad hoc obedientia quidem mandatorum suorum quae ipse mandavit mihi.

Contentio facta fleet de hac queestione ut scriberem de ipsa, and etiam ob hoc quod spero remunerari ab eo, and quia ipse scripsit super hanc quaestionem in pluribus locis, voiuit ut dicto aggregaretur totum quod dictum fuerit, et invenirentur quœdam in ea quae non scripta fuerant. Et si quid novi speculari potuerit in ea, apponamus in hac demonstratione. And our concedimus hic quicquid potest concedi de hiis quœ probantur in libro of Anima, quoniam hœc quaestio est causa omnium quse dicuntur in ipso libro. Dicamus quod hœc questio probatur tribes viis. And haec est via quam narravit Alexander in demonstratione sua de intellectu, et dixit quod illa via per quam incessit philosophus in hac causa.

....•••••

Aspice ergo hoc secretum divinum et hanc subtilitatem venerabilem, quam admirabile est! And laudatus sit ipse Deus which dedicts unique rei jus suum, et hoc quod dixi retro de intellectu est ex honorabilibus verbis quœ vocantur dissolutiva, et illa sunt prima id est maxima verborum quse vocantur composita, et hœc est via sumpta ex potentia et actu

And iste intellectus which is in actu is quem homo in se licet in fine apprehend, and iste est intellectus qui vocatur quœsitus, et est complementum et actus, et quod yles primum potens futit ad illum. And propter hoc, hora qua renovata due form, renovatafuitin eo potentia separatarum formarum, when the ascendancy of complemento ad complementum, and forma ad formam nobiliorem and propinquiorem ad actum, adeo quod in fine perveniat ad hoc complementum and ad hune actum in quo nullatenus misceatur potentia aliqua. And quum homo ipse cui proprium est hoc complementum est ipse nobilior omnibus rebus aliis hic inventis, quoniam ipse est ligamentum et continuatio inter res inventas sensatas defects, scilicet quod semper in eorum actu admitcetur potentia, et inter res inventas nobiles, in quibus nequaquam in eorum actu admitcetur potentia, et eorum sunt intelligenceiœ purae abstractœ. And convenience esse quod totum quod est in hoc seculo creatum est propter hominem, et totum ei deservit, quoniam ipsum primum complementum quod fut in yle prima in potentia creatum leaks. Demonstratum est ergo quod unjust facit which segregat hominem a scientia, what is via ad habendum hoc complementum, quoniam non est dubium quod qui facit hoc contradicit inventioni vel intentioni creatoris in invented hujus complementi. And quemadmodum fortunatus est qui consumit tempus suum servitio seu studio, et appropinquat ei laudatus, sic ilîe in hac approximatione. Et hoc est id quod ego vidi ponendum in hac dubitatione, and if aliquid renovatum fuerit, in hoc apponam id, if Deus voluerit. Et laudatus sit Deus, et perdcat nos ad id quod sit voluntas ejus, et inducat nos ad id ad quod nos sumus formati primo et postea, et hoc est in vita et in morte.

Explicit.

II,

FRAGMENT FROM GILLES' TREATISE ON THE ERRORS OF PHILOSOPHERS OF ROME, RELATING TO AVERROES.

(Based on manuscript 694 from the Sorbonne.)

Capitulwn quartum de collectione errorum Averroys commentatoris. Omnes errors philosophi assert, immo cum majori pertinaeia, et magis locutus est contra ponentes mundum incepisse quam philosophus fecît, immo sine comparisone plus est argumentendus ipse quam philosophus, quia magis direct fidem nostram impugnavit, ostendens esse falsum cui non potest subesse falsitas, eo quod innitatur prima? veritati. Proet tamen errores philosophi, arguendus est quia vituperavit omnem legem, ut patet ex n et xi [Metaph.], ubi vitupérat legem Christianorum, scilicet legem catholicam nostram, and etiam legem Sarracenorum which ponunt creationem rerum and aliquid posse fieri ex nichilo. Sic etiam vitupérat leges in principio tertii Physii orum, ubi vult quod contra consuetudinem legum alii negant principium per se, non negantes ex nichilo nichil fieri, immo, quod pejus est, nos et alios tenentes legem derisive appellat loquentes et garrulantes vel garrulatores, et sine ratione se moving. Etiam in vin Physicorum vitupérat leges, and loquent in lege sua appellat voluntates, eo quod asserting aliquid posse habere esse postnon esse. Appellat etiam hoc dictum voluntatem, ac si esset ad placitum tantum et sine omni ratione, and non solum semel et bis, sed pluries, ut in eodem vin0 contra leges creationem assertes in talia perrumpit. Ulterius wandered unseen Melaphysicœ, dicens quod nullum immobile transmutat mobile, nisi mediate corpore transmutabili, propter quod angelus non potest nec posset unum lapidem inferius movere. Quod si aliquo modo sequi posset ex dictis philosophi, ipse tamen non adeo expresse hoc negavit.

— Ulterius erravit dicens in xir Metaphysicœ quod potentia in productione alicujus non potest solum esse in agent, vituperans Johannem Christianum who hoc asseruit. Est enim contra veritatem hoc, et contra sanctos, quia in aliquibus factis tota ratio facti est potentia facientis. — Ulterius erravit dicens in eodem xn a nullo Agente posse progredi immediate diversa et contraria, and ex hoc vitupérat loquentes in tribus legibus, scilicet Christianorum, Sarracenorum and Maurorum, qui hoc asserebant. — Ulterius erravit in dicto xn, dicens quod omnes substantiœ intelleetuales sunt œternse et actio pura, non habentes admixtam potentiam, cui sentiœ ipsemet a veritate coactus contradicit in tertio de Anima, dicens nullam formam esse liberam a potentia simpliciter nisi forma prima: nam omnes alise forma? diversify cantur et essentia et quidditate, sicut ipsemet subdit.

— Ulterius erravit in dicto xn, dicens Deum non sollicitari nec habere curam sive providentiam individuorum hic inferius existentium, adducens pro ratione quia hoc non est conveniens divinae bonitati. — Ulterius wandered negans trinitatem in Deo esse, dicens in dicto xn quod aliqui putaverunt trinitatem in Deo esse, et voluerunt evadere per hoc et dicere quod sunt very et unus Deus, and cannot escape, quia quum substantia fuerit numerata, congregatum erit unum per unam intentionnem additam, propter quod secundum ipsum si Deus esset trinus et unus sequeretur quod esset compositus, quod est inconveniens. — Ulterius erravit dicens Deum non cognoscere particularia, quia sunt infinita, ut patet in commento suo super illo capitulo, Sententia Patrum, etc. — Ulterius erravit quia negavit omnia quae hic inferius aguntur reduced in divinam sollicitudinem, sive in divinam providentiam, sed secundum ipsum aliqua originated ex necessitate materiœ absque ordine talis providentiam, quod est contra sanctos, quia nichil hic agitur quod penitus effugiat hune ordinem, quia omnia quse hic aspicimus vel divina effîcit providentia, vel permittit. ■ — Ulterius erravit quia posuit unum intellectum numero in omnibus hominibus, ut ex tertio de Anima. — Ulterius quia ex hoc sequebatur intellectum non esse formam corporis. Imo dixit in eodem tertio quod aequivoce dicebatur actus de intellectu et aliis fornis, propter quod cogebatur [dicere] quod homo non poneretur in specie per animam intellectivam sed per sensitivam. - — - Ulterius ex hoc fundamento posuit quod ex anima intellectiva et corpore non constitutebatur aliquod tertium, and quod non fiebat plus unum ex tali anima et corpore quam ex motore cœli et ccelo.

Capitulum quintum in quo summatim, etc. Omnes autem errores commentatoris, prœter errores philosophi sunt hii: — Quod nulla lex est vera, licet possit esse used ; — quod angelus nichil potest movere, nisi celeste immediate corpus; — quod angelus est actio pura; — quod in nulla factione, tota ratio facti est potentia facientis; — quod a nullo agente possint simul progredi immediate diversa; — quod Deus non habet providentiam aliquorum particularium; — quod in Deo non est trinitas; — quod Deus non cognoscit singularia; — quod aliqua comes from a necessitate materiœ, absque ordine divinae providentiœ; — quod anima intellectiva non multiplicatur multiplicatione corporum, sed est una number; - — quod homo ponitur in specîe per animam sensitive; — quod non sit plus unum ex anima intellectiva et corpore.

III.

EXPOSITION OF THE AVERROISTIC DOCTRINE OF THE INTELLECT, BY BENVENUTO D'iMOLA (ITALIAN TRANSLATION).

(According to the ms. of the Bibî. nat. Suppl. fr. 4146, former n° 70022,

f. 272 v°.)

E per chognicione di questo errore prima ci chon-Come and see Averoys say the nature of the intellect is will be separated from the life, and it will be irradiated so lanima del huomo, if idle the lucie del sole radiates sopra il perspichuo. E di quella irradiatione dicieva le forme intelligible enters nellanima, if unemployed of Lucia the sole is going to be something visible in your view. And this is how you can multiply your intelligence if you are unemployed if the lucie del silk is moltiplicha, sechondo chôme sono le thing illuminates sopre the quale vae. E chussi le ditte thing illuminates sotratte, non rimane seno uno solo nome of the sole, chussi manchando glihuomini, dicieva uno intellect perpetuo incorruptibile essere lassato da gli huomini. This is the worst error in the way it is biased Alberto Magno in suo libro: De anima. And then seseguirebbe che in number non fusse se non una sola anima vegietativa in tutti, and che non fusse per numero se non a single sensor. And therefore sarrebbe one sola digiestione and one acrement, and one vedere, and one memoria, the quality thing is too absurd and degna of ongni derisione. And we see what the virtù and the sapientia and the beatitudine alora comes to a state of performancetione, when the virtù organicha and the member chomincia ad indeboîirsi, quando si vene a vechiezza.

E qui per nostra intelligientia dobiamo sapere che lo intellecto possibile è atto e nato a ricievere all the thing intelligibille, chôme la tavola rasa è atta a ricievere la pentura. And it’s important to have the intelligent specie al quality if move the intelligent thing by the lucie of the intelletto che fa unemployed i cholori per la lucie del sole si move in insight, an active intellect and insight possible intellect, and the active intellect illuminates the possibile sibile horn fa il lume diafano. And it is possible, and chussi tu vedi che lo è due intellect, cio è il posibile e lo agente. And this is one thing, unemployed is the thing chomposite, ma in operatione sono divisi e diversi. And in questi due lanima è perfetta substantia, the quality semper sta inchorupta. E qui l’intellectellet possibille ex lumine agentis doventa spechulativo.

IV.

Fragment of the XXXIII lesson by Frédéric Pendasio

ON THE TREATISE on the Soul.

(Based on manuscript d264 from the Library of the University of Padua.)

In sex parts divisa est digressio commenti quinti. In prima, posita differentia inter intellectum possibilem et primam materiam, Averroes docuit, quibus rationibus possimus ostendere intellectum non esse corpus aut virtutem in corpore, ex sententia Aristotelis, cujus ejusdem sentia? dixit Fuisse Themistium et Theopbrastum, and ostendit quomodo isti evaserint a quadam dubitatione, quae erat, quomodo intellecta speculativa sint nova existent possibili, and aeterno agent. In second part, proposuit dubitationes ad versus determinationem factam. In tertia, versatus est circa opinionem Alexandri, Abubadear and Avempace. In quarta, solvit dubitationes propositas. Very autem erant prœcipuae. Firstly, if possible intellectus aeternus est, quomodo intellectus speculativus new? Solvit, intellectum speculativum, quantum sit ratione possibilis, œternum esse; sed ratione phantasmatum dicit ipsum esse generabilem et corruptibilem. Attack hucusque pervenimus. Succedit secunda dubitatio principalis, quam tractât et dissolvit, quae erat postrema perfectio intellectus, id est actus secundus opérations intellectus, quae operatio est ipsa intellectio. Intellectio igitur is numerata ad numerum singularium hominum, id est unusquisque habet suam propriam operationem; unusquisque nostrum, quae intelligit, ea intellegal sua propria operatione. If ergo operatio is numbered rata, ergo etiam prima perfectio, ergo virtus operans intelligens erit numerata, ita ut unusquisque habeat suum proprium intellectum; quod si erit (dicebat Averroes), intellectus erit materialis: quomodo ergo servabimus unitatem intellectus cura pluritate intelligibilium? And quia haec dubitalio postulate examination illius difficultatis, an intellectus possibilis sit unus in omnibus nec ne, idcirco Averroes tractat bench dubitationem, and ponit rationem ex utraque parte. Primum ostendit intellectum necessario esse unicum in omnibus bominibus, quae fut ejus sentia. And affert hanc rationem. If intellectual (loquitur de possibili) esset numeratus ad numerum individuoi'um, esset (inquired Averroes) ah quod hoc, id est aliquod particulare, determinatum, corpus 9 aut virtus in cor pore, and tune subdit: Si hoc esset, esset quid in tel ctum potentia: nam materialia ex Aristotele in hoc m0 [hbro], 16°textu, dicuntur intellecta potentia: esset ergo potentia intelligible; if potentia intelligible, ergo, inquit Averroes, esset subjectum movens intellectum\ sensus etiam esset res natura movens intellectum, which materialia is not objecta intellectus; esset ergo objectum intellectus movens intellectum, si esset objectum movens; ergo non esset recipiens, quia, worried Averroes, nihil recipit se ipsum, idem non potest esse recipiens et receptum. Si ergo esset res recipienda, non esset recipiens, and tamen intellectus is recipiens. Ista is deduced tio Averrois pro unitate intellectus.

Sciatis secundum veritatem, simpliciter loquendo, secundum principia verae philosophiae, secundum Aristotelem and Alexandrum, intellectum esse plurificatum, unumquemque habere suum proprium intellectum (Averroes non habuitmeum, nec ego suum), quum intellectus sit potentia anima? , what is vera forma will constitute our in vera specie, et propterea numerata et plurificata ad numerum uniuscuunto nostrum. Fuit quidem differentia inter veritatem, vera principia philosophiae, and Alexandrum et Aristotelem ex altera parte, quia lapsi sunt, non cognoscentes hanc naturam communicatam corpori a Deo creatam: sed conveniunt in hoc, ut existiment intellectum esse plurificatum, et particularem our soul formed. Propterea ratio solvur easy, and secundum principia philosophiae, et secundum doctrinam Alexandria. Primum secundum principia verse philosophiae, solvite rationem Averrois hoc modo. Quum says: If esset plurificatus, esset aliquid hoc; if per aliquid hoc intelligence aliquid appropriatum huic et non illi, ut sit meus et non tuus: consequently conceded, and is verissima. At si intelligat, quod sit plurificatus in isto sensu ut sit virtus dependens a materia, negate consequentiam. Non necessarium est, quamvis sit plurificatus, ut depends on the material. Oh! dicetis, pluralitas numerrealis is material ratio. Respondeo, hoc esse in duplici sensu: vel quia forma ista sit constituta, ut sit forma determinati corporis, habens habitudinem ad hoc, et in hoc sensu potest dici actus hujus corporis: non propterea dependet ab illo. Calcea efficitur a sutore, ut aptature pedi, non tamen dependet a pede. Sic intellectus est formed a Deo constituta, utaptur corpori, non tamen dependens ab hoc corpore. Ergo si per materiale intelligentgat ut coaptetur, concedede consequentiam; at so intelligent gat, quod sit materiale ut dependeat, negate consequentiam. Quum subdit: Ergo esset quid potentia intelligible, respondete cum D. Thoma prima parte Summae, qusestione 87a, articulo primo: Ista res est potentia intelligible, nam intelligit se intelligendo alia. Please note, quod dicitur potentia intelligibile, non quod sit primarium objectum, in quod primo potentia respicit. East objectum intelligibile secundario and reflex, and intelligible gendo alia intelligit se. And hoc modo dici potest potentia intelligible. Quum subdit: Ergo esset movens, responsible dete: esset objectum moves non primario, in quod potentia per se primary respiciat, sed secundario et reflex:

in qao sensu vix possumus dicere, ut sit movens. Ergo idem reciperet se, consequentia pauci valoris. And what inconveniens est hoc, quod idem recipiat se? Jam hoc ostendi, praesertim in iis, quae potentia secundario respicit. Oculus est figuratus, habet conjunctionem realem cum figura, non potest ergo spiritualiter recipere figuram. Consequentia nullius valoris. Quare non tollitur, quin possit recipere se spiritualite. Hoc alias declaravi. Et hoc sit dictum secundum principia verae philosophiae. Secundum Alexandrum etiam idem dicetis, hoc excepto, quod ipse concessit intellectum esse materialem, depending on dentem a materia, et in hoc lapsus est. Ergo ratio haec not concluded illam unitatem. Relinquitur ergo quod sit plurificatus. Addit de inde Averroes haec verba, quse volo your intelligent recte. Says: “And etiam si concesserimus ipsam recipere se ipsam, contingeret ut reciperet se ut divided. » Quia deduxerat ad hoc inconveniens quod reciperet se, et dicebat hoc absurdum esse, videbatque posse aliquem non habere hoc pro absurdo, propter eam fiduciariam reprobationem inquit: si concedamus quod recipiat se, tamen recipiet se ut divided. Multi averroistae interpretantur ut divisa, id est particulariter, et esset idem (dicunt) cum virtute sensus, quia etiam sensus recipit se, sed particulariter. Hoc modo deducta consequentia nullius valoris est, et puto Averroem hoc non volisse. Intellectus recipit particulariter, sensus recipit particulariter, ergo intellectus sensus. Syllogismus in secunda figura ex puris affîrmativis, et non convertibilibus. Dicam differentiam esse, quia intellectus cognoscit substantiam, sensus solum accidentia. Nec habeatis pro inconvenienti, quod intellectus cognoscat singularia, quod ostendam in proprio quaesito. Itaque consequentia nulla East. And credo Averroem hoc non voluisse.

V.

Preamble to Cremonevi's lecture on the treatise on the Soul.
(Based on the Saint-Marc manuscript, class VI, no. 190)

Explanatory books Aristotelis de Anima, quamvis iîîis auditoribus eos exponamus, quos a rectae veritatis tramoth, quemaperitchristiana religio, deviaturos nec timendum est, nec potest credi, ob sanctas et religiosas institutiones in quibus vivunt, tamen ob nostrum legendi munus, non debemus sine prœfatione hujusmodi contemplationem aggregated. Estote igitur admoniti nos in hac pertractione vobis non dicturos quid sentiendum sit de anima humana, illud enim sanctius me, et vere prœscriptum est in Sancta Romana Ecclesia, sed solum dictumm quod dixerit Aristoteles. Per sapientiam enim certe insipientiam assequeremur, if magis Aristoteli quam sanctis viris credere vellemus. Aristoteles enim unus est homo, and says Scriptura: Omnis homo mendax, Deus veritas; quare veritatem ex Deo ipso et ex sanctis hominibus, which ex Deo locuti sunt, accipere debemus, atque illam semper et constanter anteponere omnibus aliorum sentiis, quamvis viri qui illas protulerint sint apud mundum in existence. Rationes omnes quibus Aristoteles de anima loquens videtur esse veritati contrarius, solvunt prœcipue theologi, ex quibus S. Thomas and alii ipso recentiores; quare quotiescumque continget ut aliquid dicatur minus consonum veritati, habebitis apud istos quid sit respondendum, et ego illud opportune meinorabo, quandoquidem in his libris hanc sum expositionem scripturus, ut nihil dissimulem eorum quae ab Aristotele dicuntur, et dictorum fundamenta, prout ex ingenio potero, aperiam; whenocumque tamen aliquid accident, quod a veritate christiana sit remotum, illud admonebo, et quomodo allatafundamenta sint removenda, declarabo. Scitote tamen quod non sunt multa in quibus Aristoteles dissented from the truth, et il non sunt ita demonstrata, ut non possint haberi demonstrationum resolufiones. Hic igitur est modus nostrae expositionis, quam non aliter facere debemus ex sacrorum canonum decree.

VI.

Letter from the Inquisitor of Padua to Cremonini, and Cremonini's response.

(From the Moncton-Cassin Library, no. 483.) Letlera delP inquisitor di Padova al Sor Cremonino.

La Santità di NS mi ha ordinato ch' io faccia safather has VS che nella sua Apologia non solo non ha somissing the correction of the 1st book registered in the Disputatio of Cœ/o, secondo la dispositione del concilio Lateranense, ricogliendo the region of Aristotile, confutandolo, e manifestamente difendendo la Sede Catholica, ma d'avantaggio ha di owner senso inventato certi modi di dichiarationi and distinction of content assertions ofno censorship, horn si puo vedere slab osservazioni che gli ho fatto turns out. Per tanto VS correga per se this is the first book, secondly it is prescribed by the council Lateranense; and this is what you owe and what you don't Theology and d'altri, VS Io deve fare cosi per obligo di consciousness, essendo what a christian and catholic philosophoîico, che dice diessere, horn per stimolo di riputatione, volendo esser tenuto dal philosopho christiano e non ethnic. E di più, VS levi dall' Apologia e riveochi what modi to apply and what to distinguish between owners mente ha rese per dichiaratione delie propositioni che furono notate e censorate nel 1° libro, perche non sodisfanno all'ordine che li fu dato, ne si devono perse stesse tolerate. However, it is absolutely necessary for what you have to do misread the literature of the book that may cause it, VS correct the 1st book, secondly it prescribes the computer in conformity with the Lateranense council, and levi and rivers dal II0 gli errori ed assertioni degni di censorship V, S. has written by the owner senso, insieme con quii modi che ha temiti in dichiarare la sua intenzione in debt cose; altrimenti mi scrivono da Roma che si voir alla proihizione di detti libri; ne in questo negotio si pretende altro che l'onor diDio elasalute untie anime. In Otherwise, if you consider YS for repurchase in what concerns the federation must be esser chiara and manifesta, e non involuta ne ambigua, ed altri uomini di valore hanno esposto Aristotile in questaUniversità di Padova, with all that tenesse the mortal anima, proven non di meno insieme Aristotile essersi ingannato intorno a cio> and in lumine naturaîi, and egregiamente confutarono le sue ragioni, in principiis philosophise, and tra gli altri il PenSo at our times, we have molta dottrina and pietà. Che è as much as I get farli stewarde in scripture, other The reason you have to wait a long time in your proposal. VS someone I responded in writing separately as far as I write it, it is not possible to write it down Roma pervenerdi prossimo futuro. Dio kept it. — =

— Dal St0 Uffizio di Padova, il 3 luglio 1619,

Risposta.

Ho visla la lettera che mi scrive V. Paternità, neîîa* quale trovo due cose: una è l’avisarmi, incitarmi e persuadermi a procurar di dar soddisfazione garlic ' osservazioni Come novamente into my book. The ring of: bon affetto, e credo che ella sappia ch'io Y altra volta,.

secondo l'ordine de Sua Santità, fut prontissimo, e deve credere che ancor ora sono il medesimo ad ogni conveniente richiesta. L'altra cosa è quello che mi propone doversi fare; del che di passo in passo le diro quello ch'io possa fare. Vedero poi Tosservazioni piu tosto ch'io possa, essendo houra a poco risentito, si che non posso attenbehind a studio, and faro with VP per adempimento di quanto occorrerà.

As long as you put it manually in the book, it is not possible to do so assolutamente, perche allora che si tratto, fu concludeso di ordine di Nostro Signore che si facesse con F occasione delFApologia corne s’è fatto; e cio fu saputo in Senato, e si tien per certo? if you do not have authority to say mano nel libro.

What I can do is this: the last part che daro fuori De cœli efficientia, havere riguardo ad no matter how you get there, and how much you agree to do it know which philosopho cattolico and christiano che dico di essere, et che so che VP sa chi io sono, che who I have never seen before Fesser mio, and I don't have to stare to Dio his quality relationship. How much did I modify the application? dice, credo questi sarno a parte notati nell 'osservazioni, vedero and saro con lei. Vedremo also inserts it Concilio Lateranense, e cosi farà quello che occorrerà. My time to change it is my mode of saying, no so horn poter io promise to transform me stesso. Chi ha un modo, chi uno altro. No, you cannot return it the espositioni of Aristotile, poichè the intendo cosi, and his page to say when the intention, and nol facendo, sarei obligato alla restitution delia mercede. Cosi no voglio retrattare considerationi havute circa the interprettazione ch'abiate fatte délie lor esplicazioni, circa Y onor mio, Your interest Délia Cattedra, and per tanto del Principe. My life is rimedio; ci sia chi scriva il contrario; io tacero, e non will procure di respondere altro. Cosi al Suessano fu fatto write the book De Immortalitate, contra il Pomponazzo.

Quanto wing cose dell' anima, ora non è tempo; whendo faro he comes, mi will carry da good cattolico, and no inferiore di pietà christiana ad alcun altro philosopho.

To facilitate the reading of this work, it was deemed necessary to bring together at a glance the chronological series of the main Arab philosophers, with the corresponding Latin names that gave them the Middle Ages.

Around 870. Death of A Ikindi.

932. Death of Abu Bakr Muhammad ibn Zaqaria al-Razi (Rhazes).

950. Death of Alfarabi.

989. Birth of Ibn-Sina [Avicenna], 1037. Death of Ibn-Sma.

1038. Birth of Gazali [Algazel].

1070. Death of Solomon ben-Gabirol (Avicebron).
Around 1090. Birth of Ibn-Bâdja {Avempace).

1111. Death of Gazali.
Around 1120. Birth of Ibn Rushd (Averroes).

1133. Birth of Moses Maimonides.

1138. Death of Ibn-Bâdja.

1 162. Death of Abou-Merwan Ibn-Zohr (Acenzoar).

1183. Death of Ibn-Tofaïl (Abubacer).

1,197. Death of Ibn-Beythar and Abd-el-Mélik Ibn-Zohr.

1198. Death of Ibn Rushd.

1200. Death of Abou-Bekr Ibn-Zohr.

1204 Death of Maimonides.

1209. Death of Fakhr-eddin Ibn-al-Khatib Razi.

ALPHABETICAL TABLE

Abd-el-Moumen (the emir), 12.

Abd-el-Wahid el-Marrekoschi, historian, speaks of Ibn-Roshd, 8.

Abelard refutes the unity of souls, 177.

Aboulwalid Mohammed Ibn-Roschd, grandfather of Ibn-Roshd, 10 s.

Abraham de Balmès, 302.

Abraham Bibago, 156.

Abubaccr, see Ibn-Tofail.

Achillini, 287 s.

Adam du Marais, 209.

Ahron ben-Elia, 152 s.

Albert the Great, 183 s., 214 S.

Alberti (Louis), 322.

Alexander of Aphrodisias, 99, 103 s., 281 ss.

Alexandre Déliâtes, 178, 208.

Alexandrians, 281 s.

Alfarabi, 51, 52, 71, 83, 113.

A Hindi, 69, 71.

Almansour (the Hajib), persecutes the philosophers, 4th century, 28.

Almansour (Iakoub), 15 SS.

Alpetrangi, 163, 164.

Alphonse X, did he have translated Averroes? 170.

Amaury de Bène, 174 SS.

Ambrogio Leone, 218.

Anaxagoras, Aristotle borrows from him his theory of the intellect, 96.

André, secretary to Michel Scot, 165.

Ansari (El-), biographer of Ibn-Roschd, 7, 8, 128, 129.

Antichrist, associated with Averroes, 235, 240.

Armengaud, son of Biaise, 172.

Arnauld de Bresse, 227.
Arnaud de Villeneuve, 227, 235.
Augustine (Saint) raises the question of the unity of souls, 101.
Avempace, see Ibn-Bàdja.
Avenzoar, see Ibn-Zohr.
Avicébron, see. Solomon ben-Gabirol.
Avicenna, see Ibn-Sina.

B

Bagolini (JB), 301 ss.
Bajazet II, Averroist, 31.
Barbaro (Ermolao), 314 s.
Barozzi (Pierre), 280, 292.
Bazilieri (Tiberius), 279.
Bembo, 289, 298, 308.
Benvenuto d'imola, 199 s., 238, Append. III.
Bérigard, 334 s.
Bernard de Trilia, 198.
Bernard of Verdun, 172.
Betù (Claude), 279.
Biel (Gabriel), 253.
Bonnet (Nicolas), 253.
Bouchermefort (Adam), 275.
Brasavola (Antoine \ 324 s.
Bruyerin-Champier{3. B.), 305, 309*
Buffalo, 238, 241 s.
Burana (Jean-François), 303.
Buridan, 253.
Burleigh (Walter), 253.

Cajetan (Thomas de Vio), 279.
Calaber (Magister), 322 s.
Casaubon, what he says about a manual Arabic script of Averroes, 60 s.

Calonym or Calo, 149 ff., 171,

303 s.
Campo Santo of Pisa (Averrès au), 239.

Cardan, 235, 333 s.
Cecco d'Ascoli, 259 s.
These alpine, 332.
Christopher Columbus, quotes Averroes, 251.

Coel'tus Rhodigus, 218.
Colliget, 12, 57, 171 s.
Contarini (Gaspard), 290.
Cremonini, 255, 257, 325 ff., App.

V, VI.

Dante, 198 ff., 240, 241.
David of Dinant, 174 ss.
David Kimchi, 145.
Destruction of Destruction, 49.
Dominique Gondisalvi, 159.
Duns Scot, 211 s., 237.
Duplessis-Mornaj, 341, 344.
Durand de Saint-Pourcain. 198.

Gaetano de Tiene, 276 ss.

Galen (commentary by Ibn Rushd) on), 58 s.

Gazali, 43.49, 56, 73 f., 133 f.

Gerard of Cremona, 159, 163.

Gerard of Siena, 203.

Géraudd'Abbeville, 217, 222.

Gerson, 237 s.

Gilbert T. (English), 171.

Gilles de Dessines, 197, 214.

Giles of Rome, 20, 21, 172, 200 ss., 231, 233 s., Appendix II.

Gode/king of the Fountains, 220.

Gozzoli (Benozzo), painting depicting Sentant Averroès, 247 ff.

Gregory of Rimini, 269.

Guido Cavalcanti, 227 s.

William of Auvergne, 144, 179
ss., 209, 213.

Guillaume de Lamarre, 211.

Guillaume de Saint-Amour, 216,
221, 247 s.

William of Tocco, 188s., 215s., 249.

Ekhart (Master), 212, 213.
Elie delMedigo, 155, 304.
Epicureans, 123, 227 ff.
Erasmus, 218.
Etienne de Provins, 162, s.

Fakhr-eddin Ibn-al-Khatib Razi, his reports avedbn-Roschd, 30 s.

Fava (Nicolas), 275.

Ferrara (school of), 324 s.

Ferrari (Jérôme), 269.

Franciscan (school), 207 s.

Frederick II, 148, 164 f., 227 f., 228
ss., 235.

Brothers of Sincerity, 23, 79.

Gaddi (Taddeo), fresco representing as in Averroes, 244 ff.

Hakem 11, founded Arabic studies-Spanish, 2 s.

Hashishmen, their philosophical character sopbique, 135 s.

Hasdai ben-Schaphrout, founder Jewish studies in Spain, 139.

Henry of Ghent, 198.

Herbelot (d'), errors concerning Averroes, 36 s.

Herculeans, Ibn-Roshd's blunder, 38.

Hermann V Allemand, 166 ff., 211.

Hervé Nédellec, 198, 252.

Hibernian (monopsychic behavior in the), 102.

Hohenstaufen, sons of Averroes at their court, 21,231.— Their influence, 228 ss.

Huet, saw an Arabic manuscript of Averroes, 60s.

Humbert de Prulli, 250.

Ibn-el-Abbar, biographer, 8.
Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, biographer of Ibn-Roschd, 7,8, 128.
Ibn-Arabi, 12, 20, 21.
lbn-Bddja, 11, 24, 50, 72, 74 f., 129, 140, 161.
Ibn-Sina, 33, 43, 52, 57, 72 f., 83.
Ibn-Tofaïl, 11, 12 ff., 24, 43, 59, 75, 161, 180.
Ibn-Zofir (family of), 11th century, 21, 22, 25 ss.
Acquired intellectual capacity, 108, 110.
Material intellectual, 108.

Iousouf (the emir), 12 s.
Isaac A bravanel, 156.
Ittisâl, see Union.

J

Jacob ben-Abba-Mari, son of R. Simhis Antoli, 148.
Jacob ben-Machir, 149.
Jacopo della Lana, 199.
Jacques de Forli, 275, 298.
John of Baconthorp, 252 f., 335.
Jean de Jandun, 155, 269 ff., 278, 325, 326.
Jean Philopon, 83, 100.
Jean de la Rochelle, 208.
Jean Wessel de Gansfort, 254.
Jedaïa Penini, 145.
Joseph Albo, 156.
Joseph ben-Caspi, 145, 151.
Joseph ben-Juda, 140, 142 ff.
Joseph ben-Schem-Toby 154.
Judah ben-Jacob, 152.
Judah Hallevi, 1%9.
Judah ben-Moseh ben-Daniel, 1 52.

K

Kaldm, 79 ss.

Karaites (Averroism among the), 1 53 s.

Lateran Council, condemns Averroism, 290 ff.

Lebeuf (the abbot), 174.

Leo V Africanus, biographer of Ibn-Roschd, 7, 8, 9, 19,21, 128 f.
Leo X, 283 s., 289, 291 s.
Leon Hebrew, 156.
Leonicus Thomœus, 307.
Levi ben-Gerson, 152.
Lex, meaning of this expression in the Averroist school, 286.
Liceto (Fortunio), 329.

Louis XI recommends Averroes

251.
Eloquent, meaning of this expression in the translations of Averroes, 80, 131, 234.

M

Macarius Scotus, 101 s.

Machiavelli, 235, 285.

Muhammad, his role in painting of the Middle Ages, 240, 241.

Mamoun (the caliph) founded the studies

Greeks among Muslims, 4,

68 s.
Manfred, 166 s.
Mantino (Jacob), 392.
Marcanuova (Jean de), 278.
Marsigli (Luigi), 267 s.
Marsilio Ficino, 282, 311.
Marsilius of Inghen, 253.
Marsilius of Padua, 207, 269 s.
Marta(JA),Z90.
Mauritius Hispanus, 176.
Maynus (Magister), 172 s.
Memmi (Simone), painter, 244 s.
Michel Haccohen, 155.
Michel S cot, 162 ss., 230.
Moattil, 31,77, 142.
Moawia (the caliph), opinion a'ibn-

Roschd on this character, 127.
Moses Maimonides, 12, 31, 139 ff.
Moses of Narbonne, 152, 153.
Moses Palkeira, 154 s.
Moses of Rieti, 155.
Moses ben Solomon, from Toulon, 151.
Molino (Laurent), 279.
Montecatino (Antoine), 324.

Montpellier (Averroes in the school) of), 172 s.

Mosé Almosnino, 156.
Motecallemûi, 80 s., 84, 86, 124,

125, 129 s., 141.

N

Naudé (Gabriel), 329, 334, 341.
Navagero (Bernard), 218.
Nicolas de Damas, 52, 165 S.
Nicolas Eymeric, 203.
Niphus (Augustine), 121, 280, 284,

289 s., 292 ss.
Nizolius, 313.

O

Oddo (Marc), 302.
Offredi (Apollinaire), 279.
Okkam, 212.

Orcagna (Andrea), fresco representing Sentant Averroès, 239 ff.

Palamedes (Julius), 300.

Patrizzi, 250 s., 312.

Paul de Pergola, 275.

Paul of Venice, 273 ss.

Pendasio (Frédéric), 321 s., Append IV.

Petrarch, 220, 237, 250, 260 ss.

Philosophers, meaning of this word among Arabs, 22, 28 s., 67 ss.

Piccolomini (Francis), 320 s.

Pico della Mirandola, 313 s,

Peter of Abano, 258 f., 269 f.

Pierre Juriol, 212,253.

Pierre d'Auvergne, 195.

Pierre de Mois, his mistake on Aver-Roes, 173.

Peter of Prussia, 214, 215.

Pierre de Tarentaise, 253.

Pierre des Vignes, 230, 235.

Piza (Vito), 284.

Plato (paraphrase of the Republic)
de), 122, 126 s.

Plotinus, his relations with the Arabs,

71.
Aristotle's Poetics, 35 s., 61, 167.
Pomponat, 235, 281 ff., 291 <s., 335 ss.

Porphyry, its importance for the Arab philosophy, 70.

Porta (Simon), 283 s.
Posius (Antoine), 300.
Possevin, 343 s.
Postel (Guillaume), 60 f., 235,338.

R

Ratramne, 101 s.

Raymond Lulle, 203 ff., 220, 224,

237, 249.
Raymond Martini, 172, 196 s.
Raymond, Archbishop of Toledo, 159.

Resurrection (opinion of Ibn Rushd)

on the), 122 ss.
Robert of Kilwardby, 208.

Robert of Lincoln, 167, 178, 209.
Roger Bacon, 162, 165, 166, 169 f., 208 ss.

Saadia, founder of Jewish studies in the East, 137, 139.
Sabionetta (Jerome), 279.
Saint Catherine of Pisa (painting of), 242 ss.
Saint Petronius of Bologna (frescoes of), 241 s.
Solomon ben-Aderelh, 145.
Solomon ben-Gabirol (Avicébron), 76, 139.
Solomon ben-Joseph ben-Job, 149.
Samuel ben-Judah ben-Meschullam, 151.
Santa Maria Novella (frescoes of), 238 ss., 244 ss.
Schem-Tob ben-Palkeira, 145.
Separated (substances), 114 s.
Siger of Brabant, 216 s.
Simon de Tournayi 221 s.
Simplicius, 100.
Sirmond (Antoine), 343.

Sufism, 71, 119 ff., Spinosa, 157, 235.

Taurel (Nicolas), 218.
Tempier (Etienne), 213 ff., 218 ff., 222.
Themistius, 83, 99 s.
Apocryphal Theology of Aristotle 70, 100 s.
Thomas (saint), 115, 116, 187 ff.,

215 s., 242 ss.
Tibbonides (family of), 147 ss.
Todros Todrosi, 151.
Tomitanus (Bernardin), 300.
Traini (Francesco), painter, painting representing Averroes, 242 ff.

Trlncavelli (Victor), 300.
Three Impostors, 232 s., 338.
Trombetta (Antoine), 279.

u

Vbaldini (the cardinal), 227 f., 230.
Union (theory of 1'), 111 ss.
Urbano (frà), of Bologna, 272s.

Vaniniy 235, 335 ss.
Vernias (Nicoletti), 273, 279 f.
Vimercati (François), 339.
Vitalis Dactilomelos, 304.
Vives (Louis), opponent of Averroès, 38, 312, 315 ss.

Zabarella, 319 ss.
Zacharias of Parma, 273.
Zagaglia (Jerome), 252.
Zendik, 27, 78 s., 123.
Zerachia ben-Isaac^ 149.
Zimara, 297 ss.

END.

FROM THE PRINTING WORKS OF CH. LÀHURE (CRAPELET HOUSE), [rue de Vaugirard,^, near the Odéon.

Deacidified using the Bookkeeper process^
Neutralizing agent: Magnesium Oxide Treatment Date: August 2004

Preservation Technology

A WORLD LEADER IN PAPER PRESERVATIC]

1 1 1 Thomson Park Drive Cranberry Township, PA 16066 (724)779-2111

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 012 862 739 A #

Full text of " Surmosesmendelsson Mirabeau "

See other formats

A Memorial to the Founder of the

G RRT,
NT BA trerafl Corporation
HAS

Business Administration Library
M, a: A4 PE
University of California
nd ra
Los Angeles

HAS

fi

– to ij TO TO ABEAU (HONORÉ GABRIEL RIQUETTI, Count of). On Moses Mendelssohn

the political reform of the Jews, and in particular on the revolution In favor in 1753 in Great Britain. London [Strasbourg], 17

Denunciation of corruption to the king and the assembly of notables. [S
L. 60.0

1787.

2 volume riuniti, shovel coeva decor. in gold. [ixviii], 130 pp.; viii, 150 pp.

original version. QUERARD VI, p. 159. Fürst, Bibliotheca judaica II, p. 380. SZAJKOWS Judaica, 1642. INED, 3191 bis, 3192: “Very skillfully, M. precedes this plea…”
The Jews' praise of the philosopher Moses Mendelssohn. What is generally criticized The fact that the Jews live solely from commerce is in no way attributable to them. The or Their corruption stems from European political mores that have condemned them to A morally unfavorable object. The only way to make them better and more useful citizens.

"Icur grants them the same civil rights as others."
Contemporary all-original edition. Qt ERARD VI, p. 155.
3. STOURM, p. 145.

COQUELIN – GUILLAUMIN

» ED Di L 4

T. Sm Vus Muni com d [Lxviti}, 120 Po
IL. Dénavafen de logotige |
G

Or R. vii, 150 M>
f
G 5
Um LL.
\

"
+

ON

MOSES
MENDELSSOHN,
ON THE

POLITICAL REFORM JEWS:

All in particular

On the attempted revolution in their favor in 1753 in Great Britain.

BY

THE COUNT OF MIRABEAU.

LONDON 1787 et written e in fa part really im=

weighty (the one dealing with the reform) (Jewish policy) a faithful analysis of the two German volumes qwa written by Mr. Dohm for the same subject. (a) His work being scarcely con-naked of some literary figures in France, (b) where the translation of the first volume, done in Ber-

(a) Ueber die bürgerliche Verbefferung der Juden; von Christian Wilh. Dohm. Mit Konigl.
Preuflifchein Privilegio. Berlin uhd Stettin bey Friederich Nicolai 1981.

(b) Mr. Briflot de Warville spoke about it in his diary, (month of October 1784) But Pintéa refant extract qwen gave this writer eftimable, according to the English translation, ne fuffifioit pas a mes vis.

flax, was not even spread, while the second one is revealed to us in a completely strange way-manages, I thought I was doing something useful by donating nant fur une question auf grande, auff Worthy of interest, the summary of research & principles of a man whose friendship does not I'm not exaggerating, the merit is truly rare & highly distinguished talent.

The Fuccinete history of the great revolution tion attempted in favor of the Jewish nation in England in the year 1753 seemed to me to belong all the more naturally to my plan, which due to a lack of materials Mr. Dohm Pa neglected. I owe the details to two Anglois whose tireless philanthropy would compete from one end of the globe to the other to the extirpation of enemy prejudices which ar-They lie and divide men. Their zeal
And their friendship paid off on this occasion.
a very generous tribute that he gave me almost made to be their translator: And I could always thus contributing at the expense of my love

Len ——————

suitable for the greatest advertising of books & useful ideas, duflent for the price of my studies devoted, & of my esteemed intentions tions, charitable libelliftes accuse me in.
core to give me for Author of what I only translated! (c)

a 2

(c) This accusation has just been made against me in a small sheet of paper that we print 'crazy'
the title of Correjpozdance literary fecrete, about the Coufiderutions fur Pordre üe Cincinnatus; & on this occasion it is all the more pleasing because my 'ingenious detractors are only doing my best this time Foolish echoes. I gave my book fur Cincinnati for limiting a pamñet Anglo-American. It is in my preface that I find the indication of the sheet of this Oedanus Burke, who, it is said, is claiming my ouvrage; & fi those who quote it today
If they had only seen it, they would have understood that they would hardly refuse to make them stop a large volume translated twice into English (in London & in America,) & that we will publish in German, for the translation of 16 pages in $. or 24 pages in 12.3 squares Oedanus Burke's invaluable pamphlet has been im.
Award-winning in both formats. At the refe, & so as not to appear more modest than I am fleeing,
I admit that if I wish to translate, I will not
I would never do anything but translate.

It was impossible to write a notice for Mendelsfohn fans pronounce Mr. Mendelsfohn's name.
Lavater, since his blessed greed for success,
engaged the Jewish philosopher in a difficult situation.
public foundation, where it is perfectly developed Loppé, the excellent character of the author of Phaedo. I was therefore able to free myself from to stage a man once again which I have spoken about more than my friends would have wanted, somewhat envious that I eufie dail-their to start again on the subject of boredomfes lectures & de tirigans débats.

However, it is necessary, since I am fleeing public-ment formed to retract (dp (mr INI.
Lavater in a country where his followers want-should frighten and subjugate all those who do not give him their reason, in {fe boasting the most powerful protections

Rs Ps ER n nn en

(d) Letter to Count Mirabeau on the subject of a pamphlet against Mr. Lavater; to Franc.
fort 1786. — This work also appeared in ailemand.

& spreading the universal opinion of their unrepeatable successes, it must be said that a certain-tain Energumène called Reichardt, musician of at least disputed merit, profane dish-pitiful storyteller, and viper of Whether in good or bad faith, has just published furwce perfonnage a brochure (e) that he deemed it appropriate to address me, and in which It seems to me that he forgot to place this dedication;

"Out of charity, make me ridiculous"

"to establish my reputation."

I will not have this charity, but the courses those most alienated from slander and intrigue still harboring a large number of schemers

at 3

eme

This) Schreiben an den Grafen von Mirabeau von Johann Friederich Reichardt, Konigl. Preulti{dear Capellmeifter — Lavatern hetrefend — in “ommiflion bey Benjamin Gottlob Hoffmanu in Hamburg und. bey Mazdorf in Berlin,

ER TR
PE

And of slanderers, I will point out here a menfunge that circulated in Berlin auflitot that one He knew my opinion about the great Lama from Zurich, and that Mr. Reichardt has just imprimer in part (f) with strong details aggravating and gratuitously slanderous.

Mr. Lavater's many admirers

the poverty of my language forces me to com-

(£) Eine Zürcher Dame MS die fch eben in Paris aufhielt, als der Graf Mirabeau nach Teutfchland ` reifen wollte, fchrieb über ihn einen fehr enthufaftifchen Brief an Lavater, und verlangte, dafs diefer ihn dem Herzuge von W. empfehlen follte. L. der eben im Begriffe war, dem Herzoge zu fchreiben, fchrieb die Schilderung von MS von Mirubenu in feinen Brief, “und i aubte diefen fo Empfohlen zu haben. MS der er diefes meldete, beftand aber ent. der Gr.M. Müfte auch einen Brief von L. in der Hand haben, wenn er ankivme. Dazu verftand fich L. nicht gerne, weil er den Mann gar nicht cannte, für den Herzog von W. aber zu viel Hochachtung hatte, um fo aufs geradewohl mit ignem Lobe zu empfehlen. Da man indels immer dringender darauf beftand , fo fchrieb L. auf einen Zettel: Frachtbrief fir dice: Grafen von Mirabeau, verfiegelte den und gab ihn hin. Diefen foll fich der Herr Graf haben verdolmetfchen laifen, und den Inhalt fehr übel aufgenommien haben, also in W. file fo unanfiændig über L. geoeuflert haben, dafs to take this name crazy, those of two fexes) accused me of not putting ex-They freely applied their idol, that after to have been in his temple several women born & accepted letters of recommendation for the Duke of Weimar.

of edle H. file genothiget gefehen laut zu fragen: ob der Wagen des Herrn Grafen noch nicht da wære.

There is not a single detail of this story that It is not an impudent lie. My letter fur M M. Lavater & Caglioltro was written long before Monsieur, & not Madame Schweizer sent me the one where Mr. Lavater modestly claimed to recommend me last to the Duke of Weimar. I had the honor to pay court to this Prince of Berlin & to the Magdeburg journals; I did not re-
I didn't put any letters; [he] never spoke to me about Mr. Lavater; he is too polite, too just, too fage to say a dishonest word; & I doubt that perfonne never tries to addreffer one like the one who made and will always make again to respect in him the quality of a man,

Do we want another example of truthfulness?
Mr. Reichardt! He repeated these words: “You "Tell me about the great wonders of Lavater"
"And give them to me as facts extracted from Hotringer's letter. This letter, of which Mr.
"Hottinger is already too repentant for that" 1st, please allow me to give him the
"The name she deserves, came from &c,

= ee

I will oppose this treacherous tale with three difficult points.
cults.

And here is the literal translation of the declaration-tion that Mr. Hottinger has just inferred in the Berlinifche Monatsfchrift, from December p, 895o

I cannot help but testify my pfurprife of this few friends of Mr. Lavater They say and print that I repent of a-
"See the written letter? Who told them, & What do they mean by that? I would like Let them explain themselves.

"I probably regret having written the "Issuance because of the noise she made, & of enemies whom she has killed; & every man "who did not like to be treated like that."

wicked and a liar, he would repent of nmei in my place (*) But this repentance
"neft point de la nature de celui que M. Lapvater & fes amis announce to the public, €?
if it could draw advantage from it, coitre ples verités que fai avances.

I urge you to reflect on the facts that "I have alleged that they are not my invention;
I have my guarantees, they provided them to me.
In short, even the details that have the most "Ofenfe Mr. Lavater. My guarantors have their "public for them, as well as Lavater /e, yen, EF their intail reputation as much as,

"The most beautiful girl in the world, Puiffe Pa."

G

Mr. Lavater had a copy printed at that time, small sheet in 8, (L. to D.) in which.
He said, “I would never have believed such a degree of possible malice; Author of the letter is A slanderer, and I don't want to repeat it.
Futer! German Universal Library XXVE
2. Pages 599 and following,

EE
I have never seen Mr. Lavater, I have never had

My life has nothing to do with him, I may be in no time had the honor of handing over letters to the Duke of Weimar.

In truth, a fuffe, (Mr. Schweizer) for whom I profess a tender esteem, knowing

"See. I'm glad Lavater will say that this"
"They make lies: I expected it there;
but I will never say neither ie Joufrir ai ga a „dife in Won name that ve Joy of meitdreams.

“Mr. Lavater defended himself; Mr.
"Gedeon Kralpfoże hurled insults at I, afflicted by his cronies; I wanted to deny to be silent because I only do this, I compromise niettre gite de difputer avec de par eilles ges,
"It can only be unfavorable to me that we rc."
This case is being reviewed after ten years of filibustering.
I go when some author quotes again this letter, as Mr.
Fie Comte de Mirabeau, who does not know
"The refutation, or rather, I don't find it" Inconclusive, is it my fault? Lavater pna only needs to have it reprinted, (although there are some „still has a very large number of excm-(plures in booksellers' shops) I She's not my opposite. But let's try to
"To add force and weight to this re.
"Refutation through vague anecdotes & con-nfound in my so-called repentance, that is vow I will never let him go unpunished

in Zurich,
Mr. J. Hotringer,

[=

my challenge to become friends with Mr. de Goethe, my sent a letter from Mr. Lava- to Berlin ter for the minister's servant. This letter I paid returned to Mr. Schweizer, in the aflu-ranting that I was not humble enough to

to believe that my name needed a recommendation Lavaterian mandate... that's the fact for the friends of truth who love to... see refuted in detail a lie that their
A good mind guessed. What account could I... moreover, they owe it to men who will not have Never any quality to ask of me,
And that I despise too finely to not
Not to be honored by their hatred?

In response, I therefore provide Mon-Reichardt's proud and comfortable gathering at courageous author of the apology for letters of the stamp that can be found in issue 34.
from Mr. Schlôzer's Journal (g), in order to ren ER

ns te ARS ao

(g) Erleuterung über die Lettres de Cachet in Frankreich; aus Aufirafien, im Jul. 1736.
(Schlôzers Staatsanzeigen, Heft 34.) the publisher double, if possible, the amount of mentionges, of calumnies, & of outrages of which these valiant athletes are declared the differences volunteer goal scorers for me. Because finally What more could I possibly want for my confidante?

personal ratio than being infected by a man who takes up his pen to demonstrate that the Zeitres de Cachet do not make proper-ment definées quaux beaux efspirits, qui slander the Kings or the governments €&S

make them ridiculous (h): (I had believed until now

This difference teaches us that it had already appeared in January 1781. in the Ephemerides of the human species (Mo. 10) with some remarks from the late Mr. If{elin.
You can judge from my extract how much lau-
The author took advantage of this criticism to review, increase @F correct fa diflertation, aïnf that we are told he has done it. I flee ve-utterly humiliated for a favor aufi efi-Mable that Mr. Schlôzer, of the inference of this infamous writing, made to fon infu fans doubt in the collection to which fes valtes connoif-French trends have given rise to popularity.

(h) Die Lettres de Cachet find eigentlich' nur für `` die fchônen Geïlter. for the muthwilligen Ge-Nies beftimmt, die in ihrer Laune den König and die Regierung Iæftern, verlæumden und wechfelsweile læcherlich machen &c. &c, (fn dome)

that one could only ridicule what (it was indeed): that the diffuse geniuses struck-fed up with this punishment, all filled with keysmence feroient fans intervention paternal state prisoners at least banned, put an straitjacket, to the galleys even unto death, then-that such is the wish of the law towards the calpiw-deniers of ordinary citizens, © qwelle must to be more fervent for those of the Kings towards the nations (Œ); that the Lettres de cachet make therefore gentle, and humane, as useful and false; that in truth one can do to them a well-founded reproach fur Ll'ixfufifawce de la pain that exalts @ rather encourages the heads that have failed, that she does not deter them from writing

libels against the government (&); that he

G) (Die muthwilligen Genies) da doch alle diefe.
Herren Autoren wenigflens an den Pranger geftellet würden, Ín der That ftchen in Frankreich der Pranger, ewige Verbannung, die Galceren, und felbft Todesftrafen, auf Allen Arten von Schriften, wodurch die Ehre, das Anfchen und der gute Leimund eines Bür-gers gekrænkt und gelæftert wordsen.

(k) “Der bündigfte Einwurf, ider gegen diefe

ESS

it would be more effective to have them decreed taken into custody by the courts (); but that he

We shouldn't cut down a beautiful tree that cost

So much hay to raise, €F which carries beautiful fruits, to be all the more [likely to destroy]

some caterpillars that are found there (m); that one must never forget that all the great crimes, all the scourges of the world are due to the freedom of the prefect, qwelle brought forth the Damiens, the Ravaillacs, the revolutions of Art von Strafe gemacht Werden kann, fellt except ihre Unzulænglichkeit, und dafs fie fekon „manchen wizzigen Kopf mehr aufgemuntert » als verhindert hat, kleine Handfchriften ge„gen die Religion zu verfertigen.” |

The author cites on this subject, for example, a foundation old friend Lenglet du Fresnoy (mein alter Freund); here is a liberal friend,

Q) How long does it take to die?

(m) fahren, die jetzo eine Lettre de Cachet unter die Hand des Konigs thut, wenn irgend ein decree of bodily deprivation, fie zu den Füffen des Parlements niedetlegte,

Einen mühfam erzogenen und die fchonften Frûchte tragenden Baum niederhauen, um ei-snow darauf bemerkte Raupen defto filerer zu yettilgen.

=
Holland, America, €j (happy affo-(cation of ideas?) Zes troubles de la fronde (n); that this incendiary freedom should not be endorsed (0) only by the Letters of Cachet, & qwainfi Pon must look at these orders tutéareas as one of the most refined benefits of the government (p).

Such is the admirable theory that deve-Loppe de libellifte, & pour laquelle, he said,
My dear compatriots, or even my brother, no Less facetious than enlightened (I translate faithfully-ment) € which notoriously only seeks the

has

(n) Das Liedchen, und Spottfchriften auf die be.
rufene Fronde angefponnen — dafs unüberlegte Declamations and Parliamentsglieder by Damien das Mordmefler in die Hand gegeben haben, — Dafs die Advertising and Prefs-Freyheit fehr wirkfam an deu heutigen Unruhen in Holland gearbeiter, —

(o) This is about my works on finance that the author met this happy expretlion. “Ht es der Regierung zu verargen, „wenn fie den Herrn Âutoren durch eine Letter de Cachet die fchreibeluftige Hand læhmc?

(p) “Es ergiebt fich, dafs die lettres de cachet barely wahre Wohlthat der Regierung find.

Indeed, they will owe him eternal gratitude.
(q); for finally, has he not demonstrated to me the pre-Mier, this friend of men and of his country a very important truth, attacked by errors Jurannées, clarified a matter of which jufqw'ici, he himself said, the single thought made one shudder all the children of liberty (r)?

And so these are the enemies that they send me.
The strong one! Ah! I bless his benevolence! Yes, May they abhor me, and curse me forever those who do not think that freedom is the first human right that wants to be governed by rules & not by caprices; that any arbitrary punishment is a crime against the law which is everything, & of which

(q) „Unfer aufklærungsluftiges Jahrhundert wird „inir oldeicht Dank wiffen, wenn ich ihm »It is said that it is possible to hear and hear things »Vorurtheile abzulegen: denn der heutige „Geift der Aufklærung lucht bekanntlich nichts vu ë pals Wahrheit.

(r) „ich habe mir vorgenommen, eine Materie zu „behandeln, davon der bloffe Gedanke, allen „Kindern der Freyheit Schaudern erwecket.

Kings only act as ministers; that is Crime borders on madness; for a master "Arbitrariness doesn't govern, he tears himself away from it." faculty, it facilitates my power to my ardor paflagère, at the will of an infant; he compromises safety for Patroce to please wait to that of others; that it is tyrannical & “This so-called justice is worthy of horror” puts the will of a man in place of the decision of the law, "which makes dependent on a »futprife or an error the furety of a ci- citizen; whose blows do all the more ; terrible things they do, hidden and secret; which "uc laiffe feñtir au malheureux que le trait , who pierces it, without him being able to see the hand . from which he departs; or which, separating him from Puni- "vcrs whole, & not condemning him to live that to die fans cefle, abandons him "Ignoring the weight of the chains, ignorant at the same time his accuser & his crime, far from the "freedom whose image is lauded for ja-

inais

, but veiled from her eyes, far from the law which , in the prison, or in exile must all. "days to answer the cry of the unfortunate who Hnioque(s).

mamam man Ay sement

(s) These vehement lines do not make me out to be yours; they make of the author of the sublime praise of Marc-Aurele, of this Thomas, soon delighted to our admiration, to our tenderness, naive Eternal honorer of letters & philosophy They were blessed by their virtues and talents. They have were read at the French Academy in a public confidence. They were printed in France is about tolerance, if this is not about the government function. Mr. de la Cretelle published some things no less energiques (aufi my accuser. ne l'épargne- t- (He doesn't). It's in a legal memorandum where the graces of the mind & the charms of the Flexibility rejuvenates a subject in appearance

Exhausted, this young writer, of great efpérance, has configured the same principles. If Pai said it less well, I said the same. things; and fie for having said them first, I must share the indignation that Messrs. Thomas & de la Cretelle inform the en- enemies of liberty, the noblest recompensation that I will never receive from my weaklings work. But why are we getting so worked up, Mr. Lin?

watch that always cowardly professed the defpotilme & fes maximes? In truth, Mr. Linguet spoke at length to public misfortunes of Mr. Linguet at the Baftille; but he never spoke of those that produce the letters of cachet; & all at tempted by liberty, of which Mr. Linguec was not

b

No, these are not opinions that he a man of the fens is free to adopt or to reject. There is nothing for all souls that the same reason, and universal morality of the peoples & sovereigns founded on the nature and the eternal order cannot to change.

They live, therefore, and without a doubt they will live.
forever in the hearts of all men killers, that is to say enlightened and courageous, these principles that I professed, that I defended-Always tell me, to whom I would dedicate my life.
Let those who accuse me of crime...
They abjure, I confess; I want neither of them neither reason, nor their innocence. That they me They tear each other apart, I accept their insults, they will my trophies; let them slander my life

whole, that will be my glory. 2

qq e G eaa

not the victim, never received anything but praise by Mr. Linguet. Ah! that it remains approximately Born of glory, this unique man between All of them! God forbid that we wanted them.
fes ueees

Let them respond to my book, fur les let.
very discreet in recounting my alleged privacy.

That to refute my writings they impute to me.- tent x7 violent abduction (t) of which I was not never cornered.

That they dispute that the lettres de cachet mox snatched from the executioner's sword (), when I have this sole obligation to them (though-Poton excepts that of the book of which I (I am honored) for not having prevented for three years and a half to pursue the trial which their fervor as a pretext & that I have won madly the day I was able to have him judged,

Let them say that my works are finances ruined the public sector, when They owe their existence solely to demand moderating figures of the public sphere, when I had the joy of writing the first

OF:

mar ma

(t) Der gewaltfamen Entführung (p. 143.)

(u) Dem Henkers fchwerdte encriflen (ibid.)

in France a reasonable theory about the Banks and the game of funds; when the facts demonstrate my theory every day & jufti-trust my predictions (x).

are, mt

(x) Would to God that the furies of speculation did not...
They didn't do a very good job of showcasing my writings! But to mention only St. Charles' bank, since that was the main criticism that one n'adrefle, {& nothing more just, since it is except for the main service I rendered to my country), we print at prefent even zz éubleuse RAIFONNED from its state of aûfuel which prepares me a great revenge. It was a naked exhibition America of the losses that the bank must make fur fes comptes pañlés, dont le réfultat in.
contestable is a possible decrease in ca-hospitals & no slap for a dividend; but as the bank will certainly give One policy at a time, evil can only be increased. Observations follow on the exclusive privilege of the piaftres that she cannot to preserve; for that of the trade of the Phi-Hppines &c. &c. Finally comes a table of the distribution of funds, from which it follows that St. Charles's bank had already been arrested in fa marche progreflive, qu'elle ne peut plus that retreating & that the situation offers a cruel & bizarre contrast with the boasts of My report, etc. I am wrong about this work does not demonstrate that everything in this building coloflal wett that charlatanisin, contradictions, ignorance, etc., etc. But if I have this fault, he
It should be easy to prove, and I hope that The Directors will kindly respond to the latest document which formally accuses them, otherwise, than by false insults, devoid of lens of Truth,

Ba

Let them say that I received heaps of money.
Qor (y) to write these books; #701 always,
entirely forever a stranger to the fpecu-even the most innocent players whose profession I hate, whose profits (z;; me who since I exist must All in the hay of friendship, fans have never I didn't even receive the King's Feast; I who nhonnore & me boasts indeed of having ruined a few fraudulent speculators to swindle from their infernal disappointments the crowd of ignorant and credulous citizens who ran fe plunger dans leurs lacs, ou plutôt d'a.

b 3

ARM Ge aa

(y) Undicherinnere mich der Zeiten, wo ein gedun.
gener Author von einigen ökonomifchen Schrif-ten die wichtigften Finanzoperationen hintetgængig gemacht hat,

(z) I have long since addressed this phrase to the most illustrious champion of speculators of which jaidu. craces a la vente cule X fans lettre To hide, to paralyze the pen. Eh com-It is a pleasure to take on such a challenge in this despicable peat, wasn't it better for me to my heart that the millions it moves are fi aifé de gagner solement par mon filençc®

[SEA

to see driven to the frenzy of speculation a blow mortal who sooner or later, and thanks to the efforts of more skilled men, but to whom jaurai at least ofé blaze the path, en guéri rai governments & nations.

Hey! How could I not be honored by this disgusting heap of accusations, of lies & insults, when their author reveals in at the same time the celerate absurdity of fes principles? How could I not exclaim, as I've already done it so many times: Woe to WHO HAS NEVER BEEN SLANDERED! ... Reunif-{So, O my noble enemies! Forge new tales, weave plots news; you can do it boldly, even fans will envelop you in anonymity, (which yet eft fage after having pronounced that I banish, the yoke & the hardships make the legal punishment for slanderers) because I de-I will deign to strike you, for an animal

Veiimeux always searches the hand that Pécrafe, pee m

and that my time deserves a nobler employment, but when you've lost your breath, Take a moment to reflect; why do you specifypitter all together {under my feet? This country where you want to harm me completely & will make me always a stranger; I am not delirious there, I am not de-Madam, I don't want anything from it; I didn't want it, I I never asked for anything there, nor did I ever do anything there that the time of those who will time; & the time It is an involuntary feeling; it belongs to whom She deserves it, whoever conquers it; she cannot no more escape me than an indelible contempt not to pursue you, fi Poubli ceffoit to be your azyle. — That's all for the info-slanderers...

I owe Mr. Briflot another reply.
Warville, with whom I am bound by friendship, & whose appreciates intentions & talent. Auf didn't I I was not moderately surprised, I Payoue, by to find a note at least very feverish contre moi dans son vigorous examen critique deg g

Fo natant im |

Travels of Mr. de Chatelux (a). I my reproach with more politeness than truth

ES

(a) "Browse and rebroadcast Voltaire, who more "than all the others, has legitimized this mania of to make the ridiculous appear reasonable, which has brought it about
"You will not find even the scaffolds there-" »you won't see a single in-depth argument against The Illuminati. Wordplay, epi-
"grams, here are the weapons."

"I say this with regret; it's still the weapon"
"that Count Mirabeau employs the more frequently, in a difference that he
"Just published against I celebrate Lavater"
"& his partisans, whom he calls fanatics, and against enlightenment in general.

"He claims he is in charge of a party"
"Illuminati who are trying to start a revolution,"
"to chain the confidences & the Souve-"Rains, to establish a spiritual depot. I may "nothing conclusive has been seen in this regard, nor
"in the facts alleged by this writer, nor in the letters of Doctor Lavater, which he "Copy.

He transcribed a letter from this man re"{pećtable, addressed to a Doctor, in the-
Mr. Lavater claims to have thrown his wife in the sympathetic state, in favor of three Doctors. Mr. Count de M. the plaintiff fur ce fonambulifme; but if he has raifou in Following this fact, I see five scoundrels here, the Doctor, his wife & the three doctors who "They attest to the facts. It must be admitted that for Those scoundrels, they chose their...
"Theater; madness! And what's there to gag-"
"To be in a state of madness? Isn't that what public places that charlatans dref.

"They break down their trestles."

-

fon, for having used epigranunes to main weapon against Mr. Lavater (b).

has --

I do not know Mr. Lavater. Pignore principles and dogmas. But if he has "a fecte, h this fete this nombreufe, this
"The fact proves that the doctrine has some "new reports which have drawn to him those who are attached to their chariot. Now ilek
"It is important for the public good to know"
"These reports. Perhaps they contain truths!" “Perhaps there were also mistakes? Who can decide?”
"The mysterious tone with which he cloaks himself is not spas une rafon pour dire contre lui,
"Pithagoras preached only through symbols"
many people still believe them to be necessary res today, not for the people, but for deceiving a clump of people who don't like
"that the people may be enlightened."

Once again, I do not know Mr.
"Lavater, but I saw Pai painted by everyone like “a virtuous and fragile writer. Now a “Would a man of that caliber have advanced a thousand "Errors, I refute it, but I don't tell him-" I wouldn't plunge a dagger into my heart. Qni can support the idea of having had a “A tear for virtue? That is not the intention” Mr. C. de M.# I'm very sorry about that. He His training was led by his aversion for the Scharlatans who live from creation
"public dignity, an aversion that I share with slui; but he should not confuse at "Less fans have seen it, fans have touched it,"
"To say thus, her soul called, she left, sll should not, I say, confuse ML with the Gobelet players of the spiritual world.

(b) It is worth noting that MB of W. who ma seen forty times in the two months I have paffes in Paris since I published my pamflet fur M, Lavater, ne ma funais parlé,

The Count of Airebeau claims, says Mr. Briflot de Warville, whom AL. Lavater ef at the head of a party of eccentrics who live to do a revolution, a chain of confidences € the Fouverains, to establish a defpotisine spiritual.

I ask Mr. Briflot of Warville, who must better than any other knowledge I didn't know Never a perfidious part to disseminate an accufation, I ask him to quote a single sentence where Jaye claimed that. I said that part the most enlightened woman in Germany believed in this a kind of conspiracy against reason & human freedom; that for me I do not I see that there are extravagances in the myftiquotes from Mr. Lavater; but extravagances dangerous, in that they cause the heads to fail too weak to bear the contradiction, they would lead by overthrow, right to intolerance. In truth, I do, I don't neither from this writing, nor from praising it, nor from The man who is the object of it only to laugh at it.

EE ——_———

I'm thinking, and I fear it much more today, but I didn't say anything more. Mr. Briflot de Warville, saw five scoundrels in Philoire of the disorganization of the JI's wife. Levater fi j'ai raifon en niant cejuit; the Doitezr, his wife € the three Doctors who Pont harnessed; for me who I would rather believe five scoundrels rounded up, (And don't they always look for each other?) than to an absurd fact; I, who know moreover a crowd of men seeing what does not exist not, & certifying false facts, fans of lying, I will only make one objection to the reason-The birth of Mr. Briflot of Warville. The Doctors instead of attesting to this fact (which It would be completely indifferent to me if the fact implies contradiction, or that Ma-'s good faith Lady Lavater was wrongly proven; eh!

Isn't it a little strange that Mr. Lavater does not provide any other witnesses to the wonders (Is he talking about his brother or his wife?)

The doctors, instead of attesting to this fact, Pont turned into a joke, & the good Zuricher is agreed himself since then, differing at least in his friends, whose eyes had been fascinated.

I don't know Mr. Lavater, he added.
MB de W. pignore fesprinciples & fes dogmas. . . 'it's precisely because of that, knowing my own, & not ignoring not that I never wrote about what I I hadn't studied with hay, Mr. Briflot de Warville should have begged me for goodnes & even important reasons for having published sixty pages for Mr. Lavater, which I could not possibly have expected at-a tiny bit of self-esteem, which I defis obviously, not to France where I I didn't need to be heard, because Mr. Lavater's follies have and there are no others.
will never have any influence; but at the sole Germany, where details were unnecessary because they make themselves known there to the point of exhaustion, and that it was solely a matter of making them read to men, or perhaps to one man,

poem
who refused to read especially in German,
the denunciation of Lavater's theories.

But fi AT. Lavater has a crack, continue MB de W., fi cette fete ef nombrenfe, This fact proves that the doctrine has some new reports that led him those who are tied to their chariot. Since the vilest of the Fakirs jufqwà St, Germain And to the Schröpfer family, I don't know a single skilled person juggler of whom one could not, by a raifonnein much the same way, deifying talents or juftiproud of the makers; & I do not know no more than a true apostle of great truths who

of his living being made affected: these two words The party, and truth, scream in terror at seeing themselves coupled.

"I saw," continued Mr. Briflot de Warville, AI. Lavater paints everywhere like a writer virtuous € Jenfible . . . I don't do that that this is a virtuous writer, who does not he never published anything but theological reveries or phyphonomic hymns; & I believe that this epithet of virtuous, must be reserved for more courageous works & more useful; but what I do is that Mr. Briflot de Warville should also be well German, of which he has not the slightest tintture, which the Englishman from whom he transmitted to us precious things, he would not be unaware that Mr. Lavater & his fafcinations make Pobsometimes a jet of terror, sometimes of Pindignation, sometimes pity, always contempt enlightened Germans; he would not be unaware that this leader of zealots has just as much & more than any other that preceded it in the career, views of orbits, or interrifying, or material, symptoms on the which MB of W. fe holds for certain himself- even when we play Pillumination, and that he does not We shouldn't hesitate to expose a scoundrel; (p. 54.) he would not be unaware that I have for In my opinion, the authority of all men Letters sent to Germany, fans in except one. That belongs to them, and that well than to them, this weft than to enlightened witnesses the havoc wrought in the German Courts of, the successes of the visionaries, that he appeared- it is up to him to decide the nature of the efforts he It is appropriate to oppose them, and I will offer to say to MB de W. that there is some lightness perhaps to be depreciated, to say the least, through vague doubts & places commoral compass, an act of courage & firmness which all honest, educated people, From the Rhine to the Danube, Mont was a lot degree.

A man of that caliber (of the caliber) Lavaterian) had he advanced a thousand errors, said, enim M. Briflot de Warville, loudly dissatisfied, moreover, with this general trend towards the donuceny which always makes accufer
I wrote energetically with violence, during my initiation.
had attacked a cutter with some vigor.
because all virtue is a crime for that who does not have it (p. 128); old woman of this i Even if he had put forward a thousand errors, I would reject him.

has

terois; but I would not drive his poignard at heart; who can fuck Pidée
To have brought a tear to virtue's eye? ...
I do not believe in the virtue of Mr. Pithagoras Lavater, and I don't believe I have either A dagger plunged into the heart: this exaggeration, or at the very least reprehensible when it is only a matter of self-love bleflé, eft d'tout plus injufte dans cette an opportunity for all those who demonstrated their opinion on Mr. Lavater, or on his
In my writings, I have been by far the most moderate.
I did not refute it because there were a thousand times; I wanted to show the shield d'Ubalde has a great perforation that we he believed in the charm, and gave him the neckrage, or the curiosity to read what might To disabuse him of this notion; for it is the day of a calamity.
public than that where Phomme destined to
"I don't want to govern men," he said.
DON'T READ ME.

A

A French letter printed in Frankfurt, and that an anonymous German, who appears animated by a more honest feeling than Mr.
Reichardt has just sent me another fur
Mr. Lavater will be the subject of another kind of difficulty, because the author of this writing accuses me of a factual error that I must to clarify or recognize.

se

Indeed, he makes me feel just by persuading me that I would publicly retract the error who would demonstrate to me, especially if she could offend any man,
even more so a public figure; or all man who writes is, or aspires to become such.
Independently of any principle of moderale, I never believed there was in the Life was human, was literary, another
It is a noble and prudent course to say I am wrong.
Lorsaw'on en eft perfuadé!

But far from finding that Mr. Pami Lavater refuted my letter, I find it hard to

c

Poe A AAC THE
aannamen ean

to persuade that he had read it. How indeed if he speaks about it other than through hearsay, he accuses me of having written that Mr. Lavater Was Jefuite? (p. 12), while about of these so-called Jewish liaisons, I I fled from these very words: I may gweres read in this regard that affiations € of the conjeđures; thus I said precisely the opposite of what I am being told, and which would have been nothing less than absurd. Certainly, when one has observed with some attention the writings and rites of Mr. Lavater, we do that he was very imbued with Catholic opinions.
Did I blame him, or did I not blame him, for recommending command to his flock the alchemical works dun Catholic theologian? (p. 10) Ce weft not at all the heart of the matter; it it is solely a matter of knowing about this affectation, at least peculiar on the part of a reformed theologian, should not have aggravated in Germany the suspicion of fes liaifons jefuitiques, based on so many other facts; & what-

create rhyme |

that he might be so proud, I had been eager for to make Mr. Lavater odious or ridiculous, by Protestant country, I would not become fervent in this regard of expressions so reserved (c). But

C 2

ms, mena mure

(c) Do Mr. Lavater's friends want, for example, example that I imprint a comment from fon ode entitled:

Sentiirieits

Qua proteflant

in a Catholic church, and of which I will translate literally a few stanzas, to give an idea of logic, of the feelings of to-lérânce, in a poetic manner & of Pimabrilliant gination of this light of the century.

Feelings of a Protestant in a Catholic Church-lique.

I.

He doesn't know you
O Jesus Christ! who dishonors Even your shadow! I honor anything where I find the in-I intend to honor you. Fuflent fables, impostures, which eager to offend me & to offend me-Aiger, I would love them because of You; I will love them provided that I find every little thing there that we fale Jouverir de toi.

Feelings of a Pro-
teftanten in einer ka.
Tholifchen Kirche.

I.

Der kennt noch nicht dich Je.
fus Chrift,

Wer deinen Schatten nur ent-ehrt;

Mir fey, was dich nur Jefus

iftus

Zu chren meynt, verehrungs-Werth!

Wenns Tæufchung nur, pur Fabel wære,

Es fable nur zu deiner Ehre.
Es mag mich drükken und betriben Um deinetwillen will ichs lie-

p ben Erinnerts nur an dich, trægts

nur
Von dir die allerkleinfte Spur,

My Weft method doesn't and will never do giving credence to suspicions. I said that mu -

+ es

What do I see here? What-Did I ever go to these places? Nothing These majestic vaults are insane!
And profound, nothing speaks to me-Is he from you? This cross, this golden image of my God Isn't she made for you?
Norer? The bastard we're waving around around the priest, the Gloriu sung in chorus; the bright glowfible of the perpetual lamp, these candles, all finally done for you!

s 4

Why are we raising the hotty?
fi ce neft pour te loucr, ô Jéfus-Chrift, died for love from us? It's because it's wet more, E&F that you are her that theglife croyunte bends his knee. C'aft in honor of you, Jefus-Christ, From you, my friend, that this troop d'en fans jnfruits de bonne-beurre flees the Jigne of the cross, that their lips & their tongues sing your praises & fe

C2
Danast

Was ift es, das ich um mich
fehe?

Was ift es, das ich höre yesterday?

Spricht nichts in der gewölbten Höhe,

In diefer Tiefe nichts von dir?

Das. Kreuz, dein Bild, dort uberguldet

Ifts nicht a Ehren dir gebil-

And,

Das Rauchfafs links und rechts gefchwungen

Das Gloriu im Chor gefungen,

Des ewigen Lichtleins Silberfchein

The light of the candle, meynt dich allein,

4.

Warum wird, als um dich zu loben,

Den Tod der Liebe, Jefus Christ,

Die Hoftie empor gehoben?

Weil fie nicht mehr, weil du fe bif!

-Dir beugt die glaubende Ge- / mine

Das Knie; dir macht, nur dir
the small one

Schon früh belehrte Schaar der Jugend

Das Kreuz, regt Lippen dir und Zungen,

eea ms

Mr. Lavater was being extravagant, because that's not true.

proven; I said that his extravagances were nn dE a struck three times in the chest born from her little hands.

Se

It's for the love of you,
O Jéfus-Chrift! that we kiss the place that carried Ton fang adored; for you, child of choir rings the bell, for you, the fabricator, do what you want.
In fact, the richest women distant lands, the magnificent cence des chufubles, l'oripeun Doubt we adorn your mother AND the full pearls that she has on her neck, All of this I report to You.

feal.

6.
Why the walls & the marble altarpieces, they make covered in greenery, on the day of St. Sucrement? Who are we talking about?

A path of lights? For whom?
These banners embroidered in gold?
When the Ave Marias resonate Hey, isn't this for you?

c3

Schlegt dir mit Andacht und mir Duf,

Mit kleiner Hand dreymal die
Brutt,

Se
Geküfst wird, dir zu 'Lieb, die Stelle Die trug dein angebetet Blut; Deg Chorknab klingelt dir die

Shell

Dir thut der Kiüfier, was er thut.

Vercinter Rcichthum ferner Læn.ler

Die fchwere Pracht der Mefsgewcænder

Der Schuürkel an des Ritters Senitde,

Das Flittergold am Mutterimage

Am Hals die falfche Perlen{fchnur.

Meynt dich doch, Jefus Chrifus nur!

GO

Am marmorolcichen Hochaltare

Wem ziert mit Zweigen fich die Wand?

Am Leichnamsfefte , wem zu Ehren

Enttröpfelt Wachs des Sengers. Hand?

Wem ftreut man Blumen auf die Bannen?

Wen tregt man coldseRikts Fahnen? ~

(seeding) submits to very dangerous, because too unhappy-

I certainly shouldn't doubt it. I didn't

m aa

matins, vespers, prayers
have my nuns not you Not convinced?

rs

These bells in a thousand cto-expensive, bought with gold.
entire cities, these bap- bells wildly fanned in order to spread out to the thunder, do they not carry Not tou ininage melted in the Same mold? Isn't that for You whom the reli- sounded gicux of the bells that us call or at work, we have Prayer?

S.

It's your protection, oh

Jéfus-Chrift that I put everything.

man who loves madness,
He who believes in You, and who loves chastity & poverty.

Without you, the orders of St. Benedict

E&F of St. Bernard would not have

Wenn die Ave Maria {chat len, Bit dws nicht, dem fie wiederhallen?
It Mette nicht, nicht Vefper-Zits Nicht Prim nnd Nonc, dir go~weight!

7.

Den Gtokken in zehn taufend Thurmen, Mit ganzer Stædte Gold erkauft, Dem Blizftrahl und den Donncrftürmen Zu wehren, feyerlich gctauft;
Ward ihnen, da in Glut fie Flofen, Dein Bild ain Kreuz nicht angesoffen?
Gezogen oder fchwer getreten, Zur Arbeit rufend und zum beten, Schallt dir, fchallt dir nicht-Tiberial Der Glokken Andacht reicher Schall?

Se

Nach deiner Huld nur Chriftus fehnt

Sich jeder Freund der Einfamkeit,

Only believe in you, only believe in you.
meynt und Wæhnet

Wer fich der keufchen Armuth wciht!

Not Benedictine, not Bern-Hards Orden,

~

(merman |

said he was either Catholic, or Jew, or difficult or partisan of Catholics & of

eee ee

They were not founded! From you the cloture EF the cloister, the tonfura, the breviary €F the rosary ren-A witness tooth. And for whom?
for whom, is the filence of the dortoir, fi ce noft pour tu gloire?

9.

O delight, Jefus-Christ! for your difficult disciple, even where the simplicity is lacking and flees, from see the marks left by your finger, there, the eye of the mold cannot see them No! Oh, ineffable joy of souls which make you devoted to seeing in all the caves, fur eaque
rock, and each crucifix planted Jer the hills E&F Jur the great paths, your fecal

(Whatever the Seal may be)

EF, that of your love.

duty

TO:

Who will not rejoice in honors of which you are the goal & The soul? Who wouldn't want to see the tears upon hearing 'Be' „praised Jéfus-Chrift!” O the hypoerite, who knows the name of Jefus-Christ ES doesn't answer with joy: amen; who, charity

Waer ohne dich geffiftet worden!

Von dir zeugtGotts-Haus, Kiaus und Klofter

Tonfur, Brevier und Pater

nofter,

Und wem, wem ftelt, ais dir zum Ruhm

Is this Klofter-Gang Silentium?

9.

O Wolluft, Christus, deines Jüngers,

Anch*da, wo Einfalt fehlt und flieht,

Zu fehen Spuren deines FinGers

Da wo kein Aug der Welt fie ficht!

O Wonne dir ergebener See-

len,

Anf jedem Fels, in allen Höhenr

In jedem Krucifix der Hügel,

In jedem au der Straffe, Sievel

(Wie abgenuzt das Siegel fey)

Zu fehn von dir und deincr Hole.

I0.

Wer freuet fich nicht jeder
Ehre

Von der du Ziel und Seele bift!

Wem regt beym Grufs fich nicht die Zæhre:

"Gelobet feyt du, Jefus" Cir ea

O Heuchler der, der Chrift Name

Sonft nenrt, und nicht ein frohes Amen

ee

I fled, because it seemed problematic to me-that, and that I know of no reason to pronounce in problematic matters questions, where one must doubt as long as one is ignorant.
I therefore leave the solution of this extra factordinary to the Germans who are in charge of it,
(d) & I flee the lifting of imputations free things that Mr. [name]'s defender does to me.

Lavater. |

How, if he knew by himself
The text he censors, would he have said that I quoted

Mr. Meiners' authority regarding the jefuitis-brotherly in the eyes, ne Antwortet, nicht mit Bruder-

. ` z ii ken`
said not with a ruvillement in- Biikke:
? ie Nicht fagt mit innigem Ent-interior: Léfus foit béni dans zükken Eternity! In eternity! "In Ewigkeit, in Ewigkeit

sS5€y Jelus Chritus benedeit!”

d) I am convinced that it would not be necessary for the compare many works similar to this one that we just published, crazy, the title of zoz- - new edition of three poems in praise of the cult Catholic, &3 for monastic piety by AL Gafpar Lavater with observations of two proteftants, or Johann Gafpar Lavaters drey Labgedichte auf den katholifchen Gottesdiouft, und auf die Klofterandachten. — Leipzig, by Paul Gotthelf Kummer 1787.

me of your hero? (p. 12). I ran away fervi contrary to These uncertain words: here Mr.
MEINERS ALLUDES TO AND SEEMS TO AGREE TO AN OPINION &c.

How, by trying to justify Mr. La.
vater of the Airaculatorimm anecdote, or fanetiary of the Miracles of a fervent Canton of Lucerne, does his apologia speak, as I don't know them, OF ALL OTHER LITTLE ANECDOTES FROM PEASANTS
€ of prophetic payfannes that PAL EU THE PATIENT CERTIFICATE TO ALLEGATE (p. 11)? If he has i.e. that. I only spoke of the {ul St.
Martin, whose... he is careful not to deny Let's connect with Mr. Lavater.

How can a man of good faith nrac-would he cuferoit, si ma lettre étoit fous ses yeux, for having disfigured all of Mr.'s paffages.
Lavater, whom I translated, and would he not cite a sliver of my ignorance, or of my Infidelities? The thing was flat and swollen

However; for I defy any man to

I'm not going to pronounce it like I do, fur the reason for the one to whom the blame must be attributed opinions, speeches & fragments, that I took the trouble to extract from Mr.'s text.
Lavater. We shouldn't be too hasty then.
to prove that I quoted inaccurately, or misinterpreted, however, his defender does not nrattaque throughout the course of fa critique that fur the fignification of the word gesiefsbur And fans, without a doubt, I would be excusable for being in pain.
translated a new, vague & bad-I will taste it; but this wrong, I do not pay, &, Since it is necessary, I will show my advers-things that I study perhaps better their language that they themselves, when pen ai befoin,

Mr. Lavater said, speaking of the revelation:
Gott mufs deu Menfchen bey diefer Fereinigung fo erkennbar, fo fpñrbar, fo geniefsbar feya, als es immer ein fichtbarer Aleufch
feyn kann, |

And I translated: the purpose of all revelation

to unite with God in a way

LED

fuelle, conune on le pent avec un homme visible.

Mr. Lavater's defender claims that "This presents in French an equivocal fens-that & indecent which is not found in "Poriginal. The misunderstanding," he adds,
"eft principally in the word geniefsbar

"who doesn't have the finniñcation that you give him Sattribuez (p. 4).

If that were the case, without a doubt the defender
Mr. Lavater should have convinced me & to fully disabuse the reader, fubfti-killing a translation exadvantages to the one he
He accused him of infidelity; but he did not do it.
And I'm telling you, by translating the word geniefsbar by that of fenfuel, I have en-tense in its most bearable sense, the most decent, the most accurate, & here is how-

I'm proving it.

In all languages, and especially in those which are not yet fixed, where prefque all the words, having been used in the most diverse senses by famous writers, he excites a large number of authorities for and against all the fignithe adjustments that can be made to them; I know five ways to determine the true value

in a vague word:

The most commonly received usage & con
tired of dictionaries.

The etimology & comparison of the word uncertain.
The natural wind that it should give the

phrafe where it is framed.

The example of the most undervalued writers.

Finally, the Dorine of Pauteur, which is from it fervi in the occasion where it concerns inter.
lend. — I would hardly be wrong, if these

Five tests prove me right.

I open Adelung's Dictionary, this oracle: of the German language, & I find:

genufs jouissance genieffen jouir &c. &c.

GETTING FOOD &c. geniefsbar, adj. THAT WHICH ONE CAN ENJOY... It seems to me that all of this is going to be sexSUEL. We only do the flamb in German. bar is precisely equivalent to the end of a word to our French term. If I me iufle attached more ftriément à l'étimologie, I could therefore have translated very well geniefsbar by an even stranger word that Fenfuel, EDIBLE, for example, had summer was irreproachable; for gexiefflen in Pallemand the purest meaning to EAT – that's it all at once for vulgar Pufage, the dictionaries, etymology & composition of the word.

Shall we now confound the phrale? To clarify the word geniefsbar? I pray that Pon show me a way to unite to God AS TO A VISIBLE MAN, OR fi Jon wants a physical and moral interview with God, (for such is the literal translation of these words soralifche Jinuliche Unterbal-

these ee – tung, (e) which precedes the definition that Mr. Lavater gives revelation). I pray, that someone point me to a union or an intersomething of that kind that isn't fenfuel, or physically capable; & I promise to agree accept Pepit that Pon will want to establish to the one I believed to be the most de- equivalent one hundred of geniefsbar.

Shall we seek out authorities? ...
Ch! In which German book will you challenge me?

you, Monfeigneur (f) to find some for And against? ... agree in good faith that the German language is not fixed,

that she will hardly do it for a long time

(e) Eine eigentliche moralifche finnliche Unterhaltung mit der Gottheit ift das eigenthümliche der Religion, and die Abficht Gottes bey allen feinen Offenbarungen.

(£) It is common knowledge in Germany that The letter to which I am replying here is from the Land. grave of Heffe-Hombourg, and I can only to find in this extraordinary event a ray. even more serious is the fear of the fascinations of Mr. Lavater, since they extend up to a Prince, enlightened and respectable in his own right the profession of a miller.

that every writer, and, following his example, each reader will be able to adopt or to arbitrarily introduce the same words in infinitely varied fens, "so as not to to say perfectly different; that one does not will not fear, that Pon will even prick himself with a-soil at the highest expreflion Pexpref- the most trivial fion; which one will firmly believe- how to enrich the language by striving to to paint the most sublime thing by the comparaifon the biggest slap; by picking up all parts of singular words, phrases of all the styles, proverbial expressions of all the countries, indiscriminately engulfed, in writings of all kinds, which must produce & produces in fact such a barbaric variegation that the bottom of the dishes is often altered, & always made doubtful. I don't claim not that this motley crew should be the way of your great writers. Hey! how this miferable richefle d'expreflions vagues, néolo-

would it have favored gics, pleonasmatics

the naivety of your good works? the Méexaggerated metaphors, ridiculous hyperboles, emphatic words do no less enemies of eloquence, let abbreviations arbitrary terms, the jargon of the people, the terms new & non-necessary matters do it from the "Precision, energy, naturalness. It is probably in the ridiculous vogue of this sometimes trivial & sometimes pompous-fairy, that we must seek the true causes from the long childhood of your theatre & of the slowness of your progress, despite the number abundant with brilliant minds who have brought renown your nation; & since bad taste, the darkness, the lengths, the ambiguities & the inextricable confusion that results from it Those who per- can only harm art. perfectionists make them free from these defects

Fans doubt. Perhaps, however, he would not do in-useful to examine fi as well as in mecha-nice, no force can act without a point support, of support, likewise in the fine arts, he eft pofhble de faire des grands pas fans un fixed starting point, a regulator determine-mine that guides the haphazard travelers engaged in the Pimmenie domain of Pima-gination; if it does not weft infinitely difficult that you have a pure taste, an idiom uniform, a perfect match of ex-preflions, a philosophical language of what-that kind of thing, whether we want to support it, aufli For a long time you will be divided into con-stranded, in provinces, in cantons; if that, I said, it wasn't as difficult as he would have thought. for example that our language had acquired the degree of maturity that you apparently You will not argue with him, for our fine minds each wrote in the dialeûe of fa pro-Vince, one in François Gafcon, the other in françois Alfacien, a third in francophone three, this one in Languedocian, that one in

D

Breton (lower Breton). . a

þem d

I'll save this CXA for another time.
men, and I won't even ask you,
The Germans understand perfectly those from their books that they can tax foreigners It's foolish not to understand when They undertake it fervently. I won't tell you I won't ask why Mr. Lavater by for example, he complained that all the men of German letters that are not part of it fans (and how many do you know the number in (eft grand) do not understand it, if {on ftyle, or their language or perhaps both of them are not burdened with amphibologies, equi-vocatives, of obscurities; or to quote a a completely different example, important & refpectable, why, if your language is not in Generally marred by these flaws, your Haller, who, moreover, possessed so much genius, seft made himself unintelligible at times in several works (g) for all

Any country other than the fufle? . . .

(g) His Schweizesifciie Cedichte for example.

Once again, I admit that your great writers have overcome all these obstacles; & That's why I could have argued at your Lavater of being a good writer, prouver that it does not Peft by the nature of the reprothe things that you yourself do for him, and support that truly apocalyptic way in leading to a large number of imitations teurs has harmed your literature & perhaps-to be in turn hindered by your progress in all human connoisseurships, even in the exact and natural sciences, of which the exhibition and the developments must have become more difficult, thanks to the liberfashionable clothes by Mr. Lavater: Because Finally, language is the vehicle for ideas.
And fi Pon has a great many ways abftraites d'entendre sur entendre telle mot, telle phrasefe, such books, we cite well near the road which leads to not hearing them at all.

But why do I need all these difficulties? Fions? I never intended to judge Mr. La-

d 2

vater in his capacity as a writer; I denounced just a few of his habits more extraordinary; or abuse of the compa-reasons drawn from the physical world with purely intellectual objects, this abuse continuous & truly infernal which characterizes in this way, undoubtedly belongs to extravagance (in truth I should not soften-(Circ this word that shocked you so much) yes to the extravagance of this great man, & I ferois trompé dans Pinterprétation du mot geniefshar, that this would undoubtedly do It's my fault. It seems to me that we must have renounced good faith, or good faith to deny that the writer, who makes words geniefsbar & fpürbar when speaking of God, expresses itself at least in terms which cho-Consider what is appropriate and reasonable. For finally One can only unite with God through the most modest means. Why bet on amalgamating (Zereini-guung), to palpate (fpäürbar) Œ), to enjoy

(h) Some German grammarian will perhaps tell me(geniefsbar) we seek to rise to the railon fublime des chofes, on adore Dieu,

d 3

is to be that in my own principles for Pine Interpretation of dubious words, /pirbar ne does not signify tangible, but fluid; since Spur means spiffe, & [pren Juivre lu pijte, Jentir by Podorat. But fans ask fi God is more fair than tangible, I reply. drai que [pren & par confèquent /pärbar ont has been taken in so many different senses, that they have made them generic words that we do not can only be translated by generic words; that

moreover, the literal equivalent of fairer eit ittern; which in truth is confused in allemand the words of piffe & trace (Pun & Pautre Spzr) although wrongly, since we have the The word Gleis for that of trace, and that of Spur for that of pifte, & qu'aiali /pérbar eft is also suited to expressing everything that can be followed by smell, sometimes by sight. faith in flowing; but that this very proves how much fpärez eft is far from indicating a nuance determined; that indeed he said to himself also for fübles which incontestably fignifies fëeztir, to experience, to have experience, where they discovered what that this Joy, and that thus in a phrase where Mr. Lavater clearly rejects the word /pärbar a physical meaning, which appears in general the dominant force of this illustrious Theo. Logien, I was able to translate it as tangible, ne even if it were to be the least equivalent to chcifir ridiculous & because the heap being properly the fens which receives the impression of objects, it philosophically speaking, it encompasses sight. Hearing, taste, smell. Celt fans donte ua a mistake in language that one can also say, we want to obey his decrees, to please him, the fervir, (you see that I embrace all the opinions); but we do not conflate with We don't touch him, we don't enjoy him (because this word enjoy, joined to the preceding ones, can (Does it have a purely abstract meaning?)

These affluences of ideas are indecent, dis-

Goét Jhäüren, einen Haafen fpüren, Schmerzen

Jpüren, Luft fpüren, Wind, Wärme, Kiülée Jpuren, feinen Nebenmenfchen fpúren &c.. Etc. & qwainh the same word also expressing the moral and physical state, we make God, we to split a hare, to split its veil, to furrow the pain & pleasure, wind, heat, the cold, the perfumes, the blows, etc., etc., but It is precisely because of this common flaw to all languages, to give a prodigious latitude to generic words confuses everything the ideas, & complicated to the point of gibberish so many distortions, that the eternal comparison-from the bottom of things known to those who do not not, & the afluction of ideas which do not refer-seem that, through their darkness, they multiply already to excess; this is because of that even, I say, that good writers avoid as far as possible this confusion of expreflions. Mr. Lavater research at the con-milking, but if the fault is not with her friends who, to exonerate him from being a writer in bad taste & even devoid of fennel, fusuppofent tuujours qu'il a prism au figurative, les words that he hears in the most naive way possible Perhaps in its natural state.

Cana

reasonable, absurd; & when they fera slap in the face to religious and philosophical theory.
the ophical style of a tireless author, when el-the fervent readers of incoherent texts & volumineufes reveries (I'm not arguing with you) nothing about the number of volumes that I pre-I thank heaven for having read them all; G) it makes me want-It was that Mr. Meufel in his Germany fa-boasts of having compiled eighty titles of Mr. Lavater); when he says in full that the God of philosophers does not weft the Fien, that he needs one that is geuiefsbar, fpirbar &c. &c. we don't care about fucking
That this man is raving; yes, indeed.
a rafon; For take good care that you Even, Monleigneur, you cannot exclude him from these uninformed styluses (I'm becoming pedantic)

(to spare your hero) than by confessing

(i) "At least you are already mistaken about their "Number you entrust to him go. Volumes,
"My anger, despite all the pain I have put myself through,
"I unfortunately find myself only 30. This (p» half as much as Voltaire wrote p. 1).

GO

that he is so mired in mystity, that he cannot detach himself from it, and that he should: resist rather than just writing gibberish vivionary.

Once again, I translated the word correctly.
geniefsbar: the fens of the phrase, the etimology,
The authorities demonstrate it; but I attest to it furtout the entire body of doetrin Mr. Lavater; he always does in his works-some obscurely stated allusion JC, who was, according to him, intimately comprofé d'une combinaifon de fubftance humaine & divine. M, Lavater finds this amalgam clearly indicated in the Bible & fi deliheavens, which I do not believe I am doing him wrong in fuppofant que {on plus vif défir eft d'incor.
porer en fa perlonne quelque parti d'a-A divine amalgamation in the manner of Jefus. For-what, or rather how, this reverie which became in Mr. Lavater's mind such a thought-it is usual that she manifests herself in all what he does and everything he writes, do not

; i
Would she allow it, or would she not order him?
to give the word geniefsbar a meaning at least as physical as moral? for.
what ejaculations towards the son of God, Wouldn't they derive pleasure from the full force of the word? With belief in daily miracles qw literally displays Mr. Lavater, should we, can we challenge fon imagination, his mind, his very body?
In short, did I have to take figuratively what Is it only intelligible in its natural form? Alas! There is It's been a long time since I gave up on hearing this famous distinction among theologians things against reason & those ati-deffus de la raifon. Tout ce qui weft pas dans Reason, for me, is outside of reason;
to the deflus, to the deffous, beside it, I don't care;
I don't want to be out of my mind, & That's why I rarely read Mr. Lavater; that's why, when I read it or tra< duis, c'eft dans le fenus naturel, afin de waf-furer at least that his text is empty of

Es, =
fens, after which I abandon him to idolatry of their worshippers. To make myself recognized that I have disfigured this text par excellence.

You have to demonstrate it to me, and that's what

You haven't even begun, Your Grace.

"But since German is not your native language, you are not a judge com-
"They are guilty of the works of Mr. Lavater" (pp. 1 & 1$). Why is that when I don't
I do not claim to judge him in his capacity as an e-Writer? Isn't the heart of the matter...
My tefiort? I fled abstained from wearing Further my gaze goes, and I don't see that we has the right to demand an accounting from me German grammatical erudition, when I quote faithfully & I translate with ex-attitude; because I don't have an obligation to be good to know German; but I have that of knowing it well-Nour le livre & la chofe dont je parle. Et in good faith when the word geniefsbar for-should be understood in another way than

e
The one where I took it, wouldn't it still be... afleez of undisputed extravagances that I gathered in my letter to make the the reputation of the illustrious Lavater, already famous € efimé in his homeland, says {on détenfeur, when I was barely out of childhood? (p.
D). This makes me believe that the pro-Mr. Lavater announced the theories; indeed if he is only forty-two years old; as one I can see it, I've barely fixed years less than him; & unfortunately very little Men younger than me have written, & moifloné rather than the poisoned fruits of celebrity.

Whatever he may think, and leaving them in their place
Mr. Lavater's Pontius Pilate, the disorganifation of his wife, his miracles, his talents, His philosophical writings, which have not, as his father said
apologit that a fel proper to the single tongue German (p. 4), the good nature that carries it to name the squires by writing to them

has

My dear friend (k) but who does not Pemfishing doesn't always mean placing it in a book fur les phyfonomies le profil de Jofeph H.
Between Cefar and Marcus Aurelius, oh my, I'm good memory; sometimes to find in a boot
the indication of the genius of Frederick II. &c. &c.
&c. The good man so disdains artifice courtiers; dismissing these anecdotes & so much others who would one day appear mad
the object of fervent enthusiasm;
I acknowledge the admission of my adversary.
who agrees that Mr. Lavater is too ob-fire, too myflique, too enthusiastic (ne di-Don't you think it's permissible to be a little all of this); that he has some dubious opinions
(p. 4) & I think that's enough for me Fauver, from the supposed ridiculousness of which I am threat in the name of the noble German spirit, (p. 15.) They have, on the other hand, a lot of number, kindly agreed to sweep me away completely

(k) "Woe to the Prince to whom this expression ple bonnununis deplait. p- 7.

Li)

And for a long time in this regard. Days-very distinguished paliftes in Germany, with which I never move the lightest rapport (I challenge anyone to name one in Europe) to which I have at no time sent a (from my writings) the journalists of Göt-They talked about me specifically to pro-Mr. Lavater's position, like Pun's... foreigners (I'm translating this loosely as modesty)
who seems to know literature best German. In truth, I don't deserve more.
this praise, which is the opposite of the reproach, & I He reports it only to prove that Mr. Lavater's friends are making the leaves at mac-cufer to translate unfaithfully.

Here are the few lines I will consecrate never to this pathetic controversy. The Time flies, life is short, one must not not to be consumed by vain clamor. Eh!

What a load of listening to quibbles and arguments!
grammatical issues often turned into barbaric jargon

(I'm talking about Mr. Lavater's style), or fur

s
The extravagant theory of the vivionaries? What a waste of time for the one who has the courage & perhaps the strength to compete in Pinftru@ion public? What interest could there be?
Lavater unmasked the incessantly writing occupied with useful work, and who in the
at the very moment he stoops to write this preface, so that Pon will get angry once that şil abftient déformais de répondre aux en-
The apostle's disdain for the living, the disdain Feul will impose on him filence, afpire to bring him closer a considerable part of humankind of a less unfortunate state that makes her more useful to similar people?

May they never fight their enemies?
I only used such weapons to envy those whom the Nature has endowed us with talents that lead or human opinions dominate! Ah! If they they devoted themselves loyally to the noble profession to be sure! If they had the courage to to take for granted, FRIENDS UNTIL THE VE-

RITE, their indomitable self-esteem

|

has

could compromise with himself, & made.
Fie on glory over dignity! Fie, instead of a-to debase, to tear each other apart, to destroy each other proving their influence, they reunited their efforts & their work to terrace

Ambitious one who stalks, the imposter who leads astray,
the villain who schemes, the coward who sells;
despising the vile profession of gladiators, bed-They believed themselves to be true brothers.
weapons against prejudice, the menfonge, charlatanism, deception, tyranny of whatever kind it may be, in less than one

In the 19th century, the face of the earth would be changed.

Disappointing illusion! Golden age of reason Human! Will you never do anything but The dream of good people? . . . but what-door? Why not offer it as a token of faith?
even what we needlessly advise to Others? The good that each individual can to do, is it therefore fans price because a con-a federation of men would do a thousand times over more? . . . fragile souls! ar-

Camna

teeth! that indignation of evil brings to to exaggerate it, and, which is a thousand times more funefte, to be regarded as impossible & chi-America a better order of things, gar-Get out of this predicament where they will break the energy of strong souls, the courage of the benevolence, love of virtue; not ca-Do not ignore human nature, do not defend it-Don't worry... Hey! If we're going to be Italian at the violent shock that the approaching fire the che of a good man springing forth from the falin corruption, where would the morcity lead?
which thickens each day and dyes black plus ombre, the spectacle of human things-born? ... to hate everything that is excellent on earth: the BEAUTY that sweeps away the iron climates & softens the hearts of tigers, but on the traces of which hell vomited fes ferpens: Gentle, easy, in- KINDNESS gentle, generous, propitious, but which makes To be born ungrateful: Friendship that comforts the pain, softens misfortune, lavishes

pleasures

pure pleasures; friendship and benevolence
from heaven invented to make us endure & cherish life; but whose wicked de-dress the mafque to better sharpen the flillet of perfidy: THE GENIUS near whom watched always blatant slander & envy implacable: FREEDOM, that soul of Pame this divinity of all that nature made appear great on earth; but who holds fans cefle the dagger raised fur fon own heart...

Shall we curse these gifts from heaven, because-that the hand of men can poison them Ner? Oh! No: let's not give in like that.
fur nos fentimens à tout ce qui nous cin-tower; let's perfect our reason; strengthen-Let us do our will; let us enlarge our souls;
we believe that apart from accidents inevitable leaks from the general order, it my it is bad for the earth because there are errors; that the day when the lights & the morality with them, will penetrate into the di-

t

Amp likes": E

weak souls
will have courage out of prudence, the ambimoral guardians for their own gain, the scamps Moderation through foresight, the rich of calculated benevolence; & that thus Pin-Explosion will diminish sooner or later, but infallibly Clearly, the ills of the human species until making his condition the most pleasant of which peripheral beings are susceptible.
fables.

D SARE ÉRS

TN 6 |
s

ON

MOSES MENDELSSOHN,

ON THE POLITICAL REFORM OF THE JEWS, AND IN PARTICULAR,

Jur the revolution attempted in their favor

(in 1753) in Great Britain.

U, a man thrown by nature to the wolves from a debased horde, born without any species of fortune, with a weak temperament & even disabled, a shy character, a Sweetness perhaps, Exceflive, chained all life in an almost mechanical protection that, be raised to the rank of the greatest writers that this century saw born in Germany One of the first to melt this first, he gave to a language, which was not not even the same, clarity, or quantity, Grace, energy. The Germans
they bestowed upon him the title of modern Plato;
a public monument is dedicated to him in the homeland that its successes in the absence of laws him have conquered. Even more remarkable by See |

\

. his virtues that by his talents, he infused upon fa nation & perhaps to some extent fur the country where the {ort had fixed it by licensedant of a profound reason, & of a conduite si pure que le bigotisme & la calomne ne Pont not even tarnished . . . this man-This Jewish philosopher deserves something Curiofité.

í

I would like to introduce Mofes Men-

Delsfohn to France better than he can Perhaps through the translation of his Phaedo, Pun of beautiful works without doubt (a), but where Jon shouldn't guess all that was worth This writer, truly extraordinary, fi Pon consider the situation in which it matured I have shown talent and virtues; I would like to speak of the good he did for his nation; I I would especially like to occupy myself on occasion those whose feeling and thought do not strangers to everything that concerns the species human, from the prejudice that makes us exclude the unjust abuse of focal force against the Jews, by representing them to us as incapable of ever being morally eftimaneither useful nor politically helpful.

(a) There are two French translations of the Phégift of Mendelsfohn; that of Mr. Junker & Mr. Burja's. I also know some English, Dutch, Italian translations. nes &c,

EOTICE ON MOSES MENDELSSOHN
EE SES WORKS

Me Mendelsfohn was born in 1729 (b) in Deffau where his father had been Master-at-the-ship. Thus, his early childhood was not complete. foreign to the study. But what studies- even those of an impoverished Jew! erudition, the feverish tongue would appear to have to be the last term of {on ambition, & Mendelsfohn indeed was not occupied in the gamemedlar & in the few moments he plucked to the hays of fa fubfigtance than works of the famous Maimonides, reformer of the religion & philosophy of the {ebreux. on application excellive & tôt lui gavena a nerve disease which, from the age of ten years, threatened his days; & such was the force infirmities that tormented his life. However, his father didn't even have What. make it fubfitter, Men delstonn gagua Berlin in 1742. He lived there in obscurity; during several years in the greatest hay, often lacking in school supplies, but Ous bliant deprivations fi big & fi proton.

gees auflitót qu'il rencontroit quelque OCCa«
e 3

The sum moe mt

O) Mendelsfohn died on January 4, 1996.
in Berlin.

4 On Mofes Mendelsfobs, purpose of educating oneself. A benevolent Jew re-Finally picked & Padmit to fatal. The Rabbi Fränkel, who had formerly served as a miniftere to Deflau, granted him at the same time some hay, made him transfer his manuscripts wrote, & gave him the opportunity to study with the Talmud, works of Theology, of jurisprudence, of cholattic philosophy of the US. ~ . Cell 7 this quagmire that Pau-the author of the Phaedo has risen to the level of philosophy

The laziest phophie.

In truth, he encountered in Pémulation & in the sweetness of friendship an encouragement-
A rage that proved useful to him. Chance had procured for him the knowledge of a man who found himself in a completely difficult situation reille: similar contradictions of nature & of the strong, poverty near the mifere, same obstacles, same tastes; & long can even be said to be dominant, then-that the sole confolation of the adversities of life comforted them in the search & the examination of the great truths of which the de-covered eft perhaps the most enjoyable pure that the perfectibility of Phomme lut had prepared.

This companion in misfortune and studies there was another Jew named Israzr Moyse, native from a small town in Poland called Hari Zamols, located between Krakow & Lemberg in the territory that forms the province which is now called Galicia. This Ifreal Moyfe, schoolteacher in Berlin & Pun des for the political reform of Jews. $ remarkable men of the nation, had What a terrible misfortune to be tormented by the Rabbis, for their way of thinking freely, proud, and free from prejudice. Chañlé plu-several times of communion, forced to wander in Poland fans support, fans aid, de-provided with all resources, the object of the bitter hatred & continual percussion of the Orthodox Talmudists, he fell into a deep melancholy that ended {es days by premature death.

This Ifrael did not speak any other language that the Hebrew that he had superior-ment & in which he wrote, it is said, with admirable elegance, which probably-
It has few judges; but it is very extra. ordinary than aided by this single instrument & of pitiful resources offered to him by literature erasure of his nation, he was familiarized with modern science and discoveries.
Âffez, mathematician, for having found by He himself, his friend said, demonstrated the most important; distinguished phylician, Capable of the fine arts, and even gifted with showing some talent for poetry, he undertook Mendelsfohn's literary education made him know the Hebrew translation of Euclid, He initiated him into the science of equations which gives so much justice to the spirit, and develops.
well all its resources, in one dish it began a real philosophy course with him{ophie, & such was probably the spark:
electric for Pefprit de Moles,

6 On Mofes Mendelsfobrr,

A young Jewish doctor from Prague named Kilch, struck by his first progress, him Mendelsfohn advises learning Latin.
so poor that he had to save for a long time-time to fes befoins to procure a grammar & a dictionary, undertook the reading the ancients and studying literature of the seventeenth centuries. His uni-that help in this regard was the doctor's friendship Kitch, who gave it to him every day for a while months of Latin language lessons a quarter of an hour a day. Mendelsfohn arrived in a short time, although with a infinite difficulty, to read Loke's works in Latin. I looked up each word in the dictionary.

tionnaire, thus gathered the materials of a period, & implementing the forces of spirit to discover everything at the times the metaphysical fens & the construction grammatically, he guessed through sheer meditation-tion rather than he translates.

This prodigious effort of application & of Fagacity doesn't weft uniquely, it doesn't even weft.
rare among those Jews who indulge-nent to the sciences, & the difficulty {fervant in This, like so many other things about reflort
With momentum, they manage to overcome incredible obstacles. We shouldn't exa-manage the advantages that nailfent of: these for-Your victories. They are such that I find them... kings more reasonable to work to make at least the study of sciences is difficult, that to claim to enlcigncr all fans hardly

"Jur la réforme politique des Juifs ge."
as we understand it & especially as We are often promised it. Those who have a true calling would penetrate them in the fan@naire, & the fociété would not flooded with sterile richfle, or with the “ere faitueufe des demi-favans, overjoyed fans doubt about trading their mistakes for ignorance.

In 1748 Mofes became acquainted with the Dr. Salomon Gumperz. He was a young Jew who, in addition to Medicine, must Mathematics is a passion, period.
foreign to speculative philosophy, & fa.
sees several modern languages among others French and English. He introduced Mendelstohn among the most etu- young men gods of the gymnasium of Joachimsthal, at many of which M. de Beau-{obre, which is made since a name in the republic of letters.

Celt, while Mendelsfohn learned the modern languages, of which he experienced so much Putile, that their study has entered into the plan of education that he outlined for his compatriots and that he had the good fortune to see performed in a large part. He believed it was mutilation the spirit of man than to deprive him of the knowledge of several languages.

Indeed, one can see it at first glance tempted to believe that the multiplicity of langues eft un mal, non fulement comme une barrier ge plus between men, but As a natural and daily occurrence to tire the heads: the strongest ones, those that a compelling invitation leads to study, by a multitude of words that take the place of things, we realize upon reflection that fatigue is not as much to be feared for the human mind that the paraphernalia & the loss of any reflort which comdemand the work. The study of languages mef so not in itself a bad thing fans comhangings. i

And if that is true in the most In general, it is even more obvious that knowledge of languages is an in. comparable advantage, & almost an indifpenfable neceflité dans Pordre de chofes which condemns us to the incapacity of the universe. falifer, if I may speak thus, an idiom of so that we can be proud of everyone else. I will support this idea because the franthese seem to me to have all the more need They make efforts of this kind that they delude themselves. difpenfés longer & than they have for This study reveals more natural disadvantages.

We are being misled, what can I do? that our language was spoken everywhere, we we needed no other; but besides than in a country that strives to perfect it. the human species matters more to him {only that many others put together, I mean England, fi Pon generally makes people talk François, nobody likes to speak it, strongly that in this idiom one must renounce pres.

that any outpouring of confidence, to all for the political reform of the Jews Eyc. 9

Deepest sympathy, with all due respect.
communicative; I wasn't observed that fi Pon speaks French everywhere (which It's true that for Germany, where (even the habit diminishes every day) each nation, however, writes in its own language.
Shall we therefore prefer the super- instructions?
official and hasty conversions, to thoughtful studies, with well-developed thoughts, to opinions supported by evidence, to fysthe same in-depth themes found in books &
The books, leaves?

On the other hand, it is undeniable that we have major disadvantages for Language study. Daily experience And confante proves it, and the theory would suffice to establish it. Mr. de Mauvillon who in Pimmenfe quantity of fes studies & of fes
work produced ideas and observations tions aufh juites que neuves, remark tres although he exiled two great families of languages in Europe, Latin & the studies-that; that the Germans & the peoples of The North, properly speaking, are initiated from their childhood in both of them, learning
I speak French or Latin through daily use.
level; that they acquire a great ease of studying all languages Europe; and that of this facility, to which I would add, at least for some na. tions such as the Poles, the advantage of a-see the organs softened by the joints

19 Suy Mofes Mendelsfobn,

very difficult in their natural languages,
réfulte auli l'ufage d'en apprendre pleffieurs.

On the contrary, we believe that education introduces only in one of these families, we re-controls to penetrate into Pautre of the difficulties-almost insurmountable obstacles, if we are Pentre-let us take into account a somewhat advanced age; we we reject, & the paref joined to the d-taste confirms the preconceived idea that this-He who speaks the universal language, does not have needing another language. Certainly this Prejudice aggravates our disadvantage which, moreover, must in this respect be common to all southern peoples, however-dant, we should not count on the favor of Italians & the Spanish, their pro- flexibility photic, their ability to make all the rhythms

my, the finest part of their ear in a word, which must make more nuance available to them.
these. It is through Pouïe that Pon learns the languages; this has been demonstrated. Its perfection can therefore comprehend for the peoples who
The difficulties drawn from Linha make them gifted.
habit of speech organs to arti-
completely foreign culations.

Whatever he may think, as long as... we will not accustom the first game-medley to receive and utter all the funds, for a long time we will believe that our language is enough for us, which is equivalent to saying that our books, our ideas, our opinions, our Knowledge is useful to us, we will return.
in an extremely disadvantageous tuátion

|

geufe in relation to other peoples, &

o
This situation will worsen every day;

because everyone perfects their language, everyone envy or dispute the superiority of our literature erasure on many others, & indignant of the attentive opinion that we display of this superiority. Moreover, the literature-younger siblings of ours, if we may speak Thus, they rush forward, while the French are at least stationary; the places are his at our place; he remade it elsewhere; &

the means of doing it in languages unfixed, in countries that still have revolutions to flee, are becoming more numerous & easier. If we remain completely foreign to foreign languages, we reftewe will therefore infallibly go backwards for the progress of human knowledge.

And don't tell me that you're crazy
Good books are translated; for I would reply Clearly: GOOD BOOKS ARE NOT TRANSLATED. We are still too imbued with this prejudice that works of literature {have the main or almost the only part literature worthy of the ultimate; & celt fur-everything in countries where it is not permitted to
to look after the major interests of Phomme that this prejudice exerts its full influence (one worsens). It isthat's where ridiculous efforts are made to trans-to put P admiration so justifiably granted to the first poets, to the first orators,
to men whose genius favored art to stir the imagination, he invented that of

ba Sur Mofes Alendelsfohi, combine in a unifying way the lan-this unique vehicle of our connoisseurs-these, to so many pygmies who drag themselves along the traces of the inventors at a lesser distance of two centuries than of their genius, recla-lying for weak copies more or less ingenious, for Madrigals, for ftances, for chanfons, the rank due to the creative poetry, which inspired men, shaped their minds, sketched their knowledge-frances. I offer to say it, celt une derivation mé-

It is preferable that such a display of honors and praises, and among the works of the mind human, {í the art of verse and yet one of the more difficult, which I neither claim nor deny, nor grant, he and certainly one of the least useful, especially where it is not permitted to to observe everything, to paint everything, to cry out everything to twitch, to put everything on display. Even if he
In such countries, it is necessary to lay down the trait of the ri-
This is a trick to the poet; it is only for fertilization.
the philosopher who can and should hold there scepter of public opinion.

So let no one think they know the foreign literatures through translations of their comedies, their idylls, their Poems. Germany, above all, would lose too much to be judged thus. This confidence, this application (very much maintained in truth by (Passance of diffractions from large cities) this patient affliction, a true type of character-German earth, and which brought forth from the Rhine to Danube almost all inventions true-useful to the human species, happiness that Germany has to be divided into a large number of cantons whose independence compensates for some part of what he lack of freedom; perhaps also the ridiculous but a fatal mania that they have long had the most of the Germanic princes & by conconsequently their courses, to neglect & almost to ignore the language of the country, to the extent that the freedom of the clover, the falcon, sheltered from the disdainful indifference shown to writers national causes; these various causes comcombined have acted so much that all genres study {have been deeply cultivated by the Germans, and even that they print things that we do not offer to publish in Freer countries, with the exception of England. > therefore make us books of morality, of {ciens, of political economy; these are their of their mifcellanea of all kinds that one must be able to confer, and all that we are almost as foreign as literature the most unknown erasure. There, we will find depths of erudition and doctrine, a elprit juste, very accurate descriptions, of very complete developments fi ce reft bien ordered. There at last, & to recall a a source of merit to which we are very attached lenfibles, whose usefulness should not be revocalled into question, and which we propose to apply apparently since nobody tells us still a deputy, we will find some materials ignored issues, idle ideas, failures.

exact ones that we will disseminate with artistry, that we will frame tastefully, & which, in aug lying to our connoisseurs & prolonging our life, will multiply the models that Europe owes us the art of making good books.

But let's return to Mendelsfohn who... will perhaps lead to more than one digrefion; & it's not a mediocre Praise for this esteemed citizen of the world that we find him, his benefits, or his ideas, for almost all avenues of improvement ration of the human species.

It was all about the famous Mr. ZLefing, known by Mendelsiohn in 1754, which is attributed the development of Pelprit & the management the talents of the Jewish philosopher. Lefling, because of the high veneration in which he is held - Magne imposes in some strong the duty to name him thus; Lefling, both erudite, poet, philologist & remarkable madman
these reports, it seems, were one of the men my most universal of this century. His prodigious memory, immense reading, {connoïlfances of all kinds, fon appli-tireless cation have rarely been equaled.
H combined the courage of doubt with patience research. Perlonne was more green than me.
in the history of sciences and faculties and consequently in that of human opinions Maines. At his home, memory and erudition had not worked at the judge's expense nor to those of originality, & while that

Jur political reform of the Jews. aş

that the inexhaustible wellspring of his knowledge provided him-nifloit everything that had been said about each In question, it rarely happened that he did not to gain a new perspective, which one?

one could confide it. Such is the magnificent fique portrait that the Germans paint of Lefing, &, if he allowed himself to have an opinion

nion {ur a writer who didn't compose anything for me In my language, I would say that it seems to me to beto laugh at a large part of these praises.

If he has too often exercised his mind on antique minutics & fur of the fubüilities As a theologian, it was a tribute paid in kind. of the nation, and Lefling is no less Summer WISELY LEARNED in the sense of Montagne. If the dramatic manner is not true, if all these perlonnages make beautiful spirits, philosophers, this great defect of His theatre proves at least the fertility of his talent which has had the influence of many centuries for the national culture of the Germans. If his compatriots learned from his writings to speak ill of their nurse & even to the to slander, this weft that by abusing with humeur & partialité de fes oblervations critiquestions; for he always paid homage of respect, even admiration for our literature & to our great men, a heart except; and this one proved too often unjust so that we don't have to exonerate those who were like that towards him. If Lething seems to have precipitated the German literary figures mands in Panglomania, ce meit pas qu'il

f

They had never been given Shakespeare for anything else something that a raw genius, excellent at studying dier, impossible and bad to imitate, truement fublime dans fes belles conceptions, monstrous in its countless differences, aufh foreign than his century to taste & to Part that it produces. If the Germans have conclu of this opinion of Lefling (this is the mine, I confess, long before I couldour works) that the tragedy of François Weft, perhaps not the best imageginable (although the one that exists) thenwhich gives more opportunity to describe the passions than to represent them; if they have concluded, I said, that our plays They were deserving fans, they spoke like men upset at not being the eldest, and that turnFrench superiority, but not in Lefling's difficulties; he was too tall for Ctre.fi pettily jealous & fi left-unfairly.

As we have tried to paint it, Lefling had to drastically shorten the route to Mendelsfohn, with whom he was a close friend.

The letters on the fentimens were the pre-micre produđion du philofophe hébreu & the proper fruit of our connections with Lef-fing at a time (1755) when the al- language lemande fe débattoit encore dans les langes from his childhood. The precision, the clarity, the elegance that Mendelsfohn displayed in fon ityle inpiirerent un grand astonishmente opened a new career for industry for the political reform of the Jews, etc. 17

German writers provided them with good model & advanced the language of a A very big step. However, one criticism is being leveled at Little fecherefle to this work, published fous the form of dialogues, & which is part of the Philosophical works mixed with the author.
This is why Mendelsfohn was a pro-thorough, methodical, and methodical, but that he had point a vafted spirit. The extreme difficulties-my that the nature of Jewish education & fa poverty had opposed him, and that he
It was necessary to conquer in order to rise to the level of knowledge that he poffed; only allowed him late to OR {on etlor & de fe familiarifer avec
'the sum total of human knowledge; it he had not failed, he had only studied one side of light; Baumgarten's philosophy,
entée fur celle de Wolf, bornoit son horifon.
Mendelsfohn, after having fully approached melted their fyftemes, there were so many impregnated, if I may speak thus, that he could not-I hardly ever see any other kind of tasting. All fes ouvrages fe refentent du pli que les cir-
'confidences of his education had made him take, and the letters on the fentimens more perhaps all his other writings specified-lies in research where it is expected
less.

Mendelsfohn fled to a genre

work that requires a more practiced talent that it will never produce any glory; I mean the review of new works, no not like men who only have Pa-

ap |

his own envious self of the imperfection, or the beloins of the most degrading of cupid-They have accustomed us to it, by degrading Share & profit at the discretion of the paffions who can & will pay; but such as Lefing had designed it to print at the German literature, the impetus that newspapers have given everywhere before becoming a trade in ink, paper, men-{funerals and insults, and to provide him with assistance that Pon would still receive some if they were born to choose & abbreviate in the nameless crowdbrable of books that are being packed today-Today, human connivances are reduced.
the majority of those who cultivate their minds were only able to study, nor understand-How to study.

The criticism was in Germany at the end bad things before periodicals known to madmen the name of Letters fur the new-New Literature, Library of Belles-Lettres tres, bibliotheque alleinande univer felle. Dans Each university published a gazette literary, and the general tone was anrioncer tout with a sweet praise &
bland, fans of the smallest intrusive detail fur VPobiet even of the works which one makes Panalyte. Lefling, MM. Nicolai, Abbt &
a few other lavans flocked to the com.
beginning of the seven years' war for.
write a journal in the form of letters fur the new works, & Mendelsfohn was very useful CRE Ploficurs men, too uneducated to be enthusiastic, they told me an affluence that few nations can boast to compile a collection of this kind. The Litteratur- Briefe font écrites avec. efprit, Elegance, precision, urbanity. It reigns there.

firm, fair, just & profound criticism; in
In short, this work is groundbreaking in the German literature, and Mendelstohn in particular-tage the merit with the very different men-fords which undertook it (C).

(It was in 1767 that he published his Phaedo) (or the Immortality of the Soul). This work an imitation of Pla-'s beautiful dialogue Your well-known fool has the same title. Where did he study?
up to here, the spirit of Socrates in the books of Plato & in those of Xenophon (d).
These two disciples of this great man differed from entirely dependent on the customs of Caradere, of professions; & neither loving nor efti-They are very poor; “they have told us However, Sogra painted in a way that...

(c) He worked on one of the other two giant collections.
that we indicated above. The pre-My volumes contain several pieces that belong to him.

: pf

(&) I don't know why, from PC in the book which he titled / Code of, the reason does not

Kenophon does not fit into the authors' lives of cod. His Economics make a book of very high moral character where he makes Sos speak crate from one end to the other; fa cyropédie ch aufi, a moral novel.

2nd On Mofes Mendelsfohn, femblante, which guarantees that the portrait eft faithful; both Pont made him converse & him gave the Dialogue a certain twist subtle, skillful, a little ironic, lots of clarity, a great deal, a complete doctrine-oriented towards usefulness.

But Xenophon, perhaps more faithful to intentions of the sage who brought down from the sky Philosophy, simpler, less frivolous, less verbose than Plato, his fellow student having by default the advantage of having executed-cut large pieces while Plato
He did what he could say, however he did not offer to Mendelsfohn, refused to exhaust all the refractory of dialectic & to delve deeper in the depths that we have been able to traverse modern philosophers, the same ref-sources that Plato, this great friend of metaphysics, which makes everywhere of its master a Pythagorean philosopher, & the initiator hidden in the darkest secrets of this school. So, as our philosopher He himself said, "The Socrates of Plato that he..."
We must look in Mofes' Phaedon, & if ordinary readers encounter in This work, more than controversial, shows that they would not have defied it, one would not have to disagree-to come at least that he is not gathered there the nobility and the interest, which the philosopher Jew should not be amalgamated with a clover
The dramatic exhibition was truly remarkable.
than the fentimens & of the doctrine of the Greek mortal to the full depth of the deduc-

for the political reform of the Jews &ÿc. 2x

Leibniz's tions, which he made in a word with a clarity and elegance that are quite rare at all times & in all places of great efforts to demonstrate rigor and nt Pimblade mortality or the ability to pen-Dr. Cet la ce ce qu'il appelle sa soul. Sa Demonstration is crucial to this dilemma.
Thought and will, {have pro-properties or of the compound or of the simple, (the properties of the simple being are the subject of first dialogue: those of the compounded appearance-(The qualities of being) simple font or original forces, or modifications of other forces. We ac-rope that penfer & want do not in a simple being modifications of au-very strong, but that they must be original forces, primitive activities;

Whether there is one or several, it doesn't matter:
It is possible that simple beings still have other forces besides that of penfer & of wanting, moving forces, forces forces, attractive forces, forces of repulsion, or by whatever other name one want to name them; it suffices that the pain & the will does not simply modifications of these undetermined forces, but primitive forces distinct from those-here. But all the forces of nature cannot-wind that changes determinations, silence to follow modifications to other modifications fications; they render incapable of annihilating forces originating and fluid within themselves-

memes; therefore the force, or if one wants them forces, of thinking and of wanting, cannot never be annihilated by changes natural, in whatever number to be the forces that make them distinct. It It requires infinite power, and a miracle of this omnipotence is good enough to produce than to annihilate a force, a faculty “éicetteMelpece.

Such is the flaw in Mendels' theory-Fohn, who demands too many suppositions, may-to be, but which does a lot of honor to fa dialectic. As for that part of his work which contains evidence of the immortality of Pame, drawn from the harmony of moral truths and in particular of the very system of our rights And of our duties, the Jewish philosopher unfolds danñs un degré très supéraux tous les re Sources of writer's talent & eloquence what this kind of difficulty entails.

Literary works do not constitute for Mendelsfohn, that an object of the second order, because he had a job in a house of commerce, all of whose duties were his angry. For several years he fled saw the publication of his Phaedo, he devoted fes moments of leisure to works for the instruction of the ration, to commentsres & to translations of some of The books are made. They are made, as far as we can tell, so many monuments to the spirit enlightened, gentle morals, energy of style of this respectable man, & perhaps even more of a continuous challenge to proto produce a great good. Their usefulness finding it reflected in boundary markers, which put them out in terms of my relationship with the public in general, I I believe it's difficult to talk about it.

But among these writings, he included some one that one must be careful not to place there, although it only outwardly intended for the nation Jewish: it is the /erufalem I am talking about.
There, within the limits of a fairly short written document eft expofé claire & traité avec profon-for an object of universal interest,

rand, fi delicate, fi difficult, than by that Mendelsiohn alone deserved recognition fantasies of men who think. He develops in the first part of this work the nature of hierarchical power, or plu-He demonstrates its complete absurdity with a rare logic, a sustained & embellie of the greatest elegance of Style, he shows with irrefutable clarity that ja-
"but a religious association should not"
As such, to acquire, or appropriate,
"any temporal rights whatsoever; that the All-
"powerful, having created free Pefprit of Phomme,
"all companies formed for the con-
"compelled by the fear of executions, the weight
"tributes, the deprivation of public jobs"
"produce only hypo- habits"

"Cry and bafefe, and are contrary to plan of the supreme being, which being also
"The master of body and mind, not me" wanted to spread religion, even that that he chose, if it is true that he had pre-

"one, by violence exercised fur
"Pun or fur the other, although its all-powerful-
"launched him by giving him the means; that the "impious presumption of the Legislators & of the administrators in civil order & in The ecclesiastical order, which is nothing but...
“new men, inspired and prone to error,
"they arrogate to themselves an empire based on the faith of their wives" »blables, establish their opinions & their "ways of thinking, like the true-stable and infallible, and strive senfuite d'y aflujettir les autres, a produit
"& maintained false religions for the most
"a large part of the earth & in all the "time; that it is criminal and tyrannical to forcing a man to pay taxes
"actions designed to spread opinions which
"don't make the fies; that even, the con-»force the provision of maintenance for such and such "preacher of a religious belief which "It is hers, it is to deprive him of the sweet"
"freedom to give one's contribution in part-
"particular to the preacher who preaches honesty to him" „headed in the most perfuafive way, &
"whose moral lessons he would like to take for
"model; that our civil rights do not depend-
"no more than our religious opinions,"
"that of our systems. on the natural sciences"
"such as geometry; thus declaring a
"Any citizen unworthy of trust"
"public, to exclude him from honorable employment"
"& lucrative, unless he professes or

For the political reform of the Jews, c. 25

"gwil nabjure such and such religious opinion-
"Gieufe, it is to deprive him unjustly of the privileges"
"The advantages to which it has a natural right, as well as all his fellow citizens;
"that these acts of violence tend, moreover, to cor-
"to break with the principles of the religion that they want to encourage, since we are fed with
"of frivolous honors & of arable in-
"interests, those who will outwardly profess" such a belief; that those who do not refute
"Not every little temptation makes one guilty"
"It is true, but those who offer them are not exempt from crime; that per-
"to entrust the civil magistrate with the task of bringing to the-"Tolerance in the field of opinion, & dem-

"to sin by not professing or re-
"Pandemic such and such principles, because of them"
"Luppofe the fatal leaks, annihilates entirely-[This refers to] freedom of religion, since the Ma-
"civil giftrat fe trouver juge des conféquences"
"of these principles; will have {partial opinions-
"Spoons for the rule of their judgments, ap-
"will prove or condemn the sentiments of other hisses because they will make analog-
"Gues or contrary to the fens; that Pinter»vention of public officers, when it re-"Fulte of these principles acts against the "Peace and good order suffice for the just in-
"interests of civil government, that the truth-
"Té always powerful triumph in the long run"
"If we abandon it to itself; that is >< she to fight against error; that one na
"Not far from getting involved in this fight, which

26 On Mofes Mendelsfohn,

"She never has anything to fear, unless
"that men do not come and take away his"
natural weapons, and to forbid him hibernation.
Lté de la difcuflion; les erreurs ceffant d'é-
"They can be dangerous when we allow them to..."
to attack freely; that this important "part of the natural rights of humankind" which is exercised on religious opinions, not Therefore, it should have been neither restricted nor modified.
fi ce welit pär la plus odieufe infraction au natural right; that if this is indisputable political seit, cela eft plus tévidentenense RE religious morality, since no longer a prince
"The more he believes in his religion, the more he feels how much he
It would be unjust and tyrannical to take it away from him,
"And moreover, he must judge what he would commit"
"The same injustice & a greater injustice"
"great, since the excesses of tutelary authority-
"They commit a heinous breach of trust, if he troubled the conscience of those who, with "equal good faith, {have similarly per-
"Fugitives of a contrary religion; that all
"religions having been adopted or rejected"
"by honest and uneducated men who had made a scrupulous examination of it.
can believe them through the effect of a wicked illusion.
intimate; & that he would be ashamed to support which were supported by evidence
"that bad faith can cause to be rejected;

that from then on the perfection, even in the taste of truth, ceflemdiétrenlesitine,
"because unintentional error does not Crime, and that the confinement given to the

A truth that one does not believe is an ation
"Guilty; that the more one finds religion
"important, essential to eternal happiness,
"The more we have to repeat the secret in others"
"of confidence, and that thus Pon cannot
"Being intolerant of fans' inconsistency, unless "gwon does not look at religions as political establishments designed to deceive
"Men to govern the micro-dwellers."
The uneducated reader may be surprised to find themselves almost literally in this short & quick analysis of the preamble of Pae of the Republic of Virginia which, at beginning of this year established in fon fein absolute freedom of religion, & Pexpofition of the principles of Mr. Turgot fur the religious tolerance as we read in The published work was not published until after his life. Indeed I'm going to say that these two are transcribed.
pieces; but Ceft because he would have been
It is impossible to express the Mendelsfohn's theory, and to give with more accuracy in the publication of my book.
This agreement from a statesman who had as much as he meditated on human things; of a legislature as different as that of Vir-Ginie, & who has done great things; of a {simple particular, finally, of a Jewish philosopher which certainly had no correspondence dance neither with the French philosopher, nor with American legislators, and who by the sole force of a reason, a reason that is both lazy and methodical, arrived not only at the same results,

but, based on the same arguments, such an agreement, I say, must be regarded as a character strikingly true. Whatever he may think, the TE of Mendelsfohn whose fertility part contains some very curious developments for the Jewish religion, or, if you prefer, for the

the way in which he conceived it deserves to be translated into all European languages.

This work had the strength of more than one written piece Excellent. Jl attracted perfections to the core author; for he appears to have been rejected by the priests of whatever communion this may be of power to forgive the apostle of tolerance, & the They did not all see indignation that Humanity and truth seemed more precious.

to Mendelsfohn that the dark dreams of Talmudifferences. An unexpected circumstance increased their bitterness, their sorrows, their painsnes, & fa débile fanté était fort ébrillée à this occasion.

Mr. Lavater has always had imagination very agitated and his spirit greatly exalted. But There was a time when his extravagance had not not yet crossed all the boundaries, not Pa-does not see rendered by its excess the object of the mistaken from men on the right, and even of their most feverish animadverfion for fes dangerous consequences. It is precisely at that time he translated into German Mr. Bonnet's palingenefie. We only do that This famous Genevan brought into this work a kind of evangelical demonstration gelic of the Christian religion. It appeared

for the political reform of the Jews (c. 29)

fi puiflanie to good Lavater that he demanded in This dedication is to Mendelssohn, who... replied or became a Christian. Surprised and afflicted of this public challenge which could have become fatal To his peace of mind, the Jewish philosopher replied the boiling illuminated by a letter whose Modesty, phoneticity, gentleness, and dialeetics seem very clean to me 'to do' to know the temper of his spirit & of fon ame.

"You conjure me," he said, "in the eyes of the "public & in the most prominent way,
"to refute the arguments it contains, if they "do not seem fair to me: or in the case
"On the contrary, to do what Socrates would have done,"

"If he had read this writing and could find fans
"Reply, that is to say, to abandon reli-
"The region of my fathers to ignite the one that "defends Mr. Bonnet,

"I am convinced that your actions are sinking."
of a pure force, & I cannot support you-
"only views dictated by philosophy"
"Love of humanity. I would be unworthy."
"From Peftime, honest people, if I don't answer-
"I don't owe with gratitude to the fentimens" vatfeétueux that you show me in "Your letter. But I mustn't divulge to you-"
"To understand that this approach, on your part,
"I was extremely furious. How could I-"
"Do I expect a Lavater to carry on?"
to give me a public training session?

"Who could have persuaded you to pull me out of the "crowd against my inclination, for minto enter an arena where I would have liked One ever appeared? Didn't you attribute it?

My extreme circumspection, which is due to fear,
"This very weakness deserved that you..."
Treat him with indulgence.

"However, it is a joy to say that these were never-but neither fear nor timidity, which They distanced themselves from religious disputes. I
"has long been concerned with objects which "have a direct connection with her. I have re-
"Known early on that the first of-
"To see Phomme is to examine his feelings"
"mens & fes attions; fi, dès ma premièree »jeuneffe I spent my leisure hours sada philoiophic & à l'étude des belles let"tres, it was only in the view of me priest-sparer for this important exam. Eh! what
"What other motive could have excited me?"

"If the refültat Pune meditation of several "Years have not been to the advantage of my reli"gion, I laurois manifested by elaia act
"Authentic. The conviction is clear."
to over-attach to principles fi'{everes & fi
"Generally despised." And wasn't it?
„from me a good ballffe as much as five

"fame for not paying homage to the truth,
"despite the internal perfuafion?"

"Yes, sir, it is a thoughtful examination."
"principles of Judaism that confirmed me
"In the beliefs of my fathers. He did not
"I was allowed to live in the 'filence,' and I had..."
.befoin de rendre compte à personne de ma
"A hellish way to hang. I won't hide it from you."

BELOW

For the political reform of the Jews (Ec. 31)

that I noticed in my religion beautiful-
"a series of additions made by men who,
Alas! The bridge is far too dark.
A{poisonous breath of the fuperitition sy often shows openwork, and what is the
"an enlightened Jew who would not hate any pou-
"Seeing it separated, fans giving no harm to the truth of principles? But these principles pes font pour moi se fait si une causa si s s e ne si s e ...
"I am no less convinced than you »®& Mr. Bonnet can be, of the certi-„study of Christianity, & I protect from-"Before God, that I shall remain inviolableattached to my law, as long as my soul
"will not take on a different nature,

“We could have overturned Judaism in "Controversial books, and the terrifier Danys" school exercises, fans that I am
"Luffe mixed with none of these controversies,
"Even a favor in the rabbi- language
nique would have undertaken to cover my lie
"A region of ridicule according to some bad works that no reasonable Jew reads,
"He wants to experience no contradictions from me."
"Edition. Ceit by virtue & not by controversial writings that I would like to refute
"The contemptuous opinion that one has of Jews.
"My religion, my philosophy, my state..."
"provide the most compelling reasons to avoid"
"any religious dispute & not to speak in "My works also contain truths" “important to all men.

i.e.

32 On Zlofes 4 Jemie Îsfobnr,

"The law of nature, it is true, obliges us to spread, among our „famrabtes our knowledge, the taste of "virtue, G'extirpersmautant Gil ef in our
"COULD, prejudices & "errors; & speut-Ctre, could one conclude from this that he
"It is the duty of every man to fight"
"publicly the dogmas he looks at AS erroneous.

"But not all prejudices are equally harmful elements; therefore, one should not see
"with the same eye all those whom we believe "To mark in the forest. They do directly contrary to the happiness of the genre human, their influence on morals is "manifestly pernicious: one should not
"even promising oneself no accidental goodstel; these are the ones that must be terrafled; & such out of the errors that disturb our rest & our happiness, those especially that stifle-
"the seed of virtue is contained within man scholar that he might hatch, fanaticism, the smifantropie, the effect of perfection, the Jégé-A. Libertinism, Pimpiety, etc. But | the "Opinions of my fellow citizens that I observe"
"like mistakes only because qwel~

"They opposed my conviction, they do not that purely theoretical abstract principles principles and too far removed from practical principles
"that are immediately fatal."
'Through their universality they make the slap fur
"which the nation imbued with it, has established the iylième of his morality & of his life

fur laréforme politique des Juifs Sc. i33
They do gently, having accidentally become so.
“important, at least for the people of "the education of which they are a part. Comto fight against such dogmas because they...
"They make mistakes, it's like searching the bottom-
.deinents of a building fans Petayer, for
"See if they're acting crazy. Anyone who's silly
"more real to the happiness of men than there is
"I won't venture to say, 'My own glory'

sion avis fur des préjugés de cette elpéce;
He will refrain from attacking them directly.
in order not to undermine a principle of morality that is stolen from him, before fes fellow citizens have adopted the one he wants to get him used to it.

Besides, am I not a member of urt
"oppressed people who have no other protection" to the one that the ruling nation wants “To grant to these princes? Who does not obtain
"spas everywhere, & never fans refstriction?"
Secs of my communion deprive themselves voluntarily-stickers of the freedoms that others obtain

"Men; they are content to say that fouf-Provided and protected. If any nation receives them under bearable conditions, they must "Thank them as Pun great benefits" since in some states they are being given sjufqu'au féjour. The Joys of your homeland
"do not even allow your afni ćirconcisely, to see you in Zurich. My Others in faith must therefore pay tribute
"of recognition to the dominant nation"
[who understands them in Pamour univerfe]

: g 4

34. On Alofes Aerdelsfobn,

"of men, and which allows them to worship"
"The supreme being in the manner in which their "Fathers adored them. In the country where I fled" in this respect we enjoy a freedom
,decent; & you want us to com-
"Let's beat the religion of the dominant party, that is to say that we were attacking our protectors
"On the side that was most vulnerable to them?"

"I have read Mr. [Name]'s work carefully." Bonnet that you translated. After this as I just said, it is useless to de-
"Ask if he is convinced. But I don't I will not make it difficult for you to find this work,
"as an apology for the Christian religion,
"did not seem to me to have the merit that you "Attribute it to him. I have read a hundred apologies for this religion, which has greatly saddened me

"more insane than the one that, according to you, de-
"See my conversion process."

"The general reflections that Mr. Bonnet
"Placed at the head of his book, me pareif-
"a very heavy split; but the application that he does it to the advantage of religion,
"It is so poorly founded, so arbitrary, that I do not
"al almost not recognized a philosopher."
"His conclusions are infrequent, that with the same reasons I would offer to defend-
"to practice such other religion as Pon would like."
"It is likely that he only wrote for..."
"perlonnes who, like him, make pearly,
"& quine lient que pour fe confirm dans their belief. When the author & the reader-They agree on the conferences, they

For the political reform of the Jews, Fe. 35

ASarrangent ailément fur les prémifles. Mais What surprises me, Celt, that you had judged
This work is capable of convincing a man
"me who, through her education, is naturally accused of supporting ideas contrary to "Those that he exploits, he and impolite that
"Whose place did you put yourself in?"
that one which, far from bringing conviction, must look for her. What do you think, how-
As you give me a glimpse of, Socrates had "found the reasons for Mr. Bonnet's retreat fans-that, frankly, one of us is an example
"Memorable power that prejudices &
education has been for those who are dear.
They seek the truth.

"I told you the reasons that make me
"To be delusional about never debating religion,"
"But if they prefer me, I will overcome the difficulties, and I will resign myself to publishing my reflections. It is to be prefaced that you will you please spare this tiresome die?
Walk, and allow me to return to "The state of peace which is natural, this will be
"I will always regret leaving the road."
"that I flee prefed."

This debate should not have any further leaks, thanks thanks to the prudence of Mr. Bonnet, who hastened to to repair Mr. Lavater's indiscretion, The cor.

a very curious phenomenon that the famous Geneva had a discussion with Mendelsfohn on this subject.
will probably be published at the same time that the rest of the works of the philosopher Jewish.

Neft is a noteworthy fact in this dispute, which was not noticed by me 4 I do not I'm mistaken, the immortal Roullean said Somewhere: the uits may have very specific arguments to be alleged against Christianity, and one cannot afford to ignore it.
to have answered them victoriously that when they are allowed to speak freely" ment & to say fans exception & fans re—held everything they could in that regard. Now on this occasion we had a joy, the most fevant, and the most enlightened of all, who offered himself, fi Pon infiftoit, to develop {es objections;
he even hinted that he was going to be clear about it had particular things to report. However—neither the Theologians of any community nor union, neither Mr. Lavater, nor the Pruflians confiscations For those who doubt this would have been more suitable, wont have encouraged this Jewish friend to publish this that he had. They all did it, and the priests various communities have acted as those who fear disturbing sleep of the Lion. Don't we have the right to be surprised by a conduct that provides a very strong weapon to Incredulous?

After Jerufalem, Mendelsfohn published These mornings. They give instructions to us.
children for the existence of God & the principals subjects of morality and virtue. These matters born & the confessions on the natural religion—real by Rcimarus equal in my opinion, if they ne fur, aflent, ce que les autres nations a of books for these eternally worthy books

He curiofte., The fort was still preparing here to Mofes the sorrows that were to precede of very little in the last few days.

Nothing approached the profound veno-
the ration he had devised for Pêtre fumé,
He was so deeply moved by it that he was filled with enthusiasm.
fiasme that the fagelle & the mo-Deposition of his spirit. Close friend of Lef.
fing from his very first steps in his career Pétude, he cherished the memory of this great a man who died before him, like that of a A godfather and master. A Mr. Jacobi, not the saccharine and insipid poet, whose the little worms after having had a big Vogue have fallen into profound oblivion Gont they make worthy; but {we brother bongtime recommended by the party that executed the poet, and of which a novel was announced as E chébdoœuvie de Pefprit humain, selt found such unintelligible gibberish

that the leak never appeared; this gentleman rat had spent a few days with Lefjust before his death, all of a sudden slender from the vivid darkness of the Roman in the depths of metaphysics, he wrote to Mendelsfohn that Lefling had he then said that he had completely adopted the principles of Spinofa, Mr. Jacobi çn con-It is understood that the study of philosophy leads.
infallibly to Spinotism, and that there is no
a d'ifiue to this inextricable labyrinth than by fe rushing headlong into the arms of faith. Mens.
delslohn in responding to Mr. Jacobi detena said his friend, and such was the occasion for a cor correspondence in which the Jewish philosopher complained of having been misunderstood by one's opponent who had the letters and the responses, a highly reprehensible procedure, very immoral, and which greatly distressed Mendelsfohn. H dreaded further harassment, he feared to see Lefling's reputation tarnished; he feared above all that such a great example would not spread a doctrine that he abhorred, among this large number of men who are training Fans review the authorities, Mendelsfohn fe háta to refute Mr. Jacobi; & it is feared that Your efforts on this occasion have not caused fionné fa premature death, at least this pole-did he poison the last days?

(e) I will not say that Mr. Jacobi, ashamed of his role & of his own absurdities, wanted therefore ner fled another fen at the word of faith which He had become fervent; it wasn't worth it. These works, and all those of this kind, are the fruit of of an absurd and pernicious nature, will soon be ruined in the oblivion they deserve-tent; the connoisseurships they strive to ar They will abhor them entirely. The divinity tutelary figure who invented printing & gave Thus, an irreversible shock to the light of milk. will not destroy his work; to hell with slaps, extravagant machinations succeed in slow down your progress or even darken it by In some places, it will only create stains. paffagercs; it will pierce at the same time, garlic. their to dilute them, destroy them, con-smoke, and reappear in the very place where she was procrite, with a new brilliance.

And this misfortune belongs to too great a of flexibility, she carries with her, we excuse all the more so, as Mendelsfohn never showed more than a very slight one, in everything that had no other object than itself: Tormented by the Rabbis when the fort had been tempted to pearl-pick it; compromised by Pinconfidération de quelques unes de fes connoisseurships; deprived by the opioid prejudices niatres of Frederick II to whom {es philofophes favorites had been persuaded that the Jews They were not human beings, for the... which, moreover, he professed little ultimate value in. literary honors that were promised to him the universal trust he enjoyed, My tender and benevolent esteem for all those whose suffrage could flatter him, among the number from which we can count people of every rank & up to a prince that the phi-Jofophes will one day venerate them as much as the warriors idolize him (f), the vows gathered do everything that the Berlin Academy possessed then of eftimable in lon fein, & named- La Grange, the man of Europe What surprised me the most, me completely in capable of judging him as a rival of Newton & Euler; Mendelsfohn received all these Annoyances with disdain, with calm. The Although he tirelessly did the two

(f) The reigning Duke of Brunfwik still poflséde manuscripts that Mendelsfohn had given him entrusted! K i

4° On Mofes Aendelsfobn,

Friends of friendship, domestic Punion, the hay of the family, the instruction of the nation, for which he faithfully taught philosophy Physics and morality, comforted him with distinctions & of wealth to which he would have defied rather as means of emulation for {cs brothers, that like recomeufes perfonnelles, whose elevation of soul, tempered through unwavering moderation, do not lose him mettoitspas.de.s'exagérerlesprix.

Pure morality, {infinite and penetrating as it practiced tirelessly in the course of his life, he spread it through commerce intimate friendship and domesticity, with a gentleness and a grace that made him infinitely dear to all those he admitted to his familiarity. The tolerance he had defendeddue was in his heart as in {es works, in {philosophical opinions comine in his religious feelings; & the Philosophical tolerance perhaps does not the least rare, its principles were garlic. their too extensive to have any need of exclusive dogmas,

He penloit, for example, that this weft point a duty to believe that there is a God; that This is a great necessity for those who have the logic of believing in one's own existence tence; since a man who is not a feminized man cannot fe to disseminate that all beings must have nne caufe, & une caule fouverainement intellisente, ce qui cit de devoir, difoit.il, it to repeat this steam engine, of 4 entrust to him, to study the laws that he has givenborn of nature, and when one does not find not the crux of any moral difficulty or physicistically, to believe that the all-powerful being And everything is absolutely fine for the best, because we cannot always understand the cause or reason for these decrees, we understand enough to be certain that he 1a ' nothing done to fans railon, nor with injustice, . , These were Mendelsfohn's principles fur letre suprême; & however he spoke with an ultimate neighbor of admiration M. Kant (g), of this Kant as Mendelsfohn

(g) His name is hardly known in France. Mr. Kant, professor of philosophy at Koenigsberg, is one of the most profound thinkers that produced Europe, after having eflayce diverfes routes dans l'examen des premiers princis pes des connoiffances & deli nature humaine, after having written various works such as the single slap of a demonstration of existence of God, the evidence of Danus, the meta-sciences Physical E?e., it is suddenly raised of an eagle's flight, in the critique of the raifonpure ment, to tear down the entire edifice that he had worked to raise, The terminology finregularity of this work. If I may express myself Thus, combined with the extreme depth of the researches, makes it difficult for those who not initiated there, which had to be translated in vulgar German. The German text by Mr. Kant. Whoever undertook this work elt acquitted in full of the burden of proof of the defendant, And since that moment, the results have really nine of this writer's works are within reach of men intiruits. M, Kant also wrote one called Ze deflurêteur univerfel (h) because he has undermined all the foundations of metaphysics fique; of that Kant who was not afraid to advancecer, that by paflant of the visible world to the world

invisible, that is to say, of what is hidden from us experience, to what the faculty of abstraction makes us imagine, and, so to speak, believe Having conceived it, he finds a gap that he melt not given to the human mind to fill;
from where he flees, that he is also rejected by us to be able to demonstrate that it exists, or that it We do not exile a God, and thus this dogma
What a beautiful philosophical perception!

might even be useful as a principle of Morality, a mandatory weft for no mortal.

Mendelsohn loved the dogma of Pimmor-Pame's mentality, which he had so well defended, as tender, comforting, in line with our challenges & to our affections, endowed with a certain metaphysical morality that we are looking at.

in Germany as a work of the first order. Finally, he brought a whole new clarity.
velle in the edifice of philosophy of the pecula tive.. This man, so withdrawn, so meditative, li Metaphysician is not, moreover, a stranger to natural sciences, nor literature, nor to good taste. They showed very good Anthropologifte dans fon écrit fur les diverfes races.
human. He published a valuable work.
fur the sentiment of the beautiful & the fublime &c. &c.
Finally, Mr. Kant is one of the writers of the luof which the society. of the penfans men can extract the most fruit,

(h) See the foreword to these mornings,

Jur la réforme politique des Juifs c. 43

taine elevation proper to the man who him cherishes the extension of his exile, & to take care of what will happen when he doesn't no longer himself. But he was fucking Fe weft not true that in any hypothesis the strong villains might be preferable to him of a virtuous man when everything should to die with this one, he said; his state, even in this short life, would still do the most Disprovable by all. The contrary prejudice comes from what men dazzled by the brilliance

fusuppofent que les grandeurs ou les riches to which he does not weft fans, for example, that guilty parties have risen to power, constitute the happiness. But all those who have frightened some and others favor that species of enjoyment given by the richelles or the hikes last only a few days, Habit soon makes them infidels &.ne

Laifle offers more flexibility than hay.
& the foucis that accompany the great fortunes, or high positions. When one of the most famous millionaires of this fiefdom he exclaimed: these poor rich people are doing a terrible job!
Happy! He said it in complete good faith.
Most of the princes fled to the Pennut chafle who rides on the back of them, gallops with them.
Finally, it is not a clear case of ignorance,
where one can only observe fortune sells what we think it gives. Judge of the men's happiness through their opulence, where by the rank they hold, therefore, is to be judged in blind. It's the Moulier de Varron well done outside, but who often bluffs & whose

The one who wears it slits the flaw.
When we should believe that the bad guys succeed more easily than the people of well in the main squares, in the high place,
to what are called the plufirs, it is not necessary Therefore, it's not right to conclude that they do more, uh.
reux or that their wrong was preferable.
But it is wrong to say that crime is a good thing.
means to achieve wealth, or to Pillustration. For a scoundrel who has made it, there is millions rotting in the filth.
contempt, dishonor, contempt.
When they achieved their greatest successes, a a single accident that exposes them is enough for They made them lose everything, their fans returned. They mar-
'sing always {on the edge of a precipice; They split it open; the fear, the anxiety that in tefultent poison their existence & the tend the most unfortunate of mortals.
Cromwell changed rooms and beds every day, & 1ivofoit se faire rafer que by his children. Thamas-Koulikan did not let him approaching him, his trusted confidant, as close as possible to him ten paces. Lord Clive, victor of the fran-I see in India, conqueror of the most beautiful country of the universe, rich in fifty million, triumphing over the accusations that had been raised motions brought against him in the English Parliament, he always thought he saw two Nabats that he had fmmolés to seize their treasures.

}l carried everywhere the image of these two prayers-
'those expiring by {their orders; & these phantoms

–

for the political reform of the Jews &c. 4s

remorse restored his life to him.
tabie that finally he sought with his own hand an azyle in death. Could one say that these guilty bastards are happy at
In the midst of their successes? Didn't they betray by their turmoil and their electing the fatal secret of their torments and their misfortune?

…No man, added Mendelsfohn, who had found in his excellent mind & in a noble and courageous reflection carried until the long-suffering of what to strike the strong, no man weft completely uh-happiness is not compatible with our imperfect nature, and God who would not have could make us as perfect as him, fans making us equals, could only be reserved for his own Pentiere happiness which is an attribute of complete perfection. But according to the borders-of our nature, he has deprived us of beautiful-blow to property, all those even of which we we were sensitive; he was so displeasing laws that truly offer the best deals, the greatest peace of Pefprit, the greatest blade satisfaction, the most fenfations sweet & the most celestial thread one can parler ainfi, font pour les plus vraiment good men.

This is what constitutes true happiness.
within man's reach on the earth, & God does not refuse it to any of those who seek to approach him through the heart, put all their efforts to comply with the laws whose confidence and reason make the interpreters.

As for great wealth and positions distinguished ones who do not challenge either of them, nor Pautre, as much as one feels genius, the talents, and especially the necessary activities for the considerable administrative work that we men can separate & the indifferent lights-f:bles pour employ avec un jufte dilcerz born into the happiness of others significant resources that impose significant constraints.
see, and they are subjected to severe punishments
those who do not fulfill these duties, Felon Paxiom of divine and human justice:
he will do well: a big deal asked of those to whom Much will have been given; as for these eminent points & to these richcfles that the vulgaire takes for happiness, he still certain that to achieve this, to maintain it to hold on, or to recover there lorfqwon in at Having been deprived by unforeseen setbacks, the means the most für, far from being the crime, like the
those who believe in prosperity of the wicked, is on the contrary the practice of virtue, a reputation for integrity, and activity, of accuracy in homework.

If Pon wants to convince himself of this truth,
Each of us only has to trust in faith.
even & to ask which man he chooses-It was a matter of giving him a place of trust.
or to deal with him in trade,
faith in any other relationship, of man virtuous, or of the honest man, cha-

cun

A fan of doubt would prefer to trust the man.

of good, and even the wicked think so too
for the places which are within their power;
because they want to be well-fed.
From this universal distribution, it refutes in favor of the worthy man a strong of general opinion which leads him to jobs, which attracts advantageous business deals to him, which He is preparing friends and protectors everywhere he goes.
authors. The man whose reputation was lost did not finds none of this, the villain cannot To hope that by affecting virtues; she is Therefore, this virtue is very useful since it is necessary to less of a look to please her fans!
But virtues that are only apparent
They soon deny it, and indignation does not follow.
raised more violently against those who have -deceived public opinion. Ouf the villain Weft-il jamais fans danger. The Man of Good
-aa on the contrary, which does not mask itself & does not
-shows that real virtues cannot to lose the ultimate success. The most Major setbacks do not bother him much; he always has a multitude of ways to to raise. The property of the wicked does not hold that a thread that the slightest accident can Cut and never reconnect. That of the virtuous man is as if attached to a rack, if I can use this common image. The events
No more contrary things can make it falter.
than half a notch; the lower notch, which is the good reputation, until a
h

48 On Mofes Mendelsfobn,

impulfion new faffe regain some new notches of fortune to the one who has earned it que fon norm le progeit.

This is how Mendelssohn arrived at this conclusion that all the affetts & indéduring any confidence of a another life, the direct, tangible interest, groflier even men in this one, was of to walk with a firm step towards the gate of virtue, and that, in every respect, it was therefore false that In this world, the strength of the villains was pre-comparable to that of good people. This excellent-slow man loved to think that God can & probably wants to add others Blessings to those whom he has blessed. in this world; but at least, he said, They must not disregard these. They on the contrary, they must enjoy it with recognition noiffance & {e garder, quand ils en invocation others for a better time, of murmurrer against their position here below, the most advancedtagufe that God could have given on this earth to beings fortified by our hands with our nature. The more we look at it, the more we will see that the virtuous man is intowards divinity in the duty of actions perpetual graces & not in the case of regrets, prayers & impatient wishes.

fendelsfohn was benevolent in principlepes & par character. What transpired from ingenious features of generous sensitivity would suffice to restore his memory as a man very respectable moral character. He had been unfortunatefires; we will not be surprised that he was fenfible. It will be even more surprising that he had fourmis fa fenfibilité à examen de {a raifon. Mendels believed that pity was that in the fens & precisely an emotion attached to our nature, source of many Focal qualities fans doubt, but sterile in herself, perhaps certainly a personal little meritorious (i) & proper, when she welt a point of light, to turn us away from the most high virtues. He believed that if justice It is not about being cruel, kindness is not to be weak; he did not think that all evilhcur deserves interest & support, nor as certain moralists and most theologians Giens Advanced Bridge, which God would have permitted that there were unfortunate people for us to givetake the opportunity to exercise beneficence. So, According to them, the author of everything would have fabricated a part of the world to a few privileged creaturesre in order to give them the opportunity to do of good and to enjoy the pleasure that results from it! Our philosopher did not believe in this unfair preference; he only cared for a beech nut Theory of Misfortune G, the slap of wealth

1 2

a ER oa aan

C1) "It is a passion of a weak soul, a strong & feminine pity that comes from the softness of the soul semue, & loge gladly to women with en-
"fans, to wicked and cruel men (for this (They are cowards): Charron: F; r: CG 39 & pb. 3. C 30:»

go Sur Mofes Aendelsfobi, fafance, which not only could not be to demonstrate that through actions, good-born, just and generous, but who said to be a virtue when it did not bear fur of inflexible and severe principles (k), since she then obeys the importunity, by-Courage in excess emboldens the wicked.

"He is one of the unfortunate," he said, "because..."
God having granted men freedom & intelligence, & having placed them within reach to study and recognize the physical laws Wil gave to nature for success
the work and production of the riches, There are men who apply themselves less to the study of these laws or to the work that they prefer, derive less product from this work. Jl eft is still one of the unfortunate because-that the necessary consequence of the laws of phyfiques made for happiness & Pordre gé-general sometimes lead to accidents private individuals, The fire is good & ferrous to a thousand uses; but it can burn the negligent & with them those who approach them. The wood And iron is very useful for our work;

(k) If Pon bestows a favor upon someone, says Cicero, something that is harmful to him, instead of being Useful, one is not benevolent. (Whoever gratifiestur euipiant quod obfit, ubi prodeffe volunt neque benefici, neque liberales &c. L. 1. of Offic.) 3 but {if that is true, how much more so is it-tag that the particular benefit which harms the public thing, far from being a virtuous action

Is this a very serious offense?

but they can bluff the clumsy ones, the stunned, or those who find themselves within reach Some imprudent people, women make fertile & celt un bien qui perpetuate des familles; but their fertility can overwhelm them &
the unexpected death of the father, which is an accident natural tooth, can lose them in misfortune.
U eft is finally some unfortunate people because there are ignorant or wicked men who harm

as, Or abusing their intelligence, oppressthe others & encroach on the rights of their like, which, fans do the
The happiness of the oppressors brings misfortune to the oppressed.

Two of these strong misfortunes & of unfortunates have their inevitable origin in the nature of things that cannot be at the same time in a way & of other, nor combine opposing properties, where incompatible. Man is fragile; certain a supreme gift from the Divinity; but it does not can't be fragile to the pleasure of fans Peter to the pain, and one could not deprive him of one of these two fan gendabilities. remove it Other; they are inextricably linked to the same nature & same organs; It is the same faculty exercised differently.

The first two species of my happy They do so therefore through accidents related to the nature of the physical laws that could not be otherwise than they do, for God all good and all-powerful certainly did everything for the better, and reunited all Mine who were not not effectively incompatible. For di-to mitigate these misfortunes which could not be completely suppressed, he endowed the benefai-

a natural attraction accompanied by A vivid and very pure pleasure. He therefore did not perput the unfortunate to exercise charity fance; but on the contrary, he put the principe & the charm of benevolence in the the heart of man to trample the misfortunesreux; it is for these that the benefactors were done, and the goodness of heaven allowed that they found the most delicious rewardpenie in Paccompliffement even of duty that she imposed on them to reduce the evils of their ileibles.

As for the third type of unfortunate which are not necessary; for ignorance could be dissuaded & wickedness repressed; in a pourvu à fon foulagement & à fa almost total decrease, by adding to the general feeling of complicity that all misfortune, a movement of indignation tion against the wicked who allow themselves to harm others. We do not limit ourselves to to challenge the oppressed, we want them to avenge, and this feeling, just as it It will become clear, it will make the oppressive flowers disappear from the earth, will bind their arms, and after their having removed their power to harm, they will remove it. even the will.

It is still to achieve this goal that God has made studies very attractive which manifest the rights and duties of men my, or who are learning to tread their ailments. Progress in these studies which reflect the pleasure found there, extend, & fans doubt they will extend every day the circle of confidence & will decrease fans cefle the evils of humanity. Aui Mendelsfohn was very keenly interested in progress in political economy that he had born in Germany, where the physicists François quickly encountered difficulties, & of which he hoped for the regeneration of the species human, because he was looking at this science as likely to be brought to the greatest degree of obviousness and implicitness.

To reign, he often said, is to protect human rights and guaranteeing them from all violation. The science of these rights, weft not very extensive. It is susceptible to a great clarity, and from there this incontestable & encouraging truth, that with whatthat application & some instruction, on maybe a great King even for fans expérince, even with mediocre talents cres. Aufli in the current order of things human beings, did our philosopher hold for the monarchy, or rather he found that the disDistinction of governments is a conflation of ideas and words. The republic seemed to himmust include all governments, where Padminiftration & la forveraineté font entre the hands of several men. This was a crucial point, he said, a government different from the Ariftocracy or democracy; a republic can to be aristocratic, democratic & even monarchical according to the form of its administration Inflation, England is a republic monarchical, & Holland with its Stadtperpetual hereditary holder, no longer King than the Kings, in and another. The Poland before becoming a province of his neighbors, was an arifto- republic monarchical where the people were enslaved, the noble squires, & the King's united magistracythat & perpetual. |

There are few true democracies. today it is only known among the little ones cantons fuifles, the Pauliftes of Bréfil & the Zaporozhian Cofaques; again these comeThey are in danger of being destroyed by the Ruflie. republics like Sparta, Athens or Geneve, who believed themselves to be democratic, were true aristocracies, since the real people of the country, the farmers, the workers, the merchants, the greater part of the inhabitants make ants or Pont summer at Citizens' power. Wherever it is found of subjects or slaves, there is no democracy, |

That a well-ordered monarchy with good laws and good morals, may good be premaple to a bad republic such as have

were most of those who went into exile, that is That much is certain. But what about her?
should be preferred to a good republic constitutively as one can conceive it, That's something no one would ever say.

for the political reform of the Jews &c. ge will think that the monarchy is infinitely more suitable for establishing & increasing with Pin-equality of wealth, corruption of morals, and that it degenerates more easily into government-arbitrary decision. It's the government arbitrary, which is bad; the worst of all the anarchic; the depotic; the others are imperfect and deteriorate or improve-bind men because of what they get closer to those.

Such are the infinite principles in substance.
simple, but irrefutable in their clarity that Mendelssohn spread in his writings and that he drank profusely in Paimable trade of familiarity! He had won all hearts and desires all minds of their colony. They were deeply venerated there;
And it is by deserving this flattering tribute that he had acquired the right not to revoke in doubt that a better education, a treatmore equitable, the admission to pro-innocent feffions, fufliroient pour fubftito kill the prejudices of the enlightened Jews & virtues, and to bring them up to the level of the most distinguished peoples. It was especially of a great deal of latitude granted to their in-duftrie that he awaited their regeneration. He believed that the eternal necessity of speculation fur of money & for money, to realize all about money, to look at money as the sole purpose of any undertaking, fufhiroit pous to corrupt a generation of the Golden Age, & that such was the principal cause of the extreme

se Sur Mofes Mendelsfohn, corruption of cities where everyone, & the go-government at the top, only thinks about profiting from the delirium of greedy and unruly pañions, or even to incite them to extort money from them; where everything tends to foment both the parfe & greed; to deceive the people that he can to rely on other resources than one's work. He did not look with the super- thinkers official, where the mercenary panegyrics, this small-scale fermentation as an activity productive, & necessary for burdened nations; nor the accidents it causes, such as commercial events; he saw them there On the contrary, the most horrible scourges of the comtrade & finance & the most fertile with every kind of herb, and of corruption.

This is generally due to a utilitarian morality, a great Jewish spirit, an inflexible probity, a gentle and benevolent tolerance, a very active flexibility, a very reason It was astonishing that Mendelsfohn was deeply affected. ment refreétable, rather than by fes literary talents which however will inspire de Pétonnement, fi l'on confire le point. from which he had departed, and the few resources that nature and strength had given him, or rather everything they had refused him.

Without diminishing this man's glory singular who by dint of patient industry, of energetic will; of natural genius & of infatigued afiduity seft elevated from the fein of this claffe that we have so striven to render the last, at the forefront of the philosophers & writers who have brought renown to Germany, Can we not say that his example, & furtout le succès de fes foins pour l'éduca. tion of the colony should reduce to the filence those who persist with unwavering determination It's quite ungenerous to portray Jews as too degraded to ever produce a race Of worthy men?

But I was not far from that proof in fact, to which I could add a great dealother blows to make me realize that we don't have cefle to blame the Jews for their misfortunes crime. By studying with some attention political and moral relations in the.

which they {they found at different times & different countries, the reciprocal influence of peoples among whom they lived & of various political governments to which They were ants; the one they had fur Industry, commerce, customs, the
The march of connifence; the change Finally, qwa fubi their original genius, on history has shown that the Jews considered as men & as such-Toys were very corrupt, as much as that they were denied the rights of Pun & of the other. More than one writer esteemed & fur-Mr. Dohm thoroughly explored this important subject.
I will reflect, I will consider their ideas,
I will sometimes add mine to this.
Happy Pon can no longer claim good faith after reading this book

the oft-repeated objections that have appeared to confederate, if I may speak thus, against this unfortunate horde up to the men who pen-They are; for the apostles of tolerance themselves They themselves have forgotten their duties and the principles when they raised the cause of Jews.

EM ELLE f,

ON THE POLITICAL REFORM OF JEWS.

In most European countries Constitution and laws tend to prevent the spread of these unfortunate fugitives d'Afie flétris in some forte par leur feul name. It is one of the states where they are forbidden to ab-folument to stay, where the protection of the sovereign wealth granted to travelers of this nation that for a short time of time, sometimes limited to a single night; & in almost all the others on my received the Jews that {under the conditions more expensive and more degrading. They do not They are not citizens, they barely make habitolerated times. Most often it is permitted

'that to a given number of Jewish families to settle in a country; this permitfion les refre en certains quartiers & ja-but it can only be acquired through a a considerable figure, in many Even in the country itself, they are not admitted unless that they do not already produce a good effect A Jew cannot marry without permission.
specials or fans to pay: widower he cannot remarriage fans of new expenses; each child increases the amount of tributes of which It is loaded, there is very little left.

On Mofes Mendelsfobn,

one for each of his actions; is he the father of Several children? He can hardly establish one is the fool of his cradle; the others do forced to seek a foreign land manages & no less inhospitable. Does he have girls? How to get them into the limited number of families - of the nation living in the same city as him? One Therefore, the Jew almost never lives with his family.
fans: inside everything is taken from him until Domestic bliss! Outside he finds nothing

The enemy men. In detail

In communal life, laws are proliferating against him with an extreme rigor, a bias undisguised. Despite the multitude of the fees he has to pay, the means of accessing seeking them was infinitely limited for him. By-everything excludes providing services to Pétat, faith in peace, faith in war; everywhere Agriculture is forbidden to him, in almost no country in the world can he profleder of real estate; any community of trades {she would believe herself dishonored, if she received-sees a circumcised man in the number of fes mem-Jews. Thus, the Jews are excluded from all the mechanical arts, and among the liberal arts, or science, mathematics, physics science and medicine are the only means honest use of the very small many of them who confer in the state of oppression where their hordes languish difperfées, afez de courage & de ferénité lady to rise up to study. Happy

Even if they conquer the ultimate at that price!
But ordinary men cannot par-
not even giving in favor of great talents
And the eminent virtues, the fault of being born Jewish.

What reffource will therefore reflect on this intolertuned fans patrie dont l'indduireie eft fujette beset by a thousand obstacles, which cannot anywhere acc-to seek, nor to freely exercise their talents, at the virtue in which one has no faith, for the-Why is there no kind of glory? ...
None other than retail trade (because the
a small number of those who pofñlédent aflez of good in order to be able to undertake a com-considerable trade with several branches moreover, they were completely banned from Jews, can they be counted when it comes to the entire nation?) This retail trade in which the frequent repetition of very high gains modest means may only suffice for a subsistence paltry; or the lending of money, the profit of which very much in line with natural equity and has become, thanks to bad laws and prejudices that they give birth, the domain & the finale-the lie of a dishonest profession, that's it the main one being almost the only way to to support the Jews, and while they are being treated like children tolerated, the laws detect an unjust bias for their debtors; thus aggravating the humiliations, perils, and multiplying by conféquent the rules of a nation already fi
oppressed.

What motives could have led the governments to...
European nemens to observe for aini to say by common agreement the procedures barbarians towards the Jewish nation? It is difficult-cile de fe perfuader que tant dhommes ins duftrieux cannot be useful to the State because-that they strengthen of Africa & that they distinguish themselves by the beard, circumcision & a manner particular to adore the supreme being. In truth this cult which was passed down to them by their fathers would render them incapable of enjoying the same rights as other citizens if contained principles that contradicted duties towards the state, if he forbade them to to respect good faith, if he were to do them a law to hate those who do not make their belief ance, if he allowed them fraud and theft of morality, that is to say, focal relationships.

But the religion of the Jews was founded on the law of Moyfe, which is venerated among Christians who attribute to inspiration immediate of the divinity, does not contain certain-not the anti-focal principles that we have just stated. His commands-mens ne font point in contradiction with those of justice and humanity; they do not do not offend good faith; they bite-They do not condone fraud; far from inviting it, they children, the Mofaic law, in particular founded on agriculture, is even special-contrary to traffic (D), that of all THE

+

Mr. Michaelis went into great detail instructive {on this subject in his work fur
the Mofaïique law. 35-44,

the ptofefhons that can most naturally to lead there. Cere letils who allow themselves-troy fraud against a Hebrew Paccu-to offer under the law to deceive the men of another religion, and the priests intolerant people who collected slanderous tales
They did not consider the opinions of the Jews.
in that it betrays their own prejudices (m).
It is not that the precepts given by 'Moyfe more than thirty centuries ago at a horde which still had to become a nation, may all be equally suitable for-jourd'bui in each state to the members scattered from this nation. Moyfe wanted that The Jews seized the land of the Canaanites, because one of their ancestors had hayed there

(m) The writer who put in the most effort to collect such tales, who has published with the most relentless effort & I deffein
the most visible way to ward off and justify contempt of perfection, eft Eifenmenger dañs fon judaism revealed (entdecktes Judenthum). I must be added to it as worthy of equal contempt a printed work from 1779. under the title of obfervations of an Alfacian in the pre-sentence affair Jews from A'face, who gather all the abfur-fabulous tales scattered throughout the collection:
of menfonges, notably in the collection of Jewish stories (Ulrichs Sammlung jüdifeher Gefchichte) always omitting the refutation of an offensive fact, & which cites among other things, such as the capital crime of the Jews of the Sundgau the decicide committed by their year.
cereus in the Paleitine.

i

with her flocks four hundred years before-before (n); he wanted them to form a state independent, separate from any other nation, fans, no mixing, & that they obey until-than in later years to their legislator. From there this invincible attachment to their law, infinite-intensely exalted by the percussions. Hence this pride, more imposing than reprehensible, which,
by bleeding them, they were led to be foolish about the rest.
men. Hence this perluafñion of a preeminence, which after all every religion attributes to himself, who in later times & the state of depression of these unfortunate people has deteriorated perhaps born of hatred mixed with contempt for their perfectors. Hey! How about the Wouldn't the Jews be convinced that they are doing the first men, when by a miracle far greater than those of their ancient history, they still exist despite violence from all nations? Com-Why wouldn't they, in turn, hate the peoples who borrowed from their books made up all their dogmas & which per-

They barely manage to exifter at si dcux?
But the modern religion of the Jews does not-contains within itself no precept of hatred & of offense against the members of a com-different communion; it is in this respect par-actually similar to all religions which

(n) See the excellent work of Mr. Michaelis Title: Mofaique Law (mofaifches Recht) Tom r pe t17. & following.

for the political reform of the Jews (fc. 65)

form more or less the natural links men, and always impose on their practitioners a certain repugnance for those of another communion. God forbid.
that this is a reason to reject the rights from citizen to practitioners of some religion that it be so; for it would be necessary to conclude that The State is obligated not to tolerate no religion, or at least none of them.
rer . qune “feule; & cette cenclafion qui to attack royal natural rights and would upset all the companies, it's horrifying. But badly-Fortunately, she is no less absurd.
in politics than vicious in morals;

Every society is composed of small fo-
-private companies, each of which has principles private individuals; inform their members feelings and prejudices aside, and treat-one hundred to their activity uri determined circle.
-world iubfiite however; &the nations bie:
that is to say, freely governed, Da dan.
The Gentleman and the Bourgeois; Partifen and the farmer, the soldier and the one who does not Pet pas; the favored and the unlettered profent barriers between them & yet habittempestuous and fervent in the same country. May the Christian tien & the circumcised, faith Jewish; {faith Mululmen, a follower of Ali or Omar, of the Pope or of Luther, Socinus, or Calvin deviate from this path.
of each other: the great and noble employment
the government is committed to making reinforcements that each of these divisions turns to profit
'of the great force at least by a more keen degree of attachment to her based on fur a greater enjoyment of freedom. We cannot doubt his good faith. better treatments would remove the orejudged of, religion which prevents without Moyfe being more vulnerable. The Jew Laughs, pins, man. Even though he lies, Jew. how could he not like a state in the nuel he would be allowed to become a property owner

Silence? Where contributions would not jivs larger than those of other citizens? {ju nothing ne Pempe:heroit d'afpirer à Peltime “And to the confidence? Why would he hate it?” men from whom he would no longer be separated by humiliating prerogatives & of which he parTageroit les droits & des devoirs? La now the beauty of this happiness, and the unfortunate probability that for a long time the nation will not Hatter can obtain it later, by increasing- would terrify the price in his eyes. His country becomes- right of the fatherland. He recarded it with the tenderness of a long-neglected son & restored to his rights. These inferior feelings parabiles of the human heart would speak well higher than all the fallacies of the Rabbins that we have so exaggerated fi ce mef €alomniés.

_ Take a look at the history of men & you will see that indulgence & Government impartiality has always triumphed over the principles of religion. What doctrine more than that of the Quackers renfirm of manifestly contradictory dogmas to the principles of the Focal Union? The Quaker does not want to participate in the defense of foundations country; he claims to know no reason

He was given permission to wage war, he refutes the claim. lending an ferment which seems one of the most essential support that the state can promise of dogma. It has particular uses, an exterior that distinguishes him; he takes on the task not to ignore to anyone that he separated from the rest of his compatriots, however Among the Quackers, the Arabaptiites are part of it. all good, useful, and respectful citizens.

The Catholic seems to be authorized by fa belief more than any other affectatenr dg Whatever Religion this Roof has to the reyaraer comine tepare de tout ceux qui ne penfent Not like him. His religion is in my eyes the unique condition for aspiring to the fall, She told him about the obligation of pro-profelistism… However, he is a very useful and very zealous, in England, in Holland, in Pryffe, in Ruflie.

The same can be said of the Lutheran in Alfare, of the Focinian & of the reformed in Trans Filvanie.

The Muslims were in Spain before pearlescent work, they still do it today in Austria & in Ruilia of peaceful citizens,

The Jews were useful subjects in the Empire Roman. Conquered & consequently elclas Yes, they acquired privileges there. rables, such as the administration to all the employees civil law, military law, & among others Ka permission to live in accordance with their their own laws (0). They conferred during more than four centuries of unlimited enjoyment of all the rights of a citizen; that is to say, enough that they fulfilled their duties. Several of them were raised to the heights of dignities, up to and including the honorary prefecture (p); & quard ils démerent ce exifence ho-normal, when they became corrupt, it was that they were oppressed, deprived of their laws and their patriarchs, provided for the magistrates Roman treaties, excluded from civil offices, & the honor of being able to well deserve the homeland, burdened with heavy loads, fans compenfations, reduced in the ciaffe of beings the vilest (q); celit enhn than fathers of Pegliphe (r) devoted to fanaticism weak O EDs to destroy the fages regulations of their predecessors, to be given evidence of their zeal for a religion whose charity is a slap in the face, by treating fans charity to those who do not profess it; in a word to overturn all the principles of the morality and fairness to honor God; because what, for example, should we call the law that argues that the greatest crime committed by a child who is not profane towards their parents converted, they could authorize these to deprive him of legitimate means? Isn't it all at once to infuse to nature, to hen at the defelpoir the

TER

+ 3

---

(o) Mr. Dohm proved it very well by two paffa-

"ages of Origen (L. 6. cr in epit. ad Rom, &p. 243. epift. ad Africanum, Edit. Wetitei- (niana), It was only for major crimes rates that they could be translated before the Roman courts; throughout the rest, or when it is only a question of untangling between Jews, their own judges & elders i Ethnarchæ majors) wield almost unlimited power, as can be concluded from the testimony of Jofeph (antiq. jud. L. r4. c. 10). The laws Roman women call their patriarchs to whom we had granted supreme power in all clerical affairs, clarifying matters, he lufires, fpettabiles (vid. Cod. Theod. L. XVI. t VII, L & 11. 13. 16. judwis caelic. & Samarit), MÁ!

L. 22, Cod. Theod. by jud. fafligio dignitatum said the paffage, speaking of the patriarch Gamaliel'

has

(q) The laws call them bomines miliffimos, exa treme conditions. i

Cr) Christophe pronounced fixed speeches against them in Antioch, and this was probably his credit at the court of Arcadius who deprived them of the Auta-nomie, les fourmit aux lois & aux juges ds Rome &c. &c.

(s) Si quid maximum crimen, says the law, jz matrem patremve, avam vel leviam taces filios vel nes buddies (that is to say those who had signed) the Christian religion) commiffe aperte pottea rit comprobari, manente iz eus ultione legitis ma., —— Parentes tamen eis, Falcidiain debitae Juccefionis relinquent, ut hoc faltem in bonos rem religionis elecfac meruifje videantur, La 28y.

Cod. Theod. de jud.

more honest Jews, sharpen up to Christians one of the most perverse among this nation?

But the character and spirit of the Jews will not-
They didn't really justify the harshness that we use.
towards them? Can they get used to it?
keep those of another religion as members of the same civil society?

Haven't they earned it in all nations?
The accusation of bad faith? All {uper-
Dear, didn't every Frenchwoman have an invention?
Jewish tradition? In countries where too many tolerance is granted to Jews, they do not do they did not - almost entirely seize the branches of trafficking from which they are not excluded?

If all this melts away, too much harnessed by the
In fact, Jews are politically parkint nuis unfixed in a state, and such and the caule in-defrutsible laws, dn less reductive imposed by the most lazy government officials to this nation with a unanimity that is fleeing perhaps to justify them.

Railonner ainfi celt obviously take the effect for the coffee, & strive to juftiproud of a policy oppressed by evil even that she produced. We would admit as demonstrated by the criticisms of which one burdens the Jewish nation, which is under a state of oppression where she lives would explain them all, or rather would encourage much more corruption great. All honest means of iubfifty years are forbidden to the Jew; how could one not delcendr Oit-il pas à Ja mauvaile {oi & à la for the political reform of the Jews EJc. qi fraud? The laws barely grant it lexis-Tence, how could he believe himself bound by them?

What voluntary obedience can he render?
what attachment can bind him to the state that Abused? What could be simpler than hatred?
for the nations that write it, evidence of the one they carry him? Who has the right to demand virtues from him when one does not Pen Don't believe it's sensitive? Why be surprised?
that he takes up too much space when he is not In laifle than one? Why would I reproach you?
The mistakes he's forced to make? All of them race of men placed in circumflanks these similar ones. {He would conduct himself in the same way,

We have the power in our hands; we

We have always had paving stones; it was therefore & it is

It is still up to us to cure the Jew of his prejudices.
who do our work, by delousing us ours. Moral perversion in the What a wretched and fallen nation this nation has become.
through leaks of an unreasonable policy that would be a just cause to persevere there.

And to make this policy odious worthy fruit of the barbarity of the ignorant fools France, as well as to explain the deplorable effects, we must not trace, Gwen Phiftoire in broad strokes.

The Jews" treated like beasts of burden & almost like malevolent animals at the time
where the religion of the Christians became the dominant religion.
nante, excluded from all the paths that could-they would lead to an honorable exile, gntrerent with even more eagerness in

#2 On Âlofes Mendelsjobn,
those that lead to fortune. They find there-see great facilities, La poifeflion land and low-profit agriculture in the ages of barbarian invasions, & even in those of feudalism, eco-friendly prohibited; but almost all trade this & the financial affairs of Europe were in their hands. They had brought of the Roman Empire, more knowledge, a more cultivated mind than those who should have Epic of the irruption of the various peoples From the north, the conquering nations. They were not Their point is not stupefied by savage customs.
The spirit did not stop in its progress by the new improvements, nor by the Catholic philosophy. If Pon compares the connoisseurs of dominated Spain at the time by the Arabs to those of Christian Europe, There can be no doubt that he exiled me for a time where the most enlightened part of Europe was the one inhabited by the circumcised, Finally the dispersion of Jews in all countries of world then known, their links more strang-yours, their more extensive correspondence of-naturally see them giving in the trade of marked advantages on the nations which dominated Christian Europe, whose noble part attached shame
to this profession, while the second clatter, either through incompetence, or through fear of banditry of the nobility, no risk considerable speculation. The more True enterprises were rare and few were,

|

The greater the profits, the more... eggs became objects of envy for the princes & for the people whose fury was kindled driven by greed, it was fancied by the Discovery. Soon the ideas, the facts, the
The men, once chosen, were transformed at will.
fanaticism and hatred.
Never has any people suffered from per-auf cruel, aufi damned, aufi fecutions Long. Extravagant prejudices concur.
rurent with atrocious laws (t) to aggravateyear in

(t) Of all the nations that founded the states ~ current Europe, there is none which had published more severe laws against the Jews, than that of the Vifigots, who led their Fan efforts detour towards total destruction of a festival that they abhorred (deteftanda fecta, (This is their expression), We find their edits in Lege Wifigoiborum L. XII. Tit. 2 © 3 & in Georgijch Corp. Jur. Germ. Damn. P. 2166.
These laws prohibited Jews from this-to celebrate their Sabbath and their Passover; (L. XII Tit. AT. 1. 5. Tit. IH. 1. 4) to marry according to the rit mofaïqve (L. XII. Tit. II.1. 6. Tic. 1. 8.)
to regulate their food and drink accordingly lelprie ce reduire Tie xiii Tie 2. 9 Tit 3.
l. 7.) to perform circumcision (Tit. 2. 1. 4.)
Not even a built-up Jew was admitted as witness against a Christian; fes defcendans hissed, after there was no longer any doubt due to the purity of their faith, they were received at depofer in the case of an offense committed by a Christian (L. XII. Tir 2. l. ro). The penalties Orders against the transgression of these laws were or the last {torment to be inflicted by The Jews themselves, or stoning, or the atrocious torture of being burned alive (L. XII Tit. 2. l. 11.)

rs

towards their stronghold. Did a misfortune happen?

The slave of a Jew, if he were to become a Christian, would obtain-freedom fades away. He lived relaxed to receive gifts from a Jew. The Priests had their precise instructions to watch to the observance of these laws, to make enquests for the sins of the Jews and to punish them, finally to take against them all the means-res that their orthodoxy their dietetic CE nd iliis cuiholice agendtin forte conuciiai, w. XII, Me 4.105359 The judges CeumMers imi 'oferoienc undertake no investigation against a Jew fans the presence & participation of an event-that, or of an ecclesiastical official who had full powers therein powers, because these judges were called to order.
to be more open to charity towards heretics, or perhaps to their defenders (Title 3, 1 24 If a cleric were found in fault on these occasions, that is to say, if he had with some semblance of humanity, he was con-sentenced to a three-month ban and a fine of a pound of gold; this last punishment awaitsmust also the judge who would have hesitated to execute the judgments pronounced against the Jews by Les clerical. The laws of the Franks were less fervent against this nation which, fleeing Their laws belonged to the domains of the Kings.
& the norimoit fervi fetal. This arrangement ment les affujétiiToit à la vérité à certains corvées, to certain taxes, & the peers in the lower part of the subjects; but he sharpened them-king at least the special protection of the madman-verain. (See Du Buat Origins of Paucien government of France, of Germany, EF of Italy (L. 6. ch. 10), The Jews were in The same position in England, at least crazy the reign of Grillamne the Conqueror (in the middle (of the 11th century) They belonged to E nronne.
The laws of the Popes were not so harsh feur regard; elie les dectare feuldinene tuhsbiles

Less PUR o Ze ca 1
Jul aak of the Jews Er. a

by physical order of things (u)? the jnifs
They were reputed to be the cause of death, they de-

to give testimony in court, to be public sector jobs, and forces them to redact exGrbitans interests (Cusz. X.de Judaæis € Heret). This is not canon law, this is what the con-Further commentators on this Law (particularly-linking Martude Jurisd. Lag. hundred. 2. case. 67). who wanted to attribute to the ecclesiastical exclusive jurisdiction in all cases of religion concerning Jews, for the reason very singular aflurernent, that the Roman laws foumettoient au bras fcculier feulement les actions of Jews independent of the region, The nature of ecclesiastical jurisdietion iufking to demonstrate Pabfurdity of this opinion nion, since such a jurisdiction would not be to extend that to the members of the church of which the strongest punishment, which is excommunication tion, I cannot bear the burden on those who by their haiffance are already excommunicated. Aú in Most Catholic states, don't we have granted to the candle a claim to prejudice divisible by the sovereign right of the sovereign; there is no that countries where the dwelling is totally in-forbidden to Jews like Spain & Portugal tugal, where the examination of all the accusations of heresy in general, & consequently also the bereavements of the Jews make the effort of Pinquifiction. However, Popes Sixtus V, €F Clement VIIe explicitly stated that the Jewish religion was not among the herelies & that consequently she does not reinforce. tifloit not at the tribunal of the inquisition there they have thereby revokes a bull of Pope Gregory XIII. who had brought the Jews to this tribunal. (Amelot of the Houffaye History of the government de Venile, edit. from 1695. Volume I. p. 280.

4 \ LA .

(u) The most striking example of this blindness,

TA Sur Mofes Alendelsfobi, see that they have angered heaven: their destruction fanglante was the average fire of the appailers Had an epidemic or a famine taken away a certain number of inhabitants? the Jews in poisoning the fountains had produced this mortality; a frenzied people the ill-facroit or a hasty procedure the conduifoit fur le boischer au gré de ces fanatiques. (x) Was the iffle of a war unhappy? Some betrayal by the Hebrews must have been involved. the single cause, and these victims were slaughtered filthy. The sovereign, or his ministers If they financed it with money, it was necessary that the Jews lent them money, and when the debtors who blames the Jews for all misfortunes publis, et, fans doute l'accufation portée against them for having caused the confusion of mind of Charles VI, King of France; at the flight of that all the Jews who refused to embrace Christianity was forced to leave the France. V. Villaret, Hifloire of France, in Vans fairy 1393:

#

(x) See the history of the Jews by Bafnage, & the history- Mr. Büfching's History of the Jewish Religion (Gefchichte der jüdifchen Religion). One of the the most forceful perfections and that of the an-born 1348. when the shovel that ravaged in at that time almost all of Europe was imute to the Jews. In France, in Germany, in Italy, in Suiffe, the furious people threw themselves upon them, the maflacra, the brula, in strength that even Unjust judges don't die, the law of doing to carry out their inhumane orders, all-powerful leaders thought it best not to If you don't pay, the obligations were declared. null; happy are the creditors, fans of Delenie if they were not expelled from the country and punished of the harm they received (y).

The Jews would have been more than just men but if they had not hated those who were perlécuting with such injustice; if they did not-do not see response to the active tyranny of their enemies at least by indirect expressions of their hatred, and when they would do avenged sometimes against individuals of the Christian religion of the cruelties they experience-They see, there would be nothing but contortion:

to the nature of man. At least lufur and the greed for an exorbitant gain, did they to seize a nation that could not by a more honest way to hope for profits MOda, nor enjoy with security those that she had done; but in this respect as

(y) It was thus that in 1347, the Burggraves of Nuremberg & in 1360. Two gentlemen
The Bokeme decrees were issued by the Emperor Charles IV. They were relieved of all their obligations.
to Jews, capital and interest. The Emperor Wenceslas did even more. The year 1390. by an edict published throughout the empire, all the Princes, Counts, Barons, Lords, Knights, Servants, Bourgeois, & other subjects residing in the land of the Franks made free & abbots of All debts, including principal and interest. See Haeberlizs teutfehe Reickshifloire (Hifioire de P'Einpire of Germany) VOID p. 586.

-àq any other, the monks feuls annaliftes deg Somewhat remote, they have undoubtedly exaggerated the methods of the Jews; & what that the wrongs of this nation intotuned, reliably produced by Pinique oppressed by the dominant nation, they do not can justify it.

The truth is, all states shared this delirium; but that this unanimity could to overwhelm them; she takes away all their defenses, in explaining everywhere the conduct of the Jews, toudays graduated according to the treatments they have recas. We have seen that less oppressed Among the Romans, they were worthy. During:
that the Emperors had arrogated to themselves the powertemporal power over the Jews, spread by throughout the earth, they became a species of livestock of the squire: SERFS OF THE CHAMBER (Kammer-Knechte). Such is the title that they they carried it to Germany, where until that time of the golden bubble (z) no state of the Empire mofoit les tolerérer fans une permiflion exprefect of the Emperor. In France they appearthey were attached to the estates (ferti fifcales); in England to the crown. It was only in the 12th century, a law of the Empire gave the right to all members of the body

Lere

(z) From the golden bubble, the voters hissed had enjoyed this right; see on the legislature Germanic lation in relation to the Jews ją Mr. Dohm's favorable note.

|
|
|

Jur la réforme politique des Juifs &c, 79

Germanic to grant retirement to Jews;
but this right has not been exercised by any state from Germany as an enlightened policy
He wrote it, and in some provinces, such as the Duchy of Württemberg, the Bishopric from Osnabrück &c. they don't even {have tolerated:

La Rufe has been chasing them in the last few days time. In Denmark they mounted right dha-They only bite in specific places; they do not
They do not do anything in Norway or Sweden.

Poland and the country where the Hebrews... are always found in greater numbers & where they obtained the most facilities for to exercise their indulgence; & Cek la furtout que the cries of impossibility arise where Christians are doing a disservice to the competition Jews. But this reproach proves aflulying much less against these than against the entire constitution of a so-called republic Buque composed of one hundred thousand gentlemen my & eight to nine million effective.
The first ones would believe themselves dishonored in carrying on some trade; the others have not no way to engage in it. All trafficking in Poland, and therefore by force of will abandoned to the Jews. And they maintain-They don't, at least not the little industry that exists there.
pointed out?

France has no Jews in its history. ancient provinces, except for a few Portuguese gay men who enjoy themselves in Bordeaux & Bayonne of confiscable privileges, granted by the

K

go Su Mofes Aendelsfubn,

even Henri H. who gave the final religious wars. But this nation found widespread in very large numbers in the three Bishoprics, in Alfa and in Lorraine, where, apart from the right of Autonomy, she continues to be reflected & oppressed comdonkey in Germany (a).

For a long time they have been treated with more of gentleness & a more frugal policy in various countries of Italy & especially in the States of the Grand Duke. In 1740, the King of Spain currently reigning, then King of the two Sicilies, granted them privileges distinguished individuals of whom they are deprived today. Who would believe it, if the fact didn't seem very convincing? Fate, that the prediction of a prophet who he hastened to declare that the King would not have of male heirs unless he proliferated again the Jews, would send back an arrangementment {i human, fi juĝe, fi rafonnable?

(a) They are not permitted to remain in the a Christian's house; they are not admitted to testify against him in court; they cannotvent cede to him their most legitimate claims times, and this for the very particular reason that The Christian has more advantages than the Jew in them to assert their rights. They must pay royalties. of protection, reception & habitation to the King, faith in the Lord, in the territory of thewhich they remain, and which in different respects Taxes are often arbitrary. Although receipts as members of the society, they do not no less obliged to pay separately in their tours in the Province itself of rights & confiscable tolls, fans counting the impots placed {on their heads, on their industry &c. they do not do any business in the city of Strasbourg, & thus of the rest (see Fifcher

The Pope granted them limited freedoms. derables; also the conduct of the Jews in the Ecclesiastical states, does she have a reproach?

Spain and Portugal are repeated in all the barbarity of their prejudices, and thoseeven among the Jews who convert there distinguishes itself from the ancient Orthodox by the name of children of new Christians.

Holland and England are... richHient for several centuries of the Hebrews chaflés of these two Kingdoms, & who, fans counting their deception, they brought madness there winding of considerable capital. That's it. that the Jews {have brought closest to human and civil rights, and cel aufi la qu'on qu'on fait les membres très utile to the state. We do that the English Jews have were declared eligible for naturalization in by virtue of a decree of parliament given in 1753; & that the fierce resistance of the people or rather, the corruption of the ministry, as I will soon prove through the simple The statement of facts led to his dismissal the following year. boasts. What can we conclude from the current situation of Jews in Europe, end no that they are better where they do better treaties, and that an infallible means of them Better waves, that is to make them more happy ?

koa

Hey! By what right can one defecate, they say, the human nature? The Gypsies make unknowclearly a very depraved nation: The cruel policy by which they were banished nuns from everywhere; even abandoning their life to the first comer, forced them not to live than plunder, and to behave in such a way Inis born and declared of the fociété. This night that in Hungary & during the last reign that one began to attack their homes fixed in the Témeswar banate where their

The number is very large. They were forced to do so.
to agriculture and other useful work;
And experience has shown that it was extremely
It is difficult to accustom them to a stable stay, faith in permanent occupations nentes (b). But their children born at the end of the fociété lend themselves to it more; & when This would only happen after the revolution, moreover of a century that the deicendans of the Bohémine are currently established in this region, could become happy: & useful, this Wouldn't hope therefore be enough for commit the government to continuing commendable fes {oins ?

The settlers who are attracted or receive the various European states since the per-Religious practices are becoming increasingly fashionable.

(b) See the materials for Statics & History-Modern history of the States published by Mr. Dohm.
(Donations Materialien für die Statiftik und nenere Staatengefchichte) Tom. IH. pages 373—375.

ns

"~ A

dark for most male fans
capacity, fans of induction, of {stupid children which depict a more foreign, fervent sky that theirs, &c they promise. to spend some happy days for fans doing nothing; miferables even those who seek to escape the sword laws; these are, in short, quite badrais fujets that cost the state more than they They return it to him, to suppose that after having enjoyed of a few years of exemption, they do not They were not from the country that received them. to go and deceive another sovereign. But Fears are reflected, children who... b: ing the prejudices of their parents, produi{tnt a generation of good citizens; & celt go to compensate with ufure the government, even if there is no point that It doesn't attract settlers. And yet they repel them. They're talking about the Jews! What inconsistency! Believes. on that the colonists gathered, attracted to. {i great Are fresh produce much better? Do we believe that the Emigrants of the Palatinate, of. Saxony, Swabia , Holland, Sweden, PÂneleterre, de l'Ecofle, these puritans, these trembling men who populated America feptenitional reflect on those who have founded the most Floridian empires, fi Hope for humankind melts, not disappointed. whose earth will ever have been beautified? No Indeed; Celt with corrupt morals & limited knowledge than their fortunes, that the greatest number of these mallicureux alla in au nouveau monde. of a fort to which they may have surrendered unworthy in ours.

A forgiving patience, a vigilance enlightened, generous processes will produce among the Jews, more fortunate effects than one one should not promise the colonists that most of the European states are represented. In every country where Jews are found, They already seem more accustomed, more integrated. that foreigners cannot be before A certain time has passed. They don't know each other. other homeland than the one they are going to obtain; they do not make wild Bohemians & fierce. nor ignorant fugitives & fans customs. In each state, several proflitooth some good, & a greater number still distinguished by the talents of the mind. They possess an eminent degree of prudence, lapplication, activity, the necessary force to adapt to all situations; whatques uns fe font montrer à leur atout dans public affairs (c). We know their happiness in business. They show very skilled in the mechanical arts by anywhere they are allowed to exercise them. The a small number of those who were able to surrender The sciences have done so with great success.

Perhaps we could find among their rich traders of bigger views, of com. jewelry plus fages; among the merchants And the people in general, more economy, of order and intelligence than in the same number of Christians. If we grant that in some respects the morality of the Jews depraved, we must also blame them honors this firm and confident attachment that they demonstrate for the doctrine they believe having been transmitted to their fathers by the divinity herself. What we call Ze caructére etil douc si commun chez les hommes que Pon owes no esteem to a TV show Mete! Finally, to the moral complicity of the Jews must receive a happy influence from a closer mutual liaifon. The great uniformity of their {strong fact that they shared it-look with more affection towards each other other than any other large nation. Nowhere are the indigent Jews to be seen. fall to the state's responsibility. This is what they do. more affluent who maintain them. & the coma The community disregards the individual. The Jews They mostly make good husbands & good fathers; debauchery & unnatural vices They are unknown to us. We shouldn't... to criticize almost no examples of treason or other capital fault towards the state (d).

(c) Alvaro Nimez d'Acofa Père & fils, & Belmonte were clothed for a long time in The Hague of the charge of Refident, the first two of the court of Portugal, and the third of that of Spain, to the satisfaction of all the courts,

(d) In 1744, the Jews were banished from Bohemia, because they were accused of treason, but from When the news passed, they were found innocent,

& recalled. j

For two centuries no Jew from the com- « Portuguese communities established in England or in Holland was not sentenced to death.

What is opposed to these good qualities?
An extreme penchant for all kinds of profit. But fie, as one cannot con-to test in good faith, this inclination and the flight natural & necessary scent of a very trade reflected, what can one argue against the regeneration of the mad Jews the regime of the freedom? when in their first state they were still living off FPagriculture, when dispersed throughout the Roman Empire they enjoyed of all the rights of man and of the citizen, Fraud and lust were not my traits distinctive of their character.

We haven't sufficiently noticed how much strong the particular influence of the various pro-Let us focus on prejudices and moral character.
PARTILAN, who does his job well, may have The most peaceful existence one could imagine at-dye in our political societies. Exempt of deceptive hopes, of anxious worries-tans, uniform in his life, moderate in his delirious, he enjoys the daylight while waiting a similar tomorrow,

The Farmer does not believe in a re-compensation equal to his industry; his work less mechanical; his spirit & soul
They are more agitated; but on the other hand, morals {simple countryside, regular affliction qwexigent {es travaux confervent fon innos cence & fes mœurs hopitaliéres.

The merchant necessarily has other ha-habits, other principles, a whole spirit They differed. The circumstances of the time, of the local butterflies, local tastes, accilacemakers make the calculations. Continue-occupied solely with making a profit, to be avoided losses, to combat foreign interests, to confound, to provoke, to incite the fortune, he is incendiarily agitated by an activity anxious, tired from forced attention, Lulled by hopes, riddled with fears.

The habit of viewing everything from the perspective of profit must naturally reflect {es {lentimens;
temptations are too frequent; furfaire
the price is almost exactly the same chole than to take prudent advantage of the circ-Trust! The merchant, even an honest one, can eventually be mistaken & take Pun for the other. He always has something to lose or to win in fes linifens with the other honi-my; imperceptibly he gets used to them look at them as adversaries or rivals; fon soul fe shrinks, fa fenfibility gets excited, Fordid interest, or luxury fa-futueux take too often their place.

However, these drawbacks associated with pro-trade officials must be unquestionable more influential and deeper tables among the Jews as well as among the Christians. Those-these generally receive a better education cation; those who know only that of oppression and indigence. The pre-

; , SA -
The former have a thousand means of utility, the Jews have only one. The: small tricks fraudulent their {have more familiar ptusque Their situation has imposed this on them for a very long time.

time the necessity; Purity & its profits must-their appearance seems less illicit, since all islands branches of their trade {have burdened with taxes so high that regular profits Liers would not suffice to satisfy them.
Finally, Christians rarely remain attached several generations of leaks to the same profefhon, de forte que les caractères partithe culinary aspects of each of them merge & They weaken each other within themselves. The Jews on the contrary, they have been forced to do so for so long & so many centuries living solely off the com-

merc; that this occupation has communito their character, we imprint them from-advantageous in all their strength.

Such a city, therefore, the true or rather the uni-that because of the corruption of the Jews. Their a continuous state of oppression, and the limits of their occupations limited to a single object morally unfavorable. That's where the harm is done, &
There, the Zufi people find the means to cure him.

Do you want the Jews to become Better men, more useful citizens?

Banish all distinctions from society humiliating for them; open all the Paths of success and acquisition. Far to prohibit them from agriculture, the trades, the mechanical arts, encourage them to take up it.
ner. Make sure that fans do not neglect the doctrine made up of the fathers, the Jews learn-to better understand nature & foundation Auteuf, morality and reason, principles

-of order, the interests of humankind,
of the great society of which they are a part;
put the Jewish schools at the foot of the eco-Christian women in everything that doesn't hold up to religion; that this nation has as any other, the freest exercise of foundation worship; that she establish at her expense as many fynagogues and rabbis as she wishes; that the right of exclusion is not granted to the Jewish church, like any other, except for religious society; but only in the limits-These decrees of the Kabbins are from this society.
supported by the starchy arm; that the Jews
live and are judged {according to their own laws (e) that in a -wordmilssfoient put & maintained in poflefhon of all rights of citizens, and soon this constitution fairness will rank them according to the number of members
the most useful of the State; it will remedy everything

(e) The very curious collection of these laws has been published in Berlin in 1778. "Under the title: Ritual-»£efetze der Juden, betreffend Erbfchaften,

#» Vormundfchaftsfachen, Teftamenten und Ehe- »fachen, in {o weit fie das Mein und Dein angehen. Entworfen von dem Verfaffer der »philofophifchen Schriften, auf Veranlaflung “and unter Auffícht R. Hirfchel Levi, Obers s»rabbiners zu Berlin, It is Mofes Mendelsfon who wrote and published this collection, by the opinion & the direction of the first Rabbi Mr. Hirfchel Levi,

both to the multiplied evils that are attributed to them deeds, and the faults for which they were compelled to make themselves guilty. The details of a plan fi new although fi simple make fans fufceptible doubts of diverted modifications, according to the countries and governments; but at least one can look at it as being outside of doubt this crucial point, the foundation of the reform Jewish policy: that this nation has received of nature, like any other faculty to become better. & happier; & that it is an undertaking favorable to Phumanity, ordered by the justice system, invoked by a political fad, to improve the situation.

This is the valuable and useful doctrine that Mr. Dohm had expounded in his work. One a multitude of objects, cast high, and their exposure The naive fiction was the subject of a second volume. Most of these objections were refuted. in advance; a very small number seemed to me The others are foolish, frivolous, or wear fur des fuppofñitions faufles. Je les parcou- I will return quickly and I will try to compete. with A.L. Dohm to destroy them, fans return. But I believe I must first give account of the attempted revolution in favor of juice in Great Britain in 1753; by- What is the main one, and almost the only one? difficulty based on the facts which in this great- de caule fe préfente à l'eprit d'un homme impartial, and that the memorable example of this Failure to succeed appears "to see most of the iced partisans of the reform of the Jews, if this is not by forcing them to abandon their principles,

at least by giving them the incline that it politically unyielding as their wishes {their wishes were granted.

LAUGHING

Fi
f)
[

|
|

92 On Mofes Mendelsfohn,
aeee

OF NATURALIZATION MILK introduced in 1753 in Great Britain

in favor of the Jews.

It is difficult to say with certainty in which time the Jews were established in England;
but there can be no doubt that they have Fubi is the same strong point as in all countries.
It appears that there were a limited number of them.
bench table in Great Britain before the conquest. This number increased significantly-William the Conqueror's crazy schemes, who for a silver woman, introduced a a considerable colony of Norman Jews in fon Kingdom. Under his flowers & juf-that Edward I found there such a quantity of Elevated that were made of the rules-mens to govern them, setting for them daily-They have their own court and judge.
But neither their number nor their riches were able to provide them with the slightest consideration.

absolute property of the crown, treaties like the vilest clafle of ferfs, or rather like creatures strong in the defiance of the species human, we even went so far as to put away a wedding ring with them among the most infamous crimes, And to put it all in a nutshell, up to the

to punish with the cruellest death (f). The rulers of these centuries, whose tyranny, when they wanted to exercise it against others other subjects, often encountered opposition very formidable forces on the part of the great barons, and proud clergymen, they see in the Jews a people whoduroit fans réfiltance, & même {ans contes. their barbaric whims, their ferocity Rapacity. The truth is, these excesses of kings. Normans were disguised in England as elsewhere {under the pretext of the Jewish punishment due to the enormous attacks attributed to him to the Jews, such as the crucifixion frequents of Christian children on Easter day in derivation of JC But, as we Fa very well observed, we never heard to talk about these enormities only when Islands The coffers of the Kings needed to be filled.

And how, in these centuries of violence And of emergence, would the crown have found resistance to the tyranny that she What does it do towards this unfortunate race? tyranny was entirely popular, and in whatques occasionons le peuple, lui-même à peunear Elclave, he acted like an inflexible tyrant. One a very peculiar example of this frenzy that Philtoire of England offers us the neck-

ES

(£) Contrahentes cum judæis vel judæabus, pecorants & fodomitæ in terra vivi confodiantur, Mea Lib. l. € 37.

under the rule of Richard I. Under this single pretext that some Jews had searched for their profane eyes a {spectacia so faint, the popu- London and several other cities Pilla & Malacra of Cold Fang all those that she met. The emergence of these time also puilant {on the princes & fur the peoples failed to enviate these violences. like a kind of religious crusader- A very pleasing gieufe to God. One does not see that this way of explaining the conduct of Edward I. who, in 129< to distinguish of his predecessors, expelled all the Jews from England with relaxation to reappear there {under penalty of death, since this prolcription was as harmful to those who financed it as it was to the country, & revived both victims at once cruelty, from the depths of avarice.

The Jews recounted three and a half centuries in this state of exile. But the government Once English, a republican, Holland became in several respects an object of emulation tion for Great Britain, & the avanstages of universal tolerance & of that Jews in particular did not escape to the observers. Moreover, the hatred of The papacy that prevailed at the time, or rather the de- unleashed other furies, had inspired disfavorable pofitions for the juiis. 11 fe fitplu- Several parliamentary motions in their favour(g) &

(g) Thurloïs itate papers. Flight. I p. 387.

And if none of them were followed by success, they... at least the Jews of Amsterdam were brave To do: some propositions to form an establishment of their nation in England- land. Negotiations were entered into & Manalléh Ben Fraël was chosen to deal with the conditions tions. This venerable Rabbi came to England- land & determined Cromwell to take” in very proud confidence the requests aw'il He did it in the name of his brothers. Then the protector he called two of the judges into his council, seven citizens and fourteen clergymen. [their asked if it was lawful to readmit the Jews in England, & in the event that they tinffent laaffirmative , {under what condition This nation should be recalled? Four days fe coniumerent en dilputes inutiles de the share of the ministers of the Holy Gospel, & Cromwell dismissed them, telling them that they the Jaifloient "much more uncertain than they had not found (h). The refulstate of the specific deliberations of the protection-author. Some writers with truthful pronouncements rent positively that he granted the Jews the permilhon to settle in England; but others (i) maintain that this permiflon

Li1(h) See a printed account of this deliberation in time & cited in the Anylica Judaica de Tovey 1. p. 268; see also Dr. ftate papers vol. 4. p. 321.

Especially Doctor Tovey in his English Jewish:

L

|

Their. It was given that during the reign of Charles II. in the year 1664 or 1c6;.
… Since that moment, (nothing is cleaner to make known the men & the emir that the names and forms exert on them)
the Jews were in England, as for the civil rights; exactly dahs la ménie fituation that the Protestant Christians. The Hebrews from other countries were not flocking jettis to more reftrictionus, or deprivations than all other foreigners & those who were English-born citizens had all the rights of fugitives.
natural and legitimate. These assertions are part of-perfectly accurate, although Judge Blackfoot avoided entering with great concern in no explanation (k). At the rest the time when this famous judge was writing & the species of ejaculation () by which he finishes the account of what transpired during the Pact of habituralization gives the impression that the referent stems from timidity and a repugnance a bit pufilanimous to renew a controverfe pouflée with violence, rather than there is no doubt that he could have fervently on this subject: p

In truth, it has been claimed that the Jews legally incapable of producing lands, in England. And an act of parliament- the fact that we say we were dressed on this object

(k) Blackft. comment. 376.
(D Neace be now its' manes! ibid.

in the 4th year of the reign of Henry III. was published by Doctor Tovey in fon Angla Judaica from an ancient manuscript from the Boldeiane library; but this act does not exist in the parliamentary registers. It was never printed among the ftatuts, It is not mentioned in any legal precedent. & appears not to have been recognized by any of the English courts.' Thus, supposing that he although he was ever exiled, one can believe that he was revoked, or that he has fallen into disgrace.

As for the religious rights of Jews, he there may be more doubt; for although this nation enjoys, in fact, a perfect freedom in this respect, however for which the law does not allow him to procure fury; the advantages of Paċe tolerance (m) not extending expressly than to those who do not deny the Trinity, & in 1753 Lord Chancellor Hardwicke in a formal decision declared null and void a legacy intended to found an institute for to read Jewish law, since it was a matter to propagate a communion contrary to Christianity which is part of the law & of the constitution of England.

On the other hand, foreign Jews could- see themselves become naturalized subjects through a refidensity of seven years of the colonies of

2

CR

(m) 1 Guill, & Mar.

America (n), no other way for them afforded the same advantage; a fact (0) meaning that no person will naturalified that she master approached the Holy Table one month before naturalization. This tut in order to to annihilate this unfortunate disfigurement in favor of the Julys for whom she became an outcast- {ion abfolue, & make them capable of pre- to file a joint request with parliament the other foreigners, that Pact of 175 you carried. The main circumstances of this memorable event deserves a congratulatory celebration attention,

A bill passed in parliament within the year 1787 had declared that all Protestants foreigners would be naturalized by a reformation density of a certain period of time in the British states. They first propoliced that the bill was extended to Jews as well than to the Proteftans; but when it was noticed that this extension would generate large difficulties in accepting the bill, on PFabandonna.

However, the same circumstance by the quelie on sechoit to favour some Periones is very harmful to others. said generally that the {only part The advantage of the law was that Fon abandoned, since the Proteftans that the bill would call in England, would not: do just unfortunate fans of fortune, instead that it would not have been absurd to elpérer in extending the same favor to the Jews, as a A favorable law would attract many rich people capitals of this nation. The bill was rejected; but the grounds for the opposition that he the encounters were not forgotten.

(n) 13 Georg 2. c. 7

(o} ee aa

Such arguments propounded by fans contraedition, published by fans of the scandal, developed Fans murmured, seemingly indicating the opinion public, and those whose piercing sight Clouds of prejudice glimpsed the advantages fans number who would respond for the Auglory of the naturalization of foreign Jews, resolutely not to let go, to escape a favorable opportunity to obtain. Howeverdant on ne ruchement rien; le bill definé à to carry out this measurement was not initiated at the time. more than in March 1753, & prudence with which it was written is really outstanding.

11 was relegated to this sole purpose of rendering Jews legally capable of applying to parliament to be naturalized fans receive previously the making; & Pon para loiresistance to any real or even danger imaginary things that the spirits might have envisioned timid. So as not to extend the benefit du bill to unknown people, ow to celthose who would not comply with the law, on ftatua la nécéflité un domicile de trois years ago in the dE a Brittany, ago in Ireland. So as not to alarm the religion dominant, the right of patronage or of Pre-emption was forbidden to Jews. Finally proof was demanded of having professed the reliJewish community during the last three years born that would have preceded naturalization, in order to prevent Roman Catholics they do not suffocate while circumcising to share the benefit of the new law (p).

All these precautions could not sharpen The bill was punishable by unanimous votes. He paid a price. in the upper chamber where he had been conceived, but he encountered a slap in the room vigorous opposition to the head of which fe found (such is the inconsistency of the nahuman nature) a prudent citizen & verkillers, the knight John Barnard. An opponent-An even more formidable force arose out from parliament which received from all sides There were very vocal petitions against the bill. In truth, there were some counter-petitions made fa favor; but among the first we counted that of London which was no less that all parts of this great commune & réprefentoit le bill de naturalization in the vaguest terms, but auff the most violent and emphatic, as tending infinitely towards dishonor the Christian religion, dangerous for exexcellent conflict, extremely harmful to the interest @ to the trade of the Kingdom in general, and of the city of London in part. culier. These general indictments, these declamatory prophecies, teite opposition violent acts did not prevent the bill from pañler to a very large majority & to be clothed of the royal confinement.

But the enemies of this benevolent law-Far from being discouraged, they only became more active in destroying it; they brought the questiontion to the public court; the pamphlets seized them, the act was {submitted to newnew difficulties, and the police, commerce, religion played a role in turn in this violent controversy.

Cp) Stat. 26 Georg 2. c. 26, ee a

for the political reform of the Jews (c. 101)

We were fighting against Pate, that he would be smothered.
a very daunting change in the fitua.
tion of the Jews & as a consequence in the order properties by putting this nation in a position to
to buy land, which the law had allowed him prohibited until then & that this legislation new law extremely harmful to the com-the country's merchants, because several Jews that would attract Pate would engage in this.
career, where they could only respond by the ruin of national merchants, of those who had long ago placed their fortune. in trade, & open to their laughter.
ques & by great advances of new sources for trade & national production.
Thus, as a price for their devotion, their ungrateful homeland was preparing to make them a victim of A mob of foreigners and infidels! Eh! coms.
Wouldn't it result in a loss of confidence?

unmanageable for the state, if only because of the di-Minification of duties levied on foreigners?
In truth, the act might involve some-that: opulent people to settle in An-England But when we confided what poor and wretched people made up the Jewish nation in general, one could not do-ter that his admission does not flood in the same time the three Kingdoms of a multitude of vagrants and unfortunates who fe-would be unbearable for a country already fur-charged with the poor. (Greedy, avaricious, deceitful, swindlers & perverse, entirely preoccupied with their personal and im- interests media, devoid of any patriotism, of any Public opinion, should the Jews be incorrupt?
Porés to the English? Wasn't that a way fur to forever corrupt the character national & dy imprint indelible vices?
And why was it necessary to verify all these evils?
for the nation? Was it for the latistaire to which.
What moral or religious duty? No;

On the contrary, it was to violate all the de-views of religion, to encourage fes inveterate enemies, to establish & feed the most relentless blasphemers of the name of Jefus. Could one, fans of impiety, filter to your will of God, and try to soften the The weight of his judgments? Hadn't he decided by the mouth: of fes prophecy to the horde Would the Jewish people forever create a wandering and vile people? Why, in defiance of his prophecies & of their accomplishment to this day, ùn unofficial, useless & reckless zeal manifested Would he show favor to the Jews? Why? would we expose ourselves to sharing the calamities that envir-anent this people devoted to evildiction? |

The response in favor of the bill was that of such clamor for a mere slight changement in the Angloile legislation ctoyent to barely conceivable; that Pact borne by the Parliament established no new principles. calf, did not produce any innovation; that it extended only the reflection of the laws of which Pexthe most confident experience had the best contâté la fagefle. Et cela elt exactaét, ajouroof-cn, crazy whatever point of view we envifage those in favor of which the bili eft worn, faith like Jews, roof like a strangerGers. If, like Jews, the celebrants of this religions have long held the permifhon to reline among us; fi as foreigners, since several fiecies all ies Peoples of Europe can be naturalized In England, certainly, or the Jews who were born there could have proposed some terres before the Covenant; or they will not prosper, by virtue of this act, because it does not give them not such power. No doubt their natureLegal reform will bring many foreigners. in the Kingdom, and several of these foreigners Gers will settle in the county; but This is perhaps the first time that Pon has olé foutenir férieufement qu'un pays {croit unfortunate to increase {the inhabitants, {one commerce, its industry, its capital, its richeffes. It is also absurd to fuppoier.

that no new commercial establishment can only be professed in England to the detrithe ancients, that he would do it by saying that the trade of this Kingdom cannot to expand. Moreover, the naturalization bill It will only attract wealthy capitalists, because that they make the leaves that can gather the advantages, and if the poor Jews do Disposed of coming to England, nothing... no new charms prevented them before, invited since the proclamation. The argument fired against them from the furcharge that pro-will take their life as the Angloile nation falls absolutely false, since the indigent Jews make the felons that the rich of their communion never abandons the charity towards others, and that the different fynagogues tirelessly come to their aid.
As for the vices of the Jewish nation, one does not These should be attributed to religious doctrine.
since it does not contain the lightest immorality; down with such deeds!
are proven, and that most of the incuipations by which this unfortunate people are crushed
They are not slanderous, we cannot tell them.
to inflict other causes than the refractions, the humiliations, oppression in a word {ous which he groaned; &@ this cause once Once raised, the effect can only be amplified by it.
Regarding the alleged lack of intelligence public, zeal for the common cause, patriotism, this allegation is highly refuted by recent events, since during of the rebellion of 174, several Jewish em-were the first to riot in defense of the government.

nement at the peril of their fortune & their life. Finally, there's more to it than just absurdity.
watch the naturalization process for Jews as impious, destroyer of religion, contrary to God's judgments & to his prophecies, as if there could be some impiety, to give an azule to those who suffer! As if religion imposed the duty to deprive men of their rights natural! As if it were in the power of No man dares to contradict God's judgments!

As if inspired prophecies demanded the competition of the human species for their Accomplishment! Let us leave it to Providence.
Forget about executing his decrees, and let us not fear not that it results from the protection that this country will grant the Jews other calamities than those that cause falls in Venife, Livorno, Amsterdam and all the cities that have them collected; the population, commerce, Pinduttrie, la richefle & toute forte de propérités.

These were the main arguments which on fe fervit de part & autre dans cette controversial, but unfortunately it was not not the reason that should have decided her. Everything by blow from one end of the Kingdom to the other absurd, but universal, noises of ovens Intrigues and furious clamor arose wind against the act. Several counties, severalficurs villes adreffent à leurs réprefentans des thanks for opposing it & the They charge, in foliciting the revocation, with these vain rumors in any other time were scorned by the ministry. But we was almost at the moment of a re-election general, & the administration was so alarmed of the public discontent that she took the reform-almost sudden resolution to give in to Poppofition, and to withdraw the fatal pact which he {us-He cited so many setbacks, soon after the start of the school year.

of parliament.

Consequently, the first ridge that finished the next meeting formally revoked the bill in favor of the Jews, and so that this a true public calamity could be perpetrated killed, this dismissal was justified in the preamble to the abrogating Pact, alleging that Pon was eager for this occasion to to cause trouble among the King's fugitives.

This was the first day when the two chambres s'affemblent after the pufi lanime déter-Ministry mination that the revocation was proposed. Such was the rage of the time or the timidity of Fa I ration! Let's observe that the most ferl pamphlet ever written by the fa-better Lori Cambden, who at the time was only a young lawyer, was against the revocation tion of the Covenant of the Jews; but finding that Mr. Pelham decided to withdraw it out of fear that inspired him the general election which was approaching This courageous citizen was outraged. -that he burns his writing without publishing it.

-Let's note another anecdote that shows what determines the destiny of human beings the most important. During the general election: Sera who fled immediately, Lord Nugent sought the rebuke of the city From Briftol, an old woman cries out: 0! Have I lived so long just to see an Irishman? 9 a Jew to condemn the town of Briftol! Lord Nugent turned around and said gravelyment: Mu good, if you want you withdraw for a moment to myself, fe I will soon convince you that I am truly fleeing. He was an Irishman, but not a Jew. This farce made the lazy girl laugh & ap- The general cry was almost surreptitiously heard. Such is often the nature of the clamor popular! A single word to soften them. If Mr. Pelham had had the presumption of spirit Milord Nugent fans even have the ironmeté, the act of naturalization fubifteroit peutto still be; he would have enriched England by several million.

Another, more curious and remarkable fact- The problem was that the Jews themselves were not unanimously in favor of the Pact for Nature-Dion. The Zealots quickly saw that the likely effect of the bill would be to weaken Influence of religious doctrine on children de Moyle, to diffract the rich, to foler the poor, to recruit the Christians at the expense of the Jews & to the great to the detriment of the affected. Their fears were not not without foundation; for the knight Simplon

Gideon, son of the richest Jew of the time, independent-pending the favor of the Pact of Nature-lifation of which his father was the great foutien, embraced Christianity shortly after, and was utterly shocked.
the choir of Lord Gage & the famous general of that name who commanded in America, was elected Member of Parliament for the county of Cambridge in which Puni- is established Verified by that name, he stirred up a controversy very proud of this county in a second parliament; & at the very moment I am writing he is still a member for the city of Coventry seat of a bishopric. This example seems to us the faithful prognosis of what would happen the bill was reinstated in force; this was a final fact-guilty, but comfortable, that the Jews in An-England never manage to a certain degree of opulence fans defy paffer for Christians in the faith. And as is through sheer expenditure they atone for their task originally, their profits have diminished their resources for major business; which combined with other factors such as competition rence of a very commercial nation by nature & very indulgent, the facilities that the bank is the master of giving & gives more to Christians than to Jews, the deprivation of the profit from public loans which have been taken away from them, since the governor-he realized that he was earning more,
at least in terms of docility, by abandoning them to others, etc., etc., multiply the obstacles.
of this nation & prevents it from taking the flower that greater freedom would seem to be due to sharpen it in England.

Whatever the impartial reader may do, decide now if justice & the profl-The inability of this great revolution, infall-brought about by the revocation of the bill which naturalized-faith of the Jewish nation in Great Britain & which disappeared only to put in covered the compromised ministerial interests in a re-election whose era was ar-It remains for us to examine the principals pale objections that were made later-They are opposed to this reform, which they are demanding

Penvi la politique & lhumanité.

sy LE rh at

110 On Mofes Mendelsfohit,

[oa ean OBJECTIONS OF MR. MICHAELIS, AND i OTHERS

The meee ee ae e

i more redovtable adverfaire of the caufe des jui cek M. Michaëlis, favant ingé-nieux, very verfé in the law of Moyfe. His main arguments can be refuted daas cette que.

Doesn't Moyle's law contain... choices that make naturalization impossible complete tion of the Jews, &, if one can par-ler ainfi, Perfect Pamalgame of this nation with other peoples?

Mr. Michaëlis was unwilling to believe it.
main purpose of the laws of Moyie, of this ina pleasing persecutor of the Canaanites, it seems to him to be maddened by the Hebrew nation and to him to inspire hatred for other nations.
It will be a long time before the Jews can neither eating, nor drinking, nor performing the functions of focal life with Christians, too long while the distinction between pure foods & impure {ubfiftera among them, they will not be able to be incorporated with the other peoples. They will therefore not be susceptible to the state than in agriculture or manufacturing.
But, adds Mr. Michaëlis, like the Jews will never equal the Germans in any art, in no profession would it be unjust

of

for the political reform of the Jews. 11 to ensure they enjoy the same rights. They do not They should have to earn them, since they do everything made foreigners to love their homeland; & How could they not do it? They do not faithful their current existence only as panlagere, because they are still waiting for their return to Palefte, and that this moment foretells

. by their prophets is for them the sign

happiness

Moreover, the exceptional multiplication of Jews who marry very young out of duty of religion, their extreme industry, their prodigious strength makes such as the Christian workers could never...
To keep the competition at bay. And fie Pon adds to these confidences that the Jews, almost all of them are very small, forced to refrain from any occupation on the day of fabbat, subjected to embarrassing rites for their food, ambiguities in the degree of the residue they carry to the ferment, do not not specific to the military state, we will understand that soon they would invade all the gen-activities, all professions, all the properties, and thus the population of Christians would disappear before that of children of Moyfe; unjust revolution, of the aftermath, since the native Germans would do it victims, and that a Hebrew horde, a State of degrading Jewry would take the place of that which is exhilarating.

"Well! What would we gain from it?" Mr. always said.
Michaelis. A perverse and detestable race.

m

rig Sur Mofes Aiendels foba;

Half of the crooks who exist in Germany:
Magne is found among the Jews. [invokes fut] This makes the criminal records of several fiècles & claims that the proportion of Jewish criminals to Christian criminals

Weft no less than 25 to one. How many generations, he adds, shouldn't we to effect their amendment? To wear Love of humanity until granting to Jews in the uncertain hope of the distant, the fragile, citizens' freedoms at the expense of: Christians, whose princes hold their rights, their authority, their power, would Therefore, a gratuitous injustice & fans excluded, Mr. Michaëlis, however, admits that one try a few elves to get them to put in value of uncultivated land by Jews; but he thinks there would be for the state a veritable bad to encourage them to study the sciences which already occupy far too many men-my long-awaited, single friends, to burden on others and on themselves, because-that there are not enough places for so many of competitors. With greater reason the Did the German leader refuse all aid to the Jews? honorable duties, whether military or civic them, and yet he wants them to pay one extraordinary tribute for the protection that we grants them their agreement; finally, he invites the governors lies to be done in the name of humanity for this unfortunate horde, all they could-ront fans risk for the state. Such eft Panalyfe faithful to his objections. Here in fubftance Mendelsfohn's response to the which I have sometimes intertwined my ideas.

It is strangely abusive of the facts hiftori-what to find in the description from the Canaanites the seed of the alleged hatred of the actors of the Mofaique law for-Anything that isn't Jewish. I'd be as hungry as you are. conclude the writing of the modern Hebrews born of the deicide committed by their ancestors he nearly twenty centuries ago on the African coast of the Mediterranean. That was it, it seems to me, a logic entirely worthy of the eleventh fiècle (q). Where is the lightest com-a preliminary piece of evidence that the modern Jews,

(a) At the rest it lasted well beyond the fifteenth.
This was to provide for a perfection of this kind in 1348 that the Jews fucked Worms, Ulm & Regensburg that their an-These people were established in Germany before the destruction of the first temple & for a long time.
before Christ That consequently their gene
The entire ration had no part in the shares.
Jews of Palestina; & to prove it They produced a letter which they claimed to be.
that the latter had written to them in the time to inform them of the heightened commotion.
by JC & of the punishment that had been inflicted upon him fubir. (See Spire's chronicle by.
Lehmann (Speyerifche Chronick) Liv. 5.
(chap. 37, p. 414). The Letter itself is found. in the column Œ Germany (Deutfche.
Chronick) by Seb. Franck p. 327. & in, Speidelii Speculo Juridico, Politico obfervatiss gum p. 658). | \

114 On Mofes Mendelsfohn,

they believed they had the right to hate like
-Canaanites, all that weft not of their Communion? Etfi Pon doesn't even offer to do it.
this allegation, if we must agree that Pafafinat, theft, fraud, all actions Immoral people commit crimes against their own law.
no matter who they are committed against,
Why prohibit them? Because they have Special rites? What religion doesn't have them?
What holiday doesn't practice observances?
who only do what they want, and do not profess for other communions a contempt which A demonstration with varying degrees of force felon that the political relations of the diverges Religious communities determine their relationships & that the culture of the spirit, the influence of Vinftruion & des lumières ont plus ou less weakened the impressions of opinions Prepared? , . . there are dishes for the Jews impure! . . . Beautiful railon to refute to Men, the rights of humanity! When the

That would not be an exaggeration, and he farted until... ridiculous, the opinion that a pig is enough for Searching a Jew's house is a fable.
Moyfe's children can, fans blefler their law, to raise, to maintain, to trade pigs. We know a thousand examples of this in Prufle; & one can judge from this the ob-injection that Mr. Schwäger drew from the alleged the scruples of the Jews in this regard against their aptitude for agriculture; & perhaps melt-it

I have a few of the detailed reproaches that have been made against them fact, which does not offer plausible inaccuracies,

As for hope, or even certainty Upon returning to Palefte, she had no further of influence on the civil conduct of the Jews, qué dant other religious opinions fur les other mortals. It does not prevent furtout that in accordance with nature and reason Human, the Jews do not prefer the madman where they.
They find the least bad option; & foresight Mr. Michaëlis's contribution is all the more free-ment officieufe, that the Talmud, to which the Jews' adversaries claim that they agree-tooth so much confidence & that at least they they look like a collection of decisions.
their Wise Men forbid them to go to
cun. return to Palestine by violence, or to take a single step towards this goal which is not preceded by miracles and extraordinary figures naires, which our books foretell. Auili all the attempts by the Langallerie family, the David AIRoi (in Perfe), from Zabathai Tzevi (in Türkiye) & other protectors of this the kind who were only after the bourtes.
Were wealthy Jews unable to resist? These.
Alleged Mefies wont make any revolutions.
nor fortune. Eh! how in a fitua-Wouldn't a free and professional tion do well?
We have completely forgotten this King-Meflie, whose arrival...
fuppofe always a state of slavery & op Pretkon for the nation, Jewish? |

It is impossible for us to give an attention….
tion plus. ferieule to the fear. of a popula-. tion of juiis. allez. exceflive to remove from the.
Christians, the pollutability of all competition:

M;

& make the children of Moyfe owners universal goods and professions of ła fociété.

First, this gigantic objection im-obviously contradicts Paffertion to the somewhat gratuitous truth of Mr.
Michaelis, who supposed that the Jews w'égaleroient jamais les Allemands en no art.

She is no less opposed to calculation.
Mr. Schwager's fubtil 'who gave himself the
It would be difficult to prove the extreme point at great length.
benefits that the Sabbath day combined with respect for the police on Sunday gave to the Jews against the Christians, disadvantage-stages so great that these poor Hebrews will Forced to steal to fublift! The example Catholic cantons that do not provide They sniff fiercely, no more thieves than The Proteltans respond phlegmatically to fans' doubts.
To these vain quibbles, one sees in good faith that the Jews were very embarrassed at turerect the obitacles when their Sabbath is in collusion with their interests & their interests réts(r)? But which of these two afftions should we believe? The super-criticism or Pin-

(r) In large commercial cities, pe In Berlin, the main day of pofte falls on Saturday, the day on which the Jewish religion defends to write and even to seal letters; but They can do this by sending their mail as soon as possible.
Friday.

the inferiority of the Jews in their competition with Christians? Let our adversaries agree-

- tooth between them, or we only need of their own accord to answer them.

Fleeing, the Jews only receive one equal freedom to exercise their talents & their industry, if they are denied any monopoly, every exclusive privilege, punishing fervently Moreover, the fraudulent offenses for which they are responsible...
They would make themselves guilty, it will never happen that a skill, an affliction, an economy-larger crumbs that will be able to give what.
that superiority to the Jews over the Christians in the claves who live off their work. I don't I don't see that in this supposition he... another thing to regret, no, that one A nation endowed with talent, so resounding fi long in Pimpoflbilité de les déve.
Lopper, and every man should rejoice then to have acquired more fellow citizens useful.

But besides the fact that it's unlikely that the Jews having been confined up to now to traffic, show an industry of all a genre more fertile in expedients than the Christians be divided into so many different professions, as soon as they all become accessible to first; why their successes, as soon as one

l en fusuppofe en infpirant aux chrétiens Wouldn't more competition make them More laborious & better savers? If "It is true," Mr. Dohm rightly said, "that in being" bluffing new settlers, we didn't fearing that they might harm the elders inhabitants, {the largest population which in refulte necessarily contributes to the con-milking to make profess in general Pinduftrie, Why don't we expect leaks too?

favorable by granting the Jews the same
What rights does this group of settlers have? Why?
Would one refuse circumcised arms at so much of fallow land that dishonors the most

art of the governments of Europe, & ab-[orbent almost half of the faith-difant countries Cultured and civilized? Those who want to pro-writing off the Jews for the supposed interest of Have native landowners maturely reflexed, carefully calculated for these properties

silences would not make much of a deal.
better by receiving as citizens those that they tolerate, by attracting at great expense, Foreigners? - a

This welt not at the reste a singularity little;
The argument drawn by-Mr. Michaëlis in that very objection.
of the inaptitude & incapacity of the Jews to military service. A philosopher of content-He tried to ask him about Mendelsfohn, Is there a religion that approves of war?
infulte? If there is one, let that one be {faith banished from the earth. But you Christians. who do not have the misfortune to obey such a religion, do not accuse us of the crime of Respect human dignity on the Sabbath day.

A politician might say to Mr. Michaellis; The actual order of things is such that the state

for the political reform of the Jews (c. 119)

the happiest in these wars is ordinary-
The one with the most money in their pocket chests, which makes the most of fagefle & d'économie, & qui fe trouve ainfi
I am no longer in a state to oppose the most powerful enemy.
a large number of well-trained soldiers, well maintained, and consequently attached to fcrvice. He is therefore quite indifferent to
To a modern that their subjects they wage war in person, or that they they support themselves with their money, by means of the which one procures an elite of fighters stronger, more skillful than those And above all, more gifted with courage that is useful to the war today: that of Pobeéiffance. ;

But these very strong responses that they
They are not worth, in my opinion, the one that Mr. Dohm had informed Mr. Michael in advance-T reads by quoting his own writings(s) "This 2 {before the writer demonstrated, he said, of the
, "a more convincing way than the Sabbath
inftited by Moyfe was one day of delaffe-~ | ment & joy whose celebration con-
It was much less important to deny religion

than to sing hymns, to perform

religious dances, to taste the sweets

"of the company, the work of the slaves was"

"the fire forbidden by Moyfe on the Sabbath day,

"How the author of the Hebrew laws—"

is

ere um

(s) See the Mofaïque law of Mr. Michaelis, chapter IV.
p. 412. & following.

"Did he give to a nation that he himself had-„even trained in war the absolute order of "Not doing it on the Sabbath? We don't..."
"finds no trace in the legislation of
"Moyle, & until the time of the destruction"
"of the first temple, we do not notice,
The point is that in the large number of wars that the Jews had to fuck, they fuck sabftenus de fe défendre contre le ane-
"mis, or to attack them on the day of the battle.
"It was only after their return from the Kingdom,
"of Perfe, & when they formed new-a particular state, that a few
"The most scrupulous conceived the idea of the end-
, as regular as the defense of faith itself was "forbidden on such a day, and may God not forsake"
"He would not want to be far from them to be ravaged by a miracle. But the nation having learned from "the first time she wanted to flee this
"a fanatical principle that divine passion
"He was missing, and a great number of Jews"
"who did not want to defend themselves one day"
"of Sabbath having been maflacrés (t), the super..
{titious even agreed that it remained spas permis d'attaque, he was at least
"To defend themselves."

It is difficult to conceive that the same writer who says in substance all these things fes, which confirms that this opinion is enthusiastic-fiaftes has never been anything more than that of a few

ee

(+) Maccabees r 2. &Jolcphe TEATE

particulars, which recall the exquisite devotions Jews in wars (or monarchs)
Greeks, faith of the Roman people, who show Jewish volunteers in Alexander's army (u), trusted militia of the Ptolemies (x) & of the Siro-Macedonian Kings (y), eltimés of Pompey, their conqueror, from Cefar, who attributedbua to the Jewish cohorts the honor of fa Mithridates, charged with declaring Senate committee members (z), rewarded by privileges, renowned for their value & their loyalty up to the fifth century of our Era, where the Emperor Hon-Rius declared them incapable of military service.
To remain silent, it is difficult to conceive that this same Foutienne writer we must flee from to this nation the rights of men & of citizens because they do & will do ten gene-Escape rations incapable of the duty of defend the fociété, the fociété they are invading.
"They were," said Mr. Michaëlis, "at the expense of..."
natives from whom the princes derive their rights, their authority, their power, fi Pon do not let it create an eternal barrier between

ee

(u) Jof. L. IL. c. last.

(x) Jofephe Ant. L.XII. c. 1. & contra Appio-nem L. 1.

(y) Idem L. XII. p. 3.

(2) Joseph reports them in detail in Ant, L. 14:
C. 1417

i22 © On Mofes Mendelsfoba,

them and the Christians... good God What a theory!

© No doubt the Kings who held their well:
The people's forces are the guardians of rights of the people. But is not the Jewish people then Not the people? Let's state it clearly:
what is the period of time that determines relations between natives and foreigners Gers? How many centuries will it take for... men inhabit a country to be natural there-Talifés? Does he not then have natural rights prior to all focal conventions, And more wicked than they? The men who cul-they tivent leur raifon & leut penfée, en fait les ils it is also important to know that we would contribute effectively-cement to happiness & to the culture of the species human, by consigning these to eternal oblivion distinctions between citizens and foreigners, and furall that the principles of humanity, & those of a good and folly policy make eternal-Agreed. Give the Jews a homeland.
And they will love their country, they would love it.
they ferviated it with their fang when their religion would defend them. . The fathers of PEglife ordered the first Christians to avoid fighting under any pretext that it was, to submit rather to the efclavage, to derelict the military fervor if they do not
They could free themselves from it in other ways; to live Fan charges, fans properties, in community of goods & in a vagrant ambulance, to die as martyrs rather than disobey to their religious precepts, etc. & e. Nature

For the political reform of the Jews (Ec. 123)

Wasn't she stronger than the chofes?
The fathers of Leglife? It seems to me that in Despite their precepts, Christians are utterly defeated; the community of property

it's not just about being diffused: we re-emerge to take on responsibilities; & Pon aims rarely the palm of Martyrdom. Well! he
The same will happen to the Jewish nation.
Waiting for Meflie will not prevent them more than being good citizens than that of The return of Jesus Christ was announced by Julian the Martyr.
Irenaeus, Tertullian, Lactantius, Sulpicius & so many others have rendered Christians incapable of it.
The hope of returning to Paleftelin will prevail of the foundation of a thousand-year reign, & the COMING TEMPORAL REIGN predicted by the illustrious Lavater (a). In a word, the madness Talmudists will not be more dangerous.
reufes that the errors of the church fathers when the Jews enjoy all happiness which they make perceptible.

H eft a far more serious reproach that Mr. Michaelis does to the Jews & that Mendelsfohn repels with great energy.

(a) Mr. Lavater said: whoever is not a Christian, (that is, Christian in the Lavaterian manner) whoever does not believe in the reign of a thousand years & within intuition is an atheist. See Hertzens. Erleichterungen zweyer menfchen.
freunde, über Lavaters Glaubens bekentnifs, Leipzig 1785, or Outpourings of the Heart two friends of humanity, regarding the pro-Lavater's faith.

First, there is ambiguity, legal equivocation leaven, and that would not answer it just rely on the example of Quakers and Memnonites; for there is a very big difference between refuting the ferment And to allow one that is dubious. But this ambiguity exists only in the allegation of those who slander the Jews. Here is the exact determination of their law of fermentation. Mendelsfohn en eft Pauteur; eh qui de nous might have the right to challenge the testimony birth of a universally trusted man respected for his virtues, so notoriously sworn in all parts of literature & Hebrew legislation?

10. Any contrary depoliticization to inner conviction, but who wouldn't tort a perlonne, eft une contrevérité.

2v. If a statement contrary to the truth night to whoever it becomes a menfonge.

30. It is permissible to use a counter-truth to his own advantage; but he weft not allowed to use a lie; not even to swear to support a counter-truth, because that would be an abuse of the name of God.

4. If someone uses violence, & sar-Roger has the right to tear down a deposition which may harm faith or others, one is obliged to silence and hide the truth, to even say which is not true with mental fortitude (although it is not admitted by paragraph 4)

AT

Rabbis), because necessity makes an exception to the rule.

From where it is possible that the judges can flee forcing a Jew faithful to the leaven to say a harmful truth; & that he would be guilty of perjury, faith that he did not tell the truth, faith that he made a false leaven before those who have the right to ask him/her.

Certainly these distinctions are too much fleeting; but perhaps they do less far removed from the loyalty that the profiteering indefinite ferment required by our tribesnals on a very large number of occasions where it is absurd not to foresee the parswears; there is always a great difference between the somewhat subtle ferment of the Jews & the slanderous accusation: that they should not believe points held to good faith towards the Christians.

Reflects the terrible accusation of which Mr. Michaëread charges against the Jews & who appease this nation tainted with such immorality that the most

a large proportion of thieves and brigands Germany belongs to their nation.
Mendelsfohn in turn invokes the registers criminals, & even though by compulsively You'll find twenty-five times more thieves & of German fences among the second-hand clothes dealers Christians as well as among Jews; this response seems ingenious to me, and sufficient for whom It makes you think; firstly because the reckless Mr. Michaëlis's allegation, which, on two choles Pune, had to clearly cite the registers

n

vile criminals have compiled them, or pafled them crazy filence if he hasn't convicted them, don't deserved a recrimination; fled because that she recalls in a single word the misfortunes Jews, the sole cause of their wrongdoing; finally because he was just trying to make Mr.
Michaelis, a writer who takes up his pen against a nation should look at it as a magistrate & religious pilgrim every grievances that he admits. However, as when he These are the vices of an entire nation, the murderers, highway robbers, traitors to the fatherland, arsonists, infanticides, etc., etc., must go online of account, as also these crimes almost unknown among the Jews, they do all too much common among Christians, there is everything in less precipitation to pronounce-that deep-rooted morality of this nation (whom he only accuses of fraud & of trickery) makes her unworthy of enjoying the human and citizens' rights, Penier fans that the entire body of history affected that it can provide as well as such other than this, members used to political society, and to the facts pofitits & fans number who conitatent it we moppie than conjectures & fears.

God forbid that I should offer Mr. Michael.
read & that a writing undertaken for the reasons the purest ones were searched for in the slightest personality. But urges opponents Jews, I would like the word enemy was banned from all languages) to search in good faith in this important discussion cuflion they have not always justified Poppreihion by the leaks from Poppreffion, dearché la caufe dans Peffet, calomnié pour “explain, supposed to prove, predicted to answer. I urge them to ask- . den M aveli not a very reprehensible lightness-hentblelque to reinforce by objections frivoies@u peu réfiéchies, par des faits Hazatdés, this is absolutely false, for hateful and gratuitous suppositions, a prejudice as barbaric as that which mutilates a large part of the human species (b), nz

puer q

(b) I was unable to obtain an approximation probable for the nation's population Jewish. Here is the very inaccurate & probable record: reduced by at least half that which they offer the most recent statistical tables, attributed, to Mr. Brendel, and whom I also regard as a very important work & of great merit

execution. to H y a dans tous les pays Autridogs in Auxlela, population 223,000

Jews,
including Austria, which was slapped... 570 in the Austrian Friuli. 400 in Tyrol & Austria previous . . . 1: 2
ea Bohemia 36000
in Morvia mM, … AOA
in Austrian Silvia Sooa
in the Duchy of Mantua 266a

& the degradation beyond the rank that afflicted Nature to all its children. Ah! in the in Bukowinie 1106 families Jewish women at 5 per family, which is a very moderate rating

for a nation so fertile... 6630 - In Galicia & Lodomeria
(in 1780) . . . WO - According to other D & fubefore a count done in (1785) 157000. in the States known: in Pome-ranie . . "rio in the Duchy of Magde-bourg . so SS

in the principality of Of. Pam, 269 - in SILETES ma oo «© e. 11009 at Presbourg . . . ++ Liver

in Saxony, in BREIEN land of Brunfwick Luneburg & others states of Germany, the tables do not They don't count a single Jew; they cft de même de la Heffe, qui in accounting at the last denominator-more than 1400.

in Hamburg, where they do not indicate than 4000, but where there are certain.
training near . . . . , rooco -

in Altona, or the tables do not include-

. don't expect a single leaf, there are plenty of them-approximately 6000

in Bonn in the Elc ee of Cd (ONE oo : 200 -=

in the country of Württemberg; 426 - The City of Frankfurt on the Main. 7000" - sen Poland . . . $00000 = Jewish families in France Sn (1781)

3045 to 5 per family . . . "re for the political reform of the Jews &3e. 129

moral problems, that's what it was confulter; it is on general reasons, on raw, original & communicative data born to the whole species that it is necessary to decide.
Human nature is reflected everywhere.
The Jews will do what the others are doing here-toys in each State where the same rights will grant them agreements, where the same obligations will be imposed.
tions will be imposed upon them. And when he would
It is true that the political reform of the Jews in-will bring some drawbacks, when their moral and physical regeneration (because it is could, like other animals Phomme was {subjected to the influence of the most great crossbreeding of races) when their regen-moral and physical generation would require Some police vigilance, some hay paternal, the government elt.il inftited For something else? Does he have more duties?
Iacracis? Greater interests? No fans If in doubt, he would only backfire on himself, he who

a Aee . . . . . . ._" e2200 (this number is too low) of at least 6000.)
in England

in the Duchy of Savove! ve s6%o -= in the Papal States . . . . 8000 ~
Total number of Jews: 962,095

According to others who add ' for Galicia & for the city of Presbourg 56000

ee or,

1045095

would admit that reasons of state required it of him to be both cruel and timid, to banish or to oppress foreigners. Let's say more:
he would accuse himself of ignorance, of impiety, or inactivity the government which would admit his inability to render morals and customs to the people who have them lost at the expense of Popprefion, and who the will infallibly recover through treatment more equitable. Because it is necessary, even before the moral regeneration of the Jews, which a good police & some film institutions ples & paternal, to facilitate & prefer the paving of one of these situations at Pautre.

Do you finally want the alleged vices the Hebrews were deeply entrenched films that they can only disappear at the Third or fourth generation? Well!
start everything at Pheure; for this weft not a railon to postpone this major reform-the politics of a generation, since fans with this reform we would never see a gene-corrected ration, & the only thing that you you cannot conquer this time lost.

FROM ANRONNONS TO VAT N

OF

LAGIOTAGE

TO THE ROT
And at the Assembly of

DUO DA B LE S:

By the Count of Mirabeau.

Do you think that an infant could contradict my virtue?
Would he put a man and his country in the balance?
Voltaire.

e ee 2e ne ds aaallllt
M DCC, LXXXVII.

(iiij)

I had been in Berlin for almost a year, & I planned to spend several months therecore, when I learned of the summons of a surrounded by dignitaries. I fled early.
said: "On this momentous occasion you will pay
"the tribute of your feeble talent to your step T"
"Your Rai. n."

A quick glance at the state of things who dominates, if I may speak thus, the affairs of the Kingdom, the Sovereign's scepter, the good intentions of the Ministers told me-defeated, let me enlighten my fellow citizens.
the excesses of speculation were the most great devotion it was in me to return them.

So I made the Fatherland say The truth about acceptance of people and...
chofes, & I came to look in the capitale the indispensable details to make useful the work I was planning.

Here it is, this work, made & printed out of Paris in less than three weeks.

a ij

- (iv)

© I don't claim to produce in fi
A short time, a good book; but damn, I'm in pain.
I think I was well-organized, but I expressed my ideas poorly.
however. to have. remembered what he was immeaning.
It's a sad destiny for Self-esteem at being commanded by the time, and I was almost always; but who would prefer being useful to happiness,

The honor of getting closer to the correctness
And elegance? …

"

z

has"

AU ROL

SIRE,

SI Pouvrage que Japporte aux pieds of YOUR MAJESTY, does not respond not to, the importance of the subject, to the folem-Poccafons unit, it's my fault
efprit., ce nef not that of my heart.
I would have given my life to serve dinner
the magnanimity of your intentions, € public sector jobs at this time when you call upon the nation's elite to de-freeing up your interests. The brevity of the time & my personal infatuation will not Too many objects.

But, SIRE, fi mon ame mwa point I raised my genius, I believe at least to have spoken great truths: Cefet Pen-your Kingdom's most formidable enemy ma, c'est lAgiotage gue je dénonce à Resume)

YOUR MAJESTY. He devours your yevenus, it aggravates the charges of PEtat, he corrupts your subjects, he enervates your power; if he exercises it longer-Time wreaks havoc; it will make things unscentable.
until your blessings.
We should not disguise ourselves, SIRE, that he has protectors on his feet of vo- Throne. Perhaps, alas! {you per- Will they believe that speculation was once legal? that here a palliative is necessary, €$ that my principles, or the facts that I allege make So many mistakes. SIRE, this concerns the Honorable €$ of the Jolut of France. Please do not deign to to report it to a furious man of great interest. Your fan activities dark -» €S the prodigious diflance where You are @F, you must be one of those shameful people details, may determine YOUR I chose not to judge myself no opening. She will at least the foumettre a l'exarien de quelques-uns Not virtuous citizens, endowed with the voice public proclaimed the lights € the impartial integrity. I will await their judgement, SIRE, with the impatience of zeal E$ the confidence of having done the right thing,

W

C vij)

But enough of the misfortune of the State, wanting although this wish was not granted fi ma dénonciation refloit fans effer.... that YOUR MAJESTY may allow me to tell all! ... |

However immense the refour- those of your Kingdom, some abfurde that he may appear ES that he may be in Natural order of things that income of the State cannot succeed in its be- hay, jofe predict that fi the Agiotage nave not infamously destroyed, €$ in fes first causes, the moment when the best- their Kings, the kjen's best friend, the no longer capable of generous deprivations, will experience the painful misfortune of monquer à fes ensagemens, ce fatal moment nej not distant. SIRE, deign to remind you of this prophecy when we ojéra proper to YOUR MAJESTY to sign my five-year payment agreement: of-

then two years we prepare for this day of des-good.

But, SIRE, there is still time to to banish him forever. Do not doubt that one of your subjects has the courage to pre-
to say what the most culpable ignorance, or the most daring audacity can only to bring, by continuing to feed €ÿ protéger P Agiotage, he is indeed a big name-who will prefer your Kingdom of this horrible catafirophe.

I flee with refpeit,

SIRE,

OF YOUR MAJESTY,
The very humble, very obedient € very faithful fervor & Jujet,

The Count of Mirabeau,

Paris, February 20, 1787.

DENUNCIATION

OF

FINANCING

to the Assembly my MO TA BTE S

-

Would France be determined to give Europe once again witnessed the ignominious spectacle signs of corruption, of corruption, of corruption, of corruption, of corruption, of corrup rapacity which has irrevocably withered the last-last announcements of Louis XIV, & the first of the reign of my successor? Our Louis XVI Would he be condemned to this misfortune? The Pro-Would evidence have placed, I won't say the boundaries of the French Empire, (eh! what is missing (What is its extent?) But the limits of his glory, his happiness, in an indelible

HAS

`

7 2

Lightness? The lessons of the paffè, our own lights, the examples of our rivals do not pro.
Will they do nothing for the nation? Would we condemned to appear on this globe only as children gifted with the happiest abilities tions, but unable to overcome the causes which keep us in periodic fits of inconsistency and derangement? The public mind
And these virtues must they be forever ours Foreigners? We are promised the constitution po-the libel that gives them; will we do nothing to prove ourselves worthy? Aggraverorsevery day we do everything that can make us im-What are the benefits? When our population-tion & our advantages give us the idea of a powerful people, shall we not aspire?
never to make us respect our principles
And our fagefle?

These questions may seem exaggerated &
even unreasonable at first glance,
I confer there. If they did not inspire something Surprisingly, fans doubt the harm would do to fans remedies A painful acquiescence in For some, indifference - for others, annonthey would consider the catastrophe they tend to prevent. So I'm not asking to be believed on his word; I only deny it

EL.

that good citizens examine with me State of things in the midst of which we live.

Five years have almost passed since the end of a war that we call, uh. reufe. Eh! how many blessings of the Are they not still far from us in peace? Continuously worked by the needs of argent, the Government has finalized each of These years through new loans. They have further distanced the foot traffic fi fouvent promised, & that so many interests folliThey cite. Taxes have not been increased; but for what long flight of years do we not know. we are not condemned to only calculate the refourthese of the most beautiful of kingdoms that in their What is the connection with huge debts to pay? In truth, the monster of fifcality is tearing. more than it devours; it hasn't given us everything removed; taxes are necessary, they will do for a long time yet; & if they cause deformation but simplified, redistributed, perceived from the hands of ła raifon & du patrictifme , ils {uffiront à nos Befoins, they will no longer crush our industry. they will no longer disrupt the work of our lasoil collectors, these true creditors of the earth & of nature, which leaves can deliver this that she only grants to them. But fans this comforting perfect, how {a -nation -would she escape shameful, disastrous consequences? deftins?

A 2

JP

However, this ol that we're crazy promises, which without a doubt deserves all our con" Fiance, eft notre dernière réflource, Et com: will we achieve it; what about the influence of 'morals, needs, industry, spirit 'from the capital continues to expand throughout France? The kingdom must re-establish these -loans; he must pay the charges, & four 'this report it is in the absolute dependency of the capital. eft in this whirlwind where

Each individual only has a limited fortune.
pide que les emprunts font attends & prévu, .
like a carcass whose greed he is slow to grasp to seize power. The fierce ambition of the Parisians, that of Por, the business people who do not con-They are full of riches that the currency & the contracts, they decide on all operations
'of finance, & make the sole arbitrators of the in.
interest that the nation must pay. Would it be So it's true that we don't have, to lighten our... painful burdens, that their inter- assistance Refused? And under what circumstances? When?
the calainities successive years of de-faftreufes fe, font jointes pour épuifer nos pre-

J sh

vines to sterile agitations, to deliriums murderers of lagiotage, .,,

I want people to boast about our wealth:
It is said that streams of cash are circulating in the capital. But to what are they so fervent?
Is it Pagriculieur, do they manufacture them?
res, eft- ce le commerce réparation qu'ils font Do they profess? Do they lessen the numb weight?
fan of poorly received impositions? The owner-the exhausted, earthbound peasant, the weary plowman of mifere, do they find the money that would make life to their inheritances? This noisy rich woman, which we would like to astonish our imagination, Did it lower the interest rate of Fargent? Has the price of land increased since Peace? Do we see that there is less of it?
sell? Do buyers attest by their number & their fingerprint a real Increase in national wealth? Our Do manufacturers enjoy some pre-
Is this solely due to their perfection? En-Do we foresee a time when, fans effort, fans having to go to great lengths to find replacements, fans to torture the fifcal genius in order to ob-to possess some new invention, one will be able to
to make disappear the taxes created for _ difficult times, & which should have been celebrated with them? Can we simply abandon them?

> 6 (

degrading and deadly sources of lotteries,
of which the lesser evil ek the camouflage for which Are they well-founded?

Far from any of these effects which should
to characterize the general abundance of currency, It develops, we don't even see anything who announces it... Let's just say it: because, after all,
to silence, to disseminate, to numb oneself, all these palliatives those of weakness or crime will never but what fatal aggravations: let's just say it;
the government's needs always demand public loans. These conditions make them increasingly unbelievable for the FIFC & des-products for industry. The influence of fes loans are expected to increase according to their promulgation. Expedient fans number & fans choices, to attract even more money remthey fold the interval that we are obliged to put between these loans'; if we make rem-Bourfemens, this by contrasting a debt more expensive than the one they extinguish; fi
we pride ourselves on our punctuality in paying, cef that the ufuriers have not yet taken from us their ruinous aid; it is only to the extent that the prodigality of borrowers, confounded and diffracted,
The greed of lenders is ingenious and exalted.

Joa (C

Their flight is established, like the worthy a procession of this kind of man, a crowd of a-state-sponsored gamblers who fuel ex- greed cited by the excessive interest that the FIFC pays
-to the maintenance of a war of ruffians against the fortunes of individuals that they fled they did different.
putent. To obtain this noble share, the both sides dismiss all honest calculations small, corrupt all pruning habits
dence, de fageffe, or succumb to this corruption.
They multiply their inventions to deceive re-Conversely, to transfer one to the other, with a significant increase in weight, the burden which They are loaded with this hope, and fur-everything to embrace the honest man, but believe-dule, who, spectator of these obscure gains, fuc-finally succumbed to the temptation to take part.

This is the true cause of the abundance of money that is boasted about, and that they would like us to give as a sign of national prosperity.
Sterile bloating! Unhealthy abundance! Ready to faint at the slightest setback, and all the more more troublesome than we make her fervent perhaps to to hide the truth, until the force of the evil brings us some fatal Empyric, of hands of which we fell again into degradation & disgrace.

jen
No, there is no harm in fearing

this misfortune: he would rather hope to get out of it escape these illusions continue.

-

I would be harmed if I accused our true selves.
teflources, fi, comparing the national debt, government expenses, even super-fluctuates, even exaggerated, even excessive, with the revenues that France can produce, I I declared myself unfit... I fled far from this A culpable error. No one is convinced anymore.
I think France can pay for everything, fans Exhaustion, fans are defeated, fans are even harming their happiness, and that the administration which is approaching It could be used to become unfaithful to a loan due infaffance of means would be ignorant or perfidious.

But nature, although lavish for the Mad about the French, yet he hid his good deeds crazy some envelope. She wanted that The focal man, she wanted the fau- man vage met quelque foin, usåt de quelque induf-sorting to collect donations, even the most spontaneous; & as long as these hays, this induf-sorting is addressed to what is not itself, so much that we look elsewhere than in our own heart what must make the focie fuffifter, durer, profpérer.

*

tes, elle fe proves stingy or sterile. C'ef le undistortion which engenders the misfortunes of which I I fled in terror... The corrupt order Phomme, desfeche la terre & dryit la nature. To defraud him, even if he were surrounded by heaps of gold, or the difpenfait, I see nothing in his flight but inevitable calamities. Who: I will tell to the most self-absorbed ego; in In vain does he rely on his skill, on his adrefle to escape the fatal conféquenthese of the undoing; the man whose fortune is femalebest to laugh at the suggestions of fes corrupt morals, greedy calculations, lives too long to not be at full speed victims of the defilement. It is against him, it is against a disorder to which no one I can flatter myself that I can escape, that I rise up; it is fur les notions défaftreufes pour tous fans exception that he introduces, that I am still looking for a times to awaken the nation; in short, it is to speculation, which continues to revolve around so many heads tes, that I wage a new war; it is he that I denounce at the foot of the throne, to my afflicted fellow citizens, mad with the auspices of the most father of kings.

I have already tried to spread the instruction fur these objects. I was authorized, I was even in-

I was quick to do so, and I believe I have acquired the right to say that I always used it in this family fion falutaire les argumens d'une faine logique.

But what can't an inter-cabal do? fairy with the mind, when she refused to perfuader that we need her? How did I get re-Compensated for my efforts and successes? They still resound painfully in my heart these words of a ruling of the council obtained 'against a necessary and requested book as such: cef the work of one of those individuals who fe hafardent decrire fur des maticres importante, of which they are not sufficiently educated to procure useful knowledge.

Mor, poorly educated! (r) & not a man instructed, (the decree opened the lists to all) did not

(1) Note that I published the original charter of the bank of St. Charles (charter that to say it in paflant, the government, nor any of its representatives did not know, nor did he not know, the memorandum given by the founder of this bank at the court of Spain, the pro-fpc@us published in France by the most dedicated agents from Mr. Cabarruns,,,., Certainly, I could not reason well; But it was difficult to be more educated... I kept the filence fur this degrading policy which pnnit uu man of the work that she Ini has ordered, Indeed,

Duke

shown to fight my books! ME BAD EDUCATED! And to weaken him if he had been pof-
To refute the truths I was developing there, it was necessary spread, (so much do we count on the successes of the slander & speeches of the slander) that my
The pen was sold; that is the only refutation.
of my works that one has ever hafardce.
Mor, poorly educated! And from the very appearance of writings where I shed light on the follies of the day, the char-Latins lost their credit, the men of good faith, from some judgment of their mistakes. We saw them return to their ordinary occupations those whose greed had been awakened, roused by the noise of so much false gains, & which, under the Pi- headband

,

ignorance, alternately executioners and victims, expose themselves to doing or enduring a thousand unworthy things

To delete my book, wasn't that an attempt to punish me!
And what idea would that give of me to the wise men?

the means by which it was claimed that he should be discredited, for a long time-
time a sad experience held them not on guard against the natural defense & the direct consequences of What words does the administration use? I wanted to close the
I want to furnish this feandale, too familiar to all the rulers.
Mendes, but the leaks were very unfortunate; for the St. Charliftes regained courage and resumed their actions.
& destroys as much as it is in them The bint that I once made to my country.

` e € scams. .... Since the government

It has hindered my useful work, is that any wonder?
to know that the deplorable disease which is dragging us down Was she so busy that she was an infant?
wreaks havoc with more fury than Never?

And indeed, if one reflects on the means employed to cure her, we will be forced to do it.
to come to the conclusion that they could only have a cons-
to treat the one they proposed, that they see what they have produced produced.

The lack of public spirit which we will make reached for a long time that we will not have no constitution, but whose government at least he should defend himself against this flaw and our first vice; & it is by abdicating, by trampling underfoot all public spirit, all view: general, any universal morality that one wanted to suppress speculation. Nothing could be more certain.
more personal, more limited than the
the way the future was envisioned; nothing of more inconsequential, more odious, more unfair that the one we dealt with was the paf Let's be clear. Bad faith...
£té employed as a means, as a legitimate reason to destroy what should not

4 {

not only to be suspected; that it was necessary-roof, fur-tout as soon as the real culprits of-

vote refter unknowns, fegarder only like the gaps in ignorance in people's minds light, not very calculating & mifes in fermentation-tion by greed. From then on, the government-He was led astray, deceived, and fell into errors.
errors; he went into details that he did not could shed light on, which the courts should to know them; & in his haste, not having for guides that are quite vile bankers to be both judge and party, he ordered what in faith itself was not merely unjust, but unexecutable.

What happened to this misunderstanding?
than a good theory & general views euflent avoided. The sick were cured of their dizziness by an evil fans compared-more serious. Someone who thought he was from Phon.
neuron, seeing that they didn't even want him sn fuppofer, a laiffé-là l'honneur & cherché to reconquer through bad faith, what he They remove decrees, judgments, arbitral awards trages, where the principles of good faith were entirely priced according to preferences torn away by the intrigue. There are some administrators ftrations as individuals. The pure man

|
|
|
|

yes €

It is often wrong to despise those who do not do so.
No. But finally he can do it, fans ceffer to be respected by those whom he... prife; it is the privilege of virtue. At the con-Milking a corrupt man never shows any contempt for no one that is not returned with ufure. Now, in these deplorable circumstances, the administration does not use anything from refpe@table In none of her ways did she do anything but further loosen the bonds of Phonnêtetė pu-public & particular; each one, of its operations bearing the mark of arbitrariness & private interests, nobody fears at-today the march of the great princes pes; each one has managed not to defecate to have the authority protect the fottife; the cupi-a prefated state free from the fear of losing by her imprudence, and struck against a Dishonor is null and void as soon as honor is no more.

knows no bounds to what it can do,
ofer.

I don't need to justify what before going into the details of the operations which made the end of the year too famous 1785. I do not want to give in to wickedness the pictexte to accuse this work of being fans neceflité la fatyre des perfonnes, pendant la

7 sr

My beneficial influence is my sole goal. Leta-the bleau that I just ejected, will strike by fa truth, all impartial observers will be given therefore a benevolent attention to the new-new developments, to new observations such that a crisis so alarming only makes too necessary.

I fled convinced that he was only doing us one thing choice between two alternatives.

On one hand, it presents a confirmation more or less imminent defrosting by the more fatal, more unexpected, more irreparablerable of all the catastrophes, that which is a true dilution of society.

De Fautre la reflource d'une conftitution which suddenly puts the public and regi-nerateur instead of incendiary battles & devastators that selfishness leaves to itself delirious.... Jofe challenge the most ha-bile to propose between these two alternatives a an environment that is not a palliative, and certainly We must be refreshed by it.

Demonstrating this truth is the purpose of this work. Never did a more important subject call for a more rigorous examination: This is not the issue here of theoretical abstractions, or definitions, which, more or less impassable, should hardly to be considered only as engineering managers nieux which envelop useful truths, He This is an imminent evil, and an insaunt; it concerns the duty and honor of the royaume... Ôôüi, OF THE KINGDOM. The furies of” Paggiotage makes them such that one should not confiderrer as a particular accident of the capitale; they are the calamity of the whole of France. I will prove it using the theory of speculation; I will prove it through my history, through that of the fewer final results; because I don't lower myself I won't go down into all the tortoises of personal interest. They would find something better their place in a criminal registry than in a philosophical work.

OF 2.

Such, then, is the task I set myself- Today: THE DENOUNCEMENT OF AGIOTAGGED. A lot of more energetic writers, more eloquent, will deal better & more willingly third. the vapid and brilliant materials, which will be proposed for deliberations by the af. Celebration of Notables. Here the need, for information tion asks the man, surrounded by the ferocity necessary matters, and which can be supplied in time by the habit of deepening arid difficulties ' more than those who ordinarily do

eultive

DER,

They cultivate their raifon and their penfée. Happy fi facrifiant ainfñ l'éclat à l'utilité pour prix du feeling that makes me prefer a subject cebfcur to the honor of stating more oratorical truths, I am trampling on the power of public opinion, always virtuous when she is enlightened, cona between speculation, without the extirpation of which all `reform is impossible, since they require all-

your restoration of order in the finances these "irrevocably shaken by this fiefdom" peftilentiel.

AGIOTAGE comes from agio, Italian word cor:
broken, (x) which signifies added, surplus value, in fus. I fe difoit dans l'origine de tout prix ex-yielding the natural and primitive value of the things fes, and particularly of a common currency compared to another of the same name; of bank money, for example, compared to current money. It is also called lagiœ of the Bank of Holland is at three or four for one hundred, that is to say, one hundred bank florins worth one hundred and three or one hundred and four current florins,

(x) Agio banco, del credere | per contra, Fc, Ê9e. &
many words of this nature fantasized from Venice in the commercial jargon of the northern nations, of Anfeatic cities, etc., and in ours,

B

Jae

In the cities of France where gold is somewhat times more sought after than money, it is said that it You have to give half a percent, one percent d'agio, to convert écus into louis.

Initially applied to coins & to changes this word dagio s'eft enfuite ctendu aux contracts, public effects, everything in the objects on which the trade of banker ch likely to rise above the pair. In this case, it is the final name of benefice, and this last word seems to have prevailed.
since speculation on coins & the exchanges having become the main industry of Jews, this circumstance has made the word speculation an unfavorable expression.

Agiotage is therefore not fignifñie in literal terms that the trade in effects subject to more or less dagio, de hauffle, or de beiffe. Such a trade could be useful and sometimes helpful; hon-clear when the speculator sees no reason for it pital than in a pafñlagere manner, to obtain-to gain some interest in funds usually employed in more productive trade; useful, when by means of accumulated funds from avance & à deflcin, il becomeoit l'intermédiaire momentary between the government forced to embar-

) m0

borrow, & the capital or rentier, tooth fans this intervention the funds could not have arriver that little by little, & successively in these large loans. (1) In short, the ban-

(1) A fervent philosopher will be tempted to say that the a-giotage fur les papiers qui viennent des emprunts public repofe fur nne calamité, & que les palliatifs that he brings there only causes a calamity of woes; for this speculation that one would barely notice if these papers were not used They were not in large numbers, which would only facilitate the loans in circumstances where most often it It would be a shame if they were rendered unfit, from the outset that they fnrpaffent this part of the cash that the capital-Taliftes would keep this strong fan in their coffers of employment, they deprive agriculture, trade, pro-as previously stated, and the silver fabrications which are aided, extended, enriched their work; & if the loan has not not for the immediate purpose of companies that favor agriculture, commerce & manufacturing, plus that he does not burden them, he hinders, he bruises, he mutilates the strong in industry, on which true glory depends, I want to describe the prosperity of states,

Lorfque the government on one side; agriculture, the trade, the maunfa@nres of the other, fe difputent Targent, he and put up for auction the price of the interest s-rises, and it is in this smoky struggle that the speculators they introduce themselves, [they appear to support, to bear, to crowd-check the weight of the loan by the circulation of credit which is established between them, but variations of price to animate the Vagiotage industry, and from where

) x

quier who handled the negotiations of effects public, was at the royal treasury what the 4

Will these variations arise, in the end, from the mobility of the opinions on the various degrees of trust that it deserves or does not deserve such and such a paper? The speculators have Therefore, it's in our interest to maintain this mobility; she and the fuck of their profits; fear and hope very much means, as well as the abundance and variety of Merchandise is favorable to trade, likewise
The speculator covets abundance and variety in all these steps piers, three certificates of the disproportion between the dice:
penfes de là grande famille & fes revenus, Or, lime
The possibility of borrowing would soon have made this disappear.
disproportionate to the facilities offered by the pro agiotige:
run alongside, maintain, increase

In such a state of affairs, an industry whose branches never reach the earth, this mother of all the cards; a perfectly clear indication ble to that of players in academies, fe makes the ara bit of finance by the unfortunate rivalry that it fnfcite à Pinduftrie pradu@ive, & aux beloins du gou-government for whom all aid is becoming scarce, expensive & difficult.

Stock trading as a trade among our innumerable people Borrowing is very costly for the people; because at the same time While he extorts interest payments from her, he recherishes the necessary information to pay for them.

As for the effects of the restrictions, of the traffic

.that loans produce, is it proven that without the public loans, the cash would be depleted in the the prince's coffers and those of private individuals, and would do by -lì

Jaré

Large retailers and even small businesses are doing this.

to the factories they supply & fou-

Stolen from circulation? This fuppofñitian puts admiffable that where the lack of light and safety would lead to thefaurifer, (Even then, do the loans make a little-(Impossible near; because credit supports trust.) When There is light and safety; one can rely on the sole industry, with its genius for commerce, to circulate to all types of capital, without the aid of Loans. And what a difference between these two strong ones circulations? The one that commerce animates, creates fans eefe of new values, she carries a bean everywhere generating; while the circulation caused by the Public borrowing is merely a sterile movement, a time wasted on the true definition of money, of the science and work that speculation abhors,

We attest to the wealth shown in favor of public borrowing,
the power of borrowing nations; but this wealth,
This power had begun before the loans,

Hey! Who will tell us that these forced operations are not hådon't try this inevitable maturity where the term is found of the prosperity of nations. What is further alleged valuable in favor of loans, is that they strengthen in the short space of a few years the income of a large number, and thus make prodigious possibilities But does that even wefty effort do any harm? And these operations can only be done by carrying out the entire movement they give to a single point, perhaps-one can imagine a good, comforting effect on the body po-a legal dispute that should only aim for perpetuity,

J aa Y

hold until the arrival of the real one. con trainer. (1)

Who can finally tell us the degree of power to which they would be have fans arrived at the loans of these states whose brilliance dazzles?
Nature does not abandon the child whose ignorance...
Trave les mouvements, Sans dont il peut marcher; but Fans of the cruel genes that were imposed on him, he would have walked rather, with more strength, grace & agility.

This is essentially what Fon can say against the fyf-

the term of the loans, and these objections are very serious Fans doubt; but in the current state of affairs, the big ones:
Subtle efforts are sometimes necessary for operations.
profer to those of rival princely families, and the men of e-tat having found so far only the same as the borrowings to make a great explosion of power possible, cek a means that one must be careful not to mitigate, & of which
For this very reason, one must not be extravagant, Empé-governments often borrow, and you,
You will render them great devotion; but do not prevent this which favors borrowing if you are forced to have it recourse; this would condemn the man to deprive himself of a part of his fantasy, lest he abuse the rest, `

(1) We believe it useful to explain the different forms My speculations in public effects. This theory is flawed.
will see all the more naturally its place here, as it is generally very little known in France, & that she was in-core was developed in no book, S

The first strong force of specializations that is exerted on the actions & other public effects and that of simple capitals taliftes that act without effort, by the sole use of their real capital, that is to say, money which they can

Dee (

I] still have a few houses of this kind in Paris; & although the fatal speculation in difpofer, They buy when they anticipate a heatwave, They sell when they fear hatred, they nefeign no compromise point, they do not create any circular paper-eulation, they don't need to try to make agent, they only employ those for whom they already have free access distribution, in calm times, and when the maffe of marketable effects is contained in just hor-This first blow from speculators should suffice.

to the needs of the place, But when the loans font succedes with speed, lorfqwon allowed on toléré the furtive introduction of foreign actions for a value of fifty million, & of company shares national funds for over two hundred and twenty million, it ef
It is impossible that the negotiation of these effects will be effective.
closed within such narrow limits, and it forms a second slap in the face from speculators,

It is mainly composed of bankers & au-very business people, among whom {e include the The people of Lyon and Geneva, who, against their capitals real people have the means to obtain money through the creation of nominal bills of exchange, of acceptances re-reciprocals, and other circulation papers that they make to count, either at the emergency bank, or at the individuals, with the funds they thus obtain, They buy government securities for cash, and resell them tooth for terms more or less distant from others speculators were quite confident in the heat for: the acquaintances yir at prices well above those to which Iys banquiers had bought them with cash.

h 3 €

feduife each day, it is necessary to hope that the race The whole thing will not make it extinguished.

These last speculators form a third clap whose operations prodigiously favor the haufle prizes by giving people the means to buy money, or at least to be in some strong ownership of the effects before paying for them, but also when their price furpafle what enlightened people regard as their reasonable value, these anticipating the bafle, dear-They try to take advantage of this in their speculations. So they sell to deliver the effects at some point in the future that they don't have, and are waiting to buy them until you Baiffe invites them there, or that the deadline of their markets the y force,

We can see that all speculation in public securities cannot fe réalifer qu'après deux operations contraires; un achat & a sale, nothing obliges the speculator to begincer by one of these operations in preference to the other, The sole opinion of the price event determines it In this regard, if he thinks the effects will be significant, he He buys first to resell later. If he thinks about On the contrary, that prices will fall, he begins by By selling, he benefits from the low price he can still find. And he ended up buying it when the opportunity arose. One of these operations there is nothing more recommendable or one more reprehensible than the other. They do not become truly reprehensible only when fraud is involved, which always happens when the paperwork is circulating lans furpañfe les forees naturelles des fpéculateurs; & Such is the unfortunate state of affairs in which we find ourselves atriveted, y

Father

©

7 f

These merchants do not deserve the name of agioteurs, & such is the degeneration where the young has influenced the morals of business people, that this title can only be applied with juftefle to those who, to further their speculations, employ more or less guilty ruses, give false opinions, misleading advice, dis that they sell when they buy, that they buy when they sell, they form: focictes fictitious to make complete fools, follici-offer extravagant privileges, or annihilations odious laughter, absurd defenses, or of scandalous permissions, and thus deceive in turn the authority, the public & their own accomplices, (1)

It is already clear that this word is an inswears; but he does not acquire all the infernal energy-nale of transcendental lagiotage than in fon monstrous coupling with his worthy acolyte the Alonopole. It's the stock market grafted as the monopoly & led by its true followers

(x) Thus, one would give a definition of speculation quite right & very moderate, in saying that it is the study and use of the least delicate maneuvers to produce unexpected variations in Island price public effects, and turning spoils to one's own profit of those who were deceived, misled,

j) €26

which has produced the excesses we lament.
This art knows no bounds, it does not ref:
He respects nothing, he even disdains to hide;
he carries corruption not only in the fecret des cabinets, mais jufaue sur les confins of the empire of reason; it corrodes, it corrupts everything he touches.

The main food of stock trading and certainly a multitude of bearer papers whose form makes negotiable items available to all, and whose privileged companies solicited by the agio-teurs (what they request, they always obtain) days) flood the square.

And as if that weren't enough, actions.
of the discount bank, of the company of Paris waters, of the new company of India, from the Sé- Gum Company négal, from the Amboife steel company, of the ship dubbing company, (1) influence companies against incendiary dies, & I do not make what other compagnies; for suddenly, my enumeration is not complete; the speculators have done it again coming from Spain shares of a bank established

_ (1) Recently extinguished due to prevarication.

Ju (

blie in Madrid, bad & poorly conceived, more badly and even unfaithfully governed, for increase the grim cohort of enemies of our true industry, the quantity deploredpoisoned caustics that defecate our madman.

Hey! This last trait of greed doesn't Doesn't he paint enough of all the excesses of which Can she be held guilty? In vain I have deveiled the treacherous illusions of this bank, & the maneuvers of the agents in France; en-
In vain have events vindicated my principles.
& verifies all my prophecies, even to the point of miracles.
ties. The cruel stock trading is more tireless, more stubborn and above all more accredited, than the
The truth should not be active.

But should we be surprised? What is the headquarters of all the companies that supply it?

Or, the estimation of their resources is done, of their resources? Where is their competence judged? Merce? Or where do we get information about their shares? in Paris, that is to say in this place of dissemination & of vertigo where one is unaware of the nature of all ecs chofes; where it is impossible to take care of them with leakage; where everything is lacking to acquire this kind of lights; where so many pañions that ferlie, oppose their progress; where by the

J 28 €

In the tumult of events and men, it is necessary
Believe everything, see everything, feel everything, all words...
Yes, I swear to the truth, the speculation that is taking place

In Paris, there were effects whose potential profit misleads the imagination, can only engender the most abominable of industries. Hey! what com-Does penfation offer, when -fon réfultat unique, their latest product is a frenetic game where millions have no other movement than to move from one wallet to another, fans nothing. to create, if it is not a group of chimeras

that the madness of the day parades with pomp, &

that tomorrow's will make vanish...

Agiotage fur the actions of an income in.
certain people could only produce ex- in Paris deplorable circumstances; it is important to trace the a picture of these excesses.

And first he threw the most fu-nele in the trade of letters - of exchange.

Before the fatal revival of this game among we, that is to say, before the caiffre gefa;

The account would have been diverted from its definition, one does not connoifloit prefque dans la banque de Paris, re- with respect to bills of exchange, such as drafts & the remifes produced by the verfement & the res verification of state revenues, through purchases what are the capitals doing with our public funds? Francois lifts, or foreigners domiciled outside from the capital, by the needs of travelers that every large city attracts, through its advancements short-term needs of which trade is in need in its operations.

There, the discount was misled by the administration. Bankers, falsifiers, did not have a rather open the game fur fes actions that this first maffe of letters-of- changed has become almost imnoticeable in comparison to that of the game gave birth. We thought we were exaggerating by eftimané to thirty million the funds that the bank of fe- The course could be used for discounting. Todaydhui, imagination would have struggled to conceive How many forged documents are in the hands of the Players? how many present themselves there and how many are admitted (1). They have absolutely diverted the aid of the caiffre des feuls objets que elle avait promis d’aider & de To protect. Let him show himself, let him deny us. the farmer, the manufacturer, the merchant who has some obligations to the discount bank!

Stock trading has prodigiously increased the price of silver,

(x) The cash account was discounted for more than three hundred thousand bills of exchange, and the paper that was presented to him slit eft eftimé à fix fois cette Tomme.

D CE

From the date of the establishment of trade-n

France was on a regular footing, from the introduction some insights into this part of the economy public & the creation of this correspondence general dance of the commercial world which tends fans cefe to produce uniformity of interest money, it was never more expensive in France. Calamous times, times of war, they were leaving more money for trade" François, & by confèquent to a lower interét that he cannot find any now.

In this regard, I appeal to the merchants of good faith. That they disrespect for the service of Ja gent agioteufe, the bankers of the capital
They do not stroll about, nor do they spread their nets.
in the kingdom to train everyone in Paris cash. Hey! How thanks to the price that The players put the game's instruments, Wouldn't Fargent be cheap and rare in the provinces? How did a French écu escape-Does he believe in the schemes of speculators, or rather to those of the intrepid bankers who are busy making fun of you The game?

To judge the extent to which speculation has ren-Dear money, we only need to evaluate the facrifithese extravagances of speculators, by those to whom

a SEX

t

fc would find strength z thanks to the movement that they give to business, the man who manot giote, but who for cou- operations rants, would have needed to realize letters - of - changes not yet due. Let's try to ren-to be tangible, by an example, this explanation important tion. i

You claim that bankers are protectors stock trading & favorites of the efcompte caiffe employ all available resources on their own.
the emergency bank.

The man who needs money must therefore

They resort to discounting capital.
were in the habit of providing their money to five or fixed percent interest depending on the most or lesser influx of cash, &
They would still blush to demand it openly.
any further.

'But in turn, they were initiated by the price that The game has given money, they use industry, and offer only against bills of exchange royal effects, at the price at which they sell for in the long run, while they use their money to buy them for cash. That's their scheme; he To achieve your result, you must follow with some attention to digital details.

We propose to a capital to discount good three-month letters of exchange?
a woman worth one hundred thousand pounds. In the efcom:
per capita at a fixed percentage per year, he should disburse ninety-eight thousand five hundred pounds.
Instead, capitalists respond that they have not no money, but by way of accommodation, he offer at one percent profit, that is to say for one hundred thousand pounds, ninety-nine notes of the loan of one hundred and twenty: five million for example, that he had procured at the market four percent loss, or for four-twenty-five thousand pounds. He who needs of silver, she refuses, and gives the hundred thousand books of bills of exchange for four-twenty-nineteen banknotes of the loan; thus the capitallifte obtains a discount through this operation five percent for three months, or an interest twenty percent for the year,

And like the bearer of the bills of exchange who needs money has only ever exchanged...
To trade one paper for another, he is obliged to carrying ninety-nine tickets borrowing from the bourfe where he is not given any than ninety-five thousand pounds. The par-private individual forced to make money with bills of exchange not yet due, therefore forced

OF

forced for the most honest speculation,
the most interesting, the most foreign to the agio-stage, to pay the money five percent for three months.

Thus, setting aside the harsh greed, the culpable indifference to the means that speculation inoculated into all the clefts of the fociété, it force the one - even the one who does not play, to borrow-ter for fes befoins du moment à vingt pour One hundred Pan. What must, what can become, Under such a regime, all regular businesses to bind?

But your courageous arithmetic disdain-Does it violate all moral trust, all in-Interest of individuals? Tell us at least what will do in such an order of things the fort of the cre-said national trust in public funds necessarily degraded?

Hey! Don't you see that excessive greed-five of the players blafed on the necessary sacrifices every day more and more in the rush, profit-protection of public effects, since lagiotage He himself made it a source of strength, so much so that national funds have become for exhausted speculators, what jewels, the

C

Dear
Diamonds, the fabrics are made for the diffusers who They're desperate for money. That's how...
The effect of the state is lowering prices, while foreign or enemy pressure is rising; that's it.
how it is absolutely impoflible that the government does not borrow from the conditions actions that peace should allow him.
Wouldn't one say, seeing "tolerate" & perhaps cause such disorders, that the arithm-political scientists determine that the most The richest, most prosperous of kingdoms would do this-him where, on one side, interest would be paid enormous, while on the other hand, the game which necflits these interests, would divert the work,

attention, the capital of the true refour-

These national ones?

The speculation that has distorted the character of Paris trade in bills of exchange, & heated in the kingdom, the price of money, therefore still corrupted the trade in public funds, & each day it aggravates the unfortunate inconveniencesniens. Until the game's revival, we have-I can no longer complain in this business than to some conjectures, some prophecies unofficial, or, if you prefer, some in-tendencies to produce variations in The fan prices are real. It was reserved for

Jes

nowadays to see this trade become the auxiliary
A chain of unrestrained speculation on the shares...
This is where new pro-products of this infernal industry.

And first of all, what kind of men are in charge?
of this great movement, of these operations extraordinary, violent things that decide at-today, the interest rate of money, the price of public effects, habits, rituals, The customs of Parisian commerce? Who makes the main actors in lagiotage?

But, shall I deliver men to contempt?
whose maneuvers were more suspicious than cons-Do nudes escape legal proof? Some men-my that the Fang, or alliances bring closer several honest, esteemed, in-terrifying even, and who have well deserved to.
the homeland? Shall I, without pity, engrave the shame of these infernals who make bad citizens fans doubt; but whose ignorance perhaps excuses the crime? Ae: i

Ovi, the crime I am fleeing from is a crime public; the accusation must be. The law established point of punishment for this offense; the The society is responsible for punishing him; every citizen has dfoit d'armer fa vigilance par une denunciation folemnellé where the accuser names himself, The crime and the culprits. For two years they ravage the kingdom with impunity; that they exat least punished by opprobrium the evil they have Done. Hey?! I'll tell you their names, these men. would pretend to see only declamations futile in the history of their maneuvers, they fe would boast of being justified by this fact that we didn't bother to signify them. 11 they have to sniffle to legally rise up against my reproaches, my afflertions, my work, so that if they do not They don't, their filence accuses them with me. H It is essential that among the challenges of lagiotage, we count it as one of the biggest, that he repofe fur of men known by the sole intrigue, foreign to the vocation of commerce, to all his principles, not participating in any way in this kind of general responsibility, which, Despite their jealousy, it binds all the coin merchants by the honor of their vocation, and the need continuous that they can have from each other.

So it must be said: the main players Barroud, formerly a notary, is involved in speculation; d'Efpagnac, the priest, the canon, the Grand-vicar, finally the abbot of Eppagnac; Seneff, the Count; Pyron, the meddler in the affairs of the King, and so many others; Servat, the front man banal. This I don't do what Lalanne does: already famousbre in the Saint-Charles bank; Saint-Didier, Duplain de Saint-Albine; & so many others very speculators of the city, of the court, of all the states, some of which raise their funds in pro-tction, the others in industry.....

These are the ones who are tossed about in their agio-millions of fans, fans order, fans none of these forms of accounting which laws have been in place in all countries of the world.
the importance, and that everywhere they have ordered.

And this to such men incapable of fidelity to their commitments, which at each deadline, forced to miss it due to need of expedients, compel them to imitate them, & make to bend the most necessary rules of the commerce; it is to such men that the ban-Parisian merchants lavish, or rather profiteerkill the rescuers, because they can their Sell at high prices! These are the pillars of speculation.
which all the newspapers are reporting on, which fixes in Paris, eyes wide with astonishment from every corner of commerce, which presents a business show all actions contrary to common notions, to the received principles, and which in the hideous

) sex

And rare times when he showed himself, he always ended in major catastrophes! Here are the men who deprive us of all credit, all confidence loyalty, any influence. But that their im-What are these deplorable consequences? Strange-Gers in commerce, they have no reputation there:
tion; they will lose none of them. #outs of They'll just have to go back into the darkness.
And perhaps by making a trophy of their detef.
celebrity table, dupes they slaughtered,
the difficulties they have created, the disorder that they threw into business, thousands of manieres which they have made a name for themselves.

And do you want me to give you a proof, among many others, of the necessity of Reveal them? See what the excess of the most Greedy Baffeffe made them conceive & execute-to speculate. Take a look at the plan of the most audacious & most extraordinary scam vagrant that was ever formed. I'm crazy.
the eyes this secret plan, delivered by the imprudent eagerness to acquire accomplices; this plan that a .

invisible hand seems to protect against the wall-what it excites. (r) Jele liss jiy voice affection comparable to that of obscurity forests hidden from the pafans. I find there

(x) I printed it at the leak of this work.

traps set for a very similar purpose, of treacherous primers thrown non-solely at the cu.
Speed, but in good faith, in good faith.
On every page, we play with fortune, with the honor of the victims that they want to strip;
we complacently display this fragility of The blur that was discovered in... I don't know what.
difposition of a ruling, the occasion & the means to set a very clever trap, mainly dreffé to attract & embrace the speculators that the correct notions, the logical combinations nebulous federates. This is not an examination of au-a contempt for the intrinsic value of the actions; it is a methodical calculation of the price at-which ones can be raised by the reforest of the monopoly, and of the relations of this monopoly, with the needs that have been created, and that we will give rise to more. The context is being developed there.
the process, the steps to follow, the rules which must be observed, and how the Vietimes slaughtered by the knife of harsh necessity, they will be reborn from their ashes, to rekindle the even strong, until an entire ruin & generale, whose era is hidden in the future.
Everything was planned, everything was thrown into the war plan hatched for the fuck of this monopoly. The players at Baife make the enemies. They are called blind players, because that they hadn't anticipated this kind of attack.

A campaign plan is a pretty good idea.
came as if by inspiration to a person who had the greater joy of carrying it out.
Conquest is the complete ruin of the blind.
Players put at the mercy of laflociation.

At the end, this brilliant undertaking is done:
This is nothing less than a case of hoarding.
of all the actions of the new company of India, and of all commitments for it to deliver, so that the affection may be all at once the cave where you have to buy the stock, the caverne where it is necessary to leave it, and that constraint to arrive there with one's hands full, one is forced to
to further fortify the empty pockets. (x)

(1) Since these lines were written, the Abbot of Ef Pagnac is said to have become the sole owner of this hoarding. The act was drawn up and executed before a notary; it pays the shares to the blessed society at a price which enriches all members, which seems to be false.
that he has state revenues at his command. Because if that neft pas, with what money will the speculator priest pay-So, are they afflicted? He mortgages them on the product of ations. But these products are always delayed, ton-days made more difficult by the enormous interests that He tells him about his loans and his schemes, when he Will they realize it? And this monopoly; it's...

mM

Dar (

Trade rumors, some will say a-volunteer pologiftes; each one is master of their own destiny Money. Indian stocks are for sale; Anyone who wants to or can buy them can. You don't have any.
If you want a hundred, we want them all;
To acquire them, we put them up for auction.
And after all, what is the final result? This If one loses, doesn't the other win?

one. Í

Ah! That's where commerce is, it has to be done.
disappear from the face of the earth. But in attending to have someone prove to me that this is the In commerce, I say to hell with speculation that gives birth to such projects, one gains what the other loses; it is by a displacement entirely feminine blatant to that which the thieves of great chemin. I say there's nothing good to hope for, not even personal security, in the city where the author and the perpetrators of this operation Businesspeople can raise their heads. I say that after the existence of such a plan that I denuncio to the nation, we must no longer ask maneuvers that he necessitates, that the abbot of Éfpagnac pre-This tends to demonstrate great talent! Ah! I admire it!

perversion; I am horrified by that of the protectors tors by means of which such a man proceeded, fou-raises such a machine; but I know of no ta-slower than the indifference of the means,

>g

What harms does speculation cause, but what harms He won't. I say that if one is master of his money, to the point of making him fervently desire a Conspiracy... But no; those who have their money, legitimately acquired money, they do not use it to confpirer aufli baffement against that of others..." ! Hey! To whom does it appear-has this brilliant idea, to make it fall &
Thank you to the stock seller for delivery for comfort.
Sea Ja loss? To two well-known men having started out in a career of speculation, betting zero against millions; in pairs men who, even today, some noise that they boast of their successes, do not offer for guaranteeing their flocculation, that the effects accaequipped with the ease of pawning them, &
the money that the federation brings them from others...
Such are the Abbot of Efpagnac and the late Pyron;
And it's two that one would say: They are masters of to distribute their money! Some are their affociés, a company whose capital can to rise above sixty million, meft-she doesn't have the fortune of these players in such a report that this fortune no longer than an atom?

But how can we carry out operations?
rations all at once immense & on

) €43

"fcandaleufes? Where do they get their fe?"

Course?... Honest reader! It is to this questiontion that I was burning to lead you. That's it that the evidence of evil would no longer leave excufe to the administration which would not deduct from among us the true causes of these degrading effects? For what tolerated affliction? rable will be given to this new industry of our bankers, ready to ufure & fur gages? Yes, at a very high rate, and very high rate. Without I doubt I've seen their accounts; but when Public notoriety would not indicate the results, when we shouldn't have our acCaparaisers pay up to twenty and twenty-five for a hundred the money they borrow; when the abbot d'Efpagnac would not carry this interest lightly exeff in increasing the price at which it was sold dra the actions; I ask: can we excufer foi-mééme de fe prêter aux opérations of such a society, other than by the tenThe appearance of a huge creature? We'll undress it, I I do it, I said it, we do business; but In the final analysis, what is it about? About conForming a loan for future use... I'll stop there, I won't I don't know how else to describe this odious gambling den; But we must have the courage to say it, and to say it again. a thousand times that he abhors, that he employs more millions that the richest trade in the kingdom;

Jise C

And I repeat, Pon would want an industry innocent put fublifter next to lagiotage to the point he has reached! One would like that the honest merchant, the craftsman with his refined morals ples, the worker with the modest wage, stifle the virtue of reflecting on this intoxicating spectacle of gains enormous, of tempting luxury, of born fortunes in one day, skillful fans, talented fans, fans advances, and did not want to trade their proFeflion is a pain, their job is obscure for such people Enchantments!....

But by what magic did we manage to to make the government at least infenfible to such strange scenes? By distorting everything all the concepts, by perverting all the words, all the ideas (because it's still there Pun des more infallible, like one of the most funeftes effets de l'agiotage ;) en lui perfuadant that in truth, speculation can produce what.

These ailments, but that it increases circulation,

& thus contributes to heating, to extending the cre-

said; that thus, to stop the dangerous induf-sorting of those who strive to make the
The price of the effects, we must tolerate, protect perhaps-to be the maneuvers of those who strive to to exalt them.

at

That's what we haven't hesitated to say & repeat-for two years, that's what the legislator seems to have believed. It is therefore infinitely important-It's so important to appreciate this distinction of players to to the heat & players to the bay, to prove that it is purely fictitious, futile, derisory, and that it was invented only to mislead the go-government in times of difficulty when the Speculators need to protect their assets.

Indeed, in the way we share them in players at the hauffe, in players at the bauffle, we one would think one was seeing two enemy armies fighting with a relentless desire to destroy each other, or two slaps of men following each other invariably clearly a different fantasy, as much out of love-clean, but only through the interest of greed. Eh Well! This weft is nothing less than the real deal.
state of the chos.

The love of gain is undoubtedly the heart of all these movements, but they would soon followed by rest, if there were two parties fyfté-matically opposed to one another; for finally One of the two would triumph. He doesn't succeed.
anf. A verfatility as cowardly as it is perfidious, a unique principle, that of non-hurling to win, but to win rightfully or wrongly, that's the point.

which effectively characterizes the main Speculators. That's what, unless a remedy is found effective, promises the frightening duration of speculation until the explosion of the shameful calamities that he prepared.

The speculators who run all these gangs scandals, -make men profoundly corrupt; they studied everything the capitaltale offer of resources to the spirit of fraud to determine the nature of their operations. Blind fear, even blinder hopecore, the lightness of spirit that maintains at most to a high degree the multitude of distortions, make the Clement of their calculations. How with Can we support another principle based on such data? fixed in the mind of the speculator, that of tendre sometimes at the haufle, sometimes at the baifle, felon' The convenience of the moment?

Except for the same men who, in such a case. ftant, they talk about the players in the haufle like public benefactors & present the joueurs to the bafle like detestable confpira- Do the authors themselves play at being bluffed when Their interest leads them to do so.

There's more! The players often see in their meeting the means to make it flourish any combination whatsoever, and for hope tou. disappointing days for the scoundrels that the bait of gain their fervor of link, they form affostrategies to better overcome difficulties; but as is characteristic of bad faith, eft Lacking a slap, we see them betraying the each other each time the plot that they they wardiflent, favor a useful & secret defection.

They are therefore absolutely sly, they Empty of defenses, the distinctions of players at the haufle & of players at the baiffle, as forming two groups of men, more or Less despicable, they work as au pairs, or rather

They do the same thing. They all take the effect.
sometimes forward, sometimes backward (1). (The dictionary tionnaire fe form as we see) felon qu'ils see a good opportunity.

Among the bona fide speculators, (because at God forbid that I put them all away.
same line, & without a doubt it is of honor-nets, since the gambling dens fall, when he only a large number of players remain.) among Some of the honest speculators do

(x) Slang terms: to take Pefit forward, that is to play at the haulle; ex mriere, c'eft jouer à la baille.

They were taken in by their credulity for estimates.
exaggerated (and those ones are playing games;)
the others, (and these ones are playing at bluff,) of their overconfidence in the triumph of truth, of reason; for it is to this extent that scheming is noble and useful; it thwarts all the calculations of prudence & fageffe when she stoops to take part. This ship Not that their triumph was not undoubtedly sharp, but sooner or later; & in this uncertain space, Phonete man is crazy-wind defeated by the rogue, the good logician by The infernal, Pami of the true by the juggler.

However, this distinction between players and the haufle & players at the baiffe was necessary-to do to color the speculation in the eyes of the gou-government.

Indeed, the player with the beating is Pen-enemy of the state, the opposing defensive player will do it, my friend. These Meflieurs wanted us to... considered as one of the pillars of the chofe
The public is crazy about the players' names at the haufÿe.
"Patience," they said, "for the word 'players 4'."
as soon as we play for the good of the state, Our function is ennobled. And as in France, from the worst to the better,

) 4th C

best company, leffronterie & le babii serve as logic and science, pro-
'Tectation was for those who called themselves players at the heat, the injustice & the perfection for the so-called players at the baiffle.

Playing at being a slut in the odious forest that that one wanted to attach to it, would make one seek to do fall an effect beyond its real value; & as the ever-growing value of an effect whatever, eft, following these Meflieurs, the Pal.
ladium of the Empires, it is very clear that those which tend to decrease this value by cause plagues:

But men of good faith, that these words have been used, have not thought that independent dately of the extravagant pretension on the-
which players at the haufle base their axime, hoping to make a stock fall to - def mad about his worth, that's a madness that shouldn't be to be dangerous. We calculate the value of the effects depending on the chances of profit versus loss they offer, and in this respect as much the exaggeration of profits are easy, because a general distribution It's difficult to hope for the favorites, as much as it is difficult to present false fears and motives (1)

(x) I am not talking here about those menfonges grofliers that They make the speculators run around to encourage their speculations.

D

DCR

to criticize the value of an ation, when founded
The price is not wildly inflated by speculation.

I appeal to experience. According to the virtuous players at the haufle, I may in my difeuffions fur la caifle d'efcompte , fur la ban-than Saint-Charles, on the waters of Paris, written to favor the game over the slug. (And I will pray, while addressing these honest people, to de-Clarier: what secret motives dictated what I Publish now, what a bunch of speculators!

claim fervir, & how many players at the
(They would have given a lot to stifle this work.)
But if they have just received, then I have also provided the way to prove that my calculations were false, my observations are unfounded, my

I only said that there are no physics-based players at the hauffe, nor physicist players at the baifle; but he
There are honest players, and dishonest players:
And dishonesty can be used to lower the price
even too high in a stock price, as if to make it rise.
A dishonest player is involved in speculation, that's what he fig maker in gambling dens. For example, lorfthat a certain man who is now among the pretenders players at the hay, & whom we have just dressed of a very large financial burden, when this man had a new fanfare put in the English papers to make the price of Indian shares fall than daue very speculators make it rise, he did a terrible thing.

5th €

prophecies of pure chimeras; for when one one does not write the truth, one can only be satisfied of the lie. Well! Where is the evidence of these false calculations, these flawed reasonings that a particular interest would necessarily have me Quotes? ... I'll go further.

Show me a single action that has contained up to this point within itself the reimbursement probable fact of the extravagant price at which one They all carry them! Isn't that right up to now?
The loss of some that brought gain to others?
Don't the swaying or rapports between sellers and buyers, which So far, they've decided on the share price? Seein their estimates something other than... player combinations to create Are these offers or artificial demands? And in These combinations reveal the true value of the stock.
that which results from the enterprise it represents

The crack, isn't that what we're concerned about?
Less? Its price is so enclosed in the movement of the game, which was barely created sees the shares rise to a price that long success of the company cannot even give them. What am I saying? We sell them, we buy them before they expire; also, it is necessary-He expected to see the creation of shady companies;

D 2

DATE

Because what does reality matter? We only want...

»

actions.

Once again, if the value of an effect was calculated by reason, it would finally arrive The moment when the movement would stop. -The additions sold for their income would do in the hands of those who can wait for it, & The speculation would die out. But far from the march current trends in the field of human activities lead to this goal, the ftagnation eft is everything that speculators fear.
They must stir up the whirlwind (1); if it Talentit, ils souffrent; s'il s'arrêt, son repos their mortal; & dès-Jors ƚa raifon , ou la Can they be in good faith?
raifon?.... In matters of stock trading it is imperiety. In the turbulent nation of the agioteurs, we point the finger, we deliver to the rider-
"He who bets is torn apart by slander."
for her; he alone is a player, the others make fages.

If there were 'really' fyfte- players matics at the baiffle, they would be born from the examinations-managements of infants, of absurd pretension

(x) This is what in the Di@ionnaire d'Efpagnao, Ba-Roud & Compagnie, we call Fewetter Lu Toupie, to undermine values, always growing, that e-

-talent. The players are at their best. When the char-Jatans want to sell twelve pounds for one crown.

fixed francs;"& that the madness of the day brings them for buyers, it is quite simple that it is found to. sellers who give a. coin for fix books, & I don't see that, in this rapport, the: players at the beach are doing something

Neither particularly extraordinary nor particularly reprehensible.

But they sell what they do not have. (1)
I don't know of a single business where he

(1) A ruling of the Council states that by this operation, traps are set for public faith, and calls for nothing from similar sales.

I would like to be clearly informed why one refuses to sell what one doesn't have, when one has to time to deliver, that is to say, to procure the quantity Has the property been sold? Has anyone sold it for delivery in the same moment one hundred and thirty million of a loan, tant-You say there are only one hundred and twenty-five of them? Did he sell two hundred thousand aetions of St. Charles, while one Wen created only 'one hundred and fifty thousand?' In that case, Fa-
The buyer and the seller are doing crazy, dangerous things, & it is to give a very fatal importance to you-to generize them by decrees, which enfeissent to a na: tion that a promise is not one, & to the foreigners
gers that the François government can put in place ticks the equally foolish and corrupt maxims, which measured according to the suitability, whether well or poorly perceived, of the ps `

#3

can't manage to sell today what we ef-father will procure profitably tomorrow; thus all

The degree of respect that one owes to commitments is at the moment.
Hbrement & legitimately contracted.

But ultimately, isn't each seller responsible for... of their own making? If there are some who have sold what they Pa-They don't see it, it's the way he sells what he doesn't have any supplier of any things that he are requested. These entrepreneurs can be mistaken.
according to their means and their resources; but one does not had not yet decided to punish them by looking commc. nuls € infolites les engagements de ce genre. On had not yet suspected that they were setting a trap for the public faith. And to be perfectly honest, I don't give a damn about that accusation that has been resounded at length and unintelligible eligible. How, indeed, could the seller of 100,000 pounds of the 125 million loan to be delivered at a certain date, Could he have laid a trap for public faith, because in bringing together the form of all sales for someone- ` that time may be, and whose number and terms make also & completely ignored by Iui, we find that they steal 125 million? The sellers have not edemment pů s'entente, pour ces abfurdes ventes; & ce
The exposed evidence demonstrates that the intention was not to declare them null and voic such markets, which would alleviate the intolerable burden of Excessive commitments from buyers, or making their fortune.

At the rest stop, I ask those who are willing to please explain to me who in a country, where they make a big fi
The crime of selling what one does not have, has the credit, the right,
the authority to have the price listed on public papers Defects that do not exist. Such are the news.
shares of the discount bank. (This is written on the za February 1787.)

55

A merchant sells what he doesn't have. But what do they do?
The players at the haufle? They promise to to deliver money they don't have. Do we believe that when the Abbot of Eppagnac, or Baroud buy twenty-five thousand shares of India, they have thirty to forty million refte in their Caiffe to pay them? And what about the players we've seen?

to borrow shares to deliver them,
Can't we see the Efpagnac company, Seneffe, Pyron borrowed money at fifteen, twenty
And twenty-five percent interest to pay them?
In short, some sell what they don't have No, the others buy what they cannot not paying. Some expose themselves to the embarrassment of to find the effect, the others to that of finding Money. Which ones are the most guilty?
All the fans do it, no doubt about smoking their ca-hospitals, their industry, their time, their activity, their integrity in this deplorable game, at the most ef-addicted to games. But if the offense had to be judged of these two strong players in the reports With public credit, isn't it obvious that the need for money increases it everywhere world, while the needs of effects do not affecttemp that a few individuals.

And if it were true that, for the good of the state
We had to play and play at haufle, this should

D Ka

to be mainly on the papers of the em-public loans. Now, all the speculators I have named, and all those who live and will insane
Their banners do precisely the opposite.
We have seen that by studying these papers
To get money, they hold them at Low prices, and the low price denigrates them. Was it more to appreciate their patterns & their ntanœuvres? If he was really in that pile of scoundrels and devils, some gambler-matic to the baifle, which judging the effects by their intrinsic value, sold or bought them
tât felon ce qu'elle lui fusuggere, il devrait ven.
to sell stocks and buy bonds; because In the first ones the capital is very high, & the unknown interest; in the second, the capital is low, & the interest is not only known,

but advantageous.

If the impartial observer of the vertigo of day can make the just horror of the chofe fur fes vrais agens, s'il peut confidéré in these disordered movements another object that the slightest speculation, he will understand that as much those who only seek their success in the game combinations, & do not make the fou- to be held only by forced operations > criminal- the, defective, must be treated as empoi-

public donors; as much in the deplorable crife where we are, those who fight them- sometimes try their motive, (and without a doubt it and players who were thrown against their taste in the Pinextricable labyrinth of the agio- tage) tend at least to preserve some notions fages, since their speculations do not are attached only to the empire they attribute to ECS concepts.

Well! These have been unfavorable or- green by the government, & that's the most It is a great crime of speculation to have won This success, because it supports true art- ment deftructeur de fe créer les amis, ap- Then, party leaders among those in power & in credit, among the depositaries of the authority; funereal art which in a country, where one does not have the freedom to write; where a decree of the council may to intervene in the markets, to disrupt them, the modify, annihilate them; in a country where none Contrary to this, no gathering of lights can equal- protected the minister against the traps that he tend those who have an interest in obtaining; (1)

(1) These confidences make the most important tance. The effects of speculation left to itself find a strong form of compensation in their own

(Hey! What greater interest is there than that which realizes
(The game is full of activity, where so many millions are at stake!)

nature. We have seen it (first note, page 22), all The operation requires an apposition that balances it; because the profit can only be made through the reflection of allotments two. The seller is accused, through speculation, of having operation tends to decrease the price of the effects it trades fique, & to increase their apparent maffe. But weft-
It is also not true that when this speculator buys back To fold, it operates the heating, reduces the apparent mafferent from the effects, and thus absolved the excess he had Occasional? That's why speculation is legally permitted.
In Holland it is completely tolerated, in England what-that for other reasons the laws forbid it. Also In ordinary times, is speculation very moderate?
in the country. The players are waiting to engage in these activities.
decisive moments which take place in the heat or of baik-
important events; but these great revolutions are rare.
ment assez fubites pour n'être pas plus ou moins apperquestions before arriving; but in countries that enjoy the freedom of the prefect, everything that is noticed is soon public. Part of the effect of these revolutions takes place so to speak in advance, & the speculators pru.
dens penvent éviter une partie de la storm.

It is not the same when, independently of major causes of variation brought about by events political, a simple stoppage of the council wrested by Pim-portunity, obtained through the artificial arguments of Speculation, which can never be fought publicly,
As soon as he has protectors, we practice on objects privileged; involves the authority in all its forms must infallibly cause the most misfortunes Incredible.

Ah! Let us remember that in Law's time,
There was a lack of men who could fight
all the vain precepts of the moment, or if you They want those who will do it. If they are exposed. to do their reasons methodically and clearly not to believe the magnificent promises of the fyf-Even so, would it have caused so much havoc? Perhaps clear ideas that one finds in memoirs In these extraordinary times, one is tempted to to believe that the talent to discuss these matters abftraites, lacking then; but it is more pro-

It is still possible that talent feared the defpotifme under whose orders speculation ravaged the kingdom. If the voice of enlightened men sharper to distort thousands of markets crazy contraries, faith & the figuration of the parts, for to change the times, in order to alter the conditions, to ruin one of the players' clubs in order to enrich the other. Under such a regime, prudence and fagacited in the operations are without virtue; but also a Is such an intervention always a revolutionary injustice? aunt, and perfectly suited to overturning any species credit is far from being useful. This is so obvious that I shouldn't believe it's a mistake G groflicre. We didn't make a mistake; we wanted to deceive.

\æœX

would have been free, if only the players' interest the slurring would have brought the effects of their vea true value, foreigners would not do. naked spying for the moment when they were supposed to realize our chimerical actions, take away our gold, the agent of our replenishments; France does not die summer devastated, ruined, degraded.

Hey! Let's remember, how the prin- These magnates and courtiers were fomenting at each creation these fatal papers that they do not could only pay the gains from speculation; how evil begat evil; how We went from one delirium to another; how the terror Faififloit les joueurs accredités & puiffans ; com- They were subjugating the administration by putting it. so much their personal interest instead of that of the state; how Law, himself at heart very skillful, and from which one could have drawn some lightres which have advanced us by a century; Law, which perhaps & probably never formed no other project than that of a fire truck founded on values that were false in the eyes of reason fon, trained, if this is not intoxicated by the defor- The practice of speculation led to nothingness. inéme for guarantor of the tickets, of the shares that he He believed without cefe, and who had no value but through play.

+ ona Li

A terrible example for all nations!
A terrible lesson for the present moment! Because it is It is in vain that one would try to distinguish the times, Facts and people. Modern man who has seen, compared, and pondered the differences the most finance experts; he who, through his experience-his talent, and his morals are the most suitable for reconciling the efforts of credit & the eternal principles of the political economy tic; he who is perhaps reduced to deploy-to return today, and for the second time to have given birth to the discount bank, in voyant the excesses to which she is prone, & the exéthe crable speculation it produces; this man my
It is often said that Law was deeply calculating.
the science of finance itself
She said she had made little progress since him. Eh Well! Law lost the finances, the credit, the refourses, the honor of my country, in fubftiadding palliatives to palliatives, by adding-so many new reflorts to a machine fans bafe, by giving fans cefe new food to speculation. And how he let himself be drawn into...
To attend this deplorable orgy? By its unforeseen circumstances.
yance fur the leaks of the speculation delivered to heads light and not very calculating, through cries, speak clamor, through intrigues; whose? Jou-EUR... Which players? Players at the fire; there was certainly no other very then. to.

But let us finish, (not the complete picture-
In addition to speculation, it would be necessary to write vol-
My thoughts and time devour me, Who would read them elsewhere?
their in this land of novels & fairy tales?) but the broad strokes of what is important
So much to denounce.

If all honest industry, all moderation

In the challenges, all spirit of order, all repair-judicious use of productive labor, all economic factors make it impossible to ignore in a state of exaltation.
tion & d'ivrefle where speculation throws us; if to all the drawbacks of the game & the most frightening-born of games, greed, impatience, the evil-true faith, disgust for everything that does not Him, with his contempt for the law, one can judge what must be its influence on morals and order public... Do we want to know everything in one word?
It fosters a sense of impunity, the mother of all evils.
the offenses and of all the crimes, or rather He needs it.

Who only split first, thanks to excesses memes to which it is directed, speculation must Forming a bulwark of protectors? But Besides, why would we punish him? Why the

Was the government in a frenzy against those who were lay-
Are they being led to these terrible provocations?

What! You're forbidding me from buying or selling crazy shares in certain forms, & You're increasing the number of Cefle fans!
you continually multiply the para- beings fit & voracious whose function is to puff at my home every day at all hours, to ten-to quell my greed! And, not content with unleashing all these vampires, which you confess to, which you order existence, as if interest Getting rich wasn't enough for them to seek-
They are eager to multiply their falafels, you give them Make it a necessity! It is necessary, through finance that you impose on all these currency exchange agents, (1) most of the viles & to this army of courthird, even more vile, it is necessary that, mad pain
They come to seduce me, to die of hunger;
They need to squeeze money out of me at all costs price! Hey! How can you not see that from-When will the markets take on any strong form?
That the most culpable combinations will
To be born and reborn? Let these men intrude.
are eager to make us all take turns

(1) Let us reflect for a moment on what it costs to the nation's mania for borrowing through creations of currency exchange agents,

Victims of each other? Ofez, punish me. of having sold long-term shares of which I I couldn't get rid of it any other way, fans, suffer A ruinous loss! Ofez punish my sailboat of having bought them, when a stockbroker whose existence is extinguished by you, the seduced, obsessed, tormented, and that forbecause he can only buy them on credit! Ofez punish other violations of your orders, while that other stops will make them necessary!… Speculation therefore had to add even more to these deplorable contradictions, among so many duties that governments impose on us, And so many provocations to violate them!

Yes, impunity in speculation is an ae of justice. It would be too barbaric to punish offenses that the administration should have foreseen, from that, carried away by the moment, she adopted & promulgated the Burfal conceptions, which far to strike at the cause of the evil, seem not to have had of the object rather than rooting it more firmly. For To punish the excesses of speculation, one must not have not excited; & even, to despise him, one must to have shown bitter disdain to these beings viles who ofent employ jufqu'à la menace, fi.

The authorities do not favor the tax they want.

lever fur le délire welle s'effort d'éteindre.
qs
THE

The excesses of speculation therefore necessitate impunity and everything that leads to it. They lead to contempt for the laws; the confederation immediate eft. ... What am I saying?... Dart of

To evade them is more disastrous than to violate them.
becomes a commendable industry. Hey! that Shall I say it again? Look at the demeanor of the mid-niftres of justice. The audacity with which fe show all these heinous operations their in impofe. They only ask to be able to ce-to have a raifon appearance, to be difthought of February, so much do they fear doing the chain of the guilty! The defrauding of their eft-stated. One of them represents the danger of disrupt traffic; & the denunciation ex-worse at the foot of the court. (1)... The traffic lation! What! Speculation would create a circulation!
Ah! yes; it is indeed the circulating pestilence, of which Contagion destroys all real circulation.
confume all industry, diffout, annihilate all focal links, all the principles, all the rules of good order. I will cite one last example,
And perhaps the most serious aspect of these conferences.

(1) The King's religion was even stolen. He was said it concerned finances, items from the reflort of a commillion; & Islands investigations which finally carried the light in the dark labyrinth called circulation, were hung.

E

The game is organized, fueled, directed by the hands cleanest to spread the ills of Paging for those very ones who make them more innocent. This slap in the face of financiers ho-having earned the Prince's trust, entrusted with state officials, depositaries of the revenues, distributors of these expenses, acquire through This even represents a very large credit. What emolu-men more generously fixed than theirs! The Princemna? Didn't he want to tell them, by this prodigality, to only concern himself with his own business Vice? Didn't he want to turn them away from everything?
another makeshift project, by offering them one very - brilliant in Ÿ income attached to their Places?

Well! Speculation, from the moment the discount scale in eft became the object, a exaltered the greed of several of them. The the credit attached to their positions seemed to them an infruit which they could not use for them leaves; they opened their caifles to perpetual loans, received, under false pretenses of public devotion, everything they wanted for them lend, and turned thus against the nation itself the result of his trust & his benefits. They do it, yes, they do it first have shown that it is possible to speculate on values

iz

immense. The vanity seft mife of the party, Buy shares by the thousands, (because at such men who govern the opinion of the strong, including Capitals abound, it was therefore necessary to to raise prices,}) buy shares by milto bind, to distribute millions of banknotes, was not For them, it was simply an operation of pure amputation. conformity to the toilet. Also they are throwntto anticipate any reform, in order to make it to abort. None of it could be accomplished. Fans are attacking the inflation of stock prices. & from then on we saw receivers, trefogenerals pervert the ideas of property, to demand a fantastic one, to threaten of ruin, if one did not accept the law of their whims, and join the end of the state to the fucEnough of their extravagances... Ah! Fie on credit! the state, fi the faith it owes to its commitments repo: feared the danger of overturning such chimeras. res, it would be necessary to hasten to carry out an operation; which, sooner or later, would be accomplished by the force of things, and with the most deadly aggravations.

But beware now, if you may the devotion to the King become they are a constantly growing fruit, that an emPrunt is only repaid through a loan much more expensive than fury:

companies, privileges, monopolies,
It turns everyone's heads, that the discount bank moderation should be its defining characteristic, put their services on a price and demand to be stifled legally around her everything that could to compete with her, to let her claim the prize.
exclusive village of walking his fish everywhere
the kingdom, to govern all its finances, and to alto plant flax, faithful to the spirit of the capital duftrie agioteufe dans nos villes nourriciercs, where we only know that of the com-trade. The state has needs; it has been deprived of the replenishment of the loan, at least it does not not confound the exceflif rate at which the interest of The money has gone up, we don't do it, or rather the People who are listened to only show him through a new creation of shares of the caifle d'etaccount, & the intrigues, the recommendations, The stocks are already chasing these non-e- actions core made, to go and sell them at the gambling den
lagiotage.

So these are our latest resources! & the
A return to the times of Law would not seem possible than to the ambivalent imaginations, burdened with not predict that evil will come!

No: no Frenchman saw in all foundation the extent of what speculation was, (if any

6 €

If it were otherwise, they would all be guilty of crime of treason,) & now that I-register of the forfeits, it will chill the good with horror citizens. To destroy it is to destroy the state, it is reftaurer fes reffources, c'et pourvoir à fa sécurité, it is restoring good order, it is returning to the government government, dignity, authority, empire to the laws their force; it is to prepare the way for the-took public form, to strengthen external peace, the ren-to work within families, to situate the talents to their true use, the confidence to decent and useful things. And in this moment, where we believe that we must ask our fool too neglected what a son difflicts

ask his father for payment.
of these debts, isn't it time to put-Shouldn't we be honoring rural industry?
not to push back against our fields the cash that Paris abhors & abhors only for all corrupt?

But this speculation that diverts industry productive occupations, which take away from him
the means (r), which introduces between the lender

(1) A writing that was made to be polished under the title of re flexions of a citizen on speculation EF leaks, makes the apo-the logic of the discounting system, then threatened with an establishment-ment in competition; & sure that it is useful to

7th €

And the borrower, whoever he may be, a future enormous, which alters all the links of the fociabithis kind of innocence, which destroys all good principles, this speculation that costs the kingdom of im-menfes, wouldn't he make the unfortunate pro-Produced from establishments that are at least useful? & this Doesn't utility encompass all these evils?
Let us scrupulously take advantage of these states.
bluffing; perhaps they will change hatred
What does speculation deserve in a justified tolerance?
out of great interest?

FA

the state, in this qwellea, reduces the interest on money to four percent, and provided an outlet for royal effects,

© The blow of this apology bears witness to a completely unfounded fact False; interest does not decrease, on the contrary; & as for
With regard to royal effects, there is almost no capital left.
which is frustrating to keep them, given the movements of speculation have changed their habits

This same document claims that the discount bank is useful to the public, that the affairs of the inhabitants of Paris have quadoubled in the last ten years. Another absolutely false fact, The
The discount bank has established nothing but speculation; & as for In business, we've seen why and how they do it augmented.

It is no less contrary to the truth than credit bankers from Paris for the provinces has increased through the discount bank, the bankers of Paris do having become lenders as pledges of public securities, & the province can only provide this by also engaging in speculation.

D sn (

Ah! May the destructive enemy that I I flee to have no other refuge than in usefulness establishments that feed him! & the good ones citizens will soon have the consolation of the to see destroyed: for it is indeed here that by doing cefer la caufe , nous ferai délivrés de fes fu- Neftes effects, fans have nothing to regret.

Before demonstrating this truth, let us say, to be strictly fair, fans acceptance of people, that one of the main sources And perhaps the true primary cause of lagiotage who had perished with the son of Law, it is the same no less chimerical symphony, conceived by Mr. Necker, to provide at the expense of the war by means of continuous borrowing fans taxes. Yet he had so neglected to raise the price of contracts, that every contract the construction was impractical; yet he fu do only miferable little lotteries & other loans repayable at different times of a few years. Their shape differs them of a specific mortgage, but Mr. Necker furchargea ainfi la place d'effets au porteur, véritables elemens de l'agiotage.

If instead of these operations, in principles, which are in results, Mr. Necker had turned his fifcal genius towards impofñ- well-chosen tions which produced fifty millions per year from the beginning of the war; most of the loans would have been avoided. costly actions taken since then, and the state should today-

Due AC

eight seven hundred million of capital & forty five million less in income; that is to say that the current deficit would not affect many people.
nearly half of what it is.

That is a very serious and serious reproach.
grounds for action by Mr. Necker's administration:
What childish vanity led him to this?
How could he have hoped that enlightened people would not would not realize that reducing taxes, it was simply making things worse, and if he fe managed a reputation for skill & defense political camouflage, by distancing the tax, iƛ laiffoit to his successors, the most difficult task and therefore even more meritorious, to acquit these
the same debts that he prided himself on accumulating?

How could Mr. Necker not have noticed?
that as soon as the state borrowed from companies whose His current income couldn't even pay the interest, Pimpôt exiftoit virtually, but necessarily, whether it is declared or not.
Indeed, if the state had to keep its commitments,

x

) 45 TO

It was necessary to impose in order to obtain what in the hypothesis did not yet exist; but then The longer the tax was delayed, the more it had to be increased.
to lie because of the interest accumulated during the delay. If even the state were to one day li-By violating his commitments, he will not be liable for the tax.
was no less real, but only much more unjust, much more absurd, because at Instead of bearing the brunt of the entire nation's demands, he could not-sees the form of bankruptcy reach crazy people.
the sole clap of the lenders. This confederation fufiroit feule to dispel all fear forever of forced reduction of public debt, crazy an administration, I'm not saying so little honest, but only so little enlightened (1).

(1) I will observe in passing that foresight does not pa-should have been in any case the character of the administrative

Mr. Necker's intervention. He hadn't foreseen, for example that a cauffe of eformpte could exifter in Paris. He even foutenn brilliantly refuted the opposing opinion in a distressed general of the East India Company in 1769, where he pre while if we ever had the madness to attempt something like that establishment, one would not find fifteen to employ there millions, and that unemployment and losses would not deter not four percent dividend to shareholders,

He did not foresee, in 1778, that by bringing in the bauquicrs in the administration of the discount tax, it would distort the establishment and convert it into a home speculation,

After having inflicted this first cause of the speculation that I had to continue until in the overly-fedifying symphony of borrowings without hypottheque, which can only engender it; examinons impartially la caifle d'efcompte, qui Pa reflufcité, which nourishes it, which is the hearth where He will, fans, gain new strength.

A man of genius, struck by this ethannante abfurdites that Paris was the great fire city in Europe that did not have an institution of

Even more recently, and since he has been in the retreaties, he did not foresee, in his long memory of the coins, that a remelting of gold would become indispensable fable. He even seems to have completely ignored that the comparative value of the two metals being in a state of continual fluctuation, it was impossible that the Price changes in the markets, men bring aflent not in the relative value of the species; of strength that it has treatise on gold and silver as if they were one firefubftance; ee who made this non-winding theory imperfect, but we make a lot of connections.

He who might find pleasure in raising the faults
The testimonies of a famous man would find a vast field in the examination of all the variegated memories which make up the three volumes entitled: On the administration of finance These are from France. Something we are far from thinking about.
but what I believe to be profoundly true is that Mr. Necker, worthy of a very great reputation as a writer Vain, he deserves nothing but praise as a statesman.

this type, proposed in 1766 to the government to establish a bank, and easily demonstrates that the expansion of trade, the development-the industrial sector, energy & universality of The traffic will create the necessary leaks.
the laifle folliciter ten whole years; on Pe-It finally costs money; but we mutilate our project; we narrows the view, and a very small effect is made.
of a very large machine. It was still necessary to bra-towards the clamor and the perfections of the people at money, which they thought they saw in the generality of assistance that a discount bank would provide, unwelcome competition for those they sell must do it themselves.

But soon the success of the establishment The naive man informed the bankers. The plan to... seize, in order to turn their faculties to their profit, & not to let her arrive at the facilities that she should distribute, that by means of their in-intervention always venal. From then on, the ad-bankers, accepting agents, agents judges of the paper admitted to the discount, look-rent the relief bank as their domain; & not content with the tributes which multiplied in their favor regarding the circulations that this state-The bluffing made it easier, they soon de-authors, actors, and entertainers come to the orgies

Speculation. Soon the trade papers seemed an object of disdain. The heat of The stock price was an even more significant matter unifying for administrators, whether they de-
The arbiters of the variations were coming. For oper-To rectify this situation, it was necessary to let one glimpse of large dividends; to obtain large dividends of them, a lot of paperwork had to be done; & this fervent paper itself to pay for ac-offered at exorbitant prices, these chimeras fe produifant & fe devouring in turn, brought the catastrophic scandal of 1783, which hasten-rent again the incredible incompetence & the punishathe greed of the administrators of that time, who for the most part those of today. They por-their foolish, frantic mind went so far as to ask,

And they obtained it, to make paper money.

Mr. de Calonne courageously destroyed all the vestiges of this dementia & the credit ref.
fufcita; but the administration was not changed
gee. The same spirit still dominated there: he has This makes one more enterprising. Speculation previously focused on the sole actions from the caife d'efcempte, received another pasture.
Spain sent us the bank documents of St. Charles, which is not a bank; Ca-Barrus was imitated in France; we had a

E (

-the East India Company which only did one thing.
tite partie de son commerce dans les Indes;
a water company, forced to put its hope in fire-fighting activities; a another insurance company that provides assistance from profit-seeking to those who are willing {to get sharpened, & to trade shares that win 150 percent against affluence bonuses 10 fols per thousand pounds. All this nonsense
In business, these groper traps are a real pain.
fed, fanned by the administrators of the bank of assistance, which discounts paper circulation', which the bankers make them pay for the use, & that they lend immediately to the players effrenzied, duped or rogues of which it is composed A paramilitary of speculators waging war on all this who shows us wisdom, prudence and honesty sharpness.

All these evils were caused by the caiffre discount; & delivered to the management of bankers in a city like Paris, it will not produce never anything else (1). The first step to take

(1) We have seen the docile discount bank in appearance
"Tence to the personal interests of Mr. le Couteulx to lend" to an importation of birds that in no way does it devoit faverifer ; puifgn'indépendamment des autres to cure the disease of speculation, the first a way to rape it by its roots, that is a

As a consequence, this bizarre operation restored our exchange disadvantageous with foreign countries; but the true aim of Was this import well known? Are we certain?
which does not relate to stock trading, which we are trying to see, the material of which we are still striving to increase, & to the help that was being offered to him?

< The cash register is required to not distribute its billslets that in a certain proportion with the numeral which is found in its coffers, and its profits are worth all the larger the number of tickets, the more sufficient.
to spread is more considerable, since those who do not cost him nothing, yield an interest of four and a half percent per year. It is therefore necessary to make facriteria for multiplying tickets, and how the mulwill she tipliera fi ce wef by raffemblant dans fa caiffe tout the money she can, since money is the ticket generator in the proportion of one to three & four-person meme?

But why shouldn't the discount bank have...
resorting to the pimps of Efpazne in order to fill their coffers of crowns? What does it matter if this extraction is disordered?
since it does not reflect the effect of the balance of trade,
cause a real loss to the nation by the loss of fon.
exchange with foreign countries? This loss, neither do the neither the speculators nor the speculators who will make it happen.

But, it will be said, this exchange rate disadvantage will strengthen the coins in their coffers as they enter them for to spread abroad; thus the purpose of this operation is toking missed. : ;

a complete and comprehensive reform of the administration of The discount bank. It needs to be brought to mind.
of its institution; it must be forced not to occupy itselfper that of commerce, of factories; to mefcount that at fifty or ninety days at most; never raise the rate of fon interet beyond four percent; to put of

Not at all: for it is easy to order the march of so that the lortant ecn is always replaced by a New product, new birds. Notice that... pay them with banknotes, and distribute three times as many.
the eraser received. That a third of this triple eraser of tickets return to the caïfle to withdraw the pro-Produced by the birds, the other third parties do not less in traffic, and they will remain there as long as the fucceflion of convoys of piaftres Efpagnoles will not interrupted.

False supposition, it will be said again, because the birds would raise prices in Spain, and the crowns of fixed pounds would cost the King more than a fixed number of pounds.

I don't disregard the fact that the discount account would stop for this drawback. I only observe that in its purpose of favoring speculation, she can do it, and probably she will make the necessary preparations which will facilitate the issuance of these tickets; In short, I'm simply showing what can to become, what interests will infallibly become national trade generals in the hands of the caife d'efcomnte, as soon as she wants large profits, and that in Paris the immoderate profits of a bank of fe-Prices can only rise through speculation.

moderation in dividends, of the re-fervent in his conduct, and especially in pronouncing Never again will fans return, and fans are an exception to this fatal fate.
Circulation papers, the source of all our woes.(1)

`

(x) It's incredible that after my book, it's... cash account, the administrators of this establishment-they could have still managed to convince the government that the circulation letters have the effects that must be expected preferably a bank of emergency funds. What a man Knowing the details of the business does not mean that what is specified is...
These powerful operations have ruined us all.
School banks and so many others?

An individual who places capital at a discount - lands of which he is the owner, and which no one can take back from him asking, undoubtedly has nothing else to examine but the intrinsic strength of the bill of exchange, which is to be drawn that she will pay, at least as soon as possible, or late, and that he will lose neither principal nor interest. But that is not enough for a bank that discounts with money of others, for which she provided her payment commitments wounds in sight, & that one pent: to ask him again, fi no all at the same time, at least successively and in a short time, Such a bank needs bills of exchange that it foit füre de voir rentrée au leur expiration, parce elle can never be certain in advance that his position will allow them to be renewed.

And no, not only are registration cards useless.
to a bank of aid in a moment of crisis; but they can cause a crisis which in these letters never believed it would happen.

Qirelle

) 81 (

Let her learn to imitate the bank of An-England, to whom these proverbs have the vanity of the

What and indeed the main & satisfying cause of Credit from any banks? Isn't that the opinion generally that they will be able to pay on sight those of their employees Gags that will make them pre-fenced? We do well that they do not keep all of their funds in cash; but we support it, because good will dictate it, and that a
The law specifies the order, that they have in kind a pore tion considerable of the women that they owe, & that the refte eft dans leur porte-fenille en effets à court-term who return daily, but that the contrary opinion becomes established, to the point where one comes to fear that the species In caifle, dried up by the initial requests, he does not ref-tera plus to pay for tickets not yet returned than circulation letters that one would have to wait for, & whose event might prove that they do not not all felines; don't you see that the tickets will return to the bank & take out a loan which will reverse? So it's not enough for a cauffe of el-account that bills of exchange are the result of a certain return taine; it is still necessary that this return to school be certain at the-precise due date, stipulated in the effects, The example of Ayr's bank in Ecofle is in this respect what one can

To cite something more irrefutable and striking. She had expected for considerable amounts of the effects of circumcision culation which all carried fur of the free and fran– lands these effects were therefore of the greatest strength intrinsic, but they had to be renewed each time The public soon realized this, and to conclude, with justifiable reason, that this bank could not

F

Judge (

compare often; that she may be angry that towards the time where the excesses of the Écoffe banks were to ameaer their deftrudtion, this patriotic bank ruthlessly refuted any image of the banquiers d'Ecoffle; that towards the time of the recasting of Por where the Jews exported the guborn of weight, she refused to admit at the discount every letter that bore the imprint of the fynagogue; that in 1782, when the Genevans acquired held all hands of funds from England or from France, on the prospect of a haufle to the peace; pretty much like they bought it in France ten million in rent for the thirty heads, that isthat is to say, not with their money, but with thishim that the acceptances of our bankers & the facilities to realize them at the discount bank their provided the means to borrow from our strongtife; the Bank of England rejected the papers

not to pay on sight the tickets payable on sight that she had put into circulation, in exchange for these papers taken at a discount, if they were presented in large quantities soon each carrier wanted to rush out so as not to be not excluded; they rushed to the bank; she was forced to to suspend payments and to make confidential fabrications suitable for borrowing the money she needed: After a few years, she was completely lithought; but the shareholders suffered a huge loss,

And the bank didn't even attempt to recover.

of traffic destined to be raised for the people of Ans laws, a tax in favor of the citizens of Geneva, And put an end to their voracious speculations. That's it.
what the discount bank should imitate; but Such conduct supports principles; Pamour of order, of personal de-interference, of Public perception. All of this requires another... organization, another fury, (1) a

(1) This is all the more necessary since one cannot in Paris as in London, count on the public spirit that directs & fou-He practically runs a bank himself. London, port of the sea, London the first natural warehouse of the na-the most commercially successful operation on earth, London, whose inhabitants have a daily spectacle of the movements In the midst of large-scale trade, London could only receive & to preserve his tastes, his principles & his spirit. He influenced all thoughts, all actions, all the way of seeing, of applying all things in this metropolis of the commercial world, because the habitu-
In general, tastes are dominated by factors influenced by education.
Men's opinions and decisions. Remark-Moreover, what this spirit of commerce should have in London an influence all the more powerful because it re-receives a very great deal of energy from free constitutions.

In London, a bank could therefore hardly for~
from the field of commerce. Favored in its state-Bluffing by a corrupt Prince, the Bank of Angle-land was first enviable, perhaps as a source of resources useful for prodigalities 3 but the numerous & true merchants, whose London was populated, soon made different composition; it is not necessary to put men in opposition to their duties; Those who drive a cafle should not public y puifent fans bornes & fans cefle pour their own needs, or for those of their unbridled greed.

And beware that all the evils that have Products from the discount bank would have been seized.
in time, or they would never even develop.

loppés, fi des administrations provincials, tutrices of the kingdom's inner prosperity, had warned the government that the money was rare in the provinces & why it was; why all the capital flows towards Paris; why our manufacturing cities were disstocked with cash, the main agent of their

to prevail in their interests, their needs, their schemes, And since the establishment of this bank, which deserves the first row against all, she did not fail to be gogoverned by the influence of commerce and public spirit who fertilizes it. England owes it, I won't say not fa propérité, this calculation is too deep to find place here; but not to have been overturned by the great things that the republican spirit attempts,

He lies and not the same in Paris, he cannot in to be the same. The Frenchman most jealous of glory of this capital, he would say that it bears no resemblance whatsoever to that What do we mean by a place of commerce? &c. &c.

works; by what cause, for what purpose, to What interest was there? The money wasn't shared between four people. cent, a rate fixed by the interest itself, which has been bli la caife d'efcompte; pourquoi fon prix monroof at seven and eight percent in Lyon, in this large French industrial workshop; why the merchants, the traders, the manufacturers They were running to transform themselves into players in Paris... The provincial administrations would have claimed-against the somewhat relaxed and biased approach of assistance from the discount bank, main center of all these disorders; they would have asked fi the provinces. aufli were therefore not the royaume; they would have savaged us; ah! let us believe that they will still make us see them executed the plan which must, thanks to an exclusive privilege, 'thanks to all the favors prepared for speculation' in the absurd regulation. that have offered. foliciter the shareholders, or rather the small number of bankers who guide them; extend throughout France, the devastating game that the caife of elaccount introduced in Paris

Let's pay tribute to the East India Company, which did well.
fervi the speculators; & let us try to appreciate quickly-dement (1) the usefulness of this mono- aflocation

C1) I say quickly, not only because more details would stray from my plan, but & fur-ton

poleufe which gives speculation so much strength & movement. The government is calling for lights, they make daughters of the difcuflicn. I I will therefore follow the government's intention, in speaking freely about this privilege exclusive; 'for it is not a question of tempering or to rebuild, but to destroy, to overturn this company, enemy of our friends, of our allies, dependent on our natural rivals, tyrant from the dawn of our main national manufactures nales, who was never destined to live off anything but the privilege of trading with India, even 'before going to India, & the game which is established-sheltered from this privilege.

What could be the cause of his unconsciousness?
Possible recovery? To what should we attribute 'get this kind of amazing phenomenon in a century of lights than would have been the amidst the darkness of ignorance, the law which because Mr. de la Cretelle has already told you about this {an important topic in its Memorandum for manufacturers, Ece Never was censure adorned with more grace, & Ja raifon fecundée d'un plus grand talent, Je ne con-I don't know a writer who could be more useful, and who 'deserves better to be encouraged to take care of the big ones reforms that the public good demands,

X arC

Would it have killed the freedom of trade? If ever the theory that condemns exclusive privileges, fur-tout en matière de commerce, eft reftée victorieufe of the phosphisms of private interest, or of the lack of instruction and general knowledge; that is fur-tout dans fon application à la compagnie from India. It was necessary to trample at their feet the results of twelve years of conferecultures that have proven that freedom is suitable to the trade of the Indies as to all the shops; & above all, whatever suits her more than a monopoly. Why experience, this judge, whose political laziness map"Never," she said in vain on this Big question? The government hadn't decided for the regime of liberty, that after deep difficulties; why haven't we not published the new confidences that have Does it change the 5th century? Our rivalry with the Great Britain, she demanded a company pofted in India, to fight openly or. A fordment against the ascendancy of the English? it has been a long time since a body entirely at merchant, political & military, no remark. One of these functions will never fold well, Pune, fans that the other suffers from it, and that the spirit of order and the economy required by trade is incomcompatible with the benefits & the accidents varied, unforeseen aspects of offensive politics. The arthe ret who re-established the East India Company moreover, it contains no disposition that does not shows the most perfect abandonment of all others object only of commerce. And fie the state of inferiorrity, where thanks to our tutelary genius canto be, we find ourselves in India, gives genuine regrets, if one has a fincere intention to get back up; this is certainly not Faide of a merchant company, which does not move Never fans noise & fans be noticed, that Politics will approach a goal that we cannot It is no longer possible to achieve anything except with such circumspection: & secretly. But the government seems to have truly renounced this phantom of a well France, which in so many ways cost so much to the nation. I therefore ask again: forWhy didn't he leave me to the industrious shipowners? from our ports a trade which, handed over to the emcompetition, varied in all the forms, and prepared with India the exchanges ges, where our national productions taking the Place des Métals, Pauroient rendu Véritéeproductive? Was it feared that it might appear point alfez de vaiffleaux François dans FInde, (free trade had multiplied them, c'efk (a fact beyond doubt,) wherever he ate us of these Indian textiles which have become so precious to our luxury? The company did not provide any.

388 (

never as many as the French ships dispatched during free time...

But how to speak and remain silent at the same time?
To what extent do these questions, to which Popi-
The public union responded?... Yes, the restoration the East India Company's fee is one of these deplorable surprises caused by the intrigue of personal interest in the management of the government, And I need only the reasons as proof.
alleged in the very preamble of the judgment who gave victory to this plot, then-that they all contradicted by the facts and nature of the people.

The experience, the government was told, demonstrated that the cargoes from Europe were not combined with each other, nor proportionate to the needs places of their definition, were sold there at low prices price... So you're saying that the company France will be eager to trade with India.
or that it will combine with the companies Anglo-, Hollandoifes, Suédoifes, Danoifes, Portugaifes, Imperials &c. for supplies-mens of the prefqu'Ifle, of the coast of Coromandel, of the Chinese empire? But one & the other-Tre de ces suppoñtions eft aussi abfurde.

Do we honestly believe that these immense con:
trees are used for trading points like our sugar islands, where some bales of seaweed.
European candles, a few casks of Can wine be plentiful? To whom will perfuade-are we to blame for the expeditions of our shipowners?
had been disadvantageous to them, if the spirit of leak, of reason and calculation that makes science trade would not have been able to remedy some miscalculations, to accidents involving paving, their claims against the new company would make themselves heard? That one would take advantage of highly value their profits to guarantee those What will the company do?

The competition of His Majesty's subjects in the markets of India there drove up the price of purchases... But once again the com-Will the French company then make the noise in Linde? And what about those shipowners from whom... an industry that should not have existed after twelve years that approaching perfection, these shipowners Don't they have a hundred other ways to go and do it?
Competition for the company's purchases? Garlic.
their productions from India, make - clles bor-born in a specific quantity? Don't we that manufacturing, when nothing hinders it, fe Does it always ignore requests? What about the manufacturers are multiplying even faster than the merchants? What means to reduce the number, and consequently to increase prices, What if we only present one buyer? We're worried.

Even though he doesn't break the law, he's no longer being prepared.
fes befoins, & ce meft qu'à prix d'argent, qu'il can make what we dread having to have I'm offering. Oh! Until when will the lies last?
Will the monopoly's growers find credit in the-close to the governments? Will they still want to?
ignoring that the influx of vendors prevents
The high cost? That's where many people go.
of buyers, there are also many sellers deurs & de marchandifes? Isn't it in one
The word "answer" is all that is needed to answer everything, rather than asking, as We've already done it, why bother with the undoings?
the advantages on which the preamble is based are real,
our shipowners have been watching the recovery of the East India Company as a true cala-Mite? If the competition makes them buy
dear, she had to make them sell cheaply;
It's a sure way to ruin oneself; and certainly it is It's difficult to imagine how one can regret um eommerce où Pon fe ruine.
i

But in how many details have we not Has the government gone astray? They've been told that some affortimens were poorly made, that he lacked of a large number of linen mills, while there were some too much of another strong... What, would that make the information provided by intelligent traders € zealous ones who were convicted! Would they have donated by the Berard and Perrier families, Gourlade? I find that hard to believe. Directors fans, undoubtedly enlightened, of the company a@uelle, after having extinguished the fiefs of the previous one; ofcome perfectors by duty, (& they note it: pliffent zealously,) of everything that can cause something that casts a shadow on their monopoly, after having had themselves the greatest outcry: rance when they smuggled goods Candles from India; men also uninformed must have said that these inequalities of support were common to all companies, & the necessary effect of inequality of conformtions caused by variations in fashion; that two years should pass between them between a request in India settled on the state the quality of conformation in Europe, and the execution In response to this request, it is impossible to statenever blur the just proportions, of which the inobfervor provided an argument against freedom of this trade. For this, it would be necessary to bring closerdear India to us as much as Tallow, & This is certainly what the monopolists do not do they would not, even if they did the masters; if it were in their power to remove The tallow so that the factories can enter in their monopoly, count on them not lackingThey would not.

It was said: a company will do the trading this with far more advantages than the particularliers, and these did not complain of any disadvantage. The company enclosed in the pure trade, did not need to be more favored It was noted that the individuals, from whom she had taken the place. And yet see under what conditions tions, those who have perfumed the necessity of the Monopolies have demanded it for themselves. See the The enormous ideas they obtained. their abandonment of fans in retribution to the stores of the nation, and not only did they annihilate the rights over the goods they import, but the state allows them to share those of which it charges foreign textiles that enter the kingdom by the very effect of the celestiality. What gratuitous bias!

But when this company would also... useful to the trade that it left little, it lost any right to government protection; fa its alleged usefulness, whatever it may be, disappears in the face of the evil that results from distorted stock trading given whose actions have become the sustenance.

t

94 €

I ask, in fact: what is the compensation? just and natural management that the monopoly should have to the nation, if however it can be compensated image of a monopoly? Isn't it that the portions of interest in profits can from less be acquired by all those he has de– Are they profiting from their own industry? Well! The shares of India are being monopolized, They do it through truly despicable speculators. fables, by men, who deceive and victimize their own greed fights in defefpéres to postpone their loss. They are calling on their assistance, loans, and impose themselves every day there is an increasing need to sell the aeration at a higher price. The spectator An honest person can no longer acquire it except at the risk of... to lose; & if he is willing to take back from the hands of the East India Company a small part of this that she takes away from him, another company emulating The first one claims to be selling him the hope, to make him pay more than the actual cost.

But what am I saying? What am I talking about? Sharing of actions, of equity, of relationships with the good public. A simple private individual, an ob- citizen fire, at least until the fame achieved by fes délits, vienne d'acqui la maffe prefqu'entiere des actions de cette focicte...... (C'eft

95 €
.

So, for an abbot of Efpagnac, we created a East India Company! It's for an agio- priest teur than industrious shipowners, of laborieux négocians, des hommes recommendables , will have been stripped! Yes, it's for success from your indefatigable greed, from your vanity ignorance, of guilty presumption, of criminal maneuvers, that a trade which fe faifoit conformement aux vrais principes a was handed over to a monopoly whose the siege is in Paris! It's the abbot of Efpagnac, it's this pure man, this useful and virtuous citizen, who now shares the rights with the state abandoned to this monopoly from which they fled-
'Become a homeowner!'

And what attitude does the administration have towards
The East India Company in this state of chaos?

Indeed, their very nature indicates this quite clearly.
The de-interference certainly did not make the directors of this company. They obey faithfully to their first principle, and one must expect them to do what will make them more. However, speculation is now the arbiter of the price of all the major stocks, afluré-They will not be disadvantaged by the speculation; & this the much-vaunted trade of the Indies that it it was necessary to take away from the freedom which he professed-king, to give it to a company that has many other sources of profit, closer-nes, more abundant & safer, is no longer that an accessory, a kind of fimulacrum to which it will be necessary to give the various appearances specific to toss the shares by all the faults monftrueux, forward €F backward, which cara@terimake the madness of our stock market.

I am not making a vain prediction here for confirming what I said elsewhere, that speculation corrupts the very enterprise that causes it.
The aid provided by the Indian administration to the actors of the actions, despite the needs.
money prefants that she had announced, indi-They are quite sure of how she viewed this operation.
a truly criminal act. ... Hey! How resisting the temptation to find myself director of the East India Company fans that it costs one madman, but nevertheless with the property of two One hundred fifty shares? How can one not appreciate to plead against the speculation that produced this miracle, & unpacked from its very first impulse, which we don't do Not even hoping for trade with India?

However, the government's wish is deceived. He attaches importance to the quality of director
a

a shareholding, to have a guarantor of prudent administration. Futile precautions tion! an infant of magic makes these actions they are now only making a profit. They are not exciting no longer the same interest. Another infant of magic that he would easily help, will make them fall. We can buy it back, to resell it with advantage, using another circumvent-What kind of weaponry is this industry worth?
What kind of quick feedback does Aufli provide?...

But also, by what fatal error did the government-government would it grant the privilege of The company? If he deemed it good in faith, he did not could never have believed that it was necessary to link him with speculation; and the cause cannot be separated of the effect, he loudly pronounces the destruction of the cause.

It would be in vain if one were to claim ownership of the privile; it's a misuse of words. Pay, or I must to have the privilege of closing in my field

seeds of my choice; but alas, I could not v ferer que des plantes vénenenfes , mon field, or the right to enclose it, would make me Soon removed. Everything subordinate to the good.
public; &, in the very countries where freedom a greater latitude, a privilege not to be given right to defend oneself, infant against the evidence of the

i | G

OF THE

the harm it produces, when that harm is general & fans compensations; when, to tell the truth
In short, it is an infringement of property rights.
public.

To grant the privilege of trading in India to a company, it was necessary to strip it of its assets the maffe of the Francois merchants, to the very great to the detriment of this trade. As for this evil evident fe join the defrorders more
The obvious evidence of speculation, what more could one want?
To have the right to end this monopoly?

Besides, who could possibly complain?
Since a meeting of many capitals into one a small number of hands is an advantage for the trade, what does the company object to a con-Currence? What does it matter to him that trade of India was restored to his freedom? That the advantages that were bestowed upon him were re-common rights to all French shipowners that the useless gifts of the royal treasury return in this treasure, which does not need to be de-Stripped of his squalor in a way that was sterile for himself?
Won't the company always be there?
in this free trade, like a merchant uifé? And can the nation lose something chofe to ee. than the company's competitors

s

99 €

try to buy back, through industrialization, the
What are the advantages of the money she will have for them?

But they will all lose. -:.: Oh no! The Marine will not lose. Everything related to the mechanics of this trade will win; the officers stonemasons, sailors, workers of a thousand kinds, the forest owners, the farmers of hemp, which I should have named first,
They will benefit. If the shipowner, his bondsmen, do not They don't recover their capital, they will need less why; & fans remove this trade 2 Freedom, experience will put him in the right frame of mind.
report that he attributes to the height of the things.....
O you, who look with such indifference upon these futile movements that result from the game of speculation, Can you claim against useful losses?
What would some shipowners do?

The most interesting company must, at
In my opinion, to be destroyed, as soon as it creates.”
speculators. But when she takes charge again to wage war on industry, I ask madmen
What aspect of this company would be tolerable?
Listen to Alfare; listen to the manufacturers, listen-tell the linen merchants to talk about these greedy: harpies tirelessly occupied with falir their food. Continued in their purchases at

G 2

3,100 (

foreign companies, they see the new East India Company to make purchases itself Similar. Bluffed, mutilated in their rights natural, in the property of their industry, they see the prohibitive laws in force before that the new company was able to receive its Affortimens de PInde. They see her go looking for-expensive in England, in Holland, in Lisbon, in Copenhagen, merchants, to do competition "those they were expecting & that they They are still waiting for India. They see it, don't they?
happy to expel them from a business they have been doing so freely for twelve years, striving-
This will further make their services more expensive.
Final liquidation. They see her follicate, to obtain against them the rights of the most treacherous of the most tyrannical inquisitor. Yes, the généreux Francois, the Francois who adores the crazy ones verains, who see their happiness only in their glory, a Cté fourmis to these vile conceptions of monopoly!

But expect further improvements,
If you do not apply the quickest remedy,
the eiǐicace leaf.

These islands of France & Bourbon, these poffelons today so important, for little that you were still concerned about India, you have you felt the need to favor them, to attract them a large population, to make it a veformidable dete, to protect at least your pavilion. ... Well! Let's do our com-East India Company; it will soon make them a defert. This trade from India to India, which you you allowed these islands, which you owed to them to allow, is already, do not doubt it, & of More and more he will be the object of jealousy, he willcilitera will smuggle some muffeline with Europe, foreign ports will thwart the precautions taken to limit to these islands the compermitted trade; & the company irritated by not having-seeing everything chained together, will trample your feet Prudent and politically astute, she will not hide her importunities that when she has obtained the lina prohibition you wanted to avoid...

Jo Q

You may search in vain; there is no remedy for ills suffered, no remedy for ills to come, & who will be born within this company; no remedy is possible, that his privilege does not It will be destroyed... He will do it: yes, I predict it with confidence; & rather than complain of so many dishonorable abuses against the nation, of which he was Poccafion & the force, I would do tempted to applaud these maneuvers where the rights citizens & all public conventions

ÿ 102 (

were so shamefully raped, since they ran finally reaching such a degree of absurdity that the A remedy becomes inevitable. No, I have no doubt.
more than the very imminent triumph of justice & of the reason. The East India trade, will be returned to its true owners, their capable owners able to direct it through competition to the good of the nation.

But the fall of speculation would already make a quite large. The obvious advantage of the state eft that all commerce fe faffe avec le plus eco-possible economy. Well! Confide only money & credit used in the game of stocks by the speculators; and see if it does not yield any profit.
Obviously, trade with India occupies far too many resources, and that he removes this unnecessary surplus to other companies all at once-Perhaps very interesting, ...
Deliver, deliver to our maritime provinces, like.
all the others, to internal administrations ricures; they will soon have, each in their circuit, some particular industry to exchange with cehe, of the Afie; & Paris where the the headquarters of an East India Company is a derivative lion, and not a commercial matter, will leave it in-The 'genius tutclaire of the fatherland' will follow the laws eternal nature of the creatures.

) 103 (

After the discount bank, after the com-
East India Company, other companies, homes Speculation barely deserves the honor of being named. It is a painful task to repeat the same things, or to consult details whose pen an honest man does not search fans, some modesty. H must, however, epuiron, as much as it is in me, my subject... Eh!
What spectacle could be more hideous, in its darkness?
corruption, such as that of the water company,

For example! How could one fail to recognize the pre-variation which inevitably arises at the end administrations, as soon as they become agioteufes? What this establishment could to have something useful, if the march had been slow & gra-The duration of success has disappeared. Never a principal object.
cipal no longer became a stranger to the actions which
the. represent; (1) never was it shown better

(x) It is currently the men of the cold can decide if I had railou to say that it mattered to the establishment of Messrs. Perrier, the share price moderate restat, so that the new advances indispen-fabulously necessary to achieve insane profits & durable fuflent more easily agreed by the aetionnaires; that the merchants of aétions wanted at the con-to milk less in an infault, & at the expense of the duppes, the hopes of a century; that to achieve this Moiffon, they exaggerate these hopes, and make people believe

£104

uncovered this shameful juggling act which has wanted to exploit credulity

that they provided an inexhaustible supply, at the price of this that it cost next to nothing to open it. Such was the
The rumors of the speculators; and that's all I fought against:
as much as through provocations and threats tyrannical, I was not ordered to develop my soul & my courage. s

But do we want to judge the motives that have stirred this-Ridiculous fermentation, of which I have been a victim?
Let us consider the following fact.

He had a child a few months before I started working on the... water company, general distribution project pure water EF falubre in Paris, (*) It's crazy the eyes of the government, it is in Paris, it is with the permission from the Minister of Justice, that it was printed. In This memorandum, the undertaking of Messrs. Perrier, is infinitely untreated. The use of pumps is generally criticized there.
fires to water the large cities. They perliffed there.
in particular the absurd project of bringing water into all the houses in Paris, or even in their most large part. We enter into very different areas.
in-depth investigations into the infertility of the waters that it can supply

every establishment located south of Paris, and there promises in this regard DEMONSTRATIONS OF THE FINAL EVIDENCE, IF WE MANAGE TO OBTAIN-NIR PERMISSION TO PUBLISH THEM.... Well!
nobody complained, nobody made a claim; nobody (*) Project for a CF bridge, hydraulic machine y for ane general distribution of pure water EF Jalubre in Paris, by M. Deforge, &c. &c. &c.

public. Where do these much-vaunted successes come from?
promised? What did we see in the last film?
shareholders' blee, fi ce n'eft l'obfcurité du to undo & the vague statements of an admintration which no one can account for, nor even to itself nor to the public? And what will this device be used for?
precautions that the government employs for aflurer Fexaditude of accounting? Whatau'un obferve dans cette affemblée , que le chétif dividende qu'on ftatue furpaffe encore le produit who must pay it; the reply is: Eu!
WHAT DOES IT MATTER?

wa foutenu que M, de Forge fnt un mauvais citoyen , And his memoir is a reprehensible piece of writing. For me, I flee all of this; and this met with no less than punishments.
very severe conditions that were being prepared for me to have my nifefte the opinion that the price given by speculation to Paris water shares do not include the price given by the calculation & reason.... Why in the same water A different treatment?… Why?… It's that "Mr. de Forge only attacked the water, the enterprise, the means, execution, product; & that I had not attacked-What, me, that the speculation which is exercised on the actions of fire pumps... It was those from which they were held to the court at speculators' prices, and who wanted at the same time
Time to go to the city to wage war on speculation.
fe tronvoient en une embarras acéz vif, à l’apparition
of a work that would put these actions at their proper value, since they had gone to some strong accountant of their successes.

However, speculation on the waters, of which

The canals will soon make Paris the city the worst paved road in Europe, fans that it is better supplied, speculation not wanting to per-drawing up this game table, imagine the mess-to be carried out by an undertaking of fire-fighting efforts, whose uselessness has been irrefutably demonstrated,
fans are talking about the very serious problems that are occurring in a few...
Wind reflected. But it had barely been proven This, (the speculators have strange ways:
to respond to good books) than a new insurance company seft élevé, or rather that it was appropriate; & we have seen its renewal to tell the story of the Spanish company Philippines, whose shares were selling at Paris, before it performed in Madrid, performed elsewhere, it had only one at its difposition. That-the insurance company against the fires, are currently being reported to prefectures triple their creation price, while it has not yet a single confirmed influence.
How does the administration of a preferred company-entirely illusory, would she respond to what Can you maintain extravagant prices for your own profit?
Auffi, the expeditions of this one already hold a distinguished place in the history of speculation.

And for example, this company giving in to rice of creation one. Actien to the owner who p € ï

made a certain woman, the ex- ȟauffe, sharpen up.
The unusual prices are due to the fact that many influences can be made for several years born, fans that it costs nothing to the affluent, to which It can even yield a considerable profit. Eh Great! Thanks to our small industry, this circle-Confidence gave rise to a gambling den that violated the rituals.
of which Jean had the house built at his own expense of Pierre, provided that he will leave him
The action promised by the company... And there you have it.
how we felt the need to attract attention rer! That's how we proved it!... Hurry-
"You," some are told to make yourselves rush forward, & you will have shares worth five hundred pounds that you will sell for fifteen hundred!... Hurry, are others told to buy shares of the company of influence; for see the crowd that comes to make himself aflutter.... Such is the logic.

What mere speculation! Such are the useful jobs.
of capital that was generated by that of the com-water company, which by itself or by this new speculation, no less important, indeed in actual cash; credit in circulation of forty million, (1) consecrated in appa-reference to two truly absurd objects & truly lost to the public, for

Q1} While they were only created for feize.
There

CS

) tog (

national profpcrity, absolutely lost, fi

`

excepted is a very small amount of information in com-penfation from which one can count the penfées, the time & industry of the individuals absorbed through all these extravagances.

Add v, to give you a very good idea-incomplete, funds 'agitated by speculation', the continuous immersion of the bank's actions than St. Charles, of which the greater part and in France, where they occupy, both in terms of funds deaths, than in credit circulation, more than sixty million.

And don't think that if we don't bring a quick remedy, for fever, Spain That limit of successes against our finances. Our Agitoteufe's fury could very well lead her to try to extract new ones with our own hands Trefors. Because, after all, Spain does not poff the heaps of gold on which she seems afflicted;
in the deorganization of its political economy that, she and like us to the expedients of the day. And note that Spain has as its favorite-To change these expedients an advantage that we lack-that of our speculation. We offer him something she wouldn't find anywhere else; because We alone in Europe, women attacked by this dementia. What is it that causes something new quackery invented in Madrid, no come and make some new chimera shine at our delusional imaginations? (1)

) 109 K

Whatever he may think, François's speculation, madholds against the actions of St. Charles in Spain, The personal interest of the Spanish speakers combined with the needs of the royal treasury of Madrid, decide on the operations of this bank-gue. De queique nature qwelles foient, les St. Charliftes Parifiens decree the dividends-based on the principles of useful players the haufle; for we feel that the theory of the players a la baiffe, tending to push back this fund into their native land, the skillful Spaniards differ auli that the players at the baiffe make the enneput of the public good, & that the players at the

(1) I have in my hands an Efpagnol pamphlet, where he weft is not a question of less than organizing the bank of Saint-Charles de manicre to become the chamber of af-unique furance of maritime trade of all the na-world traditions. This project is very likely to resonate with the Paris stock exchange, when Mr. Baroud deems it appropriate-It is impossible to advocate it. Ah! Will we not be perfidious, fi we undertake it, that this chamber which must for refuür, aflurer à bon marché, poflede le fecret de conjurer or to calm the storms?

) ro

haue deserves ftats (1) for having found the secret fi useful to glory & prosperity

(1) Indeed, one hundred of them sent to the Efpa bankgnole a long & heavy memorandum to prove that it fal- It is important to be careful not to follow, for dividends, the e- That's true about the affairs of the bahque, but the true state of speculation in Paris, where the aetions of Saint-Charles have need to be cast. This memoir is the result of a council of patriotic bankers held in Paris, & that the disputes between the royal treasury of Spain and the bank, & even more so the general complaints of the Efpagnol trade against this establishment, they were alarmed by the true situation. tion. The authors of this paper are tired of obfervor that they are not making players, but honest people Capitaliftes, who, full of confidence in the deep lights of the bank's directors, in loyalty of the Spanish government, enclosing foreigners, ent they invested their money in Saint-Charles stocks, like in a repository that is also useful. And in this quality of honest capital, of which it is impossible to doubt, as we see, they extend their hand, so that we gives them a dividend that does not discredit the aetion, 7 My information, & jnfqwici they did not mislead me- They inform me that the directors cannot to give dividends, to the can of the advertising of the bad- I was going to report on their affairs, but they had nevertheless rejected them. one of twenty-five pounds, that is to say, five percent {on the original price of the aetion, & that the memorandum of the The Parisian Senate had it increased to thirty-five pounds, of which Twenty-five should be paid, and they are not doing so. core, and ten pounds can only be requested in next July.

=r

) at the Ç

nations, to circulate women prodigious on the foot of twenty to twenty-five

At the rest, I believe the fact of the bad situation of the bank of St. Charles has proven by the default of publication of the report, the final one, there is one any in the last general assembly. Meffiers the Directors since the publication of the Tubleau ruifonne the current state of their bank will not be affected by the current state of their bank. their figures. I'm just saying that the charlatan Cabarrus a beanconp & long spoken in this assembly; The newspapers are abuzz with praise for the thunderbolts he has heaped upon them. This great man, it is said, has modestly passed away in a room filled with the sound of tumultuous cries, which Demandoicut for Ini magnificent rewards. If it is simply believed that the conviction of the great iron-vices, de fes vaftes Inmieres, caufoient ces acclamations, I inform the public that it was Parisian speculation in all its purity & its energy, Twenty-five actions don-nent droit de fuHrage dans l'auguste affemblée de St, Charles, and foreigners can vote there by proxy.

The French practices, and certainly he could have some to have enough to fill the streets of Madrid with voters, So, thanks to the hay from Cabarrus and his friends,
populated by the assembly, of these praise-givers by commiflon,
whose charlatans never neglected the refounding, This scheme, combined with something else to exclude the real ones shareholders, we reduce their number, so much It was planned in Madrid, that a few people from the party of the opposition are provided with an order from the King to that they be allowed to speak. Although they had not been However, the successes of Cabarrus still resonate.

Ye" 4

for the announcement.... Once again, astonish-nose - you, money & credit are scarce for anything other than speculation!
Be surprised if cash and other things arrive men in Paris, to mingle in these games at harm to innocent occupations! (1) fufpendus, & the King did not make known his intention-tion fur the rewards that are being asked of him for the illustration follower.

We now understand the purpose of these handclaps which have accompanied a decrease in fendividend fibie. It’s about ocvalionating a certain height in Paris during the activities of Saint-Charles, but the abbot d'Efpagnae was more destructive, he saw in these actions a way to get money. He bought them very expensive in the long run, and resold very cheaply counting, to help his hoarding of assets from India,

I apologize to the leetarian for dragging me along these Muddy details, but they make up the supporting documents of the history of speculation, and can it be shown too clearly that it It is infinitely important to take a firm stance &
Decisive against the shares of the Saint-Charles bank?

(1) A perfectly certain fact, that my information

very-a@ives & very-{erupnlenfes confirm every day, And what deserves the most fervent attention is that the are people are arriving more and more from the provinces, fans of appearances more abundant, given the high price they command in the
In the capital, brokers are collecting money from all over the place.
comnicree, des attelicrs, @&c, &c. The interests, the sů-the benefits they offer cast contempt on the profits

I

113 €

I don't know the other companies well enough-I don't have any ideas about it. I'm just making sure he does it again.
core some freedom in our establishments fur
the coast of Africa, & that the modest company, who messes up the title of gum company from Senegal holds a slave supply store, comes from Destroy it. I only make sure its actions will be strong.
soon darkness; let us hold on to it.

Ordinary people, the Genevans, all come in droves.
to wage war on our money; these same Genevans who have compromised our government throughout Europe by the acts they obtained in favor of their debasementfanta Ariftocracy, After having frightened us with dishonor-They are trying their best to rob us,

Bank corruption has reached its peak in recent times.
The price of silver .eft as settled for fon lower price at one percent per month; & what is unknowableconceivable, that is, when we talk about the duration of this com- delirium me dun état déven natural. J'apprends pendant Pim-Preflion, that the famous twenty-fourth of February, abbot d'Éfpagnac has taken out a loan of fourteen million in banknotes of that one hundred and twenty-five million, at nine percent profit, payable in December, &caufunded by shares in India, at 1400 pounds. This loan resold at four percent, costs, including y-taking into account the negotiation fees, eighteen percent by Shorter-term loans are more expensive.
In short, the industry of people with money is a collection-read by the future the losses that the players incur between themselves
These are cards for the game, nn lonisle.

H

DELTA

reserve: and those which have been distributed, created recently. for a million & “half, already occupy a capital of about two five hundred thousand pounds,

I'm just saying that other companies are waiting for us.
tooth, and that we must fear it every day (1)
as long as the speculators will practice their art of manipulation. I only do what is necessary if we are reunited all the capitals that they form together at the rate of speculation the various companies which rou-slow fur of actions, we will have a kind of en-about three hundred million. Add to that all the 'objects that speculation encompasses within its domain,'

(x) It is also to be feared that all kinds of vein-
No one enters it, the King has revoked the privilege the doubling of the ships, because it gave rise to of counterfeit bills of exchange, perhaps to counterfeit bills a@tions; & that this evil in comparison to this General fury against the speculators' industry? But,
'Can we doubt that all these crimes of forgery will not re-Roiflent? This prodigious circulation of letters - of-change, royal bills, securities or bearer notes Doesn't it facilitate all these counterfeits? When one concluded a multitude of deals in which one delivers a on the side of the share packages, and on the other side of the packages of cash notes, when these affairs 'or these exchanges
They do so with a speed that is necessary, given their multitude,
How can we expect the fake not to slip through?

Rights (

Lotteries and their doubling operations of which no example was yet known,
the devotions to the court to which they devote themselves as we have seen, more or less the players; & you will have, regardless of any confinement-moral degradation, any idea of the harm that these deplorable accumulations make our true references:
sources, to power a fully functional game rile, & prepare for the shocks of which we Let's look at the early warning signs:
Is it believed in good faith that the fall of all these fortunes built on the moving fable illusions, intrigue & maneuvers, the most odious only cause small evils, Hearts, revolutions in commerce. . Of Revolutions in commerce! Hey! That's all, A terrible scourge! It's Pabus des jeux de hafard And the spirit of the lottery! This fatal spirit, came from Italy with the indirect taxes of conformation where federation, corrupted the morals, disturbed reason, caused misfortunes of the world & will continue to do so, as long as the plurality of the squires will ignore that all the Disorders of society diminish their authority, their power, their wealth; as long as a fage, virtue and vigor will not learn not to the peoples that every game of Hafard eft in H 3 faith itself shameful, because it is not appropriate to the honest man, nor to seize at random of the property of others, nor to leave to chance that of the family.

Srs6 C

n
'A truly pitiful game has, however, found some Apologetics. Large books have been written to provever that the circulation that it creates, that the fictitious wealth he was spreading, added much-to the power & splendor of states. We haven't seen that funds have been put into the game produce nothing, not even pleasure; assuming the most advantageous case, all must eventually be equal between players. who will at least waste their time, their intelligence ligence, and the advantages they had derived of a profitable use of their capital.

We made a mistake in choosing these players for merchants; on the contrary, they were unable to play that by withdrawing from genuine commerce.

We haven't calculated what loss it resulted in. for all of humanity of this enormous mafe of funds taken from advances for useful work, & occupied for so many years with a game of feRile and corruptor. They didn't calculate the loss for me. caused by the misuse of the spirit of so much good minds who have exhausted their strength in of futile combinations, and bent their skill to despicable ruffians.

Jar A

If this game that captivated them, I didn't had been introduced, they would have to continue their efforts towards useful uses of their capital which Rojent increased these very capitals, by fertilizing the production, or facilitating the processing of fruit
the land, whose increase and distribution These advantages truly add to happiness.
or, in other words, to the maw of the fubfpleasures and enjoyments of the human species.

The Dutch, or the big capitalists of other European states do not like to leave their rich leisure activities. Without the lure of gambling papers, they would have tried everywhere to enter-agricultural or commercial profits own-thus named, profitable to everyone.
Marshes had been cleared of arrows, bridges constructed, simplified arts, navigation improved, economical machines in-introduced, widespread falaries, new outlets offered from all sides for goods, of new jobs in all fields pre-Mieres. Looking at the thing with this aspect, we will see that the big games of chance, or

Jug(

expensive lotteries that render them useless,
And worse than the uselessness of large amounts of capital,
are even more formidable than the established-men of the same kind that do not directly attack the time & the bread of the little ones gifts of folly, and which nevertheless make quite worthy of the horror that they begin

one hundred to inspire generally.

What conclusions can we draw from all this? Should we-he will prohibit all speculation and fight against Free conventions? Not even when these agreements are harmful to the contracting parties; for their freedom is even more important than their ticheffes. (1) But we must call upon the lights,

(x) This is what was done by so-called laws (*) &
extrajudicial commissions in defiance of the ordinances These are the most precise, and of the courts. From the moment when Yon wanted to disrupt the execution of legitimate contracts,

CŒ) ZE eft question here, note on page 53 of the Decree of Council of January 24th, which declares the contracts of bonuses, concerning dividends, etc., etc. of that of the 7th.
The following August, which renews the EF ordinances and regulations regarding the bourfe, &F proferit Ls négociations abufives;
finally EF fur-tomt of that of the 2nd of October of the same year,
which appoints commissioners for the liquidation futures markets, EF compromise of royal effects, cu any others.

) z9 €

ip books, the freedom of the prayer, leaves remeinfallible against these deadly evils. It is not necessary perfectly clear, & not susceptible to dispute.

a commission was needed, a treaty with the empire of the threebunaux, deftinge à fervir de pavois à la plns odieufe partiality; a commission which, adhering to no principles cicipes, could exercise arbitrary power according to the per-fonnes, &/not according to conventions. Commif.
have been able to pronounce the nullity of free commitments ment contratés entre majeurs, fans lettres de refei-The final approvals were ratified. A ruling by the Confederation condemned the nullity of all commitments whose holders do not claim They wouldn't deserve the intervention of these commissioners! The good-Faith has become in their hands a means of nullity!
11. It was necessary, in order to appease them, to plead without trial.
Insulting each other is hateful, arguing is contradictory! And it is to color—so many odious dispositions that one has prothe spirit, the style, and what makes one shudder, the name.
auguste of the legislator! It’s this monstrous mass of initials these absurdities that have been incensed by ancient pens, which must be sold, and not even rented.

But it was said: it was a lesson in recklessness, & moreover, those very people who were able to find themselves embarred. by the execution of these laws, by the judgments of these commiflies, were found in the liquidation general rave about the end of their troubles,

I will not divulge here that these difficulties have had of fiction or of reality, of artificiality or of conformity to the nature of things. But what! could one count fur these lessons for imprudence, when she had the right to to say: He was just as fixed as because we changed

There is no legal punishment against those who abdicate. would give to the game's payment; it is necessary

Despite myself, the nature of its markets, EF introduced into the things of the circumstances to which I could no longer turn Tender! This way of liquidating markets, when If it were truly effective, would it then Morality or politics? Just as a tribunal was created of three Masters of Requests, that is to say, of Judge completely unrelated to this busy business, for fouf- to address the interests and disputes arising from speculation, to the judges, to the natural guardians of commerce, that Has the King not been proposed to erect a commission of: three bankers, to strip the courts of the connoisseurship of all feudal trials, on of fubftitution for example, under the pretext of reducing it maffe, to arbitrate them, and above all to accelerate the Outcome? Certainly, all the trials in the kingdom of fe. soon arranged thus; the litigants conse- would bind themselves with desire; everything would be repressed in compensation. and the one who made the decree by virtue of which they would appointed commissioners, could boast of having in Few moments purged, Va France of one of the cruellest Realities that ravage it. But, do you believe that with help of these compensations which the terror of the coni- business, properties would be more secure, freedom more integumentary, morality better honored, authority More darling, more confidence. Cemented?

This commifolio that we are being told about has only been a tri- arbitrary bunal of the newest as well as the most dangerenfe efpèce, (in other courts, the arbi- milk, if any exist due to a lack of legislation, fe merely leading public opinion to deceive-The punishment against them that never weft arms vée, that of universal contempt.

at least decorates it with the function of repairing wrongs, of avenger of innocence; here the commissioners could not to give way to the decrees of the Council from which they derived their existence, by tacitly declaring that they do not freeze-they would only use it to support and help anyone who would not want to fulfill his commitments, or whoever does not unable to fill them, would nevertheless want to escape to the legal forms established for public safety; & what should unhappy men and the chothose who, through their misfortune, seem to belong to them ;)
Instead of curing it, it only spread the illness here and there.
& fubftitué one playe to another.

And how could she have done another thing? When the impos-
The strictest partiality would have been religiously observed, which was impossible under perpetual preponderance from a gambling banker, friend of gamblers, lender to players, author of the Saint-Charles trade, this Did this fatal commission not establish a content-tion where it could not and should not be? A Even an angel can only do harm, when fa mifion to bring about war, and such is the function that one had conferred on the commissioners. It was with the sword of the defpotism that they were called upon to bring calm where the nature of things brought back only order & the peace. k

In a word, would you like to appreciate what they have done?
Cast your eyes on the bank, weary from the movement-unexpected and unnecessary stops, degraded by wne

But how difficult it is to achieve.
dre to this day of restoration & of lights in the order of things where we work!

tyrannical inquisition mad the eyes of commifilaires who They understand neither his business nor his interests; humiliated by the assistance they lavished on bad faith, as much than to imprudence; ashamed of having had no honor

body type, no feeling of generosity, of well-vigilance and fraternity to oppose so much injustice Temir Avilic, dragged through the mud by contempt of the faith of commerce, of the religion of contracts that most of its members have admitted; by the re-regime of ignorance which facilitates some paf- disorders fagers & circumfcrits, all the rules, all the maxi-my, all the principles, in which commerce & The traitors only engage in petty theft and brigandage; and for the height of humiliation and disgrace, the constraint of en-To endure the presidency in this odious tribunal, I have already said the predilection of the man who was to be excluded from it with the most hay, from this Couteulx de la Noraye, pa-head of the St. Charles bank, chief, confidant, for-Look at the players at the hanffe, formerly too much foliciteur famous for the retroactive decree of January 24, 1785, today-today, volunteer commissioner to defend, fervently, fanc-to act in bad faith & always ready to show wherever he has the power to dishonor through his precepts, one For example, commerce and merchants... There you go.
the oracle, the light, the organ of the commissioners for the Liquidation of futures markets: how bankers from Paris, which they were depotically provided with, leve-Did they deform a noble and repeatable head between the nations?

Den

The administration is embarrassed by so many Specific facts! How could they not stifle them?
Not the general views? No minister has the time to protect according to one's own conviction & fes
personal knowledge the efforts which con-They are working towards a common goal. This multitude of offices, of employees who, from a simple object within itself form divisions, fubdi-We live absurd and countless creatures, crush skill, science, justice, rules, the principles, the economy, income. Everything different it seems insane the infinite number of hands that want-necessities put anarchy in place of a regular government, all the more so great that every man makes himself pay according to his befoins, & that the tariff for befoins of this ara group of pre-appointed staff, occupied for two hours in one day, eft dreffe in the place in France where the Befoins make the most exaggerated & the expense more ceüteufe.

When, by the immutable nature of things,
the prosperity, the happiness, the glory of the kingdom
would not be referred to administrations provincial, these confederations are demanding-would create a constitution, a form according to the-what things need to be done, please fe make themselves sufficiently good furies

) 124 C

places, fans that the government needs to compete in ways other than through protection general duty that he owes to all citizens.

But how many other reports don't Are they not indispensable, if we must Finally becoming a true nation! Aufl longtime. that a regular constitution will not organize not the kingdom, we will only make one fociete composed of different poorly united orders, of a people fans prefqu'aucuns liens foaux, dont each individual, occupied solely with... particular interest, will wait for the decision-the King's and his agents' fion that he will not It's not possible to predict even the fact that... simpler. The monarch of a large state must to govern like God through general laws.
Our King will be able to do so, when the parties involved-grants of his empire will have con- forms naked; he cannot do so in the current state of things.* He must be killed by these things.
specific requests. We have to wait.
special orders to contribute to the public good public, to respect the rights of others, often even to use one's own tools. Such a gou-government might be suitable for an army, but not to a large people aflis fur The madman who belongs to him. Once again,

Y azs K

jufqv'ici we do not form a nation; we women, an aggregation of united provinces, crazy a single leader, but almost entirely foreign manage each other, if they are not enemies. (1)

Our love for our King, that's how far we've come. prefect the feul bond of the French empire, the feul rallying cry of a hundred scattered peoples. But this love remains deep in our hearts so as not to pass away king than at the moments that invoke him; & perfonne unable to form an idea of a gou-
In a government like ours, it is impossible to to learn about the duties that bind the individual to the state. The unnatural opinion that the King cannot Seeing everything leads each person to believe that in their own The matter is not under the sovereign's watchful eye. Cha- that individual fe confidere as ifolated from the fo- society, the government was regarded as Pen-

(x) We can add that the same defunion which exists from province to province, one finds oneself within that- those that have a draft, or some rete de contitution, afflicted, a strong public wish. Com- profusion of orders whose claims are very diverse, & the interests very separate from each other & of this- them of the nation, they are very far from withdrawing from their states all the good that should result from it; & even these Jocaux's half-goods may be doing harm, because the countries that enjoy it are less likely to recognize the need for a reform.

hemi common, the name of the King he is named after; like a false formula; & the impotence of Refifting becomes the ultimate guarantee of obedience. How can one be devoid of the certainty of being protected? by a contingent order, each would not seek- Isn't he trying to deceive the authorities, to extort from them? money and favors, to evade the laws general, to induce him to particular decisions lieres, to reject focal charges fur fes Voifins? How could the revenues not be hidden? don't they? (1) How odious inquifition,

=

. C1) How does the form of impofitions bearing only If a portion of the revenues were not present, would it not appear and not be- Would it not indeed become intolerable in the greatest name? taxpayers' burden? It could be increased as soon as we will distribute it among all citizens' incomes; as soon as Public outrage will have caused these claims to disappear.

tions that avarice has cloaked in the mantle of vanity, & which have primarily induced the government to e-
to impose a multitude of taxes on all types of commerce & of conformity; as incomplete taxes & vicious in their perception and in their effects, do not did not destroy & did not prevent the birth of infinitymore wealth than they produce in the King,
or even to those whom he entrusts with their recovery!

Even the privileged themselves, when honor Facts will have confirmed the theory, when the difficulty will no longer encounter obstacles, will feel that a con-a contribution proportionate to their wealth will do less

e

DM

which became necessary to discover them, did not establish:
Doesn't she believe there's a war between the rulers?
& the governed, under the guise & falsified appearance-
The possibility of a war between the King and his people?
Fatal and scandalous war, in which he is It's almost impossible that the authority didn't tell me everything.
wrong days! For finally, in what infinity of oc-Couldn't we tell him: THAT his-
DO I SEE? How can the government itself Prefect of needs, wouldn't he deliver himself blindly?

onerous than indirect taxes, as soon as expenses,
pleasures, work, commerce, agriculture will make free and free, (since they are owners of the greater part of the land and crops, of the greater figure of revenues, & charged by the na-Turkish of the chofes of the most confidential part of the false shearing fees, the kind that these forms of taxation require fitent,) & that one could not, without a cowardly abfurdity, asserting scandalous claims that even no real power was exerted anymore, nor did any tar-to defend one's dignity in order to refute regular restrictions res à la patric, commc fi ia plus grande dignité n'ét not to whom the fervira will be best! As if the orders were to be followed-superiors of the state should aspire to something other than honorable distinctions, not exemptions in matter of silver, degrading anxieties want of reason &

Patriotism for those who demand them, humiliating in the eyes of prejudice and vanity for those who excluded, onerous for all due to the reduction of riches, and the means of bringing them into being!

to all the expeditions of the ufuriers, to all the Illufions, to all the frauds of greed?

Yes, it's at the heart of the pro- administrations vinciales, it is with the help of this fixed institutionple & fublime, that France regenerated by the his sovereign's will, he will suffer a stable, imposing form, worthy of the refpe to their descendants, and will remind them without ceffe
as in his nation, the image of a citizen King.
Then the wishes of this great soul can be granted, the power of public opinion will come to meet at the sovereign power for The fulfillment of the greatest challenges.

So, customs, this first link of the nations, will bear their only blow, I want:
to tell the intru@ion prife in childhood of duties of man in society. After not having had longtime of methods, of establishments, that to train geometers, physicists, and Painters, musicians, we will finally have some to raise citizens. We will thank soon the provincial administrations of a national intrusion, directed in a single spirit, in political views, fur of unified principles forms, where the study of the duties of the citizen, mem-

The mother of a family will form the foundation of all the others, row distorted according to the order of [eur usefulness in their relation to the fociety.
THE

Then, and then, it will be easy to teach children everywhere & fathers, that the properties, these rewards

precious gifts granted by providence at work must be preserved, improved, used & not played.

But since public education is all days less powerful than the feduction, it is necessary We must stop setting traps for greed, H must destroy companies with exclusive privileges & lotteries of any kind whatsoever; evi-to end major loans; to reduce this burden frightening circular papers that devour us 5 it is essential to remove the scepter of credit from the speculators and their bosses, whoever they may be,

Hey! If they redo what they're doing, in fact, the masters of the kingdom; what future would they offer therefore enviate the good citizens in the crisis where we are immersed, fleeing the years the most disastrous that heaven has ever given us Voices since Igig-time? At the moment when the political circumstances threaten us with oraexternal difficulties; where there are problems, obstacles;
The expenses are worsening every day, to mefure that the resources diminish, with the con:

I

Finance, cash, capital, industry, the term of a hateful tax, which the King swore to abolish not to allow the extension... That Would we see?

Miferable lotteries to convert our returns in game chances! Some new overhaul-old fools of silly proportions that hinder increasingly our trade throughout Europe condemns us to eternal reproach.
of ignorance or bad faith, & mule tanearly on, the state's creditors for the state, sometimes The state itself for its creditors! A criminal-no return to crazy lifetime loans, something the name by which he is disguised, despite the repudiation folemnelle of this odious and pronounced blunder For three years! A more criminal renewal-using old loans to sink the company core the pure fang of finance, by reopening Wounds healed! An accumulation of fervor to devour in anticipation of income in-Core yet to be born! An increase in number already so many farmers, governors, revenues of any kind, which for meager advances from the same funds they have already borrowed, crazy, other forms will acquire the right to devour the last remnants of the fub-

The people's flank! ...

dagi € |

With these despicable means, fans doubt we will continue to maneuver for some time between the fe-courses of the ufuriers & the diffraction of the courtiers fans. ... But when these last & tricks regains from a guilty party will cause confusion but; when the general mistrust is refuted at renewal of banknotes; when the discount bank will become yet another once the viime of his own excesses; when the cushioning caifle, which could bring back Pordre in the public debt, & showing some minus the prospect of a major crushing blow, will have been distorted, debased, converted into a a hotbed of corruption through reimbursements of favor sold for money; when a bri-universal sizing will have improved all our references sources; when all public & private credit in The King's affairs will be exhausted, what will be done?....
Oh! What will the great men of the day do who discovered in speculation the sources of the Prosperity of empires? ... Will they evoke omthe bre of the execrable Terray?... I stop, & the leecher already finds me guilty for having ofe to foresee the misfortunes that speculation brings-king infallibly, if he could last.

But you, whom the father of the nation con-called to deliberate on public matters, to
I 2

i

; organic

You, the elders of these children, ah! do not treat no fanciful fears, my predictions are ter. Ribbles! Ofez show the King their probability throughout its entire extent! Ofez, tell him that we have had too many indices for the past three years what we should expect from the financial system These madmen, in which we live! Let it be a matter of fact. happiness and glory to the fullest slight vestige! That if the stock market is not stifled, &.l'animadverfon la most févere shown to all those who participate in the most deplorable of games, if the privileged companies don't do not destroyed, & the necessary companies foumifes' to a rigorous regime; the credit public, whose rapid and deep fall is also all the more difficult to interrupt, since he had more swiftly launched, & than that of our rivaux acquires more energy every day; the Public credit is lost, finances are irremedially disrupted, the resources taries, the inevitable bankruptcy. Tell him that He who professes other maxims cannot to be the enemy of the state; that Padminiftrateur to whom all principles of good faith, of fidcality to commitments, of refpe&t for the proPrivy is entirely unknown, should not teto manage the large chain of operations, from the comcommerce, public commitments & all the properties. Tell him, and his virtuous heart will have no trouble believing you, that in the government functions, the ability excludes limprobity; that public figures whose morality and universally hateful must be repelledfes, whatever idea one might have formed elsewheretheir supposed talents; that the good saying does not dispel the good that was; that the madplefe of the mind, the ease of work, the graces of style, elegant preambles, the Beautiful speeches make just as many pieces of nonsense. viction against the minister who exhibits with art good principles, and those that evade or fail to grasp them in the execution... Tell him, deign to tell him finally that the citizen who of speaking thus & fe

) 133 (

To name, should attract some attention to the denunciation which he brings to the foot of the throne; because he could only find such courage in the feeling of great danger.

MOMENTUM

Operations by Father Abbot of Efpagnac, for Joutenir €©ÿ continue the monopoly of actions of the new East India Company.

N. will be able to exist in circulation that 17,000 old Indian shares, the 3,000 administrators being in custody.

By the decision of the council of September 21st To deny it, 20,000 more shares were created; but It was agreed that these shares would belong to the former: it was ordered in conference that on January 21st of this year, the owner of each past action would bring it to the comEast India Company, that he would make the payment there soolivres to pay half of the new action, which he would postpone until April 21st, & would make a new payment of the same formme to pay the other half of this action; However, it was stated that any person who would take advantage of the field of his right, feking free to pay both payemeris upon receipt, and to acknowledge the actions that would have benefited from this right in whole or in part in part; it was determined that one would do on each A stamp is issued for each payment, so that the action marked by two striking stamps that she confirmed her right to a new one, rennarrow in the wake of these recent actions. --- The players at the beach, not having confided in the creation of the twenty thousand shares, which the furcroach the means she presented to them to crush the cash effect, they thought they were getting their revenge fur la chauffe fubite que cette création avoit occa-decovered much more than she could have to give it (because there are commitments for more) of twenty-five thousand shares.) The most astute do not not wanting to make these commitments before the feconde era of Peftampage which establishes the 40000 actions, have not granted the right to their count that from April 21st, the others more imPrudens, Bridge granted from January 21st.

This operation may be good in principle general, & near a time when the nutmerary fe referring to the ordinary, laiffe the place fans means, was already bad by circumstance where it was made.

A society then found itself the owner of twelve thousand shares, he consequently became very easy to seize the rest, & as it is mispossible roof to have new actions than by the old ones; this company keeping them until the April 21st, fans, make them eftamp, there wouldn't be any of twenty thousand created than the three thousand of administrators that the players at the baiffle euffent able to acquire to fulfill the commitments of Janvier. But when the circumstances surrounding this operationration a été formeċe , eufent été plus à fon avantage, it was in itself too poorly combined so that she could have no kind of success, a creation of twenty thousand more shares, doublant the effect on the place, seemed to truth at At first glance, the players were forced to get warm. to double their already very respectable advances, And promised on their behalf to the players at the game, or insufficient resources, or discouragementment: but if one had wanted to consider the form that this creation had received, if one had paid attentiontion that one could make eftamp whenever one wantedlaw, part or all of these actions, that one could consequently, or to preserve the existence of the anancient ones up to the fixed times, or destroy it before those times; it would have been seen that creation did not fervoit than to establish on the same action, a double game, and that far from favoring the one who had exercisedThis is until then, regarding the report of the old ones, because that by increasing their number, it should have been born ceffairement lui être très- préjudice bien.

—

that she left to each and every infant the freedom to decrease.
The event has validated these reflections.

> ra

A person is quite happy to have one the idea had the courage to pursue it from the end from last October; the players at the buifle fleeing the same principle that had blinded them, did not He didn't have any trouble selling him more than eleven a thousand unstamped shares.

11 It was enough to have created such needs for that the effect took a great effort, when none of the old shares would not have benefited from its right, that none of the 17,000 had changed in nature, there he had to supply 6000 more than he had in stock, And this number was too considerable not to
to produce the greatest fermentation.

Particular circumstances have slightly altered this position, but not enough so that with the Flight and courage, it was not made so brilliant.
There are no longer 17,000 shares expected today.
that there are already 1100 who have enjoyed their right.

The number of these actions is therefore reduced to 15900.

As long as there are 1100 of them impregnated from.
double stamping, there must be some in the place 2200 new ones which, added to the 3000 from the administrations 5200 nitrators.

The state of the actions of India which may be fur la place, eft donc en anciennes de 15900
. & in news of 5200. i
Of these 15900, the society has some among the following:

At Mr. Grenus's... + 1000
APPourrat. 2.40 CRT. 902
Mr. De Ro mai E i -ee O
Mr. Gonda. T. STT. 200
M Maller 100
MM. Girardot & Haller. 1000

Including Monsignor the Count of Se- | neffe eft chargé, & quifont pla- >” 5400
born at:

At Mr. Mallet's, whose numbers

TOS Oe ONS o oo o ooo oo 600
At Mr. Lambert's, same. 150
At Mr. Larmoyé's, the same. 200

At M: the Costly, . . 734
At Mr. Lalanne's. a. 07

Total... 12100.
The force still has to receive at the end of the month from MAL.

to receive from N: shadow | Price | Result | Amounts to give Meffieurs. \d'aéfions Fe fommes.\pour les éflampages
Leffert. aes 480,500 | 150,300 10011727
ain. ©
Germain 425 ae E 705,750 212,500
7511770

200 | 1690

Duplain. 350) eT

579500 175,000

In February

Rougemont. |200 1700 [340,009 |_100,000
Roger. 100 1600 | 160,000 50,000
From the 10th.

200 | 1600

Scherb. 500! Lool16oo 508300 | 150,000

~

to receive from aa Pa Réfultat | Sounds to give

AMefleurs. |V actions desfonunes.|for stamping

From the 16th.
i 200| 1680
Duplain, 700|200| 1640 | 1,144,000 | 350,000
300 | 1600

600,1650} 990,000 | 300,000
From the 19th.
Germain, |200 1702| 340,000 | €100,000
From the 25th.
Grimmounl. 100 1690| 169.0003] 50.000
Leffert. T1S 1600 | 184,000 50,500
Prudhomme. [600,2400 | 1,144,000 | 300,000]
In May 3rd,
Romey. 100 1750| 175,000 50,000
In April 30.
Rougemont. |300 1600] 480,000 | 150,000
Douplain. 200 1600| 320,000 | 100,000
Scherb. 150 1600! 240,000 | 75,000
Mallet. so 1600| 8o,ooo | 25,000
More than 700
I flee from myself by-pledged donationner for Ba-round at the fo-society, & which make ci-after, knowledge:

February 28th.

Redhead of the Corb. 100 1800! 180,000 $0,000
Romey. 100 1790| 179,000 | 60,000
From Cofter. so 2000 | 100,000 25,000
DeLamande,|10o 1700] 170,000 50,000
ooa 20 0 100 1800 180,000 $0.000
Germain. 200 1800| 360,000 | 100,000
Leffert. $26,000

Total 5490... We must add to this figure, gco in circulation at M. Mallet & de Bauplace, belonging to Mr. de Montefquiou being friends of mine.

500 from Lullin that belong to me.

100 from Chifat.

100 of Lamande ceded to Mr.

100 from Duplain.

Total 6890.
It is clear from this table that when all the par-

private owners of old shares

140 (

Indes would have provided them to the creditors of the companies to pay off their debts, there would be some another two thousand nine hundred and four thousand ten that they would be forced to buy some of the company at the price she would want them to pay.

The table of the players' position at the beaffe by Reporting to the news, no less frightening,

By calculating over 15900 old ones, there cannot be any to have only $200 worth of news. Of these 5200 there are in kind. 5: 0 . + . « . e At Mr. Pourrat's. 400 belonging to a fociete.

At Ne Couteux 700 0277 ooo
At Mr. Devillas's, number 1350.

font donnes. 200 Idem. . .
At Mr. Devillas. Idem. 200 Idem. .
At Mr. Joannot’s. Idem. 250 Idem. .
The 5200 shares have been reduced to 3850.
There are some discounts available for February 8th & 15th.

Number] p; $
A Meefkeurs. Pi 2.7 x | Sums. | Result.

Gaillard. Mother) 1300 | 660,000 | 650,000

500|1340 | 402,000

Keyboards, [$sc {20011300 | 200,000 | 668,500
5011350! 66,590
350:1400 | 470,000

Ribs. 400| 50 PP 66,000 | 556,000
10911490 | 140,000 | 5.4 ooa
Campy. :/200|100/1350| 138,000 years
10011460 145,000
Baulieu. 200 | 100|1300 | 130,000 | 275,000
Mallet. 100 L3 156,500 jy 00
The Almond Do i LE
Prazu. 69 1230] 73,800 73,800
1092/1430 | 143,009
Romey. 49} 300| 1500] 450,000 | 593,000
DelaLanne. |200 1400 | 280,000 | 280,000
Grenus. '300 1400 | 420,000 | 420,000

To be received from, Grimoud, end of next month–

chain. o 140
ý S4 „77,000 77,000

4,300,800, 4,000,500.

Jigi (

There are 100 of them from Laman that I made.
counted by an individual 100 of Claviere, Romey order.
300 of Ribbs
200 to be received from Mr. Sabbatier, on the 3rd this to be received at the end of the month

D

759
So, as of February 16th, there are 3460 shares here.

Of the 3850, I will therefore only need 90 for the
to have them all. But it remained to be provided at the end of February in shares belonging to the same company.

By We Malles 2 ooo 200
By Beaulieu, guaranteed by Meler ne . … ". , 26th
By Mallet father & son, efhté.
From February 25th... 200
On March 10th in Clavieres... 400
From Ribbs, efpté. of February 15, 300

es mm

Total I To

,

Without understanding, therefore, 6000 atlions ef-accounting records of January 21st belonging to a another company, 15000 accounts receivable as of April 21st on May Day, for which all compromises were in my hands, and so many others than the haufle
The effective consequence of this effect will determine, we see that

Dec

the players at the baiffle fous the report of nou-new actions will be carried out throughout the course of February at the mercy of the new society. Like They must be among the first, according to the report.
of the old ones. According to the tables below - deflus, It is easy to understand the advantage that there is in to play at the game of the shawl on the action of the Indies, & this game It's not very complicated, it's just not necessary.
sell a lot of shares right now that we have to receive in order to have them all; to fe to protect oneself consequently from the necessary money to receive them, and to buy them first on credit, enfuite au cash tout ce qui fe préfentera.

All the time we make purchases on credit

We must avoid compressing the effect by com-allowing them to be made cheaper; but One must be careful not to be in any situation fixed by the price; the two companies must they work well even though in the position where they are find, that is to say in the certainty where They expect to receive everything within two weeks.
the actions, whether old or new, to-any forward sale at any price whatsoever , can only bring them benefits as soon as The seller will be in a position to pay.

Because where the stock sold will actually make a profit... between the hands of the one from whom it will be bought, or

Jpg (C

She won't do it: if she doesn't do it, the seller plays openly, & he will do so at the time of Pef-account, forced to snatch it from the hands of companies at the prices they deem appropriate.
If it's there, then it's obvious that it's missing.
to those who, by the discount already given, make obliged to provide them, & then it's on these people who will fall under the harsh necessity of which We just spoke. While shopping at
In the long term, we must focus primarily on those where the numbers will be given, you must offer two a percent more on the current price for in to have such; It's a way of circulating which costs nothing; the only drawbacks that there is cause for concern, for this speculation-tion, it is the violation of the deposits & the need of money.

In relation to the first article, I propose to the company of the old ones a well-fimple to prevent any fraud in this regard;
ceft de laifler à la compagnie des Indes, the shares that the bankers sent to Pef-stamping, and to have each one handed over by the company instead of these actions, a simple recognition of the quantity they have have in storage. : l

D

I propose to the other society to pierce them hundred by hundred two punches to stick a string into it which will be sealed by both ends We are well aware that with these Two precautions: the deposits cannot be violated at the expense of a dishonor that-No banker will want to incur this risk. Compared to
As for money, each society only needs it.
to acquire, firstly, the 3900 shares
reftantes; the {feconde les 3950: car, ce nom-Once acquired skills are acquired, there is only her left who en puifie vendre, c'est donc contraire de elle-to the point that we are forced to buy them.

Let us follow, according to this principle, the path that
,
must follow the strength of the ancients, and let us see this which she needs.

Of the 5490 actions for which he is responsible,
the company should preferably count all simple commitments, because they are of course we cannot dispute his Ready.

) 145 (
Therefore, she needs to receive:

The 31st.
THE . 300 by Mr. Deleffert 630500
The... 425 of Mr. Germain 918250 P
Mr. Duplain's 350 €754,500 7743,250
Mr. Rougemont's . 200.
440009
February 3rd,
Mr. Prudhomme's 600. . . : 1,740,000.
Lengi.
The . 300 of M" Decherb. . . ;. . . . 658,500.
The ro.

Mr. Germain's . 200 440000
Mr. Grimoul's . 100 219000 1,549,000
Mr. Romey's . 2000 4653000

200 from Mr. Duplain 436000

COR RE 105$000 2,133,000.
500 from Mr. A... xo75000 , Fot.3875 Total. 8,823,759.

The former society does not need to
to complete all operations, that 8,823,750:

It must reach, by February 10th, fubefore the state she has in her hands 8,255,000, that I lent him for a fixed month and a year,
of these 8,255,000, there were 600,000 pounds. of reimbursements to Mr. Haller 500,000 pounds.

K

) 146 (

for the stamping on January 21st, & $00 other approximately for cash purchases, of the 8,255,000 pounds, only a few remain.

6,650,000.

Knowledge is preferred, but it's worth 2,050,000.

to touch the lord one"... 27th
the 6th ee ea Se.

the 10th... i opinion + + + « to FEO T

And in letters that must be reimbursed |
the stamping costs, & to be counted | - COPUNESRIgENT. » sw scearon o + » - MONK.

The 2875 shares to be received by the end of February, {either because they are due, or because one lets efcomptera, ne costent qu’6,690,750 liv.

We can therefore see that the company is between our hands, at very little thing is needed, which is what she needs for.
to receive them, as for the 2,133,000 who make him necessary items for the 1000 she is to receive the 15, we can rest easy, since indépendamof the three and a half million that Mr. de Seneffe borrowed, to talk about the renewal of circulation, in the case of bankers, who have threatened Mr. Count de Seneffe, the refusal; I already stopped from x to r5 February 1,800,000 lim in fus. Let's see what's needed for Pautre company.

£237

She is due to receive 2,260 shares on February 8th.
except that she has to pay. : +. +. 3,079,000,
And from the 10th to the 15th...860. that she owes ROCCO CO, NN to te: 1,222-800

Total: 4,301,800

This company having fixed millions in money had value, therefore has two million more than he He does not need it for the present speculation. He is Therefore, it is obvious that both companies have the means, by February 15th, of making it disappear of the place all the old and new actions old women who still do it there.

~.s It is therefore obvious that, to suppose that all the shareholders carry them to the place, which can only be done by raising them at a very high price, it would still be necessary to... covered a very considerable number, faith in old; faith in new, although I love not included in the tables below - beautiful flow a series of commitments from which one can draw a a kind of party. The 1900 who form a difficulty between Mr. Deleffert and the society of old, & 700 from Mr. Razuret.

It is therefore evident that the two companies get along well, and referring each to their own

K 3

On the other hand, the actions that concern her, the players at bay they cannot avoid their loss; for of two chofes Pune: or those who have to deliver New shares will buy old ones. to make them stamp, or they will be satisfied to buy those that are currently available. In In this last case, we have seen here that we do not could provide, neither old nor new new, everything that needs to be delivered. In the lautre, all the needs of the moment in new would be filled, but some would form there larger ones in the older ones.

It is therefore obvious that it is useless to buy. to take no action in cash, that he fufhc fimit is helpful to keep your money ready, for receiving see those that are to be delivered, and that it is necessary, juf- that at that time, buying everything that was pre- will be offered by good salespeople, to termy which can be brought together by the discount, or lend whatever is asked of this maniere, but having hay to buy fur instead those that will be lent,

Note regarding this plan of operations.

I will not make any notes on this plain infame; it harbors such a deep corruption that it imposes on an honest man the duty not to not even explain it; for in the end, the fury could- The public requires that no breakdown be given. too exact positioning of the fish.

Hey! What honest man wouldn't reproach the horror of reading this story phrafe who concludes this masterpiece of perversion fite? It is therefore obvious that it is useless to buy no cash payment, that he simply Jufit-

how to keep your money ready to receive those who are to be delivered, &ÿ that it is necessary until this period that you buy everything that will be presented to you on your behalf good salespeople on terms that we can recall approach by the account, OR LEND ALL THIS THAT WILL BE ASKED IN THIS WAY, but
by not buying in place those that we DU CAT DER

WE MUST LEND EVERYTHING THAT IS ASKED FOR PER A... So the Abbot of Efpagnac & fes com-accomplices lend shares, so that those who They borrow them and sell them to procure them money, forced by that very fact to become players at the ball are thus victims

"Of sham friendship! ... What an infernal perfidie!

It reminds me of an anecdote that I think duty to public education, and perhaps to Abbé d'Efpagnac himself will make it his foundation profit for personal intelligence.

Around the middle of this century, some famous {ce English Jerats formed an association for raise thieves and hang them on their combined testimonials, in order to receive the bonus of fifty pounds Jerling that the government given per brigand's head.

The speculation surrounding premiums was as we see The induftry of this society. The unfortunate who composed it had, like the abbot of Ef Pagnac, their war plan; they immolated, Like him, more than one innocent person; they carried away like him, more than one success,

They were finally discovered, and no law
Since they could then be hanged, they were tied up to the pillory or the fury of the people tore them to pieces.

Full text of " The Roman Catholic Church Facing the Revolution "

See other formats

```
;

I

u

son

fcaCS*

Bm

>*&

J-* V

x&?&b

mfa

s«§*

3*^

«fc^g^ ?/;-> •■^'•;^

■&<

tv '

• ,w^r

*&.

, i% ■

»V*

ab
```

ff

• V,

^5

9k

ti^P

Wt-

V\ }JY

-«■ i£

1

THE ROMAN CHURCH

IN FRONT

OF THE REVOLUTION

VOLUME ONE.

The author and publisher of this work reserve the right to translate it or to have it translated into all languages. They will continue, by virtue of laws, decrees and international treaties, all counterfeits or all translations made in disregard of their rights.

PARIS. — HENRI PLON'S TYPEWORKS,

PRINTER TO THE EMPEROR,

8, Rl'E GARANCIERE.

Typ Henri Pion.

POPE PIUS VI

THE ROMAN CHURCH

IN FRONT

OF THE REVOLUTION

BY J. CRÉTINEAU-JOLY

WORK BASED ON UNPUBLISHED DOCUMENTS

AND ADORNED WITH PORTRAITS DRAWN BY STAAL.

Merses profundo, pulchrior evenlt Horatii Carminum lib. IV, od. iv.

VOLUME ONE.

PARIS

HENRI PLON, BOOKSELLER-PUBLISHER,

8 RUE GARANCIÈRE.

1859

Translation and reproduction rights restricted.

THE ROMAN CHURCH

FACING THE REVOLUTION,

The French Revolution began in opposition to Catholicism. and for Democracy; the result will be for Catholicism and against Democracy.

Joseph de Maistre.

BOOK ONE.

PIUS VI AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

Europe in 1775. — A portrait of that era. — Anarchy in people's minds. before getting to the facts. — Voltaire and his century. — The Church and the Philosophy. — Means employed to overthrow the Roman Siege. — The Jansenism and its doctrines. — Its secret alliance with the Philosophers and The unbelievers. — The Jansenists, revolutionaries by instinct. — Their struggle against the Church and against thrones. — Impossible morality they preach to combat the common precepts of Religion. — Jesuits and Jansosnists. — Ecclesiastical Gallicanism and Secular Gallicanism. — • Difference which exists between the Gallican clergy and the bar. — Origin of Gallicanism.

— Cardinal du Perron and Bossuet. — Louis XIV and Pope Alexander VIII.

— The parliaments make the maxims of the Gallican Church into a code of insurrectionRection. — Jansenism in Holland creates Josephism in Austria. Emperor Joseph II and his ecclesiastical reforms. — Portrait of this prince. — His tendencies and his goal. — Upheavals brought about in Germany Magne by the laws enacted against the freedom of the Church. — Election of Pius VI. — His portrait. — Situation of the Roman clergy. — Jubilee of 1775.

— The Pope's Journey to Vienna. — The Prince of Eaunitz. — The Revolutions of Brabant. — The Emperor begs the Pope to intervene with the Catholics. Belgians. — The Pope yields to his prayer. — Death of Joseph II. — Scipio Ricci, Bishop of Pistoia. — Synod of Pistoia and Italian lawyers. — Conference of Ems. — Pacca, nuncio to Cologne. — Pius VI and Louis XVI. — Causes of the French Revolution. — The National Assembly and the major Principles of 1789. — The Church facing the Revolution. — Mirabeau and his contemporaries. — The God of peace and social progress. — In what way They are deceiving the people in a revolutionary way! — Thiers, Louis Blanc and MiChelet. — Pitt and Burke. — Spoliation of the clergy. — The Jansenists and the Lawyers draft the Civil Constitution of the Clergy. — Examination of this document

ï. !

institution. — Camus and Abbé Grégoire. — Parallel between the cruelties of The Inquisition and revolutionary tolerance. — Pius VI supporting Louis XVI and the French episcopate in their struggles. — Persecutions against the Church. — A tableau of the Terror. — The kings of Europe and the Pope in the presence of Scaffold of January 21st. — Apathy of some, courage of others. — Pitt does to propose to the Pope that he lead a crusade against the Revolution. — The Directory and the Roman Catholic Church. — Bonaparte's first campaigns In Italy. — The victorious general refuses to march against Rome. — Death by Duphot. — The Roman Republic is resurrected by the French Directory, French. — The former Oratorian Daunou and the Calvinist Haller. — Pius VI, prisoner of the Revolution. — Triumphant journey of the captive through Italy and the France. — His death. — Situation in Rome under the Republic. — Pius VI will be the last pope.

At the moment when the Sacred Gollege, gathered in Conclave, on February 15, 1775, he was seated on the Apostolic Chair Cardinal Jean-Ange Braschi, who took the name of Pius VI, the Roman Catholic Church finds itself exposed to immense dangers. By opening with adorned and mas- debauchery quarries of the Regency to go and plunge into religious orgy religious, moral and political life of the Directory, the eighteenth century has carved out a unique place for itself in the history of the mind human. Through its philosophers, who were thinkers ofdeplorably free, by its poets, who had only the in-the inspiration of evil, by its writers of every sect as from every country, which the genius of destruction intoxicated, by its princes and by its statesmen, who, seized by a culpable failure or cowardly complicity further-Still unable to cope, they isolated themselves and thought only of their steps.

whether or their interests, this century was ripe for the Revolution. It took place in ideas, in customs, in the laws, in the government of peoples, before to be embodied in facts.

Impiety, which until then had been an exception, This translated into a rule and a fashion. Impiety became a amusement that vice and sarcasm popularized. Of Little by little it spread. The authority of the sacred traditions forming the bond of souls, we acclimatized Indifference and doubt pervade every family. The basics historical accounts of Christianity were no longer accepted except like a fabric of fables; its dogmas passed into the state of absurdities. Debauchery and the crime. After having breathed the spirit into every heart independence, insubordination, and error were brought about.

this century, laughing as it bites into the bread of all infamies.
He had drunk from the Lord's hand the cup of his wrath;
he had drunk from that cup of drowsiness, and he had taken from it down to the dregs.

Through the mouths of its false prophets and princes, through the writings of its doctors and through the joyful debauchery-the ages of his courtesans, by the apathetic sleep of his pastors of souls, as if through the ceaseless activity of his apostles of unreason, this century, which was inundated with pleasures Sirs, before steeping him in villainy, seemed to say to God, as well as to the book of Job: “Depart from us,
"We do not wish to know your ways." A contemto understand what was happening in the courts and what was being accomplished wrinkled in the full sunlight of all literary works, one would have been tempted to believe that God, docile for the first once this sacrilegious command was abandoned, the men my to a fatal intoxication. Depravity had just begun.

High up, imperceptibly it spread over the cities and over the countryside.
At that time, the Nations, according to the word of the Psalm-
"mist, were filled with turmoil, and the Kingdoms lowered-
They were gradually losing the good of intelligence.
Sophists, armed with their humanitarian books, exercised The authority of a despot with the baseness of a slave. They they flattered the pride and weakness of kings; they adulated the 1.

whims of their mistresses or their ministers, in order to to arrogate to themselves the right to corrupt the multitudes. They mar-cherish, in prose and verse, the conquest of tolerance rancidity and virtue; then they cast upon the world this seeds of moral disorder and sensual perversions suelles which has not yet borne all its fruit. They proclaimed the emancipators of nations, the arbiters supreme arbiters of justice and injustice, the avengers of all rights and of all the oppressed, and, through an inconsistency which they did not hesitate to make a rule, they provedirresistibly highlighted the vanity of pr-human decency as well as the perfidy of hearts without remorse. By attacking the Rome of the Pontiffs, to whom, According to Bossuet, Europe owes its civilization, they do not pro-They posed only a universal doubt as to how to replace it. Us worked to demolish Christianity, as stu-Cunning maneuvers demolish a palace whose plan, the beautiful proportions and the whole thing, are totally theirs unknown.

Pulled from an attic more by fortune than by Talent, luxury, and pleasure were for them a novelty. They couldn't get enough of it. Their pen, which was a dagger or a whip; their works, which one transformed into a cutthroat place, aroused in people's souls a a host of passions that had not yet been given to The world of knowledge. Enemy science imposed itself.
Its mission is to spread disbelief. It is riddled with sophisms.
epigrammatic, she set to work questioning nature and make it fall into falsehood with the monuments. After having tried to exhaust the various sources of speculative and traditional knowledge, she tried not to leave a single point of the Christian faith. It dogmatized negation and professed the materialism.

The Lutherans and Calvinists had retained the belief and respect for the main facts that relate to the very foundations of Religion. The philosophy of the ten-eighth century did not believe itself condemned to this remnant of eguards. She had worshipped evil and undertaken, as well as the said Tacitus, to abolish human conscience; his coryThe pheasants did not hesitate, in order to better absolve their clients in the past, to pervert the souls of their contemporaries porains.

In this century, which reflected on nothing, but which He joked about everything, yet he still met some men my provident ones in all conditions of existence. They each had, from their own point of view, sinister pronostics to be heard. The voice of the Bishops, that of the Common father, were stifled under the cautious protests of conditional disobedience, or under the sarcasms of the impious, not even acknowledging their impiety seriously. Metastasio, that poet whom the Italians have sonamed their Racine, he is not intimidated by the meneither by flattery nor by words, and he describes the sentence in these terms. of its time:

“I see with extreme sorrow,” he wrote to his brother in 1761, spreading throughout Europe a A spirit of cabal and rebellion. False philosophers. want to free men from the yoke of Religion and of all dependence on authority. They strive to deto construct the principles that are the indispensable basis of the society. If Providence allowed, in order to punish us, the I would like to see the triumph of their anarchic systems. how they will find themselves in the midst of the upheaval that they fervently desire. What they give usMoreover, for new discoveries, it is veryoutdated. But in the past, these pernicious doctrines did not could only harm a few depraved writers; atToday, thanks to a host of licentious pamphlets, they have become standard practice, fashionable science, and the moral code of elegant young men and women wits.

"Oh, poor humanity!"

This school of demoralization, which Metastasio indicates the march and progress, wanted to have once and for all rai-

The sound of all principles and all memories. The time had not yet come to take on a physical form in close collaboration with civil society. We needed the concourse of its leaders in order to achieve the proposed goal. We were- They placed sentinels and flatterers around them, then directed all the vital forces against Christianity of a century so rich in intellectual upheaval.

For over seventeen hundred years, the Christian idea was represented, led and governed by the success- Pierre's sister. To sow the seeds of anarchy in the hearts and sow discord in the faith of peoples, he It was necessary to break the bonds of spiritual power, to isolate little by little Rome, and separate it through hypocrisy or violence The cessation of all contact with nations. His new en- enemies hoped that by forcing the sovereigns and their ministers to enter into the plot, of which they constituted themselves they killed the moderators, out of respect, they said, for the thrones and out of tenderness for enslaved humanity, he gave them it would be much easier to triumph over the pastor su- first and to shake the Roman Catholic Church. They had read it well and carefully consider this passage from Fénelon; they did not ask

Nothing better than applying it! : "Everything that degrades in the imagination of the multitude, the authority of the Holy See, through an appearance of weakness, imperceptibly leads the peoples in schism; it is through this that zealous people become discouraged, and the party grows more reckless. The more one The more he suffers, the more he tries.

Armed with a recipe that they did not have firsthand, but that it was important for them to exploit it on the largest scale On a scale, the sophists began their work of construction by France, where irony permeates all the thoughts.

The Roman Church had undoubtedly defied enemies more powerful, she never met any more in- Solitarily clever. No one tried to attack him. on a specific plan. For example, Protestantism and of all sects separated from the Roman Communion Maine, they were careful not to confine the war to one or more misleading maxims. The circle of hatred to the point of mockery universal. To summarize in a single wish all the Having made their wishes, they borrowed from Voltaire the instruction which had to to serve as a starting and rallying point for maneuvers of thought or speech. Let us crush the infamous! was the A watchword given and received. Voltaire invented it. His disciples, from all countries and all hierarchies, They imposed upon themselves the duty to accomplish it. They hid beneath golden words, the dryness of their souls—like the master, they made sentimentality a means, of humanity an ambush and pity a fury.

This man, who without question was the least on earth

---

[1] Letter from Fénelon to Father Daubenton dated April 1, 1714. Correspondence dance, t. IV, p. 462 (Paris, 1827).

imperfect incarnation of the devil, pushed shame to the point of a prodigy. With that inextinguishable laughter, the prerogative of his marvelous talent, he sacrificed a long life to demon-to know that all cowardice dishonors, according to the sublime word of Tacitus. He scorned all the glories of France, he made a litter of all ideas of patriotism. After having es-Voltaire, it's time to slap God in the face!
he began to shatter with his own hands the cult of the past, this piety subsidiary of nations.

An exceptionally looming figure looms over history radiant, half angel and half hero, whom others little-France envied him. Voltaire felt his powerlessness to stifle the memory of God in people's hearts; he sought to... cha, through all sorts of lewd images and slander-depraved obscenities, enough to tarnish Joan of Arc, the immortal and popular Maid. The English had only dared to do her to burn alive at the stake in Rouen, he persevered, in a nameless poem, to defile her dead and dethrone her virginity. France, which no longer had time to indulge ingner, and who perhaps would no longer have found the strength, She bowed her head before this apotheosis of vice. She did not back down.
no point before this expiation of unparalleled glory.

Voltaire had given the signal for an implacable war.
to all honest feelings. By glittering the men-dream, by flattering perverse instincts, by putting a masking his true opinions, and by casting a man-This writer, the commander-in-chief, is steeped in his beliefs.
of the great army that was being recruited against Rome, had He never imagined that by playing with the winds he would unleash a torrent of energy.
the storms. Whatever a man's pride, it does not...
It is not permissible to aspire to so many disasters; but in re-Evolution, what a man of genius began, is completed.

often by workers who arrive at the eleventh hour. This man a genius would have disdained their mercenary services and their compromising assistance; a day comes when he is condemned to suffer them. Voltaire had paved the way. One a multitude of writers, whose names no longer even survive on the bottomless abysses of history, plunged into them after him. Then The Church found itself condemned for all these immoralities. hungry, who were going to load the truth with handcuffs and to put the human spirit, weary of itself, in chains.

The Holy See, that is to say the center of the Christian faith yours and the bond of Catholic unity, was therefore at risk to enemies who, in order to overthrow him, used all kinds of weapons. He was attacked with sarcasm; one He was undermined by reasoning; efforts were made to make him odious, by presenting it from the point of view of history and of human reason as the born enemy of progress social and universal happiness. Facing these men of the eighteenth century, which began by being fatifords of everything and which ended up being unable to do without You're welcome, the most misguided idea, wrapped in a good word or offered under an affectation of sentimentality philanthropic, was assured of making its way. The courtly elegance and backstreet gallantries made up her inevitable entourage. She advanced into the world, carried on the arms of grand ladies or comedians diennes. After visiting all the salons, she was going to lose in the provinces. It's barely a small number elite hearts manage to throw away a shred of purple on the rags of so much mindless misery.

These hardships had something so candid about them audacious, that Jean-Jacques Rousseau himself conbuttocks as the most habitual act of life, that, by for example, to instill in mothers the duty to breastfeed their children, while exposing their own suitable for public charity. Tertullian and Saint Jerome the philosophers of their time called "animals" of glory; » Jean-Jacques will prove that those of all The eras, especially his own, deserve this blemish. "Everyone knows," wrote the Genevan sophist, that his system is no better founded than the others; But he supports it because it belongs to him. There isn't one only one who, coming to know truth and falsehood, would not prefer the lie he found in the truth discovered by a other. Where is the philosopher who, for his own glory, does not deceiveWouldn't he willingly perish all of humankind? Where is he? who, in the secret of his heart, proposes another object

What about distinguishing oneself? Provided that it rises above the vulgar, provided it eclipses the brilliance of its competitors, What more could he ask for?...

In this era so rich in contrasts, and where, between the most incomprehensible, but the most spiritual fo- In the latrines, the Revolution was carried out from above before... to descend to the lowest point, the ingenious frivolity of some serves scarcely any excuse for the blind negligence of others. The unbelie- Durability is the only, the true faith of this century. And when She sees all these sad heirs of the strong races passing by, striving to dishonor their families' reputations, History is always tempted to throw it in their faces old and prophetic curse: Filii heroum noxœ. Amidst the refinements of prodigious luxury, one He liked to let everything be questioned. We were beating in breaches notions of good and the principles that underlie States, under the pretext of achieving an imaginary improvement. They were turning all the constituent elements of social order, in the foolish hope of arriving more safely to the destruction of the Church.

This plan had already been conceived a hundred times; it did not never encountered characters more suited to execute it. There were, in the palaces as well as in the judiciary, in the clergy as in the nobility, in the bourgeoisie geoisie and among writers, a new class which reveals, in its raw state, such a need for innovation, that only one thing surprised us anymore. Finding A few more virtues amidst the dung heap of so many vices seemed so monstrous to some and so intolerable to others, that never was a more relentless war undertaken against the few defenders of social principles. They were handed over their names and their works subjected to public ridicule, they covered with an indelible stigma of ridicule.

Those who, like Cicero writing to Atticus, had the courage to murmur in the bitterness of their pres- feelings: "See what ignoble death we perish by- sounds! » these, prophets of imminent ruin, succeed were instantly engulfed in thunderous mockery. Their cry of alarm was met with songs... popular queues or new bridges. We were inoculating a hot fever of rebellion, and the wise and prudent who, seeing the fire, wanted to sound the alarm, did not were more accepted in the world than as energumènes, whose dementia offered a new pastime. The Revolution was advancing, carried in triumph by the powerful

Earth's forces; and like all revolutions, It would be composed and strengthened by accomplished follies. by clever people, extravagances uttered by people of mind, and of crimes invented or approved by honclear people.

Voltaire had shaped the eighteenth century in his own image. He enlivened it with his thunderous, mocking laughter; he had instilled his aversions and inspired his morals. Voltaire had created a personal enemy whom he would destroy at all costs. It was necessary to destroy. The work that Julian the Apostate did not could only sketch out in its imperial omnipotence sublaughed at this imagination at work in a world. Christ had been defeated for too long by the Church; Voltaire began campaigning to erase the Gospel from the memory of men. He had the reign of his pride to offer to humankind and the empire of universal decadence to substitute for the reign of the Cross. With him and through him the corruption was presented as something original, and cynicism It took on the air of a witty remark. All his genius consisted of living as long as possible in stupidity human. He possessed the malice of the snake and the venom of the viper. His pen instilled in the masses a these hatreds which, like the dagger of the savage, conThey serve eternally, like poison. He didn't want to leave any God to no one, in order to be the idol of everyone.

In all ranks of society, he mentioned auxiilearies. He recruited them from the throne as well as from the lower classes. literary foundation. The Kings and their ministers carried at the forefront, like a precious jewel of popularity, the stigmate of his self-serving praise. When he had surrounded himself of these auxiliaries of disorder, as pointed out by the holy Apostle Paul, "of these self-loving, miserly men, glorious, proud, slanderous, disobedient to their ungrateful, impious, unnatural, envious fathers and their mothers peacemakers, slanderers, intemperate, inhumane, more lovers of pleasure than of God, and trailing after them as captives of women burdened with sins and possessed by a thousand passions," he believed himself certain of success.

1 II Epistle of Saint Paul to Timothy, ch. 9.

But Voltaire had no vocation for martyrdom. He aspired to kill the soul while respecting the body, his envelope; and, at the end of 1768, in a letter to the mar-From Villevieille, he was drawing up the plan of conduct which he never wavered: "No, my dear Marquis," he wrote-

"No, modern-day Socrates will not drink hemlock."
"The Socrates of Athens was, between us, a man
* very imprudent, a ruthless quibbler, who had » made a thousand enemies, and who defied his judges very badly » remarks.

"Our philosophers today are more skillful; they "do not have the foolish and dangerous vanity to put their names to their works; these are invisible hands that "Fanaticism is spreading from one end of Europe to the other,"
"With the arrows of truth. Damil, debased, has just mo-» laugh; he was the author of Christianity Unveiled and of beautiful-
"A blow to other writings. We never knew; his friends told him"
They kept the secret, as long as he lived, with unwavering loyalty.
"Worthy of philosophy. No one yet knows what " is the author of the book published under the name Fréret. We have Printed in Holland, for two years, more than sixty "Volumes against superstition. The authors are absolutely..."
"unknown elements, although they may boldly uncover themselves"
"Vrir. The Italian who made the Riforma d'Italia had no warning
"to go and present his work to the Pope; but his book has
"has a prodigious effect. A thousand pens write, and a hundred A thousand voices are raised against the abuses and in favor of the "Tolerance. Be very sure that the revolution that has..."
"This has been in people's minds for about twelve years, but..."
"not little used to expel the Jesuits from so many states, and has

Book One.

"He encouraged the princes to strike the idol of Rome,"
"which used to make them all tremble. The people are well
"Foolish, and yet the light penetrates to him. Be
"Of course, for example, there aren't twenty people"
"in Geneva, who do not abjure Calvin as much as the Pope,"
"And that there are philosophers even in shops" » from Paris.

"I will die comforted by seeing the true religion,"
"That is to say, that of the heart, established on the ruin of the "Pretenses. I have never preached anything but the worship of a "God, benevolence, and indulgence. With these sentiments-"
"mentions, I defy the devil, who does not exist, and the
"True fanatical devils, who exist all too often."

A few years later, the doctors who had tasked with killing the sick man, they observe among themselves the pro-sandstone of philosophy. On August 13, 1775, Frederick II of Prussia wrote to Voltaire:

"Everything you say about our Teutonic bishops is not <
"That's all too true; they fatten themselves on the tithes of Zion. But "You also know that in the Holy Roman Empire the year-
"ancient usage, the golden bulla, and such other ancient foolish-

"Tises, enforce established abuses if one wants"

"To reduce fanaticism, we must not touch the bishops"
"questions; but if we manage to reduce the number of monks,
"Especially the mendicant orders, the people will grow cold,"
"And, being less superstitious, it will allow the powers to » to dispose the bishops in what is suitable for the good of "States. That's the only way forward. Undermining silently"
"And silently, the edifice of unreason is to force it to
"to collapse on its own. The Pope, given the situation in which he

---

1 Posthumous works of Frederick II, King of Prussia (Berlin, 1788), vol. IX, p. 286.

"is found, is obliged to give briefs and bubbles"
"as his dear sons demand of him; this power, » founded on the ideal of faith, loses as
"That one diminishes. If he is still at the head of the na-
"a few ministers above vulgar prejudices"
"If things go wrong, the Holy Father will go bankrupt... No doubt."
that posterity will enjoy the advantage of being able to think "Freely."

This King of Prussia, who was at once a great warrior rier, a great politician and a great despot, is busy with Voltaire, from the depths of his palace in Potsdam, to pre-to compare among other peoples the advent of free thought Sisters. Protestant by birth, but an unbeliever by default.
and mocking by temperament, he congratulates the patriarch of Ferney of his victories over the Church and the Pontificate.
"It is to Bayle, your predecessor," he wrote to him on September 8th.
September 1775, and to you no doubt, that the glory is due of this revolution taking place in people's minds; but, di-According to the truth, it is not complete. The devout have their party, and it will never be crushed except by a force major. It is from the government that the sentence... No doubt it will happen with time; neither you nor I will not be a spectator at this long-awaited event.

Frederick II did not stop there. He
He knew the princes and ministers of his time; he pres-He senses their financial needs, he anticipates their desires secret. By putting their finger on the wound of their greed,

He writes: "I have noticed, and others like me have, that the "Places with the highest concentration of convents and monks are"
"those where the people are most blindly delivered to the "Superstition. There is no doubt that if one succeeds
"To destroy these havens of fanaticism, the people will not become

"in a somewhat indifferent and lukewarm way about these objects that make "Currently those of his veneration. It would therefore be "to destroy the cloisters, or at least to begin to dimi» reduce their number. That moment has come, because the
The French and Austrian governments are in-
"debts, which have exhausted the resources of industry"
"to pay off their debts, without success. The bait" )> wealthy abbeys and well-funded convents are se-
"Duisant. By representing to them the evil that the cenobites" » do to the population of their states as well as the abuse of the » a large number of cucullati who fulfill their pro» vinces, along with the ease of paying in part-
"tie their debts, by applying the treasures of these co-
"Communities that have no successors, I believe that we would determine them to begin this reform; and it is
"to presume that after having enjoyed the secularization of "Some benefits, their greed will successively engulf"
"The rest is lying. Any government that decides
"This operation will be a friend of philosophers and a supporter"
"of all the books that will attack the superstitions po-"Pular and the false zeal of hypocrites who would like to be there" » oppose. Here is a small project that I am submitting to the examination-
"men of the patriarch of Ferney. It is to him, as to the "Father of the faithful, to rectify it and to execute it." The
"The patriarch may ask me what will be done with the..."
"Bishops!" I replied that it was not the time to...
"Moreover, we must begin by destroying those "which inflame the hearts of the people with fanaticism. As soon as "The people will become disillusioned, the bishops will become..."
"little boys whom the sovereigns will dispose of by the "Time will continue as they see fit."

Such confessions, escaping from a conspiratorial royal mouth opposing the principle of authority, they were causing to germinate in the hearts of kings and subjects a vague desire for spo-connection. Through his voracious activity, Voltaire took pleasure to set off all these powder kegs. He granted amnesty, he con-He condoned all depravities; he covered up all crimes of the aegis of his name. So as not to be left behind by any to excess, he openly sponsored lying, like,

In the seventeenth century, other writers of a firmer talent and a higher conscience proclaimed the truth. “Lying,” he wrote to Thiriot*, “is a vice when he does harm; it is a very great virtue when he
It does good. So be more virtuous than ever; it is necessary.
to lie like the devil, not timidly, not "For a time, but boldly and always."

This council, which forms the basis of the entire historical system, Voltaire's philosophical and religious views were followed to the letter.
both by him and by his disciples. None of them he confessed, in the secret of his heart, that there was a A weapon even more terrible than slander. This weapon, which is the truth, was bound to turn against them; but then the time was not yet right. All that the so-The phists were doing it, they seemed to be ordering the others around.
and the others obeyed with the fiercest contempt for them-same. It is therefore not without dread that one enters in this labyrinth of errors that a skilled hand in impostures were raised around the Holy See. The war, of which,
For more than sixty years, Voltaire was the promoter-author, and to which, with tireless perseverance, he dedicated the most brilliant faculties, is declared and ou-green. He called upon everything in the universe for help

1 Works of Voltaire, (.LU, p. 326.

i. a whole, feels the need to breathe the air deeply of spiritual revolt and Christian insubordination yours. It excites, it stimulates, it rewards, and yet he would inevitably have succumbed in the struggle en-pledged, if, deep in the sanctuary as at the foot of the thrones, he would not have encountered less impatient auxiliaries than him.

They are not, in fact, the apostles of unbelief.
advances that deal the most dangerous blows to the Church reux. By providential permission, he may well their being granted the power to corrupt a generation and to try to build during an earthquake; but their ten-Even the best-designed strategies always fail, because the passions they develop have no roots in the faith of the people.

They did not hide behind a hypocrisy full of discretion. Like a parasitic plant, they had insinuated themselves-

They were trapped in the wall, and they had nurtured the hope of the overthrow. Through a pride born of ignorance that afflicts them all the unbelievers of the pen or of thought, they had not wanted to know that in religion as in politics-In reality, what is praised is not what is desired. They out-
They forgot that what we want is the only thing we don't They didn't speak. They became too quickly intoxicated by their hypo- successes.
thetics, and they would have ended up like so many others in a failure, if, in the same century, Jansenism, making tacit or explicit alliance with secular Gallicanism would not have lent philosophy its formidable lever of subversion.

Sometimes a small cloud forms in the sky, not larger than a man's footprint. This cloud, almost imperceptible at first, it gradually spreads,

It develops, then suddenly it bursts and falls on the head.
improvident people. Jansenism was to the Church what This little cloud will always be for man.

Jansenism embodied all the infirmities of the sectarian. He elevated falsehood to the highest power.
of duplicity. He had made deceit his goal, of Hypocrisy a means, perfidy a science, of betrayal, a kind of grandeur; he was imbued with it, he He infected others. He only knew how to lie and be cunning.
deceiving, promising, buying consciences at the highest level price, and sell it at the lowest price. Born a traitor with all Despite the appearance of honesty, he displayed a weakness truly paternal to all those who, near or far far away, they could one day become a stone in the Church of scandal or a spark of discord. His smile resit seemed like a wound; that's why he was always seen to love, like the desert tiger, licking the wound after having done.

Cut off from Universal Communion by the judge supreme in faith and works, to which they appealed Sometimes as an abuse, sometimes as better informed, the
The Jansenists had been careful not to accept the sentence focused on their doctrines. They reserved for themselves the explanation-quer, while claiming that she was not hitting their Neither their writings nor their intentions. Caught in perpetual, flagrant the crime of disobedience; they never ceased to protest.
their enlightened devotion to the Roman Catholic Church and to the Vicar of Jesus Christ. They proclaimed themselves to the four corners of the world the most submissive children, but, by a fatal blindness, the most persecuted* These children, whom a implacable pride bequeathed to the Revolution, were found to share the fate of Diomedes, who, at the siege of Troy, in while pursuing an enemy, had the misfortune to wound a divinity.

This situation of victims in a state of waiting, to be awarded creating each day, and with their own hands, a halo of martyrdom, had already captivated more than one generation. indeed comes from times when pity for Terror changes in a kind of moral complicity, sanctifying heresy and legitimizing the revolt. But then it was no longer appropriate Jansenism waged this war at the Roman Court. ambush and skirmishing, small, repressive subtleties understandable and culpable deceptions that he had supported naked for over a century and a half. The Church was attacked taken by enemies who rushed from both Israel and Samaria. They were born to her in every corner of the globe; she de-covering the very place where she should never have looked. Jansenism imagined that the moment was opportune for to make everyone understand that the judgment passed on his doctrines was truly a just judgment.

Like those criminals hoping to escape prosecution because they killed the magistrate, the Jansenists, who believed always without proof and who always hated without provocation cation, threw themselves into the fray with the qualities and the inherent flaws in their sect. They had gone through the a double phase of enthusiasm and ridicule; they had exhausted the source of their beautiful genius and their miracles of the cemetery. Life and brilliance had withdrawn; he did not survive-was more than an expansion of immoral pride, debar-rid of all its ties, an expansion that merged with a feeling of hateful revenge against Rome. The Jansenists engendered the most detestable of all disbelief, that of hypocrisy. Facing this people French, so communicative and so cheerful, they were sad as a friend's laugh at a success. This strange contrast was one of the most decisive causes of their proselytizing ism. In their speech, always imperious and sarcastic-They were liquid, they had something icy and sharp about them which, unintentionally, brought to mind the sword in the executioner's hand.

Separated from the common center, and persisting in saying so to each other the strongest supporters, the Jansenists were committed to the Church with all the more obstinacy because the Church to them demonstrated greater distance and distrust. They pro- yielded in the manner of the Italian bravo, which, fearing to attack a robust and well-armed man head-on, of approaching with all sorts of courtesies, he throws himself at him Suddenly, she closes his mouth and kills him from behind. They aspired to destroy the Apostolic See with its their own weapons. They wanted to bury it under its ruins, and, by some magical enchantment, reveal these ruins like a restored building worthy of the early centuries of Christendom.

“What good are our lights if we keep "Our abuses?" exclaimed Voltaire; and Voltaire started from this A philosophical exclamation to translate into court kings the papal primacy. The Jansenists, alongside the even in the same rut and never falling into it, exhausted all theological deductions and all the teachings of ecclesiastical scholarship. They claimed to beat in breaches Roman authority, ideally so formidable, of- during the eighteenth century, to temporal power and to the happiness of nations. The false maxims developed- They drew false conclusions. These sectarians knew, through long experience, which man does not like to to obey. Man experiences a secret, an instinctive pleasure, in to revolt against a powerless authority. It's always with a proud joy he said in his heart the no serviam of the Holy Scriptures. So they began to run- to promote and exalt episcopal dignity, held in tutelage by the despotism of Rome. Then, moving on to another in order of ideas, without ever abandoning their plan of attack, They managed to reveal that the lower clergy, degraded of its ancient divine institution, was now nothing more than an order debased by the episcopate.

The core idea of Jansenism boils down to confusing, in the first man, nature and grace, reason and the revelation. So that, in the first man, there was no had no truly supernatural end called the glory, nor of any truly supernatural means called thanks, but an end and means that are purely natural to primitive man. Thus, in fallen and redeemed man, Grace was merely the restoration of nature, and the revelation, the very restoration of natural reason.

Based on the principle that when we go back to the source the waters are found to be clearer, the Jansenists are distressed

They took on the mission of reviving the customs within the Church of venerable antiquity. Jeremiah weeping over the desolde-
pace, corruption, and ingrained abuses. In order to puri-They defied the faith, suppressed the works. They mocked the indulgences, they reformed suffrage and beliefs on Purgatory. Irreconcilable enemies of morality Released, they covered themselves in ashes like the Pro-They were seen shedding tears, trained to feign on the new doctrines born in the Vatican, and adopted by thoughtless or presumptuous priests.

Saint Vincent of Leirins had observed in his time, and his remark has never ceased to be true: "That one had always seen in the Church that the more attached one is to Religion, the quicker one is to oppose opinions news. » The Jansenists should therefore not have ethundering opponents that the novelty of their casuistir that aroused them from all sides. They posed themselves in re-those who perpetuate wrongs, always armed with opposing views dilemmas, ambiguous sentences, and retractions even more ambiguous.

And the contradiction exasperated them, and it allowed them-it was a daily ritual to crown oneself with the palms of a merchant.
tire to which no one thought of dedicating them.

However, this sect, which had begun by being a dogmatic school, had gradually transformed into a center of opposition. She was mentally rebelling. both against the Church and against the State. Under the outwardly religious, beneath an appearance of Christian rigidity enough to make the Supreme Pontiff and his defenders blush Sisters, she marched resolutely towards the Pulpit apostolic. The innovators had maneuvered with a such wonderful understanding, they had so admirably ex-exploited all the lethargies and all the abasements, that the dogma of the religious question became nothing more than a veil good at most to hide the spirit of trouble and domination nation which they possessed. By making everyone repeat the echoes of the Catholic world, the words of faith, of piety, of harmony and a return to wholesome traditions, they were having managed to infiltrate deep into people's souls an indifference absolute. From this point of view, they appeared as the more valuable auxiliaries than unbelief could register-to lie.
' ■ S. Vincenti. Lirin.; In commonit.

Also, in the disarray of his hopes and his confessions, when Diderot recounts what happens to the sous-pers of Baron d'Holbach, where every evening God is put to the votes, discussed, rejected and denied as a malevolent being healthy and useless, did the author of The Indiscreet Jewels really He was careful to add: "We are here in a very philosophical, very Jansenist-
"Native, and not at all Christian."

Jansenism did not come to deserve it in a day this singular panegyric. It still counted a certain a number of well-intentioned followers, of these sincere faithful-firmly attached to the party doctrine, and that Voltaire flouted, after Jean-Jacques Rousseau had ex-to bear long inconsistencies. These faithful, a kind of visionaries that the miracles of Deacon Paris could not never to be cured of a leprosy of inveterate obstinacy, for-they led a small circle, harmless perhaps, but at once They were certainly very prone to disobedience. Their speeches were softer than oil, but at the same time they were like barbed arrows.

Wandering without a shepherd through the meager pastures
of a controversy that endlessly revolved around the same issue.
circle, this flock felt itself, it admitted itself lost in the middle of-The place of new aspirations. They had changed his enemy and his fighting style; he did not lend himself that with repugnance to the sacrifices that were demanded of him.
The religious disputes, the personal issues that he They liked to stir things up and dwell on things, but their time had passed.
herd of immobile people, both in their sin and in his aversions, did not want to understand that the
The century followed even more culpable errors. They stopped at the edge of the path that separated them from the abimo, and not daring to take the final step, they remained in-

m

decided, while the bulk of the Jansenist army surged forward with a resolve towards even more disastrous conquests.

From the early years of the eighteenth century, in
In effect, Jansenism, as a sect, was no longer anything more than an assembly-a group of men in open rebellion against both powers. For the purposes of his cause, he created a A church within a church, an independent state at its very heart of the State. In order to properly appreciate this organization of the gone, transforming into a civilian body, when it cannot to form a religious body, it suffices to study the Causa (juesnelliana; it is only necessary to examine the history of This controversy, which dragged on for over a century, and which, ultimately, results in a pre-planned perjury.

It is of little need to posterity to follow the Jansenility in the labyrinth of his sacred grudges and his political dreams. What is important to clarify is its theory concerning spiritual power and power temporal, a theory that must be expounded and established by evidence.

With the exception of the famous Abbot of Saint-Cyran, who more once let himself be seduced by vague desires to renovate In terms of social development, the first sectarians proved to be quite circumspect in elucidating their plans. Concealed- Did they share their thoughts? Were they more reserved? Or all they simply yielded, without realizing it, to the action for so to speak instinctive principles that had formed the the basis of their education? In any case, there is a notable difference between the great Arnauld, this tireless seventeenth-century warrior, and his disciple the orator- Nothing, Quesnel.

The Solitaires of Port-Royal, who poured the oil of the patience, good taste and erudition in the lamp of their vigils and their persevering labors, cannot be imagined- never found anything but opinions adopted by them, one could- could one day have fatal consequences. He had It is difficult to believe that a path is no less beautiful, because that he might encounter some thorns in the hedges which border. Hardly this learned generation of polemicists And of writers, has she descended into the grave that he... raises another, substituting for genius with audacity, and rem- replacing the cautious timidity of his masters with a fervor of dialectics which reveals the party's secret to all.

In most of his writings, and primarily in the ninetieth of the 101 condemned propositions born from the Catholic Church, Quesnel did not back down from- before its principle. The consequences were just and necessary, once the principle was accepted; he derived them from it. with a logic that was more rigid than clever. Of these consequences... quences, it has since then and definitively formed the sap and the core of his doctrine on dual power.

The innovator discusses the power to bind and loose atta-

he went to the Roman See, and he expressed himself thus: "It is the Church who has the right to excommunicate, to exercise it through the pre-first pastors, with the at least presumed consent of the whole body.

Thus, he is no longer the successor of Saint Peter and the Prince of Shepherds, it is no longer even the Pontiffs who, in the Church, receive as a right, a consecration creation and an inalienable deposit, the power of excommunication To deny it is the entire Church. The Church, thus defined and presented, consists of the assembly of all the faithful;
and the first pastors, instruments or ministers of The Church, in exercising this right, cannot use it that of the at least presumed consent of the entire body.

Which is to say that not only simple lenders very, but the lay people, men, women, old people and children must be consulted and given the opportunity to pronouncements on matters of faith, discipline, or moral questions, difficult or tricky ones, always at-above vulgar intelligences.

The following proposition is even more explicit. It is revolt and the spirit of insubordination framed within a Theological aphorism: "The fear of excommunication-An unjust accusation should never prevent us from doing our
duty. "

Doing one's duty in this case means persevering in the mistake; it is obviously raising the flag against the Supreme Pontificate.

The audacity of such proposals could not-quit the old age of Louis XIV than from the point of view of re-religious. In all the halo of his glory, as at amidst the disasters that signaled the end of his reign At seventy-two years old, the Great King had never deigned to dwell on the thought that an unknown priest, an obscure Oratorian, would come at the same time to strike with a sharpened iron on the Church's shield and on the fleur-de-lis escutcheon. This The blow, a precursor to the duel, resounded approximately uselessly to his ears; but at the Vatican he was planning a worrying light on the moral situation of Europe aunt.

Rome spoke; nevertheless the case was not heard.
She had as her support an imperceptible legion of es-
I took the quibblers and cantankerous types, who would have found a way, through a series of loopholes and subtle distinctions, do splitting hairs. The Jansenists were con-damned; all that remained for them was to do their duty. They

They accomplished it to the extent of their obstinacy: they revolted.

Quesnel explained himself. One of his disciples and colleagues-workers, Abbot Legros, in a work entitled: Ren-payment of Gallican liberties, he commented and elaborated the master's aphorism. He brought out its consequences quences, both in the spiritual and ecclesiastical order than in the temporal or civil order. "The bishops, he said, upon receiving from Jesus Christ the power to govern ner, receive them as ministers of the Church to exercisecer in his name this power, the ownership of which resides in the entire body of the Church.

The matter is clear and proven. The entire body of the E-Church, Pope, Cardinals, Bishops, Priests and Peoples, Peoples, above all, possess the primary and indisputable right-table of governance. They can therefore preach, command, To excommunicate and dogmatize. Above, or rather beside.
from the simplest or most vulgar Christian, the Pope and Bishops only have the exercise of ministry.

According to this theory, the application of which, even in excess, sive, will come at the good time of the Civil Constitution of the Clergy, the government of the Church would be overstepping the mark parliamentary. He would go straight to the republic-than the most advanced. The dogmatic sect of 1715 did not He makes no secret of it. "In this respect," he adds, "it is a matter of the au-spiritual authority as well as temporal jurisdiction which is in a republic.

Perhaps without knowing it, and certainly without wanting to.
then, ostensibly at least, the Jansenists pla-They were on the same level as the Protestants. The doctrine Some people rubbed shoulders with the errors of others, and Luther did not

1 T. V% p. 343.

Don't speak any more clearly than Legros. Luther said:
"Bishops and other pastors do not have above all the other Christians than the only ministry that has been entrusted to them put with the consent of the people. Let them therefore know that they have no right to give us commandments, if it is only insofar as we are willing to consent to it "of our own free will."

To better convey his thinking, development the most succinct and logical expression of Jansenist thought, Luther adds: "The pastors derive this authority from those of which they are the ministers, that is to say of the multistudy that chose them to act on its behalf.

The Jansenists agree with Luther; here they are who agree with the most fervent followers of Calvin. "I I believe, wrote Anne du Bourg, advisor to the parliament of Paris, the power to bind and loose, and to excommunicate and to absolve, to be given by God, not to a man or two, and thus to the whole Church, that is to say to all the faithful and believers in Jesus Christ.

In his Defense of Reformation > the famous minister Claude, Bossuet's opponent, uses the same language.[2]

By one of these predictions, the eternal prerogative of all the sects and all the nascent parties, Jansenism, isolated in the world, felt that soon he would miss the earth Under his feet. He needed support that was always available. to support its progress and guide it if necessary. This support was not found in Rome, the center of unity, nor in Versailles, where the State was still the King, according to patriotic tradition Louis XIV's formula. He was sought, he was evoked in the Parliaments.

---

[1] De captivilate Babylonis, t. II, p. 282.

[2] Defense of Reformation, p. 353 (4b73).

These bodies of magistrates had, in the long run, become tiredguaranteed to render justice to the people only. The BreviThe Great King's imperial power silenced them; his Death emancipated them. It restored to them this role of rebels. with the law in hand, they had been so happy to play in the turmoil of the Fronde. There was no longer a prince de Condé, no more Duchess of Longueville, no more cardinal de Retz; Parliament was always in funds to procure mannequins the size of old Broussel or of Abbot Pucelle. Its members included Restless men, eager for novelty. To give to its systems a more energetic impulse, the Jansénism seized this point of support.

In order to reach the heart of power safely, it was necessary flattering the custodians; Jansenism improvised itself the courtier of the judicial prerogative. He elevated this prea prerogative above royal authority. The Parliaments suddenly found themselves invested with a kind of sovereignty neté. The origin of this sovereignty became intertwined with the very rights that the nation was taught to invoke or to reconquer. "And the public magistracy," he professed one of the sect's leading figures!, was herself in some way sort of a summary of the nation, that is to say, an abridged version of the powersee and the authority of the entire nation* »

Abbot Legros, who is the doctor and spokesperson for the party, one of these workers of destruction, not having even by name in history, thus completes this theothe power of parliament in opposition tacit with the authority of the keys and the scepter; "It is God, he proclaims % who granted, either by natural law b

---

1 Testimony of the truth, p. 147.

2. Reversal of Gallican liberties, vol. I, pp. 344, 345.

either by a free concession, to the States and to those who govern, the necessary authority to repress injusticestics and violence. But this authority is more essential more attached to the company than to the leader who governs it Verne The Roman nation, for example, possessed always the property of power, whether under kings, "Either under the consuls or under the emperors!"

And to make his thought more tangible, the publicist of Jansenism adds: "In monarchies, even hereditaryIn silence, kings are always ministers of God and of the republic.

A contemporary of Abbé Legros, a Jansenist like He, Bourgoin de Villefore, was not afraid to extend further far removed from the attributes of judicial courts.2 According to him, "the Magistrates in France are the judges, the senators, the assessors of the throne, who work in a way on equal footing with the sovereign, so that no one "No judge is above their rulings."

Those for whom the lessons of history are not not a dead letter will quickly understand that, in this leonine share, so liberally given to the magistracy and to the nation, Jansenism, dispenser of all these rights new, will not have condemned himself to oblivion"

Like all parties, whose strength lies in a dis-perpetual bliss, Jansenism, which began with, wanting to be the Church, is by turns and often entirely at the 1 It is easy to see that this is not a matter of divine right, but of the current property of authority or power. Theologians Those most opposed to the divine right of princes admit that as soon as, by a free concession of the peoples, a prince received the authority to govern

In fact, the people have by that very act relinquished it and no longer possess it.
Furthermore, the doctrine opposed to this is called Richerism.

2 Secret anecdotes on the constitution Unigenitus, t. III, p. 21B.

both the People and the State. It confiscates, it summarizes within itself-even the ownership of sovereign power is also radical-in the spiritual order than in the temporal order.
It is through this usurpation, calculated to deceive Jansenism encouraged the simple and encouraged the wicked.
achieved his goal.

Political questions had initially only been... secondary. In principle, they were supposed to be awarded prizes.
and absorbed by the religious question, especially in a time and with men of a lively and sincere faith. But little by little these men, at the heart of whom a permanent state of The spark of intellectual sedition had ignited the love of In power, the spring of piety weakened. At these haughty or hateful souls, exalted by pride, a doa more active mination than that of consciences becomes ne-necessary. We have grown tired and disillusioned with the religious struggle.
A religious one that presupposes convictions opens up another a more resounding arena. We walk tentatively towards the unknown; but the hope of achieving it was a fixed idea.
Does it not, in fact, rest on the last, on the most in-Veterinary of all the passions in the heart of man, the
A passion for command?

Always ready to absolve themselves of a crime or to forgive themselves-to find fault, the Jansenists, in the making of their dogmas about God and grace seemed to have taken hold pleasure in driving human conscience to despair. Their mind had such inexhaustible resources of malice that they-would have invented a way to make a dove furious, and that it wouldn't have cost them too much to teach to a lamb the art of biting. We saw them pass by their life to poison the holy water.

They had arranged for themselves a cruel, demanding, impious God toyable, absolute, impossible, which, by prior decree, condemned for eternity almost all beings to to whom He had given life and reason. He is the God of Calvin's form is mixed, but he remains the same at heart.

fundamentally, a God who, through the doctors of his law, cannot to create only fanatics or unbelievers, deists or atheists. Fanatics who believe themselves predestined or chosen, unbelievers recoiling in terror at the sight of this divinity Jansenist, who sacrifices the salvation of humanity to a whim of his blind anger.

This dividing wall, erected by guilty priests between the Creator and the creature, was one of the causes less known, and yet the most decisive of this unbridled and unregulated sensuality that is a stain on the annals of the world. Fénelon already pointed this out in his time to the severity of the laws. “I see,” he wrote*, “a great a number of impious people, who, despising all religion, pass-They nevertheless swore in favor of Jansenism. It is not necessary This should come as no surprise. The fundamental principle of Jansenism is that it is necessary for every man to constantly follow his greatest pleasure, which inevitably precedes him, and which irresistibly determines him towards good or evil.
Libertines are flattered by a principle so flattering to the the most shameful passions. We feel it, they say-they, that the pleasure of what is called evil is without com-comparison stronger in us than the languishing pleasure of a a sad and mortifying virtue. We will therefore follow the principle of Saint Augustine and his most learned disciples, in surrendering ourselves without shame or remorse to sensual pleasures.
Can one avoid an inevitable attraction?... All these godless ones
They favor Jansenism out of animosity towards religion.

1 Féru-Ion, Letter 2(53, f. III (1835).

With this depth of judgment and this exquisite delicacy which makes the Archbishop of Cambrai a na-In an almost exceptional fashion, Fénelon raises and decides at the same time the difficulty. The difficulty, although trans-Morally tainted, it nonetheless persisted. The Jansenators exerted an influence on the Revolution questionable. To exercise it, they had to take on a part of Christian society a strange ascendancy; it It's good to go back to its source.

Barely formed for this life of controversies, struggles and Through systematic denigration, Jansenism became a... court of two kinds of people. They devoted this to him.
a kind of cult that is pushed to its absolute limits of servitude. A great number of good people, of pious men, going into evil without having foreknowledge of it, were easily seduced by these unctuous geniusesdogmatic and full of courtesy, especially when They spread turmoil among people's souls. These geniuses they placed their smiles at attention. From the austerity of their ver-and the eminence of their talents, they were composed an indefinable halo. Their diplomacy, always re-Signed in form, still rebellious at heart, was a spirit of maneuvering used to penetrate others and to resimpenetrable self. He allowed them to raise the water on the oil, according to the words of Saint Augustine, to put the light under the darkness, and to place the earth above-above the sky. We fell asleep inwardly, then, in the anxieties of dashed human hopes, we allowed himself to be lulled by the dream of piously raf- innovations refined. The first Solitaires of Port-Royal, who par-They were thus formed, not very humbly, from humility.
a procession of illustrious names and shining virtues.

By a contrast which then escaped the unforeseen From the Court and the City, this procession grew larger with all the nascent unbelievers and all the sensualists in bloom-reason. They denied God and felt enamored of a devotion particular attention to the persecuted doctrine.
encouraged their passions and sympathized with their weaknesses, while the common precepts of the Catholic Church They constantly erected a barrier against it. The Jansenist system It smiled on jaded hearts and voluptuous souls. By Its rigidity made even the simplest things practically impassable.
The burden of duties. The yoke of laws was already being shaken off in thought.
We mentally rebelled against all authority.
Wounds of the heart exacerbated the wounds of pride.
It was deemed convenient to reject virtue, because innovators, more ingenious than their predecessors, liked to portray her as surrounded by difficulties insurmountable.

Obviously, God's law was not that strict; but the Once the prejudice was accepted, it was easy to deduce from it correct conclusions, and Madame de Choisy was able to write to Madame de Sablé (December 1655):

"Following the example of Admiral de Châtillon, I will not

Don't be discouraged in misfortune; I felt with pain, the lightness of Madame la Marquise, which,
The Jansenists deprived me of the friendship that the Carmelites had given me.
had procured it for me from her. I beg you, malady, to tell him on my behalf that I advise him, in friend, not to commit to saying that she no longer loves me, because I am certain that in ten days, that I am Forced to stay in Luxembourg, I would make her turn
The colors are in my favor. Let's get down to business.

1 Library of the Arsenal. Manuscripts.

"So she thinks it's wrong that I uttered a A harsh sentence against Mr. Arnauld? Let her leave her passion as I make mine, and let's see if it's right that a private individual, without an order from the King, without a writ from the
The Pope, lacking the character of a bishop or a priest, meddles in... write incessantly to reform religion and excite, by this process, in people's minds, difficulties arise that do not They have a different effect than creating libertines and impious people. I... speaks like a scholar, seeing how the courtiers and The socialites have been thrown off balance since these proposals Grace: they say at all times: Hey! What does it matter?
as we do, since if we have grace we will be
We will be saved, if we do not have it we are lost. due! And then they conclude by saying: All of this is nonsense.

"Before all these questions, when Easter arrived" saw them, they were astonished like clo- founders ches, not knowing where to hide and having great scruples-They are currently robust and no longer think about to confess; they excuse themselves by saying: What is Written is written. That's what the Jansenists did to with regard to worldly people. For true Christians, it there was no need to write so much to instruct them; Everyone knows perfectly well what needs to be done to live according to the law. That gentlemen Jansenists, instead of stirring delicate questions that should not be shared
I would have asked the people, preaching by their example.
They have extraordinary respect, considering them like good people whose lives are admirable, who have the wit of angels, and whom I would honor byperfectly if they did not have the vanity to want to introduce to introduce new things into the Church.

» I firmly believe that if Mr. d'Andilly knew that If I had the audacity to approve only of the Jansenists, it would have been... would give a good slap, instead of so many hugs that he gave me before.

“I am not writing to you with my own hand, because I take the waters of Sainte-Reine, which give me a It's so dreadfully cold that I can't even stick my nose outside.
from the bed. But, madam, the anger of the marquise Is she going so far as to refuse to give me the salad recipe? If so If she doesn't do it, it will be a great act of inhumanity.
will be punished in this world and the next.

"I hope I can go to Luxembourg ahead of Christmas; and look what an inclination I have for you, I I clearly feel that I would be very happy to be more early your neighbor. The news from Poland is always bad. I sent you the letter that Desnoyers wrote to me.
I don't know if they want us to know the details of their matters. That is why you do not name me; send back-
"Take the letter and believe me, etc., etc."

The impossible morality of the hardline Jansenists dispensed therefore freed from all duty; she was acclaimed as a blessing.
She granted ample satisfaction to the voluptuary, It served as both an argument and an excuse for them. It became in at the same time the focal point of these curious minds, in-quiet, lovers of new things, and always willing to keep the cloaks of those who stone the righteous.

Saint Francis de Sales wrote: “We are having fun sometimes so much for being good angels, that we do not tra-"Let's not strive to be good men." This kind of indefinite perfection, so naively characterized in these A few lines, that was the scourge of the time. The Jesuits they had quickly understood this; at the height of their

With their power, they were immediately able to unmask the mistake. v They believed that the right to say anything entailed necessarily the duty to hear everything. With saint Jerome writing to Pamaca, they repeated everywhere: "The Pure faith brooks no delay, and as soon as the scorpion Apparently, it must be crushed.

The scorpion raised its head. Even before the Church Had he taken the time to notice him, his audacity would have been noted.

by the Society of Jesus.

Like the night watchmen in Holland, who they shout: "Sleep in peace, the dikes are safe," the The Jesuits were, since the founding of their Institute, the They were the advanced sentinels of Catholicism. They kept watch, they fought with words, with advice, with the pen. They had the confidence of the Popes and the ear of the Kings. The austerity of their lives was the most eloquent reward. mandate of their charity. Their unwavering devotion the Apostolic See became a guarantee for the truth of their apprehensions. In them, the dominant consciousness- the heart is born; the cry of alarm, uttered by the disciples of Saint Ignatius, therefore, soon resounded in the Vatican and in the course.

But the Jesuits, like any corporation having in the entrails an active principle of life and influence, not They weren't afraid to go straight to the enemy. They were said to omnipotent, they were thought to be rich, we took everything for granted. naturally leading to hatred or fear. Prejudices widespread anti-Order sentiment was a source of attraction in favor of the Jansenists. They claimed to be persecuted and little known. The followers they had gathered in the world and among the secular and regular clergy are grouped they gathered around these martyrs, whose very voice was stifled. No one asked if faith was involved and if Religion felt no offense. They refused to see, they saw only the Jesuits, relentlessly pursuing an adversary and bathing in their rage, because, repeatedly were they constantly silent, Pascal, in his Provincial Letters > their had made two hundred years of glory pay dearly Christian and immense apostolic works and litland.

In agreement with the Church on this, as on everything else, the Jesequels had judged that the world resembled these Christians hold of Corinth, to whom the great Apostle does not dare to offer solid food. These Christians were weak; they did not could only tolerate infant milk; Saint Paul He administered it to them. The Jesuits followed his example. This was a direct confrontation with Jansenism; Hence this relentless and merciless war that fills almost a century of the noise of its discussions. Hence this accusation of lax morals attached to the flanks of the Company of all the debauchees of the world, and paraded throughout the entire universe, by all the indifferent armchair critics, of the antechamber or of the bar.

At this date of 1775, the starting point where we Let us place ourselves in order to appreciate the causes and effects, the Jansénism had undergone all the phases of its apotheoses and of its decadence. Leaving aside the quibbles of seminaire, he had positioned himself on the terrain of politico- innovations ticks. At a time when, as Montesquieu says, "the discomfort of command was as tiring as that of obedience," Jansenism created a sect of democrates by libertinism; then, in concert with the Philo- against the philosophers and the Protestants, he launched himself full steam ahead into the era of social reforms and civil progress.

But the more skillful a man is, the more he rules his progress based on the means that chance offers him, and which, very often, are not the ones he had planned or Having been prepared, the Jansenists thus prepared to take up arms. of everything. They had many points of contact with the Calvinists and the Philosophers; they distanced themselves from them in proclaiming everywhere their instinctive and reasoned aversion for heresy and sophistry. They followed their trail and They anathematized them. Defectors from the Church, they conserved in the priestly uniform. In order to better deceive the Like all the faithful, they stubbornly remained united. when their secret wishes only aimed to destroy it.

A Protestant, but impartial, writer, Leopold Ranke, conceived and developed the same idea, because, in the eyes of History, truth is one; it needs neither subter- neither refuge nor reticence. Ranke therefore says[1]: "In France, The persecuted Jansenists only made further progress; In the end, however, they discredited themselves through their extra-superstitious holidays. We find their traces in Vienna and Brussels, Spain, Portugal and Italy. Their doctrines spread throughout Christendom. Catholic community, sometimes publicly, the most sustained wind secretly.

"Among many other causes, it was undoubtedly also this religious schism which fostered the birth of a an even more dangerous opinion.

"Year after year, it grew stronger and spread to both inside and out. The kingdoms of Europe... ridionale were based on the most intimate union of Church and State; a party was formed in these countries who formulated his hatred of all religion into a system that

[1] History of the Papacy, vol. IV, p. 484.

destroyed all idea of God, all essential principles of power and society. A literature emerges, in hostility towards the Church and governments, attracting She possesses their spirits and binds them with indissoluble bonds. lubles. It is evident that the various trends of this of the time, they agreed very little with each other; the tendency of The Reformation was monarchical in its nature, which is something that I can't say about the philosophical tendency that began very quickly in opposition to the State; the tendency Jansenist remained attached to opinions that were indifferent, if not hateful, to both sides.
Despite the difference in their ideas and feelings,
All these parties combined their movements. They children-this spirit of innovation, which is spreading all the more that his goal is less determined, that he raises his pretensions tions on a more or less vast future, and which draws all the days of new forces within existing abuses.
relied, whether he knew it or not, on what has been said Pelé, the philosophy of the eighteenth century; the theories Jansenists gave it a religious form and more consistency. In all countries, in all the During the course, two parties formed, one of which was waging war to the Papacy, to the Church, to the State, and whose other sought to maintain things as they were, and to preserve towards the prerogatives of the universal Church.

Leopold Ranke is not the only Protestant historian whose good faith is not easily deceived by the estaken from a sect. Schœll expresses the same thought and gives himself up to similar developments. He therefore confesses!: "A A conspiracy had formed between the former Jansenists and the party of philosophers; or rather, like these two fac-

---

[1] Course in the History of European States, vol. XLIV, p. 74.

their efforts tended towards the same goal; they worked towards it in such harmony, one might have thought they were con-They were confident in their means. The Jansenists, under the guise of religious zeal, and the philosophers, by displaying feelings of philanthropy, they both worked to the overthrow of papal authority. Such was the admission-the rule of many well-meaning men, that they made common cause with a sect they would have They would have been horrified if they had known their intentions. These kinds "Errors are not uncommon; each century has its own..."

History will probably only accept it under benefit the banal excuse of the writer-diplomat; but at the same time she will take into account his vigorreuse franchise. Ranke and he come, each in the to the extent of its enlightenment, to clarify the action of the Jansénism; it is now necessary to show what part of Gallican party in this plot against the universal Church.

Rome, which knows admirably that perseverance in everything is an indescribable force, has constantly proceeded like the Ocean. After a storm, it resumes its nicalf. She obeys the eternal maxim of hoping against All hope and to resist always. Rome has abandoned to fret for a long time beside her the question of Gallicanism. Without ever having authorized or condemned it, She handed it over to the disputes of men, fully convinced that a day would come when faith would dispel this darkness complacent. The need for unity, so powerful and so enduring. in the heart of France, was bound to change this sooner or later doctrine, which has lost its raison d'être. The French NationIndeed, the French cannot fail to become this again. that, according to Yillehardouin's testimony, she will be in all the time, "the chief baron of Christendom." Let's see what that this doctrine was in reality, and in the eyes of the Church Gallican, who accepted the burden, and according to the jurisconinsults, who proved to be its most ardent instigators.

Gallicanism, stripped of all subtleties and of all the paradoxes which, depending on the circumstances and the men, they tried to form a procession for him, is the doctrine and the policy professing and containing the freedoms of the Church Gallican. This definition, which is quite easy to improviseThis, of course, raises more than one difficulty. as soon as we want to determine what these faour freedoms. In 1605, during the reign of good King Henry, the bishops of France were just as perplexed as ourselves on this question so often stirred up and so poorly resolute. They begged the King to settle what was was to call the liberties of the Gallican Church. In 1614, The Estates General addressed the same wish to Louis XIII. The Episcopate and the Nation therefore did not know exactly what what were these particular rights then, and that since then we proclaimed inherent to the crown of France.

In principle, there seemed to be agreement to make them consister and to summarize them in the exact observation of the anr ancient canons; but this observation of the ancient canons, mentioned for the sake of the cause, was she a privileged person? the church attached to the only Church in France? the other churches Worse still, did they not have the right to enjoy it, or was it theirs? forbidden to claim them? Moreover, in the constitutiontion of the old French monarchy, this definition she herself could not subsist, especially when she was rapclose to the usual and general practice. Is this correct? Indeed, the canons of the old councils which ordain or allow designations such as abuse, knowledge- the possessory right to benefices exercised by secular judges, the regalia, the tithes, the rarity of councils, the judgment clerics in secular court and the succession of parents to Church property?

Gallicanism was invented solely to stir up the rest, and to demonstrate the truth of the beautiful maxim of Cardinal de Retz: "The rights of the prince and the rights of the nation never agree better than in the si"Lence." Gallicanism fulfilled its mission by sowing the trouble in the Church before introducing it into the State. To the objections raised against him, he was heard to eva- A reasonable response: "The liberties of the Gallican Church" consist of observing the old canons, against, or rather, despite the new constitutions of the Popes which have changed them or dispense with them too easily.

This answer is stereotypical everywhere. It has been fortransformed into an axiom and a principle. In this demonstration- eternally peremptory tion, the Gallicans have not forgotten that it was a mere detail. It never occurred to them to- rather than produce or cite these ancient canons, new papal constitutions abrogated, or whose They allowed themselves to dispense so easily.

They also failed to demonstrate that, despite the example of Saint Ambrose, separating the emperor Theodose of the Roman Communion, the princes and their officers cers can never be severed from the body of the Church; again, forgetting to prove that the secular judges had the privilege of ordering absolutions with caution, to provide for the benefits upon the refusal of the Pope or the Ordinary, and to establish the right of regalian levy, the amortizationment and a few other equally debatable points; More than ever, it's been forgotten to make us feel that these new maxims are of the old discipline, and that These customs are so uniquely French, that they never acclimatized, in one form or another another, in foreign kingdoms.

Gallicanism took on the mission of defending and to avenge the old canons and the ancient discipline. Nevertheless, he was careful, in more than one circumstance, to display such severity, when the interests of prince or the ambitions of the magistracy were at stake. Were they, for example, commands, residences? generations in favor of pensions on profits or of their multiplicity, as well as of the regalia or the deciMy, we saw the Parliaments and the legal experts bowing down the majesty of the law in the face of the whims of greed. Their stops never failed, when they lasted to enshrine new abuses. So respect for the antiQuiet was now nothing but nonsense; he was not resuming his vipride and its splendor, which the Popes dared to challenge the holy ark of new maxims.

From this situation, taken in the heat of history, we can therefore infer that there were, almost from the very beginning of these kinds of freedoms, two distinct Gallicanisms: a GalSecular licanism and an episcopal or eccle- Gallicanism Siastic.

Secular Gallicanism undoubtedly owed its birth to sance to episcopal Gallicanism. But this unnatural son has so frequently, and in so many ways, compromises and/orTragé took his father's name, which today all ties of The family ties between them have been broken for a very long time. They each walk their own path. One clings on More than ever, through faith and martyrdom, to Unity Catholic one; the other allies himself with all the agents of discord

---

1 The opinion of the French clergy on these freedoms imposed by the magi-religious or political. He dreams on the ruins of the Church Roman, and often he advises in a low voice sometimes a civil pontificate, sometimes one of those phantom patriarchs, a beggar at the door of some temporary institution authority even more precarious than itself.

It was during the time of the Great Western Schism that the The name and practice of certain freedoms took place in France. At that time, the Church was divided into rival camps. ChaEach of these camps had its own leader. Pontiffs inenthroned in the capital of the Christian world, pontiffs proproclaimed in France, and treated in Rome as antipopes, all needed, to support their dignity or their quereal, to accumulate large incomes and to create for oneself Powerful friendships. The only way to achieve this double translation and by the bar, was so well pronounced that Monsignor DuIau, the illustrious archbishop of Arles and the great martyr of September 2nd 1792, did not hesitate, even eleven years earlier, to repudiate them solemnly. In a remarkable little book entitled Dissertation his-

In a toric on the four articles, Abbot Lepointe, a former Jesuit, reports This fact, proving quite clearly what the spirit of the Episcopate was at that time and the clergy. Father Lepointe recounts:

"Around 1781, Messrs. Gaude, printers from Nîmes, wrote me two times to commit myself to continuing Y History of V Gallican Church. They had intending to create a new edition and continue the story. I confess that I didn't feel capable of playing a role in the literary career at on the Longueval, Brumoi and Bertliier side, and which I feared with The reason is the narrowing of distances. However, a half-hearted desire to Taking up this work made me take a step that was likely to promote it success. As the eighteen printed volumes had been dedicated to French prelates, I also tried to gain the support of the clergy for the future. of France. Monsignor the Bishop of Carcassonne presented me with: a memorandum to Cardinal President of the Assembly, and I was informed that this Eminence would communicate in the next session. Knowing full well that His Grace The Archbishop of Arles would have more influence than anyone else on the decision, I was I went to his house early in the morning to warn him; I had barely begun to articulate the who was bringing me, that he told me he would never consent to it. I reminded him-the goal was to impose and collect numerous contributions actions on ecclesiastical domains, and to attribute them to to drink the snack under one title or another, annates or reserves.

The clergy frowned upon it; they endured it with impatience with the heavy burdens imposed upon him. The UniUniversity of Paris, which at the time enjoyed immense credit in the Church and in the State, he complained of the parsimony with which favors and benefits were distributed to him fices. She meets with the clergy to implore their intervention of the King, the Parliament of Paris, and the nobles of the kingdom. It was under Charles VI, amidst the upheavals of the France, where this system of muted hostility was introduced, and an evocation of ancient canons and customs. Hardly Starting from this point, the theologians and jurists

I felt that, regardless of the proposals that the printers from Nîmes, a powerful minister urged me to continue this history. Let him show himself, the prelate resumed briskly, I will speak. As I expressed some surprise, he was kind enough to enter into explication, and, in a conversation lasting over an hour, he painted a picture a quick overview of the whole history since roughly the time of Father Berthur had remained until recently, taking care to mark in passing with a note of disapproval the events that seemed to shock his delicatesse. I couldn't report his words exactly, but he pa- It was said that it was while speaking of the share that the bishops had pike to Louis XIV's quarrels with Innocent XI, he told me — You see. that the clergy cannot attach its support to a history of this nature ture. "If you wish," he added, "write memoirs to serve as historical records." History of the Gallican Church, at your own peril and fortune; but, for the sake of histor Indeed, it will surely not appear, as long as I live, with a dedication- effective to the clergy. 11 It is needless to say that I left this conference pe- born of the feelings that this great prelate inspired in all those who had the advantage of knowing him, and that I am quite ashamed today to be so little able to report on it. I communicated the result to printers of Nîmes, and since then I have heard no further talk of continuing Y His- the history of the Gallican Church.

mainly, they quickly came up with the idea of opposing this which was called a counterweight to papal authority. he first used it in mixed or pure materials discipline. Little by little, after having done the proces at the Holy See, to call into question the authority of the Con- ecumenical councils. The last one, that of Trent, was not Not received regarding discipline.

The first attempt at open resistance took place in 1438 in the assembly of the Gallican Church in Bourges. There, one examined, moderated, accepted, or reduced to one the sole body containing the principal decrees of the Council of Baiae, considered ecumenical against the reservations of profits. Under Charles VII, the following was formulated, affirmed, and published: pragmatic sanction, which was hailed as the charter Gallican liberties. Adherence to them was required under penalty of... to incur the wrath of the king or the indignation of the parliaments.

Later, Louis XI and Francis I repealed this pragmatic; but as it has been received for a long time than to bow one's head before the immorality of the acts committed-- folding constitutes an act of great political prudence, the es- Its influence from this century has permeated all future centuries. sometimes hovers over the future like a pang of remorse, more often as a testament to patriotism and of independence.

In order to avoid certain temporary abuses, The Church in France invoked the support of the secular arm. She prostrated herself beneath the sword; she remained there, even when that sword was transformed into a bailiff's rod. When the crown of Saint Louis was replaced by a lawyer's cap, the Gallican Church saw itself condemned to the harder, to the most shameful of servitudes.

The origin of these freedoms therefore dates back to the schism;

would believe that they originate from it or that they return to it always, as if by an imperceptible slope.

Nevertheless, during the Wars of Religion, when Calvinism and the League divided the kingdom in two Rival and enemy camps, the Clergy and the Sorbonne itself- even became more closely attached to the Royal See- hand. The imminence of danger preserved them from an apo- legal stasis. This separation had been avoided in the great crisis of Protestantism; at the Estates-General of 161 4, Cardinal du Perron, acting as interpreter of the Catholic France, established, in a harangue which is yet another model of eloquence and a rule of conduct, the only true principles to follow, according to him*. In

1 Cardinal du Perron was a friend and advisor to Henry IV. He is known for the breadth of his talents. On January 2, 1615, after having refuted an article proposed by the Third Estate on the independence of the cou- With regard to any foreign power, the cardinal expressed himself thus:

"The third point remains, which is whether the princes having done, or they or their predecessors, swore to God and their people to live and to die in the Christian and Catholic religion, come to violate their oath and to rebel against Jesus Christ, and to declare war on him open, that is to say, they not only fall into a pro- manifesto confession of heresy or apostasy from the Christian religion, but even go so far as to force their subjects into their consciences, and undertake to plant Arianism or Mahometanism, or any similar infidelity in their states, and there destroy and exterminate Christianity, their subjects may be mutually declared absolved of the oath of loyalty that they have done it to them, and when this happens, it is up to whom it is appropriate to declare under. Now, it is this point that we say is contentious and disputed, because our article contains the negative; namely, that there is no case in which the subjects may be absolved of the oath of loyalty they swore to their princes.

"And, on the contrary, all other parts of the Catholic Church, even even the entire Gallican Church since the theological schools there were those established up until Calvin's arrival hold the affirmative; namely, that when a prince violates the oath he has sworn to God and his subjects jets of living and dying in the Catholic religion, and not only

At the same time, Pierre Pithou was trying to promote it. dormouse of others.

Lawyer, writer and magistrate, Pithou, although Catholiclique, had Calvinist blood in his veins. He was opposition, progress and liberalism of the seventeenth century. An honest man in thought as well as in heart, he allowed himself to be blinded by the desire to limit and define the rights of the priesthood contrasted with those of the Empire. His work entitled: Liberties of the Gallican Church cane > was only published long after his death; enWas the first edition suppressed in 1639? by Cardinal Richelieu. But this work, persecuted at its origin, this very persecution gave it a flavor of forbidden fruit which immortalized its success, and by conthey follow his theories.

makes Arian or Muslim, but goes so far as to declare war on Jesus the Lord of Christ, that is to say, even to the point of compelling his subjects in their forcing them to embrace Arianism or Islam, or something else For such infidelity, that prince can be declared deprived of his rights. as guilty of felony against the one to whom he swore his oath of kingdom, that is to say, towards Jesus Christ, and his subjects to be absolved in conscience and to the spiritual and ecclesiastical tribunal of the oath of loyalty that they lent him, and that in this case, it falls under the authority of the Church resident or in its head, which is the Pope, or in its body, which is the council, to make this declaration. And not only all the others parts of the Catholic Church, but even all the doctors who have been in France since theology schools were established there, have held The affirmative; namely, that in the case of heretical or infidel princes, and persecuting Christianity or the Catholic religion, the subjects could to be absolved of the oath of allegiance. By means of what, when the docThe opposite trilogy would be the truest in the world, which all the others If parts of the Church are arguing with you, you could not hold it at most until for problematic matters of faith. I call problematic doctrine In matters of faith, any doctrine that is not necessary is of faith, and of which contradiction does not oblige those who believe it to anathema and loss of communion.

Pithou clearly and unequivocally professed the gallicasecularism. He was the creator and regulator of this doctrine, he met panegyrists and students in all ranks of society.

The clergy themselves were seduced by these maxims, who, by skillfully flattering vain onlookers national authorities were preparing, willingly or unwillingly, for a separation next between Rome and France. This separation will not- It was neither in the wishes nor the desires of the people. the people were bound to the Catholic Church by all ties of ties of Respect and faith. The Clergy, in its general assemblies, noted in magnificent terms of devotion "his unwavering obedience and filial submission to visible head of the universal Church, vicar of God on the earth, bishop of bishops and patriarchs.” These assemblies The wheat-clad Roman Pontiff hailed "the infallibility of faith, which, they said, had been seen to last unchanging in his successors to this day.” Nevertheless, these protestimonies, whose sincerity never wavered, did not only very secondarily modified the given situation. It was bound to lead to the memorable declaration from 1682.

Abbot Le Dieu writes in his Journal[1] that he holds from the Bossuet himself said that it was Colbert who inspired the purpose of the four articles. According to this same confidant Bossuet, Colbert alone, would have determined the King to accept them, and, as the abbot said, God has the right to be believed

---

[1] In the Journal of Abbot Le Dieu, vol. II, p. 8, we read: “In the During the trip, we talked about the assembly of 1682. I asked Mr. de Meaux which had inspired the clergy's proposals on the power of the Church. He told me that Mr. Colbert, then Minister and Secretary of State, The comptroller general of finance was truly its author, and that He alone had persuaded the King.

In such matters, it follows from his admission that the act more authorized, and the keystone of Gallicanism, is the work of a secularist. The lawyer Pithou condenses it into a form of doctrine, Minister Colbert lends him the official stamp of approval. government. It is under these auspices that Gallicanism is subject to the sanction of the Clergy.

Eight years later, in 1690, the elderly Ottoboni, Pope under the name of Alexander VIII, gathered around his A congregation of twelve cardinals on their deathbeds. With the majesty of a great pope, the firmness of a young man and with the eloquent skill of a Venetian, he told them: Deficiunt vires j, sed non deficit animus. Then, as for to prove that his courage had not abandoned him at the same time While the forces, Alexander VI11 read to the Cardinals the constitution, multiplied by death, which death did not leave him Not enough time to publish in the required format. Before And after Alexander VIII, other Pontiffs spoke as him; none of them noted heresy in the four propositions-tions. They always remained subject to distrust ca-Catholic, always accepted and sponsored by the advers-Church officials and by the architects of the revolution.

In a time when obedience to a king such as Louis XIV spread a certain veneer of grandeur over acts Even tainted by servility, it is evident that the Episcopate French, of which Bossuet became the mouthpiece, had neither the intention nor the desire to infringe upon the rights of the Roman Court.
Louis XIV, although bearing dignity to an excessive degree sovereign, her pride in royal patriotism, would never have-but agreed to no longer see a father figure in the Pontiffs, object of his filial veneration.

Heresy was abhorrent to that soul so profoundly Catholic. As a Christian and as a monarch, he judged with a severity that biased historians have could not blame; but this severity, to which the Revolution French came so explicitly to agree, pre-it originated in an admirable sense of conservation-national tion. The Parliaments, not having and obstinately not having the same monarchical and religious instincts, were careful not to keep the question within the circle that Louis XIV and the general assembly of the clergy would treat him-They were.

Dazzled by the prestige of omnipotence of the Hughnots, united with the philosophers and the Jansenists, surrounded each judicial court, the Parliaments had allowed to resume at the outset of Gallican liberties. The right to re-For them, showing respect was a need that tired the royalty.
by humiliating him. As soon as they realized that the struggle against spiritual power would offer them the same advantages, without compromising them in the eyes of the Nation, They eagerly seized this new lever. Apart from a few old and respectable names, isolated in their virtues, like a Stoic at an orgy, and Protestant By their silence, the majority of judicial courts began in flagrant hostility towards the Apostolic See.

Saint-Simon, who shared these feverish impatiences of the Roman yoke, and who nevertheless lived very healthily things when he didn't look at them through the drapes- the details of his ducal and peer's mantle, announces the com- the beginning of the reign of lawyers. We therefore read in -her Memoirs[1]: "The dress dares everything, usurps everything and do- "Mines everything." This prophetic word, uttered like a cry alarm in the middle of Louis XIV's century, found only unbelievers, because the invasions full of turbulencereligious fervor within the bar, already dragging down the judiciary on a leash, they were not to pass, in the eyes of the authorities, culière, than for the frolicking of the legal profession in gaiety. Using the weapons of reasoning or satire, one would attack- It was the Roman Curia. It was shown, always and everywhere. everything, greedy and deceitful, invasive and corrupt. Under the pretext of saving Gallican liberties, each daily jeopardized by encroachments or by the mis- I will want the Pontificate, one trained in pride, or rather- Early on, the weakness of kings was a pedestal of infallibility. The quarrels between the Priesthood and the Empire were rekindled in complete peace. Only the word was still on the accuser. sation. The roles were reversed; the lawyers did not defend- They no longer did, they demanded. They no longer gave themselves Their clients chose Rome as their enemy. Out of loyalty. At the throne, they tried to shake the Holy See, and one would have said that, to compensate them for their hatred without For reasons, Providence granted them blindness as mitigating circumstance.

---

[1] Memoirs of the duo of Saint-Simon, vol. XI, p. 135 (edition do 4 829).

The power of the monarch. Efforts were being made to detach the King from the Pulpit. apostolic, and to isolate him in his precarious authority. His virtues were praised, his vices were addressed. If necessary even, we would always have been, following the example of the lawyer Pierre Dupuy, willing to forgive, that is to say to encourage To rage against a crime or an injustice. Pierre Dupuy had said: Princes sometimes do shameful things. which cannot be blamed when they are useful to their States, because shame being covered by profit, one "We call it wisdom." Pierre Dupuy held this singular lan- pledge in 651. Throughout the reign of Louis XIV, the bar,

---

1 Apology for the publication of the evidence of the Gallican Church.

who was not yet thinking of making the opposition monarch-chicique, contented himself with professing such accommodations-matters of conscience. He placed his hatred or his prejudices under the safeguard of a devotion that transcends the limits of servility. Dupuy, one of the pillars of the E-

The Gallican church had established this principle of subjection, avowed gle; his successors turned it into an instrument of flattery for kings and of incessant war waged against all that came from Rome. In this complete blossoming of anar-religious dog, the role of courtier was used as of a veil that hides evil deeds.

Jansenism, as well as Gallicanism, was a a simmering hostility threatening all established powers. The a-
The lawyer was either a Jansenist or a Gallican. Depending on the circumstances, he made of deism, unbelief, sentimentality or of intolerance. He displayed the fiercest independence or He allowed himself the most illegal pranks, to make
He called Catholic doctrine odious.
Ultramontanism.

To make a niche for the sacred, following Rabelais's words, became the constant preoccupation of the jurist and the ma-Gistrat. The liberties of the Gallican Church, misunderstood and, when misinterpreted, provided ample material and always plausible pretexts for discussion, at least-to rule on or reject decrees issued from Rome. The teaching-The amendment of the four articles was declared mandatory. It was
It is permissible to ignore God's commandments. Under penalty of pious treachery or lèse-majesté, it was necessary to profess in the pulpit, in schools, and even in the confessional sionnal, these four articles, palladium of national immunitiesnational and flag of future emancipation. In France, where men always had more power than the laws, and where no one knows how to live freely and no one can be a slave.

This troublesome and honeyed opposition was necessary-
It was a way of appealing to popular sentiment. It was, in a way, a first edition of the great principles of 1789, pu-suppressed against spiritual authority. They taught subservience there.
conditional mission, or rather, the revolt was stammering there.
Those who loved change embraced this doctrine, which seemed to descend from the throne to limit the principle of obedience.

The healthy part of the Clergy, therefore the immense
The majority, it was not long before, as early as the seventeenth century, realizing that the country was being led into a false way. Cardinal du Perron had uncovered this project to Estates General; Abbot Fleury, the judicious historian of

The Church leaves no doubt about these impatiences of the pastoral yoke. “If,” he said, “some foreigner, zealous for the rights of the Church and little inclination to flatter the powers that be temporal, wanted to make a treatise on the servitudes of The Gallican Church, there would be no shortage of material... If we examine the authors of the palace, and particularly Dumoulin, we will see a lot of passion and injustice, Even less charity and humility.

And in one of his wisest and most profound discourses- In this course, the same ecclesiastical historian summarizes his entire work. thought: "We must," he exclaimed, "tell the truth. These are not not only foreigners and supporters of the Court of Rome, which weakened the vigor of the ancient discipline and diminished our freedoms; the French, the King's people, those very people who made that name resound the loudest

* Fieury, Liberties of the Gallican Church, rpuscule, p. 108 and 412.
2 Discourse on the freedmen of the Gallican Church, p. 79.

freedom, they dealt it harsh blows by pushing the "The King's rights taken to excess."

To de-Catholicize France, and, on the ruins of its Church, to make the four articles triumph, of which he does not- it would not be more difficult to extract a civil constitution that a federal or unitary republic had not been a A plan neither conceived nor premeditated in advance. We were no longer in the dreams of Admiral de Coligny or the Grand Duke of Rohan. Like all human events, this idea develops She was immersed in the world of passions. Everything was an ally. After annihilating the Holy See, the leaders Parliament hoped to be able to enslave without hindrance The Church in France. The Church hampered and discredited, we was now only located opposite the throne. The throne had to inevitably sink where the Church had failed.

With the war of ambushes and underhanded tactics... declared to the Roman See by secular Gallicanism, it Bishops and councils were no longer needed. The magistra- It compensated for everything; it distorted or confiscated everything to further his ambitions. Bossuet had already pointed this out. a tendency towards Cardinal d'Estrées. He wrote to him!: "In my sermon on the unity of the Church, delivered at the opening of the Assembly of 1682, I was indispensablely obliged to speak of the liberties of the Gallican Church, and I I proposed two things: one, to do it without any diminishment of the true greatness of the Holy See; the other, to explain them in the way that they understand them our bishops, and not in the way that they understand them our magistrates.

In 1804, in a report addressed to Emperor NapoleonLeon by Abbot Bernier, Bishop of Orléans, and one of the negotiators of the Concordat, the prelate expresses himself in these terms:

[1] Works of Bossutt, vol. IX, p. 275 (4778).

“Besides (I say this frankly), we mix with our freedoms far too many maxims of the ancients byelements. They are given as the palladium of the Gallic Churchlicane, while they are merely the pretensions of some Jansenist presidents and lawyers, or rather independents, who wanted to defy the authority of the Church and of the monarch by new maxims. It is to these outrageous maxims that we must and the murmurs of Rome and internal discontent regarding clergyman.

This distinction, so persistently established, of a part between the Clergy, which accepts no solidarity with the nascent heterodoxy of the judicial courts, and on the other between the bar fighting for the defense of Gallic libertiescanes, despite the Gallican Church itself; this distinctiontion[1] exists more than ever. Frayssinous, Bishop of HerMopolis, consecrates it with these words: "Let us draw from here the Sound doctrine from pure sources. I will say it without mincing words. that we should not seek our freedoms in legal documents of lawyers, more jurists than theologians; nor in maxims without solid foundation, which can be denied with the same ease with which they are asserted; nor in a jurisprudensity which formerly tended to invade everything, and which did not "To put chains on the ecclesiastical ministry."

These chains must have been quite heavy indeed. conscience and to the dignity of the Pontiffs. The magistrates, protectors born of the liberties of the Gallican Church, had, as much as they could, they attracted all the causes to themselves clerical. Sensing that it would no longer be possible for them to They fought against the Papacy through the Bishops the Bishops through the lower clergy. They multiplied the appeals as abuses; they arrogated to themselves the judgment of the purely spiritual matters; they decided on the admission administration of the sacraments; they decreed accusation the priests who did not obey their orders; they did to burn by the executioner's hand the decrees of the pasdiocesan authorities. After having thus moved the boundary markers which separating the Priesthood and the Empire, they took on the task to sow the most learned confusion in the Church and in the State. They wanted to break the tiara of the Supreme Pontiff, in order to later force the King of France to lay down his crown ronne at the registry.

[1] The true principles of the Gallican Church, p. 43 (1818).

The usurpation of all power was so blatant that, in 1738, when the Pope, happily yielding to the wish of the whole world, placed Saint Vincent de Paul on the altars, and bestowed the honors of canonization upon this hero Christians of humanity, Jansenist priests of Paris joined forces with Gallican lawyers to have it suppressed these tributes of respectful admiration. The bubble does not was neither directly nor remotely within the jurisdiction of the parelements; but there was incidental mention of the nova* popularizing the miracles of Deacon Paris. He did not no further action was needed from the two allied parties to formulate- to hold a consultation with the lawyers of Paris at subject of a bull entitled: Canonisatio Beati Vincentii to Paulo. With a gravity that perhaps had well its ridiculous aspect, the lawyers asserted "that the de- The flaws in this judgment authorized the priests to form opposition regarding the registration of all letters patent that one might be surprised to see in favor of this bubble, this which would not prevent, at a more opportune time They did not pass the roll call as an abuse.

The King scorned this marvelous audacity; France also. But when, in turn, God was decreed to accusetion, and categorized as one of the disadvantages of sociaux, the lawyers of 1793 completed the work begun by their predecessors. Vincent de Paul, first of all, was no longer that a great citizen, he was subsequently raised to the dignity of humanitarian sans-culottes.

The magistrates were paving the way for political independence. by freeing itself from all religious subordination.

At that time, there was on the siege of Paris an illustrious and saintly archbishop. In concert with several other prelates as virtuous and as far-sighted as he, he did not tremble-

Christophe de Beaumont, whose charity is one of the glories of eighteenth century[1], was not intimidated by the threats nor mockery. He knew that boldness never lost anyone, and, like Saint Ambrose, he cried out with a faith that overcame all insults: Ubi PetruSj ibi Ecclesial... He was persecuted, he was exiled, he was made from him a type of ignorance and fanaticism.

Those who, in the name of a God of peace, called the peoples to justice and liberty, began by to outlaw. The Church in France refused to imitate them in their system of usurpation. After intentionally- Having been separated from the Chair of Peter, they detached themselves from the obedience owed to the bishops. They marched to the conquest for a kind of civil cult, to which the four ar-

---

[1] On the day of Archbishop Christophe de Beaumont's funeral, the The women of the people said to one another, "This worthy lord! If a "If the poor man asked him for a gold louis, it would be enough to bring him back."

t

Articles, commented on by the bar, had to serve as a basis.

And this was so well understood that, in the very middle of the Revolution, in 1795, a work appeared in Frankfurt... titled: The Gallican system reached and convinced of having been the first and main cause of the coming revolution to de-Catholicize and dissolve the most Christian monarchy yours, and to be today the greatest obstacle to the counter-revolution in favor of this monarchy.

This book, which does not bear an author's name, accuses a vigorous talent for dialectic. Without pushing the consequences to the extreme, he deduces them from principles, he explains with a rare knowledge of the subject. Under the blow of events, and faced with disasters, he ac- He criticizes Gallicanism, and, on page 59, he asks:

"How will the Gallicans ever be able to compensate for this?" Excuse such attacks? But how will they especially to justify the accusation of having contributed, cooperated primarily and directly, as much through their for example, that by their system, to this revolution inunbelievable, of which we are the victims, and which is not in by its very nature and audacious rebellion, that a direct and pronounced revolt against the priestly authority dowry and the royal authority of Jesus Christ himself? For it is

Jesus Christ is the one whom the impious revolutionaries desire.
above all things, and if it is in their principles monstrous and in their detestable views of working with all their might to the overthrow of the Holy See and of all the thrones of Christendom, it is only in order to a-to nullify, if they can, the dual authority of Jesus-Christ, of whom the Sovereign Pontiff and the Christian kings are respectively custodians, and that they exercise in his name and as holding its place. Now, the Gallicans can-

They flatter themselves that they have nothing to reproach themselves for in this regard, to have in no way contributed to this mystery of iniquity? Dare-Would they really claim it, would they really dare to say it?
after all the attacks they have made on this double authority ?

“Indeed, have they not, while confessing, while exalting—both the priestly authority of Jesus Christ in itself, Have they not shaken this supreme authority? Have they not shaken it?
Didn't they cause the most violent shock, by dis-ultimately placing sovereignty in the hands of the Sovereign Pontiff to whom Jesus Christ entrusted its fullness and principality, by tearing it away from it, by taking it from it with obstinacy, to make it pass, to make it reside in the the body of bishops, who, according to them, represent the Church, and on which they make the Sovereign Pontiff dependent, even as Sovereign Pontiff, who, no doubt, is not not fit, or not worthy to represent the Church of which he is the supreme leader, although he represents as like Jesus Christ himself? And as for the degree, the me-confident in the authority they were willing to recognize in this visible head of the Church, have they not restricted it, weakened it?
blie, hindered, to the point of rendering it null in practice that, by claiming, by demanding that the exercise be regulated according to the old canons, that is to say according to ca-largely abrogated in the Church, and which has not-wielded more authority than these messages pleased.
gentlemen, to attribute it to him? Now, by stopping, by chaining thus arbitrarily exercising this remaining authority, Haven't they, in turn, made things problematic, arbimilking, and thereby nullifying, the essential duties of the subordination that is due to him? That is to say, in short, that, while recognizing the priestly authority of Jesus-

Christ in herself and in speculation, they have ab-sworn and truly annihilated in practice and for practice: Confitentur se nosse Deum, factis auiem neglove (Title I). And it was at this price that they established and maintained held their criminal liberties; it is thus that they raised the first ones, the banner of revolt and rebellion against the priestly authority of Jesus Christ, and that they prepared and fostered its complete ruin and annihilation. total dismantling in France. Because the authority of the Sovereign Pontiff once weakened, depressed, made hateful and almost nowhere by the Gallican system, it followed that the authority episcopal must have felt imperceptibly, to the greatest extent The same reason: the same waste, the same losses, the same declines, and that in the end all ecclesiastical authority-that was to pass into the hands of the civil power; And that is indeed what began in the very time of our parliaments, and what was to be consumed in one "A more expressive manner during a time of revolution."

On page 68, the anonymous author gives his thesis of larger proportions, and he shows how one isolates the kings on their thrones, so as not to leave the Church to them anymore for support.

"According to the Gallicans, the throne of the Most Christian Kings" It was therefore no longer founded, supported on the throne of Jesus-Christ, identified with the throne of Jesus Christ. He had no no other foundation than natural religion, than the deism, with no other support than enthusiasm, than opinion national, and the French people were no longer to see and not lives more in his king, the successor of Clovis, of Charles-Magne, of Saint Louis, and the representative of Jesus Christ, but the successor of the Pharamonds, of the Clodions, and the representative-"feeling from the God of nature" Thus, the most Christian kings were excused from paying homage to Jesus Christ of their scepter, their crown, all their rights; their coronation it was nothing more than a pointless ceremony that no longer meant anything nothing, and the oaths they swore there as subjects of Jesus Christ, as the custodians of his royal authority, that a vain formula which no longer obliged anyone to do anything*, and not-only they no longer belonged in any way to Jesus Christ, like Roissy, not only do they no longer last, like kingSj, neither to his Church nor to religion, but they were not no longer bound, even as individuals, nor to recognize neither to profess the other.

In this confusion of all wishes, and in this prostration of all powers which has just been indicated Broadly speaking, the Priesthood and the Empire were undermined by a relentless conspiracy. The secular Gallicans believed in it-

they held their hands; they managed to make common cause with The philosophers and the Jansenists. It's this mixture mocking skepticism on one side, and calculated hatred on the other on the other hand, which gave birth to Josephism, the first application-the cation of all these systems combined to overturn the the stone upon which God builds his Church.

“However diverse the herbs may be, everything is covered in "Loppe under the name of salad," said Montaigne in [1] "Also, when Louis XVI ascended the throne, it was questioned-regarding the ceremony of his coronation, his council deliberated on whether this the ceremony would take place, as it was generally regarded as inutile and superfluous according to the Gallicans. However, it was decided to affirm-m*tive, and Louis XVI was crowned, but the preacher took care during the ceremony to prevent the striking consequences that could be drawn from it in favor of the temporal kingship of Jesus Christ, and of dependence of our kings with regard to this royalty, by announcing loudly in pre-the astonished public, and in accordance with Gallican doctrine, that This ceremony was neither obligatory for the king nor essential to his charge. » [Note by Anonymous Author.]

his sparkling style of judicious crudités. By his assmilations, by its tendencies, and by its need for in-Innovate in order to destroy more surely, Josephism took to professing the purest arbitrariness. This arbitrariness was to realize his dream of religious independence and political renewal. Josephism participated in all the
With systems in turmoil, he seized upon all the theories, and, possessed by prodigious pride, he tried to drown
The lamb in its mother's milk. Josephism proceeds Therefore, it relates to Jansenism and the philosophical school. It is a intrusion of the secular element into the government of the Church, and a reaction from the civil public against the priesthood. On It differs from Protestantism on only one point.

In countries where it is the law, Protestantism absorbs the religious idea within the civil idea. The sovereign is entirely at He is both monarch and pope; he holds dual authority.
Among Lutherans and Calvinists, as well as in An-England, the struggle between the two powers does not exist
No. In Catholic states, on the contrary, it is found two completely distinct authorities, one supernatural and spiritual, the other natural and temporal. In the Middle Ages At that time, religious authority enjoyed all its rights, at the less so in principle. In Germany, it was only at the time of the House of Swabia, and in France under Philip the Bel, that the antagonism between the temporary power began Porel and the papal power. This antagonism again.

does it only appear in the acts of the judiciary?
because the long struggles between the Priesthood and the Empire, pres-that are embodied in the names of Guelphs and Ghibellines, never aimed to weaken or attenuateto change the exercise of pastoral ministry. In the midst of these such complicated wars and this labyrinth of rights so controversial, the principle of the Church's authority super-He always had faith. He was alive in the heart of the people.

He was respected and revered among sovereigns. He still reigned.
in the minds of Kings, who, carried away by whim or by driven by passion, they indulged in thoughtless injustices, then sooner or later, as if by instinct, they returned to obedience subsidiary.

With the rise of Protestantism, and the bloody ex-those who signaled the new sect, the states that remained faithful to the Chair of Saint Peter attached themselves more more closely than ever at the center of unity. In Germany, as in France, it was no longer a question of arguing about the nature of such and such an act, on the character of a fact more or less legal. Faith was endangered by heresy.
triumphant; in the common peril, the Catholic princes-The empires turned their eyes towards Rome. The Revolution, Whatever its flag, it was always for them that wind which breaks the dead branch and hardens the living branch.
They became Romans out of the need to safeguard their beliefs threatened and their states deeply troubled.
The accession of Henry IV to the throne of France brought about a a kind of reaction against the League, whose spirit had was eminently ultramontane; but the genius so perspi-
The Béarnais's cace did not leave Gallicanism for long.
Secularism grants the right to compromise with error.

The disputes were concentrated in certain schools of theology; they took refuge in some parliaments, who believed they were entitled to grant them asylum hardly silent. They barely deemed it appropriate.
to raise his head, when, in his troubles with the Pope Innocent XI, Louis XIV went further than anyone else from his predecessors the claims to his crown.

Matured by experience and adversity, the King did not delay point to returning to more equitable sentiments. He would have even erased all trace of its divisions with the Headquarters apostolic, if seeds of revolt had not been placed in hearts.

Jansenism had developed; unbelief propaged quietly. The alliance of the Huguenots, of the Jansenists and philosophers who took refuge in Holland, comwas beginning to bear fruit. After creating printing presses merchants in several cities of the United Provinces, they flooded Europe with obscene books and pamphlets irreligious or based on cleverly falsified stories. They called themselves Catholics, by creating dynasties of eusurper bishops and a line of priests always prohibited, but still able to explain their rebellion. In her entrenched camp in Utrecht, this impersensitive minority, which still skimps on its obedience, does not He never measured the opprobrium at the Roman Siege and the revolt to the people. Insubordination had its price; it found its place, as did the cor- doctrines breakers.

All weapons directed against the Church and against the Thrones were forged in this arsenal. To render the woundedsure incurable, Jansenists and Philosophers used poisoned arrows. The doctrine of some substituted the sectarian to the Pontiff; the philosophy of others elevated man above God, and put the State in place of the Church. They had started from opposite points; they did not delay to merge in a common interest. They felt that the link of papal authority was weakening under their ceaseless efforts. They applied themselves to spreading the relaxation the change in morals as a consequence of their actions.

From Holland and France, their conspiracy spread to beyond the Pyrenees and in part of the Italian peninsula link. Its promoters were the ministers of the Kings and the opponents of the Society of Jesus, working offiheavenly to its ruin, so that everything would be corrupted at once, From middle age to the youngest generations. Gift Manuel de Roda in Spain; Pombal, the Grand Marquis, in Portugal; Tanucci in Naples, Cardinal André Corsini in Rome, became the most active emissaries of the complot. The fall of the Jesuits inevitably left education youth in the hands of universities. The element secularism was going to dominate, at the same time, from Amsterdam to Lisbon; it was introduced into Austria under the guise of the medical school.

Like all political or religious opposition,
The Jansenists of Holland had created a school of men-my handymen, who would have dug themselves a hole-min, right where there would have been no land. At this At school, talent was much less valued than the plot, but it served as his passport to the outside world.
This was how Jansenism penetrated Vienna, and how it introduced himself at the court of Empress Maria Theresa to give rise to Josephism.

Anatomical studies are still in their infancy.
in his Empire. Boerhaave, the famous professor of Leiden has just died, leaving his disciples a part of her renown and medical science. Marie-Thé-This testifies to the desire to have two practitioners with her.
graduates trained by Boerhaave's lessons; she puts for
The only condition is that they be Catholic. The doctors Girard van Swieten and Antoine de Haen were among them.
herd, so small and so restless, that they grazed in the schism of the bishops of Utrecht, rebels from the foundation.

Van Swieten and de Haen are appointed; they have barely entered in the Empress's confidence they begin their a process of purification on one side and proselytizing on the other.
This task is very simple: it consists of disregarding little to gradually eliminate the Jesuits as a teaching body, to eliminate them gradually, and then, by sponsoring re- projects university form, we must manage to substitute for the Epi-Scopat and the Company, the still unpublished perpetrators of Van Swieten is the driving force behind all these projects. He has found in the capital of the Empire a few isolated Jansenists;
after having gathered them in a cenacle and strengthened them in their reinstinctively, he shares with them the dignities of teaching gnement. Abbot de Stoch is president of the faculty of Theology, Riegger professes canon law and Martini the Natural law. The Jansenists had a foothold in Vienna; They will soon dominate there through Josephism, at-which they grant in advance letters of great naturelisation.

Empress Maria Theresa, this great statesman which, according to Frederick II of Prussia, was his most constant opponent, did honor to his sex and to the throne, was in all the splendor of her glory. She reigned by her virtues in-core more than by her rights as heir to the house of Habsburg, whose name she confused with that of The House of Lorraine and the House of Guise. This princess, who,
in this century saturated with sensualism, reproached himself time she devoted to sleep, because, she said, it was hours wasted for her people, this princess watched over their well- with a mother's eyes more than on that of her family. She put her power in the service of the Church, and, to safeguard caCatholic in her vast possessions, she was ready to all the sacrifices. It was nevertheless during his reign that strange doctrines infiltrated the Episcopate and into Universities.

In Germany, the revolt of minds was not to proyield, as in France, through wordplay or by sarcasm. This light machine-gun fire, striking down the Saint-Seat and falling upon the Priesthood in sparks of fire of artifice, would have had only weak appeals for these Germanic heads, so square and so fond of the syllogism or of the quarrel. They needed the dialectic of the school, the seriousness of the demonstration and the minor points of The table with which Luther adorned his theology. The Protestants continued their war against the Papacy; in order to confuse public opinion, it was judged opportune to join this war, while separating the new cause of the Lutheran cause.

The Jansenist idea had penetrated to the heart of Germany Magne; Gallican principles had spread there. Indriven by vague desires for separation or dreaming to weaken the Chair of Peter through hostilities that do not-were going to go to the very edge of heresy, some bishops ambitious individuals paved the way for innovations. This path was opened by Jean-Nicolas de Hontheim, Sufi bishop fragrant from Trier. Under the pseudonym of Justinus FeBronius, this prelate raises the flag against the Roman See; then, in a book where the least elegant of Latinities! Febronius, who, rises to the level of the strangest theories, aims to restore unity in the Church, throws itself into full hands of confusion and discord.

Febronius had compiled rather than invented. In this work, nothing belonged to him personally. The good and the true ones were detached from Bossuet's works; the bad ones or the forgery came from Protestant and Jansenist circles. It was the contradiction juxtaposed, and, with an imunsettled confidence, professing doctrines that are- They were destroying each other. Febronius had collected a host of ambiguous materials to reconcile all the systems; but his supposed reconciliation did not go to nothing less than the schism of which, in several passages of In his book, he teaches the recipe with indulgence. highly unorthodox. This episcopal document was indigestible. in substance and incomprehensible in form; nevertheless He arrived so promptly that he was greeted with shouts of joy. of enthusiasm and transports of grateful joy. The error was displayed in such a convenient way; she accumulates milk on the Roman Pontificate, so many paradoxes, born of so many impostures, that this borrowed name of Febronius still survives in history, when, for very long- For many years, the work itself fell into the deeper darkness. This work suffered the fate of cercertain flowers that wither after producing their first fruit, and which remain after the thin, dry bark, to which However, a trace of perfume remains.

1 This book is thus entitled: Justini Febronii, jurisconsulte de statut presenti Ecclesiæ et legitima potestate romani pontificis, liber singularis, ad reuniendos dissidentes in religione christianos compositus. (1763, Broth.)

“Men,” said Machiavelli, “are slower to to take what they can easily have, rather than desiring. what they cannot obtain. — The German Bishops' Conference read the sad experience of this maxim. He needed of a wise reform; he could ask it of the Saint-

---

1 Machiavelli, Stor. di Firenz., t. I, p. 175.

The seat, which certainly would not have adjourned it; but, instead To perform an act of submission, it pleased some prelates to commit an act of rebellion. Canonists such as Oberhauser, Sonnenfeld, Zallwein, Barthel, Born, Eybel and Van Espen encouraged them. These canon lawyers and legal experts, sympathetic to ambitious greed, they wanted their to soften the harshness of this path to Heaven which one must climb barefoot and empty-handed; they pushed them to the abyss. Febronius, who would later repent, had agitated by questions fraught with storms; the storms erupted as soon as Emperor Joseph II saw himself, by the death of Marie-Thérèse, in a position to implement her plans of ecclesiastical reform.

The very night the great Empress expired (November 29)

November 1781), the new Emperor wrote to the Prince of Kaunitz: "Until now, I have only known how to be an obedient son-"Health, and that's about all I knew." For for his happiness and for his glory, Joseph II would never have I must have forgotten it.

This prince, who held to the very heart of the Church
Roman by virtue of his dual family, he tried to detach himself from it.
by all the sophisms of pride mixed with a real passion for the public good. He was loath to believe in the pathe role of the Apostle, saying: "Let what appears in God A folly is wiser than the wisdom of all.
men. His intelligence, which, like the sea, is in The calm, even in the midst of the storm, was a rare production of nature, had elevation and grandeur. Its His intentions always seemed upright, and his character always full of energy. He wanted his children to be happy.
peoples; but in his own way, without consulting the genius of 1 Epist. B. Pauli, prima ad Corinth., I, 25.

different races, the spirit of the times and the repulsions of nature factors that his need to improve anyway would to move. Joseph had such a propensity for everything or-ter, that noble and proverbial simplicity of his ancestors this soon degenerated in him into a mania for to single out.

In the solitude he had created for himself at the foot of the throne of his mother, the Emperor had absorbed all the chi-philosophical mothers; he had superficially approached grounded in jurisprudence and social economics. Delivered near-that, unbeknownst to him, he was following the treacherous advice of the Jansenists, of wh Yan Swieten formed a small circle of ardent admirers for him.
His admirers, Joseph II, indulged all their whims.
of an adventurous imagination. In the grip of fever reforms, he forgot that it is important not to approach them too closely.
Dear as fire: not too far, for fear of having cold; not too close, for fear of getting burned. To establish the freedom of conscience, civil and political liberty, the Em-Pereur knew no other instrument than ^arbi-Pure milking. The Emperor would tolerate no more resistance from the Church, which he was stripping, than from the loyal populations, whose vows he did not heed and whose systems offended all Catholic instincts liques.

The philosophers had sought, in the eighteenth century, a sovereign after their own hearts. Frederick of Prussia He used them and only used them when he saw fit. The pre-

Joseph's supplication led him astray to the point of presenting the despotism of its benefits as a new era for humanity. Jansenism and Philosophy have nothad been able to tear the principles of Religion from his soul Christian; they tried to undermine all her beautiful qualities. Of this spirit, shining in the darkness like a phosphorus that shone without illuminating, an activity was carried out intellectual and physical vigor that allowed itself to be intoxicated by its His omniscience, even more so than his omnipotence. When this leaven of revolt against the Church had indeed fermented in his heart, Joseph II was urged to associate to all easement plans prepared by its masters very or by his flatterers. With the sceptre of the Caesars for lever of destruction, they hoped to degrade the Roman Catholic Church Maine, both in his doctrine and in his works. Jansenism sought to isolate it from all contact with Christianity. to hold and make of the holy city, the sorrowful city, an esa kind of modern leper colony, where the memory of the Papacy would struggle, in this valley of death, with the shadow of his vanished power. Without calculating that he was still It is no longer possible to realize the dream of all the apostates than to build the dome of Saint-Pierre with the dust of the Along the way, they sought to elevate the naiveclothed in imperial pride.

The Revolution is not yet ready for France and for Italy. The Civil Constitution of the Clergy does not exist Not even in embryo. Suddenly it reveals itself deep inside. of Germany; the hasty reforms of Joseph II in offer Europe a first edition. Joseph II proclaims that the Catholic religion is the dominant religion in his states; but, to demonstrate this, he awakens all the passions buried under the ashes of the Guelphs and the Ghibellines. The Empire declares war on the Priesthood, duringthat the Holy See is being challenged by all the novators.

In France, the clergy was made unpopular by unbelief. lity, born of universal mockery; in Germany, Jo~

Sephardi II attacks the authority of the Church through the science of Administrative oppression. It's the law in hand, the law. which has just been improvised for the needs of the cause, which serves as a rule for all these measures taken suddenly blow and piled one on top of the other by hatred or by the violence. Joseph II had canon lawyers disguised as fanatics. and jurists who had become philosophers, who formalize in public acts the dissolution of the hierarchy ecclesiastical. It has prelates, such as Archduke MaxiMilian, his brother, like the Archbishop-electors of Mainz, Cologne, Salzburg and Trier, as d'Herbestein, Bishop of Laybach, who encourage these acts; it has magistrates who sanction them and midnistres who are responsible for their execution. Therefore, nothing remains more to the Emperor than to command his people to be happy, according to the order, and to accept improvements thoughtless rations with enthusiastic submission. The Emperor does not speak, he does not argue, he does not accuse. No, he acts. Let's see him in action.

His firm intention is never to break with the Roman Church, and, in less than a year, this prince has so widely used his right as legislator and his proprofession of reformer, which he does not leave standing a a cornerstone of the edifice built by his ancestors. Everything has been undermined by laws; everything is shaken by countless decrees. But, in this universal upheaval, the infaThe utopian tigable is alone in applauding himself, as if he had just to renew the face of the earth.

As in all human affairs, he had without a doubt more than one abuse slipped in amidst so much of opposing interests and among such disparate elements. The Holy See had reported them to the authorities more than once.

spear of the Germanic Caesars, as to the wisdom of Empress Maria Theresa. These abuses were more than of a kind; but was it really necessary to uproot the tree in order to To prune it? Was it necessary, especially at a certain time? also troubled, to proceed by spoliation in order to arrive to a supposed distributive justice?

Joseph II did not take the time to make such reflexions. His bishops, court prelates or favorites of the Jansenia, did not see in their outcry against Rome, that a future liberation from all obediencediscipline and complete regularity. None of them understood that this war was inevitably going to turn into their harm. They were rebelling against the Church, their mother church. in order to give their prince a token of loyalty. The prince accepted these obsequious devotions and he... served as an endorsement which he would have very well could have happened.

An edict of general tolerance, a tolerance that must be allowed to infiltrate customs and never dedicate by law, was the revelation of Josephism. This edict, dated of October 4, 781, is worded as follows:

Convinced of the pernicious effects of all violence exerted on consciences, and essential advantages of a truly Christian tolerance, His Majesty Im- The perial and Royal Apostolic decrees that the exercise deprived of their religion will be permitted to all its pro- subjects testators of the Helvetic confession, of that of Augsburg, as well as to all its subjects of the Greek religion, in all parts of the Austrian monarchy where They are present in sufficient numbers.

Those who do not profess the Catholic religion will not will not be required to take an oath using specific formulas.

contrary to the principles of their sect, nor to attend the processions and ceremonies of the dominant religion.

"By conferring offices, the sovereign will have no with regard to the difference between religions, but only to the capacity and aptitude.

"Mixed marriages will be permitted."

“No one shall be punished because of their religion.” unless he violated civil law.

It was equality descending from the throne to confound all sects and all dissidents in the same A feeling of fraternal governance. This innocent dream Joseph II's reign was, in the eyes of his advisors, a dawn of anti-Roman happiness. The Emperor tolerated everything; he was persuaded that in order to be consistent, it was important to put the Catholic Church, apart from this very generous principlement posed. And Joseph II suffered this affront! And in his moment- his mania for legislating, he delivered the Holy See to d'auda- Holy hostilities!

In the space of a few months, this great demolition man Abuse has reduced the Church to nothing more than a corpse. Here he has He was upset there and eliminated it; everywhere he leveled it. He is a precursor of indefinite freedom, but a precursor who delights in being overtaken by the slavery of the Sacerdoce. His bishops or his subjects may correspond with whomever they please, except with the Vicar of Jesus Christ. He regulates the oath of some, he combines the obedience of others. He emancipated the religious from all kinds of Institutes; soon he will no longer want either cou-winds, nor novices. The Church's possessions tempt his greed governmental; it confiscates them in the name of its tolerance. Joseph II is a legal article that extends indefinitely. and which strikes everything indiscriminately.

His iron hand unfastens the doors of the monasteries poorer; she forces her way into the rich abbeys. He has already secularized two thousand twenty-four religious houses-his. The Capuchins, the Premonstratensians, the Carthusians, the Dominicans, Carmelites, Trinitarians, Franciscans Cains, Servites, Camaldolese, Clearings and the Benedictines no longer exist throughout the Empire except as isolated individuals. The state took charge of administering their goods; he appropriates them. The temporal power of the Church makes part of the public fortune; and what will be renewed in the same circumstances in France, Spain and in Piedmont presents itself in Austria. The needs of the State are larger, his poverty is more clearly seen, his debt increases in proportion to the assets he confiscates. On one hand, he wastes it on the other, or sells it at a low price. in order to create new interests and a new class of unlicensed owners.

There are bubbles which, like that In cœna Bomini^ do not not suitable for Joseph and his love of the domination, others which, like the Unigenitûs^ne bull, will He pointed to his prejudices. These bubbles are decreed by him. so to speak, of taking possession of the body. The priests who in accept the indisputable validity and are judged in court of the Emperor and by the Emperor himself, pronouncing thus his judgment, on April 25, 1781: “The two mem-ecclesiastical members of the commission of inquiry, who have dared to support the bulls In cœna and IJnigenitus, and to make Their resistance was a crime against their superiors at the seminary. will be severely reprimanded, and one of them—who occupies the position of chancellor of the University of Olmutz, will be... "Title."

The lender, who should only have concerned himself with business

He liked to descend to the lowest places, the highest ones. Joseph II decided definitively, but without reflection, the the clearest or most delicate questions of the conscience and the law. He studied, according to his biases, the cause of the Church and that of the Supreme Pontificate. He renders a judgment on all these points of history, the consequences of which astounding examples are drawn from Vol-'s Essay on Customs Be quiet. Now you will see him distract himself from these treatments. so serious, by abolishing the processions, by reconnecting the number of feasts, by prescribing the order of services, in regulating religious ceremonies, masses, and pomp funeral rites, the manner in which salutations should be said, and by informing the sacristans of the quantity of candles he It must be turned on during services.

This meticulous persecution would not have found JuThe link to the indifferent Apostate; she appeared to Joseph as something perfectly natural. He was only surprised to encounter opposition where he had hoped to give rise only to a proHe founded recognition. He confined the Church within the circle of Popilius; at every moment he tightened this circle; and his most persistent idea was to cry out about ingratitude of the clergy. The clergy did not lend themselves to change as abrupt as they were radical; he recoiled from laws which completely altered the economy of the Church. facing this plunder, rather poorly disguised under the name of individual liberty and human progress, the Clergy was frightened by Josephist tendencies and this need to perperpetual of contemptuous confusion that reigns in the conthe Emperor's entourage. There weren't only courtiers without in the priesthood. In Austria, in Hungary and in the Netherlands, Cardinals Migazzi, Bathiany and de FranKenberg resisted at the head of the Priesthood. They resisted with prayer, with complaint, and with reason; but their moderation did not conceal either the apprehensions or the dangers.

The Emperor could not escape these remonstrances; to avoid those of the Apostolic Nuncio in Vienna, he He forbade entry to the palace. In the name of the Father, he... Garampi addressed a letter to Joseph II; the prince Kaunitz responds, on December 9, 4781, with a defishing where, with each syllable, the insult in the thought peIt is excessive and overflowing under a veneer of ironic politeness. in the words: "The Emperor was not mediocre surprised, wrote his chancellor, to find in the note Monsignor Garampi, the Pope's nuncio, a rebuke cast upon His last decrees. His Imperial Majesty read them, in his own words, that no prince ever remained in The Roman Catholic communion had not considered extending so far removed from the exercise of his authority. Monsignor the Nuncio, unintentionally, no doubt, allows one to draw from one's expressions let us acknowledge the odious consequence that by extending its power Until then, a prince ceased to be Catholic; it seems even wanting to indicate the possibility of circumstances strong enough to release the subjects from their oath of Loyalty. The Emperor is only willing to attribute it to excessive zeal. His Excellency the Nuncio ardently supports such a step, and believes it was done without the Holy Father's knowledge. He would even have kept silent, if it had not come to his attention that His Grace the nuncio had communicated his note to some bishops of hereditary states, and even foreigners. Consequently, His Majesty orders the Chancellor to Replying to Bishop Garampi:

"That the abolition of notorious abuses serves religion;

"That if such abuses had been inherent to religion, It would have completely lost its venerable character, and that far from being received with the pious eagerness that deserve the moderation of its principles and the excellence of His morals, the interests of humankind, would not have allowed it to adopt it;

"That the abolition of any institutions that do not re-not only guard the conduct of souls belongs to the temporal sovereign. From this number is the discipline external to the Church, and above all that of the regular clergy-to link: an establishment of human invention, since it is proven that, ignored by the early centuries of the Church, the monasteries owe their creation to the munificence of princes.

"As a consequence of these certain rules, His Majesty Imperial was not only permitted, but compelled by his duties, to take the direction of everything that does not Don't look specifically at the dogma and the inner workings of consciences.

"Therefore, this is not an alteration of religion." What Monsignor the nuncio seems to fear for the faith exists only in his imagination too vividly struck.

"It is the specific order of His Imperial Majesty that the chancellor of the court and state has just executed by the present, in order to put Monsignor Garampi in a state to conform his future conduct to it and to give a witness-earning the personal consideration of Her Majesty for "His Excellency the Nuncio."

At the time when a prince of the House of Habsburg had just come, with a light heart, to throw this disturbance into the Catholic universe, and alter, on its own authority, the constitution, essence and liturgy of the Church, Rome

He was seen as a target of all kinds of enemies. He was had imposed immense sacrifices; she had accomplished them folds in the hope of a peace that had been promised to him always, but it was constantly refused him. Of all the sovereigns of Europe, from the Most Christian King to the Catholic or Most Faithful Kings, His Apostolic Majesty only one had not yet continued the Pontificate of her exiagencies or his threats. Suddenly it's the emperor of Germany itself, which, breaking with the past and the avenir of his family, brings to the Roman See the harshest attacks. You can feel that the Revolution against the Church is coming at measured paces, almost step by step, or rather by book obscene or philosophical; and this Revolution, to which The Kings and the People seem to be mentally applauding, It is the son of the great Marie-Thérèse who takes pleasure to unleash her.

He unleashes it, annihilating all ecclesiastical powers. Siastics, the only safeguard of religious conscience. If this revolution doesn't break out immediately, he's preparing for it. at least in a foolproof way, by stifling the vopriestly cations, by dismantling the religious orders and by turning the priest into a kind of administrative machine preaching, at the time fixed by the regulations of police, a kind of morality of which the Gospel will be estamlooted from the offices of the Court Chancellery and state.

Captivated by his dream, Joseph II became intoxicated of an ideologue's ambition; he delivers to himself a A man of action. He reforms, reforms, reforms always; then, in his moments of rest, he awards himself the halo of empire restorers. In his actions the more tainted by illegality, arbitrariness or recklessness,

Jansenism, Philosophy, and Secular Gallicanism

they only saw measures dictated by the healthiest reason. They admired the Emperor; they praised the free a thinker who, no longer being Catholic, had not en-However, this core principle was not pronounced in favor of either Luther or Calvin.
But while these cruel praises were about to tickle
the proud weaknesses of Joseph II's heart, a so-Verain, who was his master in the art of war as In the art of ruling, Frederick the Great wrote, regarding edicts that stripped the Church and the monasteries of their power:
"The Emperor continues his secularizations without interruption-tion. In our family, everyone stays as they are, and I respect that.
the right of possession on which the company is founded.

Joseph II seemed to be hurrying to live in order to hurry to legislate. At the instigation of a sect, he was subjected to the moral violence, this prince gave his name to a per-systematically organized security. This persecution, transferred from Port-Royal in Holland, she took shelter under the imperial scepter, as if to humiliate all kings. The sect, which unexpectedly rose to omnipotence through Jo-Seph II, had brought about strange upheavals in the ecclesiastical or civil hierarchy. It destroyed the self-the order of the supreme Pontificate for the benefit of the Bishops; it tends to isolate the Bishops, and to sow discord between them and the Secondary clergy of the seeds of discord. The administration The Josephite tradition will always know how to maintain them; for, to these terminals which, in the offices, will cough their im-Paperwork-based piety will be an eternal source of bliss.
philosophical. But that's still not enough.

The disorder, which an emperor improvised in a few

---

[1] Works of Frederick III, King of Prussia, letter 226th, to d'Alembert.

pen strokes, can be repaired with another souvenir rain. The Church is accustomed to miracles; it is a matter of the prevent or at least surround them with difficulties almost invincible equipment. The breach is open.
to calamities: it is important to make the wound always gaping, so that it may not be permitted to any human hand to cure her. The Austrian, Belgian and Lombard clergy He stood up to the storm; we let him resist and fight.
Then Joseph II was condemned to sign edicts which ren-compulsory religious education. These edicts preparedwill thus give to the Empire a generation which, in its priests very and in his family fathers, will know how to force reason natural to triumph over the Christian symbol.

It was on this crucial point that the struggle began fiercely.
and ardent. Tertullian said long ago:
“The more odious a truth is, the more he who does not disobey it”
A mule makes itself hated; but a sure way to please Those who persecute her do so by disguising and altering her.
rer. » The Bishops and Clergy of the Empire did not believe not bound by such considerations. They had seen the administration or the armed forces place the sequestration on the convents, and expel from these retreats those who are there were confined to devote themselves to endless studies or to the contemplative life. The religious orders of women had been no more respected than the monasteries of men. The sanctuary was subjected to pillaging.
legal, and he had only protested with an excessive resignation often silent. When the Priesthood felt itself affected in faith, in hope and in charity of the ave-At first, he understood that a great duty lay incumbent upon his cousin rage. We wanted to make him a mute spectator of the per-

---

[1] Apologetics, p. 52.

version of souls, then eternalize this perversion in instilling it in the hearts of young people. "God, as well as 'speaks the Apostle', had not convicted wisdom of folly of this world; he had not destroyed the wisdom of the wise.
and demonstrated the uselessness of scholarly science.” The Clergy prepared for battle; he fought with the weapons of the prayer and reason.

The new education plan that Joseph II is outlining for the Levites, as for the young men destined for world, it is the absorption of all religious ideas and the victory of indifferentism, proclaimed from the pulpits academics by materialists. Without consulting the Apostolic See, the Emperor modifies or changes at his according to the boundaries of the dioceses. Its system applies-that according to the needs or rather according to the whims of the mo-He appoints to bishoprics or he dismisses them; everything seems to him-
The arrangement is made as soon as he adopts or discards a man.
resistance was not serious; this prince imagines that it never will be. His edict of March 30, 1783 on The general seminars2, finally opened his eyes.

At that time, there was in Germany, as well as in
In France and throughout all Catholic countries, a system-
an educational approach that met all needs
It favored all wishes and developed all talents.
“A little-known fact,” writes Mr. Michel Chevalier, “is that, since the Revolution of 1789 and the suppression of the religious orders, we have regressed considerably

1 Epist. B. Pauli prima ad Corinth., I, 49.

2 These general seminaries were established, the first in Vienna, for the Upper and Lower Austria; the second in Prague, for Bohemia; the third-the sixth at Olmutz, for Moravia; the fourth at Inspruck, for Tyrol;
the fifth at Pavia, for Austrian Lombardy; the sixth at Louvain, for the Netherlands, and the seventh in Pest, for Hungary.

in terms of secondary education. Before 1989, the number of islands students attending schools was three or four times higher than which is what it is today. So there was a greater number of scholarships in a single province, in the Franche-Comté, for example, which there are none of today throughout France.

"Without wishing to slander our century, and without returningsuspected of bias in favor of the old regime, he I may be permitted to say that today it is more difficult than formerly to a capable but poor young man, to emerge intellectually. Every child who announced of a happy disposition was easily distinguished by the Clergy, and obtained not only easy admission but also... tuition in one of the many colleges run by the or-religious teachers.

"Thus, the most liberal creations have been immofought, in the name of freedom, in the war of extermination that our fathers declared in the past tense.

This war, of which the former disciple of Saint-Simon Joseph II, despite himself, regretted the effects, declaring it to his people; he did it to the clergy of his empire. The fall of the Society of Jesus had deprived public education of masters and doctors, also deeply versed in ecclesiastical sciences as well as in the study of Belles-Lettres. To this first disaster, which the Revolution nascent solicited as a benefit and imposed as a sacrifice she could be content with, Joseph II added a series of incalculable misfortunes. These semi-seven general offices were established in each major center of the Empire; there, and only there, of-the theological manna was to be distributed. It was forbidden to the Bishops to confer holy orders on postu-other than those who would have spent five years in these clerical training barracks.

The infringement on the freedom of the Bishops was direct; the the blow to vocations inevitably resonated in all dioceses; the choice of professors no longer allowed even doubt about the consequences of such a plan.
It was met with indifference, and even more often with immorality.
that Josephism granted the right to educate the youth to the virtues of the priesthood. The Jansenists finally elevated their normal schools. To fill them with di- teachers From them, they traded in apostate monks; they organized They mocked the press of men of bad morals and of worse doctrines. These adventurers of theology, of which Rome said with the apostle Saint John 1: “They are sor-They were from our midst, but they were not of us.
because if they had been on our side, they would certainly have
"Those who stayed with us" set to work.
They simplified the dogmas of Christianity so well and the the moral of the Gospel, that, in order to rise to the occasion From such a teaching, all that remained was to abolish the family through divorce legislation.

Until that day, education had been free; it was priced like a common commodity. It was imposed on everyone students, whether clergy or lay, a costume of A philosophical-military fantasy. It was on this occasion that Mirabeau exclaimed in his Prussian Monarchy2:
"Good heavens! So we also want to dress souls in uniforms?" Form! That is the height of despotism, its refinement.
the biggest.

Of all religious and social institutions, there is no

---

1 Epist. Beati Joannis apostoli prima, II, 19.

2'On the Prussian Monarchy, by the Count of Mirabeau, vol. II, p. 96.

Only the family remained standing. Joseph II raised a hand always unhappy about marriage. He stripped him of his holy character; he changed this union of souls into a kind of temporary civil contract, authorizing the divorce and rendering illegitimate children eligible to succeed-This regulation of adultery was the ruin of Christian society. Suddenly thrown out of its her ways, she felt shaken to her core and mutilated in paternal power. The father was deprived of the usufruit of his sons' estates; and as the Emperor had

He developed his own theory of equality, decreeing that a
The same shroud, that is to say a bag, was sufficient to contain the mortal remains of all citizens, rich or poor-People, nobles or serfs. He had set prices for education; he taxed the absence. Travel outside the Empire was only possible in paying a tax. If the absence continues, the confiscationtion struck at the stay abroad; the law punished as well the emigrant whom the magistrates who will not have prevented him-
It was necessary to cross the border.

The example of Joseph II was contagious; in the pro-In the Rhineland, it was endured reluctantly, and the people said with Isaiah I: In silentio et in spe erit fortitudo vestra. This silence and this hope, invoked as a force, they must not betray it. In Bavaria, The Elector, Maximilian Joseph, was not expecting this Courage from on high. The Emperor was making himself into a miracle worker.
In revolt, Maximilian imitated him with demonstrations.
with wild enthusiasm. The Revolution, which was not coming quite quickly by the sophists, was precipitated into its
It is sometimes governed by kings, sometimes by their ministers.

1 Prophet Isaiah, 30:15.

v had Pombals at every court: one finds a dimi-Kaunitz's nativity scene near each throne. Naples had its Tanucci, Parma its Félino, Madrid its Campoma-Munich had its Montgelas. These statesmen have thirst for innovation; they highly aspire to overturn the Roman Church in order to proclaim upon its ruins the advent The emergence of a new spirit. A deep-seated evil reveals them-
They experienced it; but they did not know it.
It is at most that these blind courtiers of an ephe-Mother Popularity believed in God, their faith reserving for all the dreams of the Enlightenment. The Count of Mont-Gelas was one of the most fervent followers of this school.
was waging war on the monks; but he covered with his pro-Detection of any secret society.

The Secret Society does not lay its traps against the thrones. She leaves to the kings' ministers the power to to kill Religion, because the Illuminati of Germany like The philosophers of France are quite convinced that, Once the Roman Catholic Church is debased, there will be nothing left.
easier for them than undermining thrones. The spirit of revolt, with the pride that engenders it, was embodied in It was a matter of the heart. This social attack was therefore premeditated. for a long time; it was carried out openly; one could grasped the framework in this unspeakable need for expansion an innovative idea that all the princes were obsessed with. According to the Job's words: "They go along convoluted paths;

They are walking on air, and they will perish.

Cardinal Caprara was then fulfilling the functions of Apostolic nuncio in Vienna. He was a clear-sighted diplomat-Seeming, but flexible. Evil frightened him. In the es-

---

1 Job, c. vi, 18.

To remedy this, he rather liked to employ useless or dangerous palliatives. Nevertheless, in October 1787, Caprara himself is frightened by the excess of perversions teachers of whom he is an unavoidable witness; and in a secret note, addressed to Cardinal Nephew, Braschi-Onesti, He expressed himself in these terms: "My dispatches to the secretariat-State assets can fall into unreliable hands; this which has already happened. A person's trip to Rome which inspires my complete confidence enables me to clarify for the Holy Father several obscure passages of the above-tell me, "dispatches?"

"Here we continue to wander, without a compass and without..." rudder, on a sea bristling with reefs; and the pilot no longer notices the dangers to which he exposes us. poses only those he himself runs. The Emperor has He played his part; he had his last word. He has no more bou-uprisings to be carried out; restless minds grow weary of this stagnation. We want something new; we are looking for it. everywhere; and as Joseph II himself is powerless to To satisfy this passion that he has aroused, he is accused of dragging progress into the rut of routine. This prince, who has destroyed so much, is unpopular with those who want to establish destruction as a system; one activates Therefore, disorder is used in order to reach a goal more quickly. still unknown.

"It is no longer in the mysterious conferences of the chancellery that this goal can be achieved; the administration is overwhelmed, the government itself feels swept away by a secret force. The first generation he had fashioned now enters the world, and (I shudder) (by dwelling on this hateful thought) this generation has More vices than education. It is an evil of which the effects had been anticipated and which can be repaired by changing giant of direction; but, what seems irreparable to me,

And what will inevitably happen is morbid action.
spread throughout Germany by various sects of Illuminati, of Perfectibilisles, of Freemasons, of Seers, Spirits of the third heaven and Swedenborgiens that multiply.

"As it was my duty, I, in addition to an occasion-Sion, tried to point out to the Emperor the danger that threatens monarchies, if one day unexpected events or a social crisis gave a body and a flag to all these shadowy affiliations. His Imperial Majesty has rewritten in a discouraged tone and full of fears that she
He also clearly saw the danger, but it seemed impossible-It was impossible for the State Chancellor to avert it. Thus, after Having fallen into the hands of the impious, the imperial throne can to be swallowed up by fanatics whose capital crime is the Contempt for God and the folly of a new Jerusalem. The Prince of Kaunitz (I must give him this credit here) in no way do I share these strange doctrines, but They nonetheless make many proselytes in the high nobility, in the magistracy and in the various branches of public administration. We are talking about horror bles initiations, and a certain Adam Weishaupl, cano™ Bavarian jurist and legal scholar, quite renowned in the New universities, enjoys, among young people and even in the world, of a celebrity that terrifies view of the future. This Weishaupta was, it is said, the master and the initiator of Mr. de Montgelas and Baron de Knigge in the mysteries of the Great Work. They announce a The Human Trinity, an Earthly Exegesis, and Miracles without end, of which they alone are the authors or witnesses.

"This love of the marvelous, or rather the miraculous" would find me rather indifferent, because we live in a
a time when apostolic recommendations are hardly more listened to than the divine precepts of Jesus Christ;
but, under the cover of all these imposture-laden wonders, he hidden within are pernicious doctrines and maneuvers guilty. At the heart of these groups or sects, There are, as far as I know, nothing but daydreamers or Enlightened ones. A more practical, more... school is forming.
consumed by activity, and which will not stop in this Eden of hyperbolically sensual pleasures and Disappointments that were all too real. This school had taken our sacred place.
Mother Church as her focal point; from the Church, she passes to the thrones, and (if I am well informed, as I have some(what reasons to believe it) she doesn't presume too much of her forces by daring to prepare his people of followers for a re-political evolution. The Emperor, who consoles himself by saying that his famous system was not understood, is evident

I am not very reassured about the tendencies of these new enemies.
thrones; however, he has, at least he claims, certain-certain reasons to remain convinced that these clouds amount These men will not attack Austria. He believes that this is not not from the heart of Germany that the lightning will spring; but it do not consider it impossible that it will erupt. At Amidst his moral anxieties, we see him gradually reve-to dwell on the past and give unjust measures a direction-a fairer tion.

"The provocatively hostile attitude adopted by certain discontented individuals and some minds whose independence increases in proportion to the fact that governments feel weaker or disorganized, is a perpetual subject of a-tears for the good Catholics, whose numbers are increasing lies through persecution itself; but one must not to be astonished by their powerlessness. Today we cannot-

It would neither unite them nor derive material strength from them. Without In doubt, their courage will be revived later; nevertheless the danger approaches; for,* of all these senseless dreams of 1*11-Luminism, Swedenborgianism, or Freemasonry nism, he must bring out a frightening reality. The vision-
The old guard have their time, the Revolution they foreshadow will his own. When the day of darkness comes, I am well convinced in advance that the mystical boat will withstand the
the storm's efforts and that it will survive; notwithstanding This, the Holy Father, whose word is so persuasive, does not Will he not feel he owes it to his pastoral and royal ministry to to protect the monarchs and keep them alert against calamities that were, so to speak, foreseen? I have nothing to con-seiller, nothing especially to teach the representative of Celui which is salvation and life; I am content (as it is my duty) to expose the truth of the facts and the pain of my premonitions.

The fears expressed by Caprara had long been time shared in France and Germany. The Josephism had stirred up all the simmering anger.
against the social order, than idleness, ambition or ignorance, which deep within certain souls, perpetuates doomed in perpetuity to the abject worship of violence and success. The mysteries and conspiracies of Weishaupt and Knigge were partially revealed, and people were astonished by the protection which the religious and political Illuminati cover themselves with They were right. The princes, who dared only very rarely
It is possible to be forgiven for the happiness of their birth through great qualities, and the prestige of power through major services, exhausted their prerogatives to

to place under the orders of these charlatans of darkness. Dukes sovereigns or electors, Catholics or Protestants, they accepted only lies as the truth of the times future. The earth trembled beneath their feet; and, in a voluptuous drowsiness, which was a complicity, they did not did not bother to inquire about the causes of these comments underground movements.

Their courtly intelligence did not rise above this level. The German Union, of which the theologian Bahrdt was the inventor, pursued his goals, relying on a One side focused on crime, and the other on vice. This Union, which stemmed from all the secret societies and which ababsorbed into its mysterious ramifications, had given to all his agents and his dupes the most singular of words of order. The Society of Jesus was abolished by Clement XIV, and for fifteen years it has only existed in history. But with the approach of the perils of which the Siege Roman Catholic Church is threatened; the Fathers, proscribed as a body, do not don't bother to make their personal cause a source of ecclesiastical discord. Instead of crying out at Heaven: Vindica sanguinem nostrunij, avenge our blood, they tireless athletes only think about joining the svice of the Church to avenge justice and reason.

Three men, Fathers Feller, Jacques Zallinger and Zaccaria had descended into this burning arena; then, with their former brothers from the Institute, Pierre de Doyar, Navez, Ghesquier, de Saive and Corneille de Smet, They defended Rome in this War of Unity. taken with innovations*. This dedication, therefore

---

[1] Oa reads in the Historical Memoirs of Cardinal Pacca, vol. I, p. 103: "In the disputes that arose between the nuncios in Germany, of From 1786 to 1792, it was again the former Jesuits who presented themselves to speak from beyond the grave, had, in the eyes of all these missioncharacteristics of selfishness, something so prodigiously inconceivable that, in order to neutralize its effects, the Union German and the Illuminati found only one way.

Josephism provided them with teaching and monoadvertising hub. Through their university chairs or by

They control the press, they monopolize public opinion.
Academies, seminaries, law schools, of medicine and science, printing presses, chapters, learned societies, everything falls under their purview, everything is within their jurisc within their remit. It's a shadow government.
which operates amidst the worn-out gears of an administration a self-destructive force, weaving itself together. But the progress of this multiple sects are not as fast as its spec-Frances. Joseph II is worried about the unrest; his brother and his heir, Archduke Leopold of Tuscany, proclaims that the goal has been missed. A pause is manifested.
celebration both in the clergy and at court.

This hour must be decisive; the Secret Societies will ward it off by imposing a password that re-ponders on everything. In one of his works on good pe-Riode, the Oratorian Theiner introduces us to this conspiracy, which Later he himself will take up the underlying theme: "Whoconch, he recounts*, allowed itself to fight the least of world against this torrent, was treated as a hidden Jesuit or confessed. The name Jesuit henceforth took on the most odious. It was synonymous with scoundrel, murderer, and in-
He is an enemy of religion and a disturber of the public peace.
traversed Germany from one end to the other, and became in the lists against the enemies of the Holy See. They came to enlighten. and forto convince the faithful through sound and victorious writings.

1 Hist. des inst. d'éd., by Theiner, t. II, p. 31.

the general watchword every time we wanted to do noise or getting rid of dangerous men. That one that the propaganda of the Illuminati and the partisans of the light had only once dealt with Jesuit was irrevo-lost cable; nothing could erase it at his place anymore this task, and to restore his honor and credit. That of terrible troubles, of blatant injustices committed at that time using that name! If one wants-milk to take away the love of a Protestant prince's subjects, we were content to spread the rumor that he had near He was a Jesuit, and he wanted to become a Catholic. If they wanted to overthrow honorable ministers or high-ranking officials incorruptible officials in Protestant states or even Catholics, all we had to do was say that they were Hidden Jesuits. The scholar who was thought to be a Jesuit, However pure her conduct, however profound her science, could not obtain a professorship anywhere; he was forced to return to the darkness and pay homage to the illusion of the century.

These Illuminati, whose Josephism exalted the feverish impatience, no longer even deigned to hide their projets. The world seemed ripe for a revolution to them. In the presence of kings and peoples, they call themselves in their writings “a legion spread throughout the entire universe, a legion that swears hatred to all cults, death to all "Priests and all tyrants."

Faced with this distressing spectacle, the people invoked a Supernatural help. Kings surrendered; peoples, so as not to fail in their own defense, they submitted their cause in the hands of God; then, in his mute despair, Catholic Germany, eyes turned towards Rome seemed to say to him: Salva nos, perimus.

PIUS VI AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. 1.7

The new Pontiff granted to Christendom was, by the splendor of his virtues and the gentleness of his character tère, worthy of standing up to the storms that threatened the Pierre's boat. Born in Cesena on December 11, 1717, he was raised in the love of God; he grew up in the service of the Church. Benedict XIV had shown him a particular affection. eternal; Clement XIII honored him with his confidence, Clé- XIV of his suspicions. This triple consecration, a solemn guarantee of talent, probity and justice, was the determining factor in his election.

Barely acclaimed in the Conclave, Pius VI erupted among the Romans, enthusiasm and demonstrations of respectful tenderness that should never be exhausted Ser. He was handsome, rich in the gifts of God and extravagant in his tastes. He spread it quite naturally Around him were kindness and pomp. He was admired, at the- such as the Basilica of St. Peter, dominating from its majolly stature, an entire people gathered and praying at her feet. We loved him lavishing gifts in the Vatican galleries. the graces of his mind and the charms of his erudition artistic. It was Leo X resurrected, but without Raphael and without Michelangelo, Leo X who, to accomplish the The great things he dreamed of had to be limited to em- to beautify monuments and to bring life back to ruins.

In those days marble and stone were less difficult to shape or implement than the genius of the man. Pius VI found in Winkelmann an archaeologist who understood and interpreted his thoughts. The Pio-Clé- Museum Mentino opened. Immense works of art began. took. The sacristy of Saint-Pierre was finished, and the assai- The problem of the Pontine Marshes was resolved.

We had studied to tear from the hearts of Christians the prestige and even the memory of pontifical magnificence cales. We were trying to stop believing in spiritual supremacy. ritualistic, its political influence was openly denied. The generation of that time had not seen the first years of the reign of Benedict XIV. Of his two successors immediately, she knew only a relentless struggle, and concessions without glory and without profit.

For this generation threatened by so many calamities, Rome was to exist only in history. Rome was dead, as much from philosophical sarcasm as from from a Jansenist deduction than from universal indifference saddle. And suddenly, when the governments of Catholic sovereigns allow themselves to be congratulated on their victory guided by triumphant philosophy, a new Pope It attracts all eyes, it commands all respect.

The Catholic princes, ill-advised, or rather ill-advised advisors, never ceased to wage a silent or passive war. attempt at the papal throne. Failing that, the monarchs separated from the unit, they traverse prodigious distances. As in the third book of Kings, there came people from all countries to hear the wisdom of Solomon and Gustav III of Sweden, and Paul of Russia, and the princes of the House of England, leave their palaces, in order to saread in Peter's successor the happiest image gentleness within strength.

But amidst these religious celebrations of the soul and of these elegant pleasures of the mind, of which he was the dispenser- The orator and the ornament, Pie Yi was like a victim who has She had already been sprinkled with water to be sacrificed. The tributes not all of the letters addressed to him dated back to the Holy-Seat. They couldn't possibly redeem themselves in his eyes. the contemptuous abandonment that the upper classes displayed to with regard to the Apostolic Chair. Pius VI, in order to be acceptedable to follow the Romans' inspiration, he readily agreed to follow their teachings. expressions of his love of the arts, but he was the Pope. the outpourings of his faith,' he was therefore saddened to see the Church widowed by her pastors and orphaned by her children.

According to the words of the Psalmist, the nations rose up and the peoples conspired in their folly, because the Kings and the great men of the earth had themselves revolted and united against the Lord and against his Christ. But, in the bitterness of papal thought, there was even deeper despair. Under the impact of this demoralization that was eating away at hearts, the Clergy had

He could only partially resist the social solvent. His courage he had weakened, his faith was growing weary of the struggle; he succumbed to hardship or temptation. The futility of his efforts...

Once this was demonstrated, it could be seen collapsing in on itself.

refused to be outraged by the scandals, some of which

His superiors portrayed him as both victim and witness. This prostration of all moral energy, one of the most obvious symptoms-characteristics of the time, had not escaped the vi-

the Roman Court's keen perspicacity. While deploring this strange weariness of the mind, she felt it herself-even the effects.

Under the audacious pressure of the combined sects, the

The clergy had gradually become disillusioned with heavenly matters.

immense disgust for priestly duty was seeping into the Church; he took possession of it in the name of progress and the lights of modern civilization. Prayer becomes-

Hypocrisy is born, and zeal becomes a crime. In a century which, from its beginning to its end, produced so much fanatics of disbelief, we blushed at the fanaticism of

The Apostolate. From Rome itself, where so many heroic Pontiffs voices had spoken, commanded, and conquered.

to advise silence and to permit cowardice. The

The secular clergy had allowed an open war to be waged against

Regular, and he didn't yet realize that he was reused to pay the costs. He resembled those shepherds which the Prophet speaks of, who sleep when the flock is in danger, and to those sentinels who are dozing off felt while the enemy launched a final assault on the citadel.

Faith in the perpetuity of the Church was neither altered nor obscured. The triumph of error had not been pushed as far; but, by abusing this temperamental character-ment and conciliation, the eternal prerogative of Rome, on had reached the point of making the doctor doubt the efficacy of effectiveness of its remedies. The torrent was too widespread and Too impetuous to resist. It was whispered.

to flee the fertile valleys, and, after arranging a shelter on the mountain, to silently contemplate the flood devastation. The Vatican, even in the days of his toughest battles in honor of principles, not He had never considered haste a factor in his success. Gregory VII, Innocent III and Sixtus V knew, in a perfect measure, procrastinating with the difficulties. They do not They didn't break the obstacle; they liked to turn it around. But at Rome, where they always seem to want to persuade us that we proceeds from the reed rather than the oak, these condescents traditional dances, these slower rhythms so conducive to the The maturity of the decisions was then invoked by the some see it as a sign of weakness, and others as evidence of apparent complicity.

We had not entirely protected ourselves from all contact with innovators. More than once the atmosphere of the Sacred College was furtively and unwittingly imbued with the Jansenist contagion. Cardinal Passionei had it there brought under Benedict XIV; Cardinal Marefoschi in development The germ was planted under Clement XIV and Pius VI. The con-concessions wrested from the Church, public iniquities or secret sacrifices imposed upon him, the painful sacrifices to the- which she believed she had to condemn herself to in order to achieve this peace receding as one hoped to grasp it, all present- The sophists had incalculable chances. They had around the Vatican a more powerful party through its activity than by numbers; this party took it upon itself to demoralize- to bolster courage, by feigning fear at the excesses of fanaticism.

#

The ancient Romans, that royal nation, populum laie, recjem, were indeed indignant, in the secrecy of their demeasures, of this drowsiness maintained by cutapoor maneuvers or a need for rest related to the betrayal. Except for a few providentially exceptional cases- In their traditional matters, the Popes have always seemed to ignore that the te- Deserved was the genius of extreme circumstances. their eternal procrastination, moderating and tiring all They managed to overcome their impetuousness and to to often use them to serve the triumph of justice and of truth. But the Apostolic See found itself facing so many of enemies, that his unwavering forbearance would become one more danger. It was being abandoned in France, in Germany Magne, in Spain, in Portugal and in Italy, with fury of impiety. No one dared to stand up in her defense, And around the Vatican, there was no shortage of advisors. cowards whispering in the ear of the Sacred College, and recommending patience, the most common virtue of Romans.

Pius VI did not believe he should subject himself to so many menagestures. Hardly had he ascended the throne when he opened, with a Jubilee solemn, the treasure of his indulgences. Nevertheless, in announcing the good news to the bishops of Christendom, He did not hide the sorrows of his soul from them. "After he said, having spread darkness everywhere their impiety, and as if torn religion from the hearts of These corrupting philosophers, these men, also try to to break all the bonds that unite men together, and with those who govern them. Raising their voices, they loudly proclaim that man is born free, and constantly repeat that he is not subject to the empire of whom that is; that society is but a multitude of menmy ignorant people, whose stupidity prostrates itself before Priests who deceive them, before Kings who oppress them ment, so that the union between the priesthood and the emAccording to them, the worst is nothing more than a barbaric conspiracy against This so-called freedom that is natural to man. Who doesn't see that such monstrous extravagances and so much other similar delusions, covered up with such artistry, which further threaten public peace and tranquility, that there is a delay in suppressing the impiety of their authors, and that they are all the more pernicious for the souls of the wretched their doctrine, which was obtained at the price of the blood of Jesus Christ, Like gangrene, it increasingly spoils what is healthy. and slips into the hearts of Kings, and (which makes us (horror to say) insinuates itself even into the sanctuary?

The blow was direct; it only grazed the skin, because the words of the Vicar of Jesus Christ were covered by senseless clamor. But as there is in man, even the most perverted, a certain degree where the conscience, this Jubilee, witness and precursor of so many social crises did not leave the Church without consolation. Faith seemed to awaken in their souls; it was as if she marked the final stage of carelessness to proscription tion or to the scaffold.

As if Pope Pius VI had a premonition of evilshours with which his reign will be crowned, here he is, for

to ward off the ill will of Joseph II in Germany, He decides to become an apostolic pilgrim himself. It is said that the populations are already indifferent or gangrenous of philosophism, and that the Emperor does not precede public opinion, but that he follows its impulse. Since For a long time, the Popes only saw the world between the Who-Rinal and the Vatican. Events separated them from the rest of the earth, and they lived in isolation, in dignity that was respected by tacit agreement. To the ills Pius VI wants to provide a remedy for the extremes he foresees.
equally extreme. He is advancing towards Vienna.

In the state of mind, this journey can exert a considerable influence on the affairs of the Church and of Germany. The Catholic princes and the Sacred Heart, the law itself tries to oppose it through respect-killer rebukes. That was the inspiration and the wish of Pius VI. He overcame the difficulties, he had an answer for everything.
the objections; then, from the capital of the Christian world to the capital of the Germanic empire, it was, so to speak Carried on the arms of the people. The bishops and the great
They formed an official procession for him, the people composed of them for him-were another who must have singularly altered the ideas innovators. The people, who had flocked from the depths of the provinces, knelt in the path of the one who mar-

i

---

1 Essays of Montaigne, vol. I, p. 263.

He cried out in supplication. They burst forth in testimony of faith and in transports of joy. It was something better than a triumphal march. In this filial eagerness multitudes, whose history, even the most biased, has devoted to naive outpourings, there was such a profound awakening.
statement of Catholic beliefs, which, whether willingly or unwillingly, Joseph II was obliged to join in. His mind, was not up to the task of the soul.

To be a reformer in his own way and to give himself
With the airs of a philosopher- prince, this sovereign had taken pleasure in fron-of what were then called the prejudices of fanaticism outdated. The Empire had waged a sneaky war in Sa-Cerdoce, and the instigator of this war found himself forced to disarm in the presence of the Pontiff. We had promised to to welcome the Pope only with one of those studied courtesies said, which are often a lack of deference; it was necessary change tactics, under penalty of incurring animadver-public sion.

A writer hardly suspected of excessive affectionate venerationtion towards the Roman See, Count Alexis of Saint-Priest himself testifies to this moral violence perpetrated through universal piety in the face of the Emperor's anticipated disdain.

“The good Viennese,” the historian recounts*, “did not take It was hardly worth inquiring whether the Pope was picturesque or worldly; but, filled with a naive faith, absorbed In a pious ecstasy, they didn't know how to... They were captivated by this holy sight; they thronged to the churches, in the streets, in the squares where Pius VI was to pass. The Despite police intervention, the accidents caused by the conthe refocusing of a huge crowd on a single point

---

1 History of the fall of the Jesuits, by Count Alexis de Saint Pris', par r de France, p. 238 and 239 (Paris, 1844).

They were making new announcements daily without slowing down their zeal. Twenty or Thirty thousand men followed the Pope's carriage or... placed them under the windows of his palace, asking him With loud cries, he blessed it. The Danube was populated of boats laden with pious souls. Finally, the conThe course of the most distant provinces was so great in the capital, where a temporary famine was feared.

"This joy, this enthusiasm, displeased Joseph II; He felt resentment, perhaps even fear. sensed that he was not dealing with a philoSophe; and, while pursuing his plans, he believed he should to provide convincing evidence of his Catholicism. One He had been plagued by persistent eye pain for a long time. Muffled murmurs attributed it to his disbelief, and Some voices even asserted that if he did not reconcile With the Holy Father, God would strike him blind. Terrified From these rumors, he sent, as a votive offering, golden eyes to convent of Maria Zell, and charged the nuns to pray for his eyesight. That's not all, he felt obliged to take communion solemnly from the Pope's hand, and served it at the Last Supper. He did even more: Pius VI, in an address in Consisthe toire, had forgotten to celebrate the Emperor's piety, a very simple and natural oversight, which Joseph II demanded the repair. He wanted a sentence favorable to this problematic piety was inserted into the discourse imprime. "

The people, who know very little about petty squabbles, Reau and changes in the law, had remained uninvolved in upheavals that occurred in ecclesiastical discipline.

He did not grasp its significance, and the innovators delighted in it.
were hiding it under the cloak of sweet wordsreuses, and behind the label of economic progress and social. But the people would have instinctively understood it as an outrage done to the common Father. It was therefore necessary for Joseph II to re-found himself, that is to say, a true Habsburg-Lorraine, in order to position itself publicly at the level of the universal veneration. The Prince of Kaunitz, his chan-cellar, took it upon himself to offer the Emperor all the revenge-secret things which his philosophical pride believed he had need. The one whom King Frederick II of Prussia nicknamed Ironically: my brother, the sacristan, had convinced himself that this trip by the Pope would be the final blow to the Roman Church. Confused in his hopes, he had to to form a procession for this moral authority which advanced through-towards the imperial states, having as their only army two or three Italian prelates and a blessing for a golden word-Dr. Joseph II graciously accepted his unexpected defeat.

due; Kaunitz never consented to submit to it. This minister of Maria Theresa, omnipotent under the Emperor his son had made a point of his hostilities against the Church.
instrument of rule.

A great lord of the eighteenth century, a diplomat who skillful or fortunate wind, but character distorted by adulthood lation and captivated by vanity, Kaunitz would have disdained to reckon with God. And, in Paris, we had seen it flatterer of the Marquise de Pompadour and vassal of Voltaire.
He had held power for so long that he looked at him dait as one of his individual attributes. Embodied in He considered himself indispensable to the cult of his own person.
and taking pity on the other men, he had come to...
to create a world apart, of which he improvised the Atlas. This old man, who was trying to couple the German morgue and French conceit, did not believe in the Gospel, but he tried to deny death. That word resonated poorly with him.

ears; therefore, it was forbidden to pronounce it in his presence.
To avoid this, the courtiers and secretaries of the chan-Court and state officials were ingenious in inventing peri-phrases. It was in these terms that the death was announced to him.
From Baron Binder, his oldest friend: "We can no longer find Baron Binder.

The baron could no longer be found; from that day forward, Kau-

Nitz forgot to ask. This whimsical mind put a kind of ridiculous pride in defying the Pope. Piety the people forced Joseph II to bow before the pilgrim apostolic, Kaunitz plotted to rise again more rogue and more impertinent than ever. The respects which Pius VI was surrounded by cheers that followed him in Vienna and everywhere, became a torment for this man so famous for his arrogance. He took his revenge by pursuing- before, even under the eyes of Pius VI, the course of his re- anti-Catholic forms.

Josephism, brought into the world by a few Jansenists of Holland, was defeated by popular demonstrations res; Kaunitz did not deign to let them have the last word. An imperial edict of May 30, 1782, made known the uselessness prayers of Pius VI, and the contempt shown for the will of the masses. The tolerance of Joseph II and his The minister translated himself, organized himself into persecution. The per- The sect disguised itself under a heavy irony; it emprunta has the characteristics of an epigram and a rhyming couplet. The princes of Europe, inattentive to the revolutionary movement tionary, sharpened, from the depths of their palaces, innocent- Centers of mockery against the Chair of Peter. As in In Horace's time, the source of all plagues came to...

1 In volume XI of Grimm's Correspondence, p. 61, we read these s:x core from above; the princes amused themselves by making it overflow- Last on the homeland and on the people!

Hoc fonte dericala clades

In patriam populumque fluxit.

Pius VI had obtained only empty concessions, pres- that were withdrawn as soon as they were granted. In his interviews with the Emperor, conversations which the Pontiff speaks of in these terms at the secret Consistory of September 23, 1782: “Every day we had conferences, and things they dealt with each other there, on both sides, familiarly and at the- amiable, but with great warmth; there is nothing that we* did not explain freely, openly, not having in view of what our apostolic office required of us lic and the interest of Religion, and there is nothing but the Emperor- "If reur did not listen attentively and calmly;" in these During these interviews, the Pope expressed his concern on more than one occasion. of the state of Europe. He was frightened by the trends that the es- He took to mockery and spread error; and Joseph II... would be sure of the Pontiff, and, through sophistry or games of words, he tried to persuade her that the monarchs of-

were going to march with their century.

A few years later, the century had moved so far.
quickly, even Joseph II himself, exhausted from the race,
he appealed to the Pope to stop the Revolution.

rhymed verses, poems, proposed by the Count of Provence, who was later King Louis XVIII, and filled by the Marquis de Montesquiou:

It is in vain that from Rome to the banks of the Danube
Our ancient mufti is coming at a little gallop.
Today pumice stone, formerly cube stone.
He used to distill absinthe, now he distills syrup.
From his old barometer, observing the tube, 11 must see that we lose everything when we demand too much.

* Odes, 3, VI.

Belgium was then an integral part of the States hereditary titles of the House of Habsburg. Joseph II had imagined imposing on these provinces, Catholic before everything, the yoke of its tolerance and its innovations. Without consult the moral needs or the character of the di-among the various nations, Emperor Joseph had believed that he could-would also do so with impunity, in the Netherlands as in Austria, to modify or alter at will the customs, the affections and the religious leanings of these regions. The phi- spirit The philosopher had driven him to violate the pact sworn by his ancestors and by himself. Tormented by the itch to ensure the Joseph didn't take into account the happiness of others in his own way.
neither obstacles nor differences in customs. He decreed Liberalism, in religion and politics, with for-tyrant's mules. It was through despotism that he proceeded.
at the introduction of the new features, and without calculating that the resistance could be a duty of conscience or of Patriotism, he decrees, his good pleasure would be a law for all his peoples. He cast them in the same mold.
of philosophical abstractions, this mold had to make them
All in uniform and grateful.

11 had diversified, in Austria and Lombardy, the within the ecclesiastical hierarchy, he desired that it should be so in Brabant. Every day a new edict brought new-new changes in religious orders, in the marriages, in education, in confraternities, in the festivals, in the processions and in the ecclesiastical properties-ticks. He eliminated, he created, he decreed; Belgium had no choice but to obey the imperial order. The Belgians...

that, patient in its insubordination and not yet having the experience of revolutions, accepted only with repugnance France, the clean slate made of its privileges and its liberties religious orders. The clergy protested, and although seeing at its head, Cardinal de Frankenberg, Archbishop of Malines, he felt the seeds of fermenting within him revolt. Frankenberg, a character full of integrity, of firmness and moderation, he aspired to reconcile. Part ininterested in the debate, and nevertheless a respected mediator, he endeavored to calm discontent and open the eyes of the Emperor's eyes. His efforts were not to succeed, because the Emperor was relentless in his plans, and the Belgium did not want to humiliate itself for long.

The suppression of the University of Louvain and the creation-the formation of a general seminary, where theology was to be taught by professors seconded from Vienna, and dierected by a Jansenist named Stoegger, were the signal of the struggle. Bishops were exiled, priests were persecuted very; they set about torturing consciences. They made themselves a toy of public peace, and, by an inunderstandable, Joseph II, whose every inconsistency was a passion, he devoted himself to reforming instead of thinking to be kept. Deaf to the opinions of some and the prayers of others to others, he persisted, he stiffened in his unthinking tolerance Shit. He had said that the Netherlands would submit "willingly". or by force under the yoke of his philosophical principles; he did call to violence. It was no longer to kings that he it was up to him to exercise it.

Joseph II supported the demagogic movement; he is carried away by it. He fanned the flames, the fire overwhelmed him.

The Revolution that broke out in France, and which, from Paris, will soon have repercussions throughout the world, and is being carried out in the name o Philosophy allied with Jansenism. In Belgium,
The flag she is displaying is that of Religion.
Louis XVI will, of his own free will, grant to his subjects throws away all the privileges they were persuaded they had were starving, and Louis XVI would perish, a martyr of his genereuse initiative. Joseph II will also succumb, but the Belgium, which killed him, according to one of his statements to the marshal Prince de Ligne, Belgium will have nothing to reproach itself for. neither injustice nor ingratitude. ^ His revolt, as well as that of 1830, has only had bad luck; it is badly inframed. It is done to safeguard the Catholic faith; she finds herself absorbed in this terrible insurrection conthree Gods, whose signal France gives.

Imbued with his system of tormenting the Church and the reduce to a state of servitude, but even more imbued with Joseph II did not abandon his idea of imperial omnipotence. stopped at the thought that it might provoke resistance legitimate. He contested the authority of the Roman Catholic Church over souls; he does not allow anyone to question the power he claims to usurp the public conscience. The conscience revolts. The inaugural pact is violated; the States of Brabant proclaim Joseph II deprived of his rights, and a religious wars break out at the moment when unbelief announces that the reign of Christ is over. This war of religion, undertaken on the eve of storms, had for two prominent lawyers: Van der Noodt and Vonck. Abbot Van Eupen represented the clergy there.

This is not the place to recount the events military and the internal unrest that occurred as an inevitable consequence. The spirit of factionpara of this country; but when Joseph II became aware of these training sessions, when he understood that Belgium was going perhaps detaching himself from his imperial crown, the CatholicThe lique was found in the sovereign. His entire life had wasted in an impossible struggle. We had seen him put his faith and his name in the service of the enemies of the Papacy. To subjugate the Roman Catholic Church, he had diminished respect due to the laws by the strangeness of those he invented. In 1783, if we refer to the knight's account d'Azara, the Spanish minister in Rome1, the Emperor coneven had the plan to break completely with the Holy See, and to patch up an ideal schism.

H2 BOOK ONE.

Seven years have not yet passed, and this great a reformer, brought down by the Revolution he prepared, in desperation, he throws himself into the arms of The Church. The time for witty sarcasm is over. Anti-Catholic jokes are no longer in vogue; JoSeph II is grappling with difficulties of all kinds. In this unforeseen peril, Joseph II appealed for interventionThe Pope's tion. With his hand weakened by suffering, this prince, still in the prime of life, but who has consumed in sterile attempts, address to the Sovereign Ponthe offered a supreme prayer. It was to shake the Church that he began this crusade of innovations; he begged the Pope to interpose his authority. Pius VI, who was more far-sighted that he, Pius VI, who has already forgiven so much, writes to Bishops of Belgium, January 23, 1790: “We Let us hasten to offer our care, to dispel these fatal [events]. divisions; we owe it to our love for our dear son Joseph, elected emperor of the Romans and your sovereign, who, himself animated by the spirit of concord, desired to We took this step; we owe it to our affection. for the illustrious states and peoples of these provinces which have always deserved so much credit from the Catholic religion, that

1. Historical and philosophical memoirs on Pius VI and his pontificate, by Bourgoing, former Minister Plenipotentiary, vol. I, p. 331 et seq. sales.

The Holy See has always regarded them as its children more expensive. We are addressing you, who, not being- members of the Church of God, you must participate in our solicitudes We certainly know that in this Revolution you had no active part, and that you always You remembered that your duty was to reconcile a just obedience to authority with the pastoral obligation- It is our duty to maintain the Religion intact... It is equally important to us- It was well known that the states of this nation, throughout this period of time, have never been animated by feeling- nor did they have any intention of rebelling, nor of overthrowing the authority of the sovereign; but that, without ceasing to depart from the Just respect due to Caesar, without ceasing to applaud his With fair intentions, they asked for nothing more. otherwise, we would put an end to innovations that seemed having been introduced against his express will, although under his name, and especially against the rights, customs and statuts of the nation... The remonstrances emanating from the various States attest to these provisions. Well, venerable brothers, what you have so rightly and earnestly desired, which the States have implored with urgent prayers, and now the Emperor grants it today. his own movement. He informed us that he had de- he clarified, without any restriction whatsoever, that he left it to the bishops the full and complete exercise of their rights, both in relation to at the episcopal seminaries, as for all matters ecclesiastics; so that everything will be put back in the First state. We hope, trusting in goodness. of the Emperor, that the same declaration will take place in the rest of his domains for the greater good of the Religion. He also assured us that he had declared without restriction that he would leave safe and intact in the future rights of the orders of the State and the people, restoring from this at the moment, in their first state, their privileges and con-

a constitution, with a promise to forget the entire past; in a way that there is nothing left to desire for the peoples of these pro-Vinces. Now, therefore, that the causes of these great the problems no longer exist, the problems themselves must cease... Let the people return to their prince obedience-the right due to him; that the rights of the Church remain rent intact; that those of sovereignty be inviolables; that the prerogatives of the people be maintained in their purity; that studies regain their brilliance in the University of Louvain; that we may finally see reborn in these regions obedience, love, joy, the rich-
"Here, finally, is peace and tranquility."

These words of advice, worthy of the Pontiff and the Father, should have to be listened to; but it was too late. The United Belgian States had precipitated the break and proclaimed their independence dance. They were already playing at the sovereign congress; the aristocracy and democracy, represented by two lawyers, were pleading against each other. The two parties agreed-they were as little as a club of demagogues organizing the fraternity. These United Belgian States were emancipating themselves in, the discord. They were allowed to cross for a few hours by river-personal and liberal fictional works, then they fell, in conquered provinces, under the iron fist of the Republic-that French, which applied all its decrees of spobinding, proscription and servitude* For donation of A joyous entry, the Revolution loaded them with chains.

On February 20, 1790, Joseph II died, having recovered, in death, the holy traditions of his family and the good feelings, including an unfortunate need for fame could never manage to strip his heart bare*

The Sophists, who predicted the reign of the unbelieverbed, they went away announcing to all the winds of heaven that the Roman Church had had its day, and that it would die a path of consumption in their arms. They didn't want no more Pope. Jansenism, Gallicanism and Joseph-Phism had not yet reached that point. A bishop of Rome well bound in his impotence, and reduced with sterile respects to exercise his ministry in the countryside Roman Catholic Church did not frighten them too much; but to this bishop improvised and fallen, they measured the air, the sun and the es-

They were confining him at the Vatican gate, in order to to be able to govern the Catholic universe themselves, and the to lead to the abyss by subterranean paths. Some Prelates, corrupt or seduced, lent a hand to mysterious innovations. We had grown tired of faith, of work and deeds. We grew weary of rest, when in Even in Italy, the impatience of Scipio Ricci tore apart all the sails.

This bishop of Pistoia had ideas when he found them. was going to borrow, and talent when one consented to him to give in. Leopold of Tuscany, servile imitator of Joseph II, his brother, had designated him for the episcopate, because that progressives described him as a docile ininstrument in the hands of Rome's enemies. Leopold has a bishop sanctioning and legalizing all his projects of ecclesiastical reform, updated and executed without consult the Supreme Pastor. This bishop has surrounded himself with Italian jurists and lawyers, who, following the example of Tamburini, Zola, and Palmieri, their masters, know legitimizing all usurpations, by applying all the laws against torture. The Grand Duke and the Bishop support each other by the other. Secular authority hides behind initiation.

episcopal initiative; this initiative draws new strength in the prince's encouragement. She mentions complicity in the Kingdom of Naples, in the person of Serrao, bishop of Potenza, was also fully prepared; like some other Italian prelates, but Jansenists, to free themselves from papal authority.

Honest mediocrity rather than its fleeting brilliance Ricci, more than to private virtues, is He gives or accepts the role of reformer in the process. abolished the worship of images, he proscribed the adoration of the Sacred-The Heart of Jesus changes the rites of the Church, alters the discipline, then modifies the teaching. To arrive at to reinstate the use of the old canons, so dear to Gallica-In this movement, we see him placing himself under the protection of writers. Jansenists, all, according to him, pious and learned martyrs of the truth. He establishes in his episcopal city the printing press meur and the publisher of works condemned by the Church, and in At the beginning of these works, Ricci announces that he intends "to to expose the unjust pretensions of this spiritual Babylon tuelle, which overturned and distorted the entire economy of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, of the communion of saints and the independence of the princes.”

It is Luther resurrected, but Luther not apostatizing.
in order to better deceive the simple-minded.

The Tuscan people were not up to these sacrifices.
bequests, sponsored by a sovereign, and acclaimed as acts of heroism by the opponents of the Pontificate. The
The people murmur, they are indignant. Ricci, intoxicated by his populaphilosophical rigor, is unmoved by these murmurs nor by this indignation. He rebelled against Rome, he does not understand why his flock disobeys his orders, or closes his eyes to the light, of which his intolerance-rancc seeks to flood it. The clergy follows the example of faithful. Ricci, in 1786, convened a Synod; he introduced there-led the jurists of the University of Pavia. There, bra-before the Church and its leader, he preludes a draft of Civil Constitution of the Clergy. He had long been at Schism, he is heading towards heresy. He therefore proclaims that the Holy Spirit dwells in the midst of the Synod, and that his prayers keys become those of God himself'.

Ricci had set a fatal example. In a century where Terror thought he could do anything, he came to bring his contingent of scandal and its bundle of thorns for trouto disrupt the Church's peace. He invented, or allowed to be invented before his eyes, denunciations, acts more or less legalized by injustice, and accusing of hideous obscenities nities. It is Diderot's Nun put on trial-ball, or the comedy of the Visitandines translated by anticipation in indictment[2]. Scipion Ricci died in 1810, the Some say he is reconciled with the Holy See, others say he is not.
repentance. Nevertheless, his attacks live on, and that they still find apologists.

He was the first, after Febronius, to be placed on the salt-Letter, the successor of Peter; he had dishonored the Church, by outrageously violating morality and insulting piety. They did,
He will long be considered one of those model bishops.
of tolerance, charity and virtue, (as they dream of them)
the unbelievers of all countries, the indifferent of all systems.

A few days earlier, another assembly had held in a village, then unknown, on the banks of the Rhine.

---

[1] Opening address of the Synod, p. 143.

[2] See the Life of Scipio Ricci, compiled from autograph manuscripts

by the prelate, by de Potter, 3 vols. in- 8°.

The Archbishop-electors, swept away by this wave of rebellion The lion that was climbing towards Rome had also experienced the need to mingle with the movement of the century. They tendwere trying to make the tree branches turn green again, while putting the axe and hatchet into the roots. At Ems Therefore, four delegates from these prelates: Heimes, bishop d'Audona and suffragan for Mainz; Becker, official for Trier; Tautphoeus for Cologne and Boenicke for Salzburg, discuss, propose and adopt a plan of ecclesiastical reform. This plan was born from a thought of inepiscopal subordination.

In Luther's time, and at the height of the invasion... armed with his doctrines, two archbishops of ColoThe group had separated from Unity. One of them, GebHard Truchsès had renounced his faith and taken a wife. The trouSkin wandered without a pastor. The Church of Cologne was about to perish. because he offered no one to safeguard the principles. Rome sends a nuncio. This nuncio rallies around From him the scattered Catholics. In the common peril, he establishes certain jurisdictional rights and privileges which were not contrary to either the discipline or the decrees of the Council of Trent.

Two and a half centuries of obedience and peace have consacred this state of affairs; but in the disturbances preadorned with such care, the presence of a Nuncio in the middle of The location in the Rhineland provinces hinders the activities of the sectarians. Maximilian of Austria, Elector of Cologne and brother of Joseph II refused to receive Barthélémy Pacca, delegate of the Apostolic See. The other ecclesiastical electors adopt this approach, and the council of Ems drafts the new doctrine, which the Archbishops claim impose.

This doctrine was, more or less, the negation pure and simple of all papal primacy and the mixture of all duties. The council abolished, transcribedHe would add to it, according to the electors' pleasure. He them invested the Keys with power, he attributed to them, to expenses of the universal Church, an absolute independence read. If the Pope did not hasten to confirm the developments Thus emancipated, these bishops, said article 2, "would find in the old discipline means of to maintain their office, under the protection of the Emperor.

The priesthood took pleasure in denying or destroying self-spiritual rite of the Priesthood. By the most abnormal of contradictions, he placed himself under the yoke of the Empire, at-which, by virtue of his secondary authority, he confers the double power.

Pacca was one of those men such as the Church knows always bring it up during times of hardship. He had the courage and wisdom, perseverance and erudition. He saw more clearly than the Archbishop-electors in this Untimely uprising. He spoke with this mo-united deration to the force that is the tradition of language Roman. His opinions were scorned, his fears were smirked.
His alarms were blamed. Those who sleep cannot to suffer being awakened; and in the historical memoirs From the pronouncements of Cardinal Pacca, we see how much this awakening owed to be cruel to the voters.

"The changes introduced into ecclesiastical discipline" siastic by Joseph II, thus expresses the former nuncio to Cologne[1], had undoubtedly, against the intention of this monarch, boosted courage and rekindled the ardor of

1. Historical memoirs of Cardinal Pacca on the Cologne legation, p. 13 (Paris, 1841).

sectarians and those with ill intentions towards the Church; so that they were openly and publicly demonstrating their way of
to think, as well as their hatred against the Catholic clergy, and especially against the Holy See. They printed in the states of the Catholic princes, various works which contained so many slanders and gross insults against the Pope and the religious orders, to which the nation Germanic owed so much, from a spiritual and temporal point of view
porel, that they aroused disgust even among Protestants Honest. Prudence, duty, and self-interest.
demanded of the German clergy, in these terrible and pe-in dire circumstances, which the archbishops and bishops, as well as all members of the hierarchy, attached themselves-increasingly felt at the Apostolic See, and took the defense of the Roman Church, to which they owed the power which they enjoyed in the empire; for they de-were well aware that the sophists and the perfidious Jansesnists proposed to shift onto them, with a new-such force, the slanders and arguments with which They were attacking the Pope's power. But in this circum-Constance once again proved this axiom true: "The children of

"Darkness is more prudent than the children of light"; and the enemies of the Church succeeded in fomenting between the The Holy See and the archbishops electing this division and This debate, which scandalized the good people, caused the The clergy gained public esteem and paved the way for the funete catastrophe which, in 1803, stripped the Church of Alle-Magne of its honors, its privileges, its riches and its ancient power.

These episodes, detached from Josephism, and by making touching on the disastrous consequences, revealed the The source of the evil, without indicating the remedy. To these spirits, seeking, like Tacitus' Nero, the things impossible, and in search of a fictitious improvement to paralyze The good that was happening, a revolution was essential. Most of the sovereigns had wanted every bishop was pope among them, and that the Pope was now nothing more than a bishop.

Only one king, still young, had resisted all the suggestions. Surrounded by blind or complicit ministers; Mail, laughing at everything; Turgot, inventing the eco-political economy; Malesherbes, openly protecting social progress and Philosophy, its apostle; Necker, a Calvinist from Geneva, based public credit on an impending bankruptcy, and of the Cardinal of Loménie, preparing for apostasy and suicide, through contact Louis XVI had not had everyday interactions with sensualists never deviated from the path of honor.

But, with the attributes of a power that is still boundless, This monarch was convinced of a discouragement without measure. He was, like Cicero, more inclined to fear-to dre the disastrous events than to hope for happy re-results. In his weakness, there were many weaknesses. He bought them all back out of a deep love for the little-ple and by a delicacy of probity that borders on the sublime blime. More than any other prince, he could have said with Charles Y the Wise: "I know no happiness in lordship, except for one thing, which is the potential to do "Good to others." He never knew how to be a king to defend his authority; he never forgot it, when that of the See Roman found himself under attack. Only he was unaware—and his Ignorance of revolutions is excusable — how much one A small fire can light wood. He was content to be good. when he should have, to ensure peace and happiness of all, to be like the set square used by architects texts, a set square which is not only just and straight by herself, but who corrects and makes just all the things to which it is applied. Eraser for Pius VI, Louis XI had no crimes, errors, or vices to reproach himself for; Nevertheless, the old Pontiff and the young Monarch will to atone, in their innocence, for the sins of their predecessorssisters. They both possessed that certain something, that sense of completion. that misfortune brings.

The Revolution, prepared on all sides at once, was about to burst. No human hand could no longer able to conjure it. The Pontiff's invincible firmness failed. as well as the monarch's inexperience. According to the Cardinal de Bernis: "Braschi had a completely fran- "It was from France that his most cruel tribulations.

This century-long revolt, shedding faith from his fathers as from an unwelcome garment, has something something so profoundly sad that it frightens one, even before the Terror, to see him wander off in search of various and foreign doctrines. Always finding it ready to put his foot in the stream to splash a belief or a virtue, we follow it, going like a blind along the walls, groping his way along, like if he had no eyes, bumping into something at midday, like if he were in darkness, and plunging into the obscurRitualized like the dead. Then suddenly one feels seized at heart of one of those painful pityings that the disasters.

Along with the decadent Romans, this century did not form that a wish, he was only expressing a desire: Detvitam^ det Opes y that we be given life, that we be given the "Wealth!" he exclaimed. This century had fallen in love with this sweetheart of rest which imperceptibly gains over souls and ends by making inaction appealing. After having awakened all the evil instincts, dormant at the heart of human absurdity Maine, he set off to conquer the unknown.

The Nobility, which thinks neither of its ancestors nor of its descendants descendants, no longer even has the pride of a position since long lost. It displays a complete disregard for respect and of all faith; it celebrates the love of humanity, it im-provides pastoral care to culminate in the Terror. In the abuse of all kinds of minds, she always opens the wings, without ever being able to take flight.

Through an incredulity born of the excess of sophistry and of pleasure, we find ourselves simultaneously abandoned by God that we deny, and by the men whom we tried to corrupt-to break up. Then, driven by an incomprehensible vertigo, we throw ourselves back into the love of the marvelous and into the swaddling clothes of superstition. Paris disdains to bow down.
before Providence; Europe, following Paris, He lowers his reason before the Rosicrucians. The Gospel is having become a closed book; they are hailed as apostles of the social regeneration: the followers of the occult sciences.
Mesmer, Cagliostro, Jacob Boehme and Martinez count disciples even among the princes of the Church. Cazotte Gassner makes adjurations; he evokes the spirits of the Nebrae; Lavater puts his followers in contact with the invisible powers. Believers in the new Jerusalemvelle that Swedenborg indoctrina, freemasons, char-Latins or visionaries, try to surround themselves with everyone the prestige of white or black magic. That of Chaldeans, even theurgics themselves, have their followers. One aspires to everything that is false, obscure, fantastic, or supernatural.

Even the most inconceivable dreams are accepted with apology.
covetous teeth; these dreams are at this very moment proven truths. Weishaupt, Zwach and the Count of Bassus founded schools for enlightened individuals. They mixed the mys-tact in politics; they unsettle minds before acting to destroy bodies; they create phantoms to dominate the Lodges, and magnetism appears as the light of the unknown. We need distraction, gold, refinementsnew sensual experiences at any cost, and no one dare not apply to oneself this very true saying of Bonald: "Nothing is closer to ferocious customs than a people whose customs are voluptuous.

We had reached those times when the body of nations did not
It can bear neither the pains nor the remedies. And, something else It's painful to admit that it's necessary to say, without the kings and Princes and honest people wouldn't have known much about it.
Whom can they blame to be indignant? These kings and princes.
they themselves sullied their history; they seemed to be doomed in defiance of their own memory.

Evil grew like a trial spreads under the hand of a public accuser. Evil was pleasure, he was the law. Although it had been proclaimed by the ancients that an entire people could not be punished by any human hand, one instinctively felt that the punishment was coming. It was not right, in fact, that those who were without justice or without pity, remained without punishment.

No country had ever taken it further than France culpable disdain for its historical and Christian grandeur yours, and the contempt for centuries' experience. France traded his glory for an idol. Which attested to the strength and the merit of his old customs became a cause of disapproval. The nobility and the people allowed themselves to be per-

to believe that in order to regenerate everything, everything had to be destroyed. believed that on the ruins of the old monarchy there was nothing could be easier than replastering an entire world nine. So they began to greet the promised land before the Crossing the Red Sea. These fools of constitution and of reform, so numerous in revolutions, resemble always to the giant of Ariosto, who is chasing after his head. In that head was a hair that his enemy wanted to tear it out. In order to obtain it, he decided to cut the head. That hair, that was the abuse pursued by the hon- are true apostles of progress.

But the Revolutions, which are the crime of a petty name- They blame everyone and never offer an excuse. Instead of demanding a necessary pardon, they don't need than new foods. The National Assembly, barely assembled, would coordinate them all, as well as the prejudice- the authority of the Church only at the expense of the throne. The throne does not oppose- offered no resistance; they seemed to be showing him charity. of a kind of conditional forgetting. It was thus possible to direct against the Roman See and against the French Clergy the first stirrings of enthusiasm for the revolt. We hadn't known to free oneself from all modesty towards those who free themselves They shunned all scruples. The Empire and the Priesthood they bore the penalty for their condescension.

Everything is immutable, everything holds together, everything is linked in the Church, its faith, its principles and even its way of combat. It is Virgil's Capitoli immobile saxum, poetry's place in history. It would have been reckless. It was deemed more prudent to attack the Church openly. tooth to lead him to destroy himself with his own hands. We wanted to have him undermine, without his knowledge, the building consecrated by so many generations of pontiffs and priests.

At the Estates-General, which soon became the Assembly
In the Constituent Assembly, the Nation was represented by its three orders. Constant and traditional practice dictated that each order voted separately; the Nation petitioned the Clergy and Nobility to amend these principles. In the name of a God of peace, ■ — a sacramental phrase that does not age-will never read, as long as the Revolution has anything to be wrested from us by hypocrisy — the Clergy is summoned to to renounce one's privileges.

The high clergy, whose foresight is awakened, resist to prayers that are threatening injunctions. The simple priests, whom we have attacked through every sensitive fiber of our being, lend themselves more readily to such a concession.
They allow themselves to be told that universal happiness is attached to the annihilation of intermediate powers. The fra-The ternity must prepare the way for equality, and since the
The nation is preparing to form a people of brothers, shouldn't it not that the clergy should take the initiative for a rapprochement so desirable?

The clergy were defeated in the name of this God of peace, whose
The Revolution was so cheap, or rather he deluded himself. even, according to Montaigne's forceful expression. Without wanting it, without knowing it, at least in the most nambreuse and the healthiest part of its members, it imposed itself the yoke of a sham majority. From that moment on, the era of what were called the great principles of 1789 was open, and France became this vast reservoir from which the the bloody waters of the insurrection spread over the worldwide.

A single assembly, with no other counterweight than the
the vehemence of its speakers or the imperious demands
"He controls the street, the State, and the Church." In this Assembly, where the architects of ruins already combine Despite their efforts, there are some men who make a point of...

Moralization: a need and a pedestal. Mirabeau dominates.
this phalanx.

Its powerful breath stirs revolutionary passions.
Like the storm that shakes and bends the trees. The vices
From his youth have penetrated his bones: but, deep within this Superb and corrupt nature, there still remains, as in the germinal state, principles that would have been very difficult for him-City of abdication. Obscene writer or demolishing tribune, Mirabeau admirably represents the eighteenth century on his deathbed. He is, unbeknownst to him, the most complete type of this French nobility which, after having renounced all its beliefs and scorned all his memories, goes generous-how to die for his God and for his King, on the scal-false, in chains or in the wars of emigration and from Vendée.

When Mirabeau found himself surrounded by these men who boasted of being the sole representatives of the People, when he measured with his eye all these credulous mediocrities And all these ambitious betrayals filled him with a chill.
and at the head* The anticipated excesses of the Revolution in him-They breathed the idea of Power. At this decisive moment, his Pride even encompassed religious restraint. In 1790, one He heard him say: "No, gentlemen, the watch will not work.
It may make some noise, but it won't leave a lasting mark.
"It doesn't tell the time. The main spring is missing."

In the eyes of this promoter of disorder, who did not know not enough time to separate from some pre-stains of the first and of these selfish appetites, which vice had de-Placed everywhere, what does this great spring signify? Mirabeau he revealed a little later. "We're being lost," he exclaimed, in dividing us too much, instead of showing us the urgency of unity and power.

This Revolution, at its dawn, provoked in the soul of his only statesman and his most important orator-petty monarchist thoughts and polite remorse Catholic zealots. Mirabeau had seen it in action and judged the men who were walking in search of a new France. He had scrutinized the loins and the
The heart of the various parties; he knew their strengths and weaknesses.
weak. Contempt for humankind served as his substitute for last virtue. With that supreme insolence which is the a particular mark of his genius, he disdained to believe in his contemporaries, because he had worked with them. His contemporary, indeed, freed from the halo of patriotism their splendid brow, which is always adorned by the
A grateful revolution, they were able to prepare great things.
crises and work towards a massive levelling; but they never knew how to rebuild with the wreckage of the ship-Frage. Lost, adrift in a maze of utopias, they do not learn They focused on legislating instead of building a society.

The majority of this Assembly was decimating itself, becoming impoverished she herself twisted by the disjointedness of her plans and by the infatuation with limitless power. It was destroying the throne piece by piece, and she didn't even want to shake it-1st. There were, as in all parliaments, these fundamentally honest natures, but timid and irresolute, who, with a secret inclination towards good, love to to take root in evil. We were drowning in an atmosphere-sphere of ineffable parades these brave bourgeois of the small town, these simple country priests and this crowd of innocuous nobodies, who stun their pen-seized with words, and who blind their conscience with lies. They were intoxicated by the triumph of their om-collective powerlessness; and, as in France everyone dreams equality from above, they were persuaded that the night of August 4, 1789 had only abolished titles of nobility for to make the most obscure individuals into a people of Montmorencys.

But, amidst all these vain outgrowths aimless and directionless, he encountered men who the plans were perfectly defined, and who knew about thembetter where they were tending. We made ourselves a Public opinion is spring-loaded; its movements are slowing down-They knew or accelerated at will. They kept time. on the main principles of '89, an instrument full of com-pleasure boating, around which we play all the variations that we It wants, and it makes all the sounds requested of it.
strived "to subvert and destroy the foundations of our monarchy, which was, according to the word of our ancestors-very, so well and wisely planted by the will of God. "

The Jansenists and the Gallicans, old ma- prosecutors dressed, always full of their little skirmish war against the Church and the King, wanted to proceed with caution decency and reserve, then discreetly apply the question ordinary and extraordinary. They enjoyed distilling their hatred in small doses, in order to make it penetrate more before, among the masses. They gave themselves to themselves.
the advice that the Roman emperor whispers to his boss their sole ambition was to strike the Church of
in such a way that, following Caligula's recommendation, She felt herself dying. "Ita ferij, ut se mon sentiat l. Les turmoil within the Assembly, combined with excesses

---

1 Suetonius, History of the Twelve Caesars, vol. III, p. 98.

from the street, did not allow for the extension of these adjournments ments, which diluted the bile of Jansenism in the vinaigre of Gallicanism.

Fear is the beginning of barbarism. The party philosophical, having no more considerations to maintain, no longer even having timid allies to drag along in his wake, he proclaimed He finally announced aloud the arrival of his masters. He did The People's fear of the Royalty, the Clergy, and the Nobility. Through a bold calculation, he frightened his own people with all the fables that he saw fit to put into circulation. A Rome, the ornaments from Hadrian's tomb served weapons against the Goths. The attacked civilization was trying to throw marble columns and bronze statues at the head of the new barbarians, which did not prevent them not to penetrate the heart of society.

In order to dominate the Assembly and inspire these terbeneficial arguments, which ensure the enslavement of discussion and the servitude of voting under the name of liberty, a riot daily was necessary. It was important to maintain under The terror gripped the bishops in their dioceses, the gentlemen in their castles, the honest citizen of every conditiontion in his family. This riot must have the license of its appearance in the public squares of cities and in the background from the most remote hamlet. It will be national by the cocard and cosmopolitan in intention. The riot was decreedteam, organized and disciplined with such a rare understanding of the matter, which, in their history or rather in their Apology for the French Revolution, Thiers, Louis Blanc and Michelet cannot help but applaud the impostures that they reveal.

In 1789, no one knew what pretext to invent to have the opportunity to create the national guard, the solvent the most active of the order and governments. "Everything to Suddenly, Mr. Thiers recounts*, letters began to circulate, and, crisscrossing France in every direction, announce that the bandits arrive and they cut down the crops before their maturity. People are gathering from all sides, and in a few days the whole of France is armed, awaiting the brigiants that never arrive. This stratagem, which made unthe revolution of July 14th, by provoking the arthe nation's leadership was then attributed to all parties, and since then it has been mainly blamed on the People's Party, which collected the results. It is surprising that we thus rejected the responsibility for a more ingenious stratagem

"No one is guilty."

To lie to the people, to deceive them in their isolation, exploiting his credulity to lead him into crime, all of that In Mr. Thiers' eyes, this is merely a more in-genius as guilty. Louis Blanc professes the same doctrine.
trine; he abuses the same recipe, and he says 2: “On February 28th February 1791, the day designated for the discussion of a new the emigration law had arrived. An emotion of a character-An unusual color was painted on their faces; it seemed that a mysterious finger pointed to everyone, beyond a law Similar, something terrible... In the morning, on the very false, but very actively spreading-due, which had been transported to the dungeon of Vincennes 4 weapons and ammunition of all kinds, and that it existed, from the Tuileries to this dungeon, a secret underground passage through which the the king and his family had to escape, the people of the fau-
The towns, powerfully shaken, rushed to the fortress to "Demolish it."

1 History of the French Revolution, by A. Thiers, vol. 1, p. 4 37.

2 History of the Revolution, ^a. Lckjs B.aix, t. V, p. 205.

9.

Thiers and Louis Blanc reveal the tricks of the trade.
bent with the aim of deceiving the people by slandering the court; Michelet will explain how a pre-
The assassination plot, partly linked to the conspiracy to specify... to depict the events between June 20 and August 10, 1792.

“How were we going to do it?” said this historian*,
To resist in Paris? The first thing was to...
to be master. But Paris did not have Paris, as long as the friend Prussians were in the Tuileries. It was through the Tuileriesreasons why the war had to start.

"Will we obtain from a people, thus far inexperienced, a moment of generous anger, a violent outburst of he-Was it Romanism that caused this sublime madness? That was highly doubtful.
This people seemed too wretched, perhaps brought down by the weight of evils. Grangeneuve, from the Girondins, in the fervor of his fanaticism, he asked the capu-Cin Chabot, that he would blow his brains out, that evening, in the corner of a street, to see if this assassination, of which one would have certain-
The court, having accused them, would not decide the move.
The unscrupulous Capuchin friar had taken charge of the matter;

but, at that moment, he became afraid, and Grangeneuve proled all night, waiting in vain for death, and desolate of not being able to obtain it.

The patriotic deception and the revolutionary ambush are as expertly organized as the national guard and the Spades section. In every town there is a club, ' This club publishes a newspaper. With the help of these two mechanics... new movements, a cou- • an electric current that spreads enthusiasm or fear, and who measures hope or disappointment as he sees fit. wants to gradually lead the French nation to repudiate itself, its own history and its own cult. We breathe into the beehive, in order to enrage the bees.

---

1 History of the Revolution, by J. Michelet, vol. III, p. 542.

To entice the people and get them used to it, they loot some churches as a prelude to the spoliation of the Clergy; We burn down some castles in order to arrive faster. to equality. They teach the army, through wine and... Lost women, for disobedience is the holiest duties. The property of the clergy is confiscated, it is suppressed-religious orders are abolished, titles of nohurt.

When all these preliminaries of the so- decomposition The civil acts were accomplished when the King saw the revolt and the murderer wandered through his Palace of Versailles, under the protection of all these majesties of disorder; when he All that remained for the martyr of royalty was the right to countersign his dishonor or to witness his dis- At the deadline, an English minister could rightly say to the House of Commons: "I congratulate my country in advance." high destinies to which the French Revolution just called him.

By uttering these words, he demonstrated a rivalry. shop window rather than an expression of a grand thought public safety, Pitt was then condemned to not seeing the events nations only with English eyes. Burke, better inspired, did not confine itself to this mundane British interests niques. Already anarchy, despotism in turmoil, had lay hands on everything that was noble or sacred, and Burke laments the fall of France in these terms! "The age of chivalry is over. The age of the sophists, Economists and calculators succeeded him; and the Europe's glory is extinguished forever. Never, no, ja-

[1] Revolution of France, by Eim and Burke, p. 133.

but, we will not see this generous loyalty towards rank and towards sex, this proud submission, this obedience, this subordination of the heart, which, in the Even in servitude, they retained the spirit of an exalted freedom. ted! The natural ornament of life, the inexpensive defense nurture of nations, this nursery of all feelings Courageous and heroic endeavors... all is lost. This sensitivity to principles is lost, this chastity of honor for which a stain was a wound, which inspired courage by softening the fenxcity, which ennobled everything it touched, and which, in vice itself lost half its danger in him "Which will remove all its vulgarity."

When the great English Protestant publicist arrives to examine and judge the confiscation of clergy property, He expressed himself thus: "The tyrant of England, Henry VII, which was no more enlightened than were the in Rome Marius and the Sullas, and who had not studied in your new schools, Henry VIII only knew instructionthe invincible nature of despotism; one could find in this vast arsenal of offensive weapons against human rights. When he had resolved to plunder the abbeys, like the club The Jacobins plundered all ecclesiastical property, he comthreatened to establish a commission to enter the examination men of the crimes and abuses that prevailed in these comcommunities. Its commission, as expected, included truths, exaggerations, and... in his report lies; but, falsely or according to the truth, she reported on the abuses and crimes. However, although the abuses could be corrected, although the crimes the actions of a few individuals should not lead to the forfeiturethe structure of an entire community; and as in this century of darkness, it had not yet been discovered that the proPriesthood was merely the product of prejudice; all these abuses (and (there were quite a large number of them) were not looked at dice as a sufficient basis for pronouncing the confiscation, which was the goal we wanted to achieve. As a result, Henry found a way to obtain a formal resignation of all these assets. All these ma-arduous tasks were employed by one of the tyrants the most determined that history has ever recorded, as necessary preliminaries before he could laugh quer (by corrupting the members of its two Chambers) servile, through the hope of gaining something from spoils, and by the promise of a perpetual tax exemption) to request confirmation of these unfair practices by an act of Parliament. If chance had reserved this tyrant for our time, four technical words would have did the whole job, and would have spared him all this embarrassment- nothing; he would have needed nothing more than a short formula for enchantment: "Philosophy — light — Freedom — human rights.

---

[1] Revolution of France, by Edmond Burko, p. 207.

These lessons of history, dictated in 1790 by a A profound sense of justice, they were destined to remain sterile. speakers and newspapers, the only plague which, according to RiVarol, Moses did not dare to strike Egypt, they claimed the power to bind kings with chains, and the great ones of the earth with iron bonds. The man's feet covered- They would do evil; they hastened to shed blood. The Devastation and desolation were in its path. They were coaxed the people's most trivial passions. Stupidity was indulged. human; she was taught not to know how to tolerate either the neither royalty nor liberty.

The National Assembly had given the signal for excesses; she soon found herself swept up in the whirlwind stirred up by She. The law had broken down the doors of the convents. She forled the monks and nuns to return to the world; She enticed them, she lavished upon them the name of brothers and of sisters led astray by fanaticism, to train them to apostasy.

It was necessary to invent a solemn consecration of the opprobre. The most infamous clubs held their sessions in the churches of the Jacobins and the Cordeliers. The Revolution seized these names to inflict them- to his henchmen1. One was a Jacobin or a Cordelier by the The right to crimes. Then the preeminence of evil passed all entirely devoted to this double platform. The Assembly was not allowed constitutive that the derisory authorization to register and to sanction the motions of the clubs.

All these creatures, burdened by a soul, are they got rid of it as quickly as possible, by proclaiming themselves

[1] When the Dominican Friars, in other words the Dominicans were called to France; the University of Paris gave to young students of this Order the church and the house of Saint James. This church was located on Rue des Grès, between Rue Saint-Jacques and the college of Montaigu. From there they were named Patres sancti Jacobi. The People, who do not understand Latin and who abbreviate everything, called them Jacobins. This name is so odiously popular that the new Brethren The preachers never considered reviving it. It remains in the possession of the Revolution.

The Franciscans, especially those of the Great Observance, were par- They are all called Cordeliers in France, and here's why. The Franciscans accompanied Saint Louis on the crusade. In an encounter, these reli- The nobles vigorously repelled a party of Saracens. When the knights, who had witnessed the battle, came to report to King, they could never say the name of these religious men. They were funereal. Vincii. The knights designated them by the name Cordeliers. From this came came the name Cordeliors.

PIUS VI AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. 437

mant the French People, like the mud that rises from The pond thought it was water. There were no more ghosts for To frighten people, they invoked the patriots. Cardinal de Retz, who knew about it said: "When it comes to sedition, everything This makes her believe it, which increases it. Consequently, we gave the riot formidable proportions. It was made Right, duty, and power. Spoliation became a title. to civic duty; and in this Saint Bartholomew's Day Massacre of all the privileges, but one thing was forgotten: to apply to the lawyers, legislators enacting these measures, the law Cecina, who, in Rome, forbade them to have hands.

Legal theft was sanctioned. Royalty stripped itself bare. itself lost its prestige; the Nobility lost its prerogatives gatives and its property, the Clergy was condemned to almsgiving. The politicians of the Assembly believed that a time of ar- Perhaps retiring would be a good and useful thing. They hear- were republicans as advanced as Governor-Morris, the United States minister in Paris, asks how France would find a way to carry all the freedom she took upon herself.

These questions, presented in the form of advice, do not They were not only worrying about the future. We had debased the majesty of the throne, killed the nobility and impoverished the Clergy. They felt the need to rest a little at amidst the accumulated debris. But the ruin of the Church, consumed in a few hours, did not satisfy everyone appetites. In the eyes of the greedy and the hungry, spo- The alliance tolled the death knell of the clergy; the Jansenists, However, they did not judge it that way. The Church reduced to the For them, begging was a spectacle of revenge and a gentle consolation; nevertheless they needed something else thing. They knew quite well his perseverance and his vitality it was necessary to know that she would recover sooner or later from a half-What a disaster. Silver wounds are not wounds. deadly. The hatred of the sophists and lawyers was in-Dormie, that of the Jansenists, watches, harsher than ja-

But they left it to others to plunder the Church;
They reserve for themselves the pleasure of dishonoring her.

Disdainful of these grand tournaments of eloquence in which Mirabeau and Abbot Maury, Cazalès and Barnave raise questions of life or death for the people.
the Jansenists, holed up in the offices of the Assemnational battle as in a citadel without walls triremes, they only form a wish, they only pursue one idea. What do all these passes matter to them, indeed?
of weapons, where words are the sword? They do not like to use...
They seek only with the dagger; they search coldly, methodically that the vulnerable spot. It was. of this calculation of advice-the aftermath of the ruin that brought forth the Civil Constitution of the Clergy.

The Jansenist Camus, or rather the pious Camus, according to Mr. Thiers, the conciliatory Fréteau de Saint-Just, nicknamed by Mirabeau the gossipy Fréteau, Goupil de Préfeln, Treilhard, Lanjuinais, Legrand, Martineau and Durand de Maillane, eight forensic experts or lawyers, gathered and combined their efforts. Official or unofficial members of the Committee Ecclesiastics of the Assembly, they develop, they direct all his votes. A few prelates and the Abbot of Montesquiou are chosen as if to counterbalance the exaggeration-tion and the abuse of Gallican liberties that Jansenism enthrones. Among these prelates is Jean-Marie Du-Iau, archbishop of Arles, whose talent is no more No doubt about it, courage and piety. Dulau was appointed to unintentionally serve as a flag and cover the mar-

Chandise. His name is popular and respected. He will give to the commission this degree of authority and trust which She feels the need. But Dulau, supported by François de Bonal, Bishop of Clermont, by Charles de Mercy, Bishop of Luçon, by the Prince of Robecq, the Marquis of Bouthillier, and by the priests Vanneau, Lalande and Grandin, struggles with such logic and perseverance that he exhausts himself the tenacity of the Jansenists. It even compels silence the loquacity of lawyers.

These preparatory skirmishes were perhaps the harbingers of defeat; Camus and Treilhard the con-swear by imagining a plausible pretext to compose themselves a more docile majority. Treilhard then comes to complain to the Assembly of the excessive workload to which the Committee The clergyman is bound. In order to remedy this inconvenience-They deny, which delays the Constitution of the Clergy, so vividly desired by the nation, Treilhard proposes that we add to The Commission has a number of new members.

Camus and Treilhard's wish was granted, as It had been agreed upon beforehand; and this first round of the lawyers' parliamentary maneuvering did not change the discussion, but he shifted the majority.

That was all the Revolution could demand; it obtained it.

The lawyer Chasset, the economist Dupont (of Nemours),
The Carthusian monk Dom Gerle and three priests, whom demagoguery will soon change to constitutional bishops, Massieu, Expilly and Thibault are the main auxiliary members liaires of the Ecclesiastical Committee. The Assembly did not grant him-demanded more light, but a schism framed in a bill. Dulau and his friends withdrew.

Two years apart, we find them again in each other's presence. The lawyers who wanted restoring the old cannons are Girondins or Terrorists. The priests, who claimed to bring the Church back to its primitive purity, they assassinate the King, they publicly renounce lie to their God, or end up contracting a species of legal marriage. Dulau is the first martyr to fall at the Carmes under the blows of the September Massacres.

Therefore, there are two distinct parties within this Assembly.
decisive. One, to remain true to his principles, does courageously sacrificing his fortune and his life;
the other, in order to fuel envious or greedy passions, advances towards progress and dishonor with cries of joy. Cautious, argumentative, and loquacious, these priests and these lawyers, pooling all the efforts of their pa-Their aversion to the Roman See, they do not resemble not bad at terminals that would want to insult a pyra-mide. They only seek to rely on freedom to to make the Righteous fall into their traps, because the Righteous

It is inconvenient for them. They are at work, let's see them manito publish their Civil Constitution of the Clergy.

In a few months, the Assembly had made proDiges of upheaval in the Church's economy. The On August 4, 4789, tithes were abolished; on September 27, Catholic churches are being deprived of their vases. sacred; on October 18th, monastic vows do not exist Furthermore, on November 2nd, the Nation is declared the owner of the Church's property; on April 13, 1790, he lost the administration transfer of these assets. The clergy are made into state employees, in order to enslave the priests through their needs for each day, and gradually transforming them into clerks moral policing services. On July 12, the Cona constitution whose origin we have outlined.

With a calculation of profound deceit, its authors realways rushed to attack the dogmas directly. of Christianity, which the unbelievers, their accomplices, do not ceased to be at stake. To tamper with the faith would be, According to the Jansenists, to awaken the anxieties of the People and to provoke legitimate distrust. The People are not yet It is ripe for this eagerly awaited work. It must deceive him and lead him astray by an insane slopesible. We therefore set aside the dogma, until further notice. useful opportunity, and they ingeniously use every kind of subterfuges, to dismantle the spiritual government of the Church, while shouting from the rooftops that it was being raleads back to the ancient canons and its primitive beauty.

In order to vividly grasp the spirit of the masses and to to associate with the regeneration of the Church, it had been decided that the election of their pastors would be returned to the people. This principle, accepted as the basis of the project, is an advance and A lure. The people fell for it. They were being deluded. of its future splendors, tears were drawn from him on His past calamities, he was intoxicated by his omnipotence. current. The People, dazzled, subjugated, see in all these changes usher in an era of equality and fraternity, emerging from the chaos of his supposed servitude. He applauded. with hand and heart; then, when one offers to one's naive enthusiasms the Federation's celebrations, as passWhether it's time or a toy, we manage to steal from the Church the authority she received from God.

The principle of democracy in the state, barely proproclaimed, they are trying to forcibly introduce into the Church the principle of Presbyterianism. The King was now nothing more than a countersignature machine, they want to enslave the Bishops to the same stupidity. The former constituency of France was in turmoil; the territory and boundaries were reversed dioceses. Metropolitan sees and bishoprics are abolished, We create others. We pronounce extinction and death.

legal of chapters, abbeys, priories and all benefice titles, other than those of metropolitan sees and bishoprics and cures established by the Constitution.

This Constitution decides and promulgates that the evothose who no longer need to address themselves to the Pope for this to obtain confirmation. They write to him as if he were the chief visible to the Church, only as a testimony to unity of faith and communion that they must maintain with him. It is up to the metropolitan, or the most senior bishop of the district forming the diocesan metropolis, which it Canonical confirmation must be sought. The bishops and The priests are elected by the same electoral body that appoints them.
The members of the departments and districts. The bishop cannot exercise any act of jurisdiction, insofar as it concerns awards the government of his diocese, without having de-released with his usual and permanent council. His vicars can only be removed from office with the advice of this council and by a decision taken by a majority vote. The Parish priests have the right to choose their own vicars.
among the priests ordained or admitted into the diocese by the bishop; but his approval is not required.

These are the fundamental articles of this Constitution.
tion. This is the schism in its nascent stages, the schism elaborated by the Protestant Reformation, and developed in its consequences extremes by the Jansenists, but the schism had already begun.
by law, a scandal and an oddity of which history had not no example has yet been offered. According to these past theories in laws, all power no longer comes from God, but from man. God is absorbed, erased, he gives way to an elect-sovereign elector. This elector, who is the first person who comes along, represents Christian society; it will be its organ, and,

By decree of December 24, 1789, idolaters and Jews...
Muslims, Calvinists, and unbelievers of all caste or any profession, are voters and eligible to hold office.
Nearly; the clergy alone takes no part in the election.
thus dates back to venerable antiquity and the primitive Church.

The power of the Bishops was not much, the
The Pope's power is reduced to nothing. Communion with the Holy See was limited to the simplest of forms mules. The Sovereign Pontiff learns from her what has been settled outside of his jurisdiction. He is stripped of his authority.
and France, which owes its faith and its bishops to Rome, the Constitutional France separates itself from the mother church.
France breaks all ties with the center of the Unity ca-Catholic.

Born from the long-established alliance between the Jansenism and secular Gallicanism, this Constitution had eternity for her, has forever the constitutions the most ephemeral tions. She was struck at birth of legal blindness and religious anathema. She knew

[1] It would be impossible to recall in a note all the consequences your botffonnea or extravagant of such a mode of elections. What is Passing through Toulouse is enough to give its scope. We read in Y Antidote universal, p. 48:

"The first ballot having been invalid, the electoral assembly wanted to..."
to do a second one, without giving up. Several voters, who did not want not to lose the pleasure of the show, they told their friends that in case of be-Care, we'd find them at the comedy. The need arises. We run to the comedy. media. An actor, tasked with giving his opinion, steps forward to the edge of the theater and said: "Gentlemen, the voters present here are hereby notified that..." They are waiting at the cathedral to conduct a second vote and create a "succ. esseï r des apôtres."

science.
L'

accused both by the Church and by reflection; but the goal that we had hoped to reach could no longer escape to the revolutionaries. They were going to dishonor the clergy.
French, by forcing him to swear an oath to such a violation of all ecclesiastical laws, or dispersing it and dedicate him to almsgiving, if he listened to the voice of his con-

:-9lT(Ii

ico

The hour of danger was approaching; the vast majority of the Episcopate and the Clergy did not hesitate. Under the pre-club sion, spewing blasphemies and threats-Regarding these deaths, the Bishops and Priests were unanimous.

They rejected with eloquent indignation a serment that imposed the schism on them[1]. They were placed in the alternative of subscribing to perjury or being abducted of their dioceses and parishes. This sacrifice was consumed, and the Church of France destroyed in its principe and in its action.

Impiety immediately set to work; it produced new bishops. The people of the Revolution elected them; Charles-Maurice Talleyrand of Périgord consecrated them. It-more than enough was needed to bring bad luck to such a person an assemblage of vices and betrayals.

This tiny minority was turning away from God, as if the The Lord's hand suddenly shortened so as not to to be able to save more, and as if his ear had become harder to hear. The Constitution The clergy attributed to its bishops and priests ver-civic duties , in exchange for their priestly duties. Less than two years after its promulgation, its bishops and his priests passed under the yoke of apostasy or of municipal cohabitation. Those whom the guillotine spared... repented later, or tried to maintain themselves in The Church as a stumbling block and a source of scandal. This is what the revolutionary idea has always admired-understood. So it's no surprise to see all liberal writers vouche for orthodoxy immaculate from this nascent schism, which could not be fertilized than the ridiculous.

In his History of the French Revolution and in that of the Consulate and the Empire > Mr. Thiers, who often gives Emperor Napoleon a lesson in tactics, reveals himself, in his spare time, to be more of a theologian than the Pope. The Pope and the Church have spoken out on this issue, which was even emptied, before any decision was made, by contempt with which the people welcomed its intruders. People, Church and The Pope was mistaken. Here's how: "The Assembly, in reforming abuses, said Mr. Thiers[1], did not encroach on ecclesiastical doctrines nor on papal authority, then-that the constituencies had always belonged to the temporal power. She therefore wanted to form a new division, to subjugate as in the past the priests and bishops

---

[1] Leaving this session of January 4, 1791, where the Clergy refused the Oathing with such noble energy, Mirabeau said: "By my faith, if the The profit is ours, we must admit, the honor is theirs.

to the popular election, and in this respect it did not encroach than on temporal power, since the ec- dignitaries clesiastics were chosen by the King and appointed by the Pope. This project, which was named the Civil Constitution of the Clergy, and who slandered the Assembly more than anything else that she had done, however, was the work of the deputies more pious. It was Camus and other Jansenists who, wanting to strengthen religion in the state, they sought to to bring it into line with the new laws. It is certain

---

1 History of the French Evolution, by M. Thiers, vol. I, p. 232.

that, with justice restored everywhere, it was strange that she was not the case in ecclesiastical administration either although elsewhere. Without Camus and a few others, the mem-members of the Assembly, educated in the school of philosophers, at-would have treated Christianity like all the others religions admitted into the State, and would not have been concerned about them-cut. They indulged in feelings that in our New customs dictate that it is customary not to fight.
even when they don't share them. They therefore supported Camus's religious and sincerely Christian project.
The clergy rose up, claiming that they were encroaching on the self-spiritual authority of the Pope, and appealed to Rome. The principal-The basic principles of the project were nevertheless adopted and also-
They were immediately presented to the King, who asked for time to... refer to the High Priest. The King, whose religion was enlightened recognized the wisdom of this plan, wrote to the Pope with the sincere desire to have his consent, and to to thereby overturn all the objections of the clergy. We shall see soon what intrigues prevented the success of his wishes. "

The sovereigns that the voice of their conscience or the Predicting future calamities halts on the fatal slope concessions are inevitably controlled by intrigues. They are given alms quite generously.
good intentions, but they are declared to have been achieved and con-defeated by moral ineptitude or weakness. For their evil-At this point, they all have an entourage that enslaves them to its wills or a cabal that loses them.

The Revolution grants itself, by right, a monopoly of lies, and she mentions historians who, like Mr. Thiers finds "this stratagem more ingenious than guilty.” But the Revolution only allows its own to pardon cowardice, and to take under protection From their pens, the perfidy from which she can profit. The Holy See condemns the Civil Constitution of the Clergy; the The clergy of France rejects it as an attack on self-to the integrity and indefectibility of the Apostolic See. Mr. Thiers declares that they are all mistaken. A man who took to This Constitution, a very large part, one of the bishops instituted by her, Abbot GregQire, is not entirely as absolute as the panegyrist of the Revolution, and he said: "In this Constitution, I consulted "Come, the Pope's authority is not pronounced enough."

Gregory, this man of vast ecclesiastical erudition that, but whose head was an upside-down library and the style, a continuous parenthesis, testifies to nothing He shows no regret, no remorse. He was crafting a his conscience, a kind of bastardized Catholicism, Gallican, if you will, but independent of the Church: something approaching the civil pontificate that he will dream of later Abbot Gioberti; nevertheless, Abbot Grégoire arshore to the conclusion that strikes everyone, except Mr. Thiers. Let us add, to be fair, that at twenty-five years old of interval, when reason begins to come to him with With white hair, the writer of Liberalism is not also explicit. In his History of the Consulate and the Fifth Empire, Mr. Thiers is much closer to the opinion of Gregory, that of his own. He contradicts himself; but does not does not retract yet, and he expresses himself thus: "The Relireligion was obviously one of the things with regard to thewhich the Revolution had crossed all boundaries

---

[1] Legitimacy of the civic oath, by Abbot Henri Grégoire, p. 25.

[2] History of the Consulate and the Empire, vol. III, p. 196.

fair and reasonable. Nowhere else were there so many fix. "

Then on the next page he adds: "The Assembly conconstituent j driven by this taste for regularity so natural to the spirit of the reformers, assimilated, without hesitation, the admission The transfer of Church authority to that of the State. There were diosome were too broad, others too narrow; she wanted that the ecclesiastical district was the same as the district administrative conscription, and created a diocese per department ment. Making all civil offices elective and judicial offices, she wanted to make them elective as well ecclesiastical. This arrangement seemed to him, moreover a return to the time of the early Church, where the bishops were elected by the faithful. She abolished at the same time the canonical institution, that is to say the confirmation of bishops ques by the Pope; and of all these provisions she complaid down what has been called the Civil Constitution of the Clergy. The men who acted in this way were motivated of very pious intentions. They were true believers. bleak, fervent Jansenists, but narrow-minded, stubborn in their theological disputes, minds consequently extremely dangerous in human affairs. To completeTo find fault, they demanded that the French clergy lend oath to the Civil Constitution. It was giving birth to a a matter of conscience for sincere priests, and a pretext for malevolent priests; it was, in a word, "To prepare for a schism."

"Camus's religious and sincerely Christian project," this project, which Mr. Thiers, in his History of the Revolutiontion paints such a touching picture, only prepares one schism, according to the very testimony of the author of the Consulate and of the Empire. The schism is the attack on the unity of the Church,

i

It is the peace of consciences and the tranquility of nations implicated is the civil war introduced into the sheepfold and threatening the flock. Rome owed it to all protection and light; it was his right and his duty to defend herself. By defending herself, she safeguards justice. tice and truth. It offers to all the trying devotions towards a consecration that doubles the strength and revives the courage. That is what the Revolution, in all its intermites and its peripeteia, had the most pressing interestready to prevent, which she has constantly condemned at in the name of a God of peace.

She was born to be a lamb, she is forced to become tiger. She had peaceful and virtuous instincts; the Fanaticism, intolerance, and slander change all these beautiful sentiments in packages, not finding a valid excuse that in the apotheosis of a patriotism exalted by the dangers. She was determined to remain Catholic and Christian; she is first forced to make herself a weapon of a legal schism, then to move without transition to the atheism in laws and customs. A learned hy-

Pocrisie developed this dual theme; he does today an integral part of democratic ephemerides. We do not They no longer reason, they are the only ones we swear by.

Because what we must never forget, what we must always and everywhere to compare with tolerance, with Progress and fraternity were promised, but brutality prevailed.
Fanaticism is delirium in the form of barbarity, blazing forth as soon as the Nation renounces its prejudices and walks with the century. At the heart of all written or In the professed, one inevitably finds tears of com-hypocritical demands and pains, to soften the peoples on the wars of religion, or to inspire to humanity has a holy horror of the excesses committed in the name of of faith.

The revocation of Fedet of Nantes, the dragonnades and The missionaries in their sturdy boots from the Cévennes are, with the Spanish Inquisition and the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre, a frame on which everyone embroiders inexhaustible declamations wounded. Some authors, even Catholic ones, have never dared to address such a thesis frankly. They have re-He was brought to justice. In order not to compromise too much.
their commercial popularity, they have quite innocently es-tried to have, they too, their little stone to throw at the re-political impulses of Louis XIV and religious foresight Philippe II's gieuse. Few, very few writers of our days have dared to say, with Frédéric Ancillon in his Studies:
"The only role that could befit the majesty of history-
the only one who can retain his magistracy holy and necessary is to judge actions in themselves.
same, and to always bring them closer to the eternal principles
"Pipes of the righteous."

Ancillon, despite being a Protestant, spoke thus and acted in the same way. The timid and the revolutionaries will never have such scruples. For them, the foundation-
The lie of all justice will never be the truth.

We admire their eloquence as little as possible, sprinkled with harmless interjections and hesitations embarrassed; but will we be allowed, we who only consent to walk in the ways of good meaning and truth, by asking a few simple questions to public opinion entrepreneurs?

The Priesthood and the Empire were wrong, in your opinion, to to crack down on the Albigensians, the Waldensians, the Camisards, and all those who broke away from Unity. The Compelle intrare, which gave rise to so many fine speeches and caused so much to spread across the globe, so many floods of philanthropic ink, was a violation of divine laws, an outrage against the conscience. History, odes, dramas, and novels make it so. Faith. That's very good; but then why don't you apply- Do you only express this indignation towards popes or princes? Why have you never, like Tacitus, had these flashes of distributive justice, sudden and terrible, which cast a terrifying light on the abysses of human heart?

Is it possible that those who invented and maneuvered- would still be at Are your eyes those of the apostles of tolerance? Do they, too, they would not have sought, through all sorts of threats and torture, to stifle public opinion and to understand What about pious resistance? Haven't we seen them adore an educated youth in ignorance, and fomenting these delusions of the mind, proceeding, by the most savage of inquisitions, the staging of the social paradox and of Deified disgrace? Haven't they claimed, haven't they proven not every day that, in order to achieve sovereignty of But are they allowed to dare anything against everyone?

You discover, you ardently lash out at the fana- ancient times. You declare war on it. Without truce or mercy, and this, in the name of your immortals principles of 4789, guaranteeing, you say, freedom re- religious and political equality and civil equality. But then for- What don't you see, why don't you tell us? Do not keep quiet about crimes of all kinds, persecutions of every species, of which these immortal principles were the cause Or was it a pretext?

It is beautiful to shed historical tears over misfortunes that date back several centuries, more beautiful in- core of arousing pity in the nascent generations over calami- These are often imaginary or exaggerated. Why remain silent? in the face of these evils which we witnessed, and of which he It is still possible for us to track the victims. of their blood?

The "Force them in!" is an attack on the dignity of

The man and the citizen. So be it; but then what do you say? of this National Assembly requiring an oath which repugnant to conscience? What do you think of these authorities? These new men, sword in hand and blasphemy in hand... mouth, impose this same oath on every bishop, on every priest, to any nun, under penalty of dying of hunger or in exile? Where are they, in your stories or in your novels, the accounts of these spreading persecutions from the castle to the cottage, and go back to the humblest from presbyteries to the most sumptuous of episcopal palaces? On what page do we hear you condemning these crimes, and saying with Livy: Crudelitatem damnatis., in crudelitatem ruitisj you condemn cruelty and you indulge in it- Give it yourselves?

In all the provinces of old France, in Celts mainly, who were fortunate enough not to have- I never saw Jansenists as spiritual leaders, there are Hardworking, peaceful, and faithful populations. Faith their fathers' is for them a consolation and a hope They believe in God; they believe instinctively. to the infallible supremacy of the Pope; they venerate their bishop; they love their priest, whose word and charitual sums up the Church. Their virtuous instinct is wary of these multitude of rights with which the Constitution burdens them, because without ever having heard the name MaChiavel, they know as well as he does that "men do not do good only by necessity; but as soon as they have a choice and the freedom to commit evil with impunity, they do not They do not fail to spread confusion and disorder. » &1 * t>ii

Suddenly, at a nod of legislative approval, this People must renounce his ancient beliefs. He was poorly enlightened. Without his consent, we make him happy in spite of himself; it will be necessary that, fro willingly or by force, he submits to the blessings that are bestowed upon him. against his will. jq euQ S eoaomaoo sf b sn%uqm These felicities consist of armed expulsion of every priest who has the courage of his faith, and in the advent- the liar of an intruder or a swearer, that public contempt welcomes in advance, quite convinced that by its morals The intruder will not defy the voice of the People. The unbelievers- dules, who never set foot in a church, there finally enter in the wake of the constitutional priest, and the Silence reigns there, as in a tomb. The crowd 7a followed his true pastor into the valleys or into the forests. ïoifibnoo auov ^

Through its unwavering constancy, the crowd protests con-to be innovations that repelled him. This madness, which are the true people, the working, fighting people praying and obedient, he is outlawed and declared incapable-capable of governing himself. He has just been freed.
of a yoke that hardly weighed on him; tu-constitutional officials who, through the harshest of services His studies will teach him the happiness of being free. He said and repeated throughout France the words of The Gospel: “He who does not enter by the gate into the sheepfold, but who goes up there by another

[1] Machiavelli, Discourse on Titc-Live> 1. I. i]f>\ liOYfi 3IIB3 1B*>

"This place is a thief and a robber." These words are heard and understood; the thief ignores them, and he mausaid the sheep who flee from him and do not know the voice from abroad.

The overflowing of faithful priests has begun—the
The marriage of the jurors is celebrated in the parish church.
transformed into a temple of Reason. Those who do not attend not to these doubly national holidays are declared sus-respects. They are deported or massacred, they are violated or they drown them. Age is no more spared than sex.
Humanitarian fanaticism, hands full of good deeds
he corrupts, he preaches social progress; he declares war to convictions and thought. He wants nothing to remain standing; he crushes or mutilates. He leaves the wolves in repos, and he organizes in the countryside and in the cities long hunts for priests. He replaced the Cal-by a tree of liberty. He orders that his popu-A group of brothers and friends bows before this tree, and adores the first prostitute who comes along who will be the same occasion goddess of Reason and License. This po-Pulace did not have enough money to have vices; the Revolution teaches him the rudiments of crime.

All of this was seen, but not all of this was said, or at least all of this found a national excuse in the indulgences of history. In order not to disturb his biased admirations and his great citizens of Convention, history passes by with both feet together and with eyes closed-She feigns ignorance of these prodigious attacks.
rer, or, on her good days, she makes up for them: sometimes she even approves them by the supreme law of necessity.
City, the last excuse of tyrants.

History takes these privileged ones under its wing.

"sedition at all levels," which made a stepping stone of proscription, and who tortured beliefs for to soften them. She makes a bulwark of her admirations to low-level Herostratus, terrorists kept in the spirit of wine, or fierce lovers of equality, always ready to buy the most frivolous of distinctions at the price of all the packages. History was not ashamed to accept and to glorify such shames. She accused, she accused- Saint Dominic and Torquemada will remain so for a long time to come. Philip II and Louis XIV, the bloody Mary Tudor and Pius V. But fear nothing: she will never have anything but her defending themselves, a word of blame to stammer against the countless excesses of the Revolution.

The Revolution was provoked, it merely... Answer 1. She wanted to do it peacefully, constitution-

1 On September 2nd and 3rd, 4792, the massacre of the Bishops, Priests and prisoners held at the Abbey, the Carmelites and in twenty other places, bloodied Paris. Three days later, on the 6th, the general council of the The municipality of Nantes decrees the following, which is signed by the citizens Joyau, Aimé, Payen, Donnet, Dufrexou, Gandon, Robineau, Halgan and Le Tourneux. This decree, which is a final semblance of humanity, resur- he cites the lettres de cachet in large numbers; he makes all the revocations pale in comp The Edict of Nantes and its prelude to drownings:

"The council, considering the danger that threatens the homeland and the the ills to which it is exposed today are partly the effect and the following the criminal maneuvers of the unsworn priests; that it is It is evident that these men have sworn to destroy their country, and that no consideration will never be able to rally them to the cause of freedom and equality;

"Considering that their expulsion from the kingdom is desired and requested" long ago, all good citizens considered it the only way to to restore inner peace;

"Considering that this expulsion has already been carried out for several months, if the wish of the representatives of the Nation had not been stifled by the perfidious power charged with the sanction and execution of the laws;

"Considering that the People eagerly await the implementation of the naturally and in its own way, the happiness of the Church, of the monarchy and the people. The Church, the monarchy and the

The people did not understand her. She saw herself in the cruel the alternative of succumbing or invoking a power of darkness still unknown. She placed herself under the invocation of this power, having as its elements and as its strength attractive everything that was previously considered worthless in the universe.

She called upon perjury and vice, selfishness, for help.
and greed, sloth, and pride. All these have arranged to meet around her, here in the form of orapopular demonstrators, there under the carmagnole of patriotic de-ragged. From the four corners of the world, this collection of va-gfifib aéoi, will kill 'ml law; that, justly angered by the woes heaped upon his head by this horde malevolent, he burns to be freed from it, and the slightest delay could to drive him to take justice into his own hands, as happened to Paris and other places; rîfifl

For all these reasons,

"The departmental council, deliberating in the presence of the general councils" generals of the district and the commune of Nantes, and heard the public prosecutor-General Syndic has decreed and decrees the following:

Article 1. Starting tomorrow, the commissioners of the three administrations will will return to the seminary and the castle of Nantes, where the Priests or non-juring clergymen of this department who are there are surrendered willingly, or who were brought there by force.
mée, and will notify them of the law of August 26, which orders their export;
They will order them to prepare to leave the kingdom within the specified timeframe.
by the said law.

"Ait. 2. The commissioners will make it clear to these clergymen that the administrators are willing to follow the literal execution with respect to them the decree of August 26th; but that the ferment of minds is such that it would be very imprudent of them to deviate by the in-Furthermore, the safest option for them is to prefer the sea route.
to go to any place they wish to establish their residence.

Article 3. The commissioners shall declare to these clergymen that they have to dedicate themselves within twenty-four hours, at the end of which we will come to receive their statements; that time is of the essence, and that their safety would compromised by a longer delay.

gabonds, unnamed poets, ambitious lawyers, lost women, greedy philanthropists, journalists impure lists, of hissing actors, of enthusiastic naives progress, snitching doormen and debased nobles, treacherous priests, parasitic speculators, scheming begrievous, ruined cosmopolitans, young madmen, and mothers, composed this separate France whose DeMagogie will continue to sharpen evil instincts.

The tribunes of Athenaeum or Academy, the orators of alley or history, producing republicans under the Monarchy and the communists under the Republic, are taken for this kind of France with enthusiasm Easy to explain. They legitimize his excesses in the hope to seize the profits. That is why the Civil Constitution of the Clergy and all the revolutionary laws naires find admirers or apologists in a story fabricated for the sake of a passion or interest.

Pius VI and the Sacred College had studied with a ever-increasing anxiety during the various phases of the Revolution resolution. In Rome, better than anywhere else, they know that The defining characteristic of societies and empires that are destined to end is to To foresee nothing, not even their end. Ignorance of the past veils the future, and the Pope was no longer able to admit that the The French nation was teetering on the brink of collapse. In this movement-disordered turmoil of hearts and thoughts, through these feverish agitations of struggle and pain, the soul of The Pontiff was not shaken. His brow remained pure and serene like a beautiful autumn sunset. In Each of these complications brings sadness and One more despair, he understood that a large reserve It was imposed upon him. Rome initially condemned itself to silence, to allow passions time to calm down. When she judged that the time had come to break this prudent silence was Upon his arrival, Pius VI, on March 29, 1790, addressed the Sacred-College, assembled in secret Consistory. After having explained to him-He mourned the afflictions that weighed upon the Church of France, he adds:

"When we learned all these things, did we We could have suffered so much and not raised our voices apostolic against these guilty decrees, by which They want to destroy religion, and we don't see it. that too much, breaking off all communication between the Holy-The seat and the kingdom of France? The prophet Isaiah does not He apparently disapproved of our silence, he who said: “Woe to me for having remained silent!” But in what ways? What terms could we break it off, and who should we contact?

To the Bishops: Are they not deprived of all authority? plunged into terror, and forced, for the most part, to abandon to their seats? To the Clergy: is it not scattered, humiliated bound, unable to reunite? To the Most Christian King himself- Indeed: is he not stripped of his royal power? submitted to the Estates-General, and forced to sanction all their decrees? Almost the entire nation, seduced by the phantom of a vain freedom, obeys like a slave this As- a group of philosophers insulting and attacking each other between them like rabid dogs; she forgets that the salvation of empires rests primarily on the Christ's doctrine, and that their happiness is never more assured that when obedience to the King is the effect of the full consent of all subjects, as taught Saint Augustine. Indeed, the Kings are the representatives of God to do good; they are the sons and the supports of the Church; their duty is to love her as a mother and to defend his cause and his rights.

"We know for certain that the important mission of It is our prerogative to speak, to warn, and to exhort; but we are convinced that our voice would resonate in vain in the ears of a misguided people, and whose masses, delivered under license, constantly running towards the fire, to pillaging, torture and massacre of good citizens, and violates all the laws of humanity. We still know that we must be wary of further irritating this multitude and to drive her to even more heinous crimes. Saint Gregory the Grand teaches us in a striking way that the siLence is not always irrelevant. Examining what There is a time to be silent and a time to speak, there is establishes the distinction; then he adds: & We must study- carefully determine the opportune moment for that a discreet mouth opens, and which one where the Discretion must be maintained. Who doesn't know that... Saint Athanasius remained silent, and even fled. of Alexandria at the time when that city was in the grip of The rage of the persecutors? He wrote, in fact: "Let us not be neither impetuous enough nor reckless enough to attempt the Sei"gneur." This is the same approach that Saint also followed. Gregory Thaumaturgus and Saint Dionysius of Alexandria; that is what the most skilled interpreters of sacred books.

"But it is no less true that silence" that which keeps the one to whom the duty of speaking is imposed does not It shouldn't be forever. He should only keep it until... that he can break it without danger to himself and to the others. This is what Saint Ambrose teaches us when

He said, “Now David remained silent, not forever, but for a time, not without interruption, and with all the world indistinctly; but it did not respond to its neither the enemy who insulted him, nor the one who provoked him.” As for to us, as long as our voice cannot be heard To the French nation, what must we do? We address-to serve God and to raise our fervent prayers to Him and multiplied.

"In the meantime, we have made a judgment about you"
to deliver this speech, so that people know that we Let's not ignore all the attacks being directed against the Religion and against the rights of the Holy See, and for dis-declare that the silence we have maintained should not to be attributed to negligence, much less to approval, but only to the conviction we have that this Silence is necessary for a time, and until other circumstances, which we hope to have soon to arrive by the grace of God, allow us to take "Usefully speaking."

Faced with the excesses of anarchy and the outragedies suffered by the Church, moderation and dignity of This language has something paternally solemn about it.
Pius VI seems to have seen into the future. He has prescience.
misfortunes await him, and, a martyr already prepared for the sacrifice, he communicates to all his writings an aca hundred inimitable resignations. His style flows like the waters of a beautiful river. Those who preceded him on the apostolic throne, those who followed him there, all had, they will all hope that their struggles will not remain afflicted with sterility. This hope will not deceive them any more that he not abandon Pius VI; but that one, privileged by the pain, had to atone, like Louis XVI, for fatal complacency or depravity that were not the his own. He therefore resigned himself to the punishment without having par-He participated in injustice. A devoted victim, he fought only so as not to accuse Rome of inertia or exhaustion.

Nec terremus; nec timemusj, said Saint Ambrose, so sweet and so strong in his gentleness. We do not want to ef-

*, but we are not afraid, repeated Pius VI; and His calm, dignified demeanor was the eloquent commentary

of these words. ?/b <[j0[l jaGh^B fl^

In the difficult circumstances in which the King had placed himself, between his religious duty, which he never wanted to depart, and the new political principles that it followed Louis XVI needed a guide and a friend. The old Pontiff supported the young Monarch; he inbreathed the courage of resignation, since a feeling incomprehensible mercy made Louis XVI forget

Ifj, it is not without reason that the leaders of the peoples of- the sword. In the presence of this Constitution, of which all the His vices were known to him, and he was forced to sanction them. Through all sorts of moral torture, the King hesitated and re- The French episcopate, rallied by the common danger, had gone into the breach; he fought with energy and with talent for preserving Christian unity. Louis XVI admired these generous efforts; however, his timidity- turelle made him seek advice or direction in an even higher authority. He was waiting for Rome would have ruled on the matter. Pius VI spoke, but His brief letter never reached the monarch. It was intercepta perfidiously, in order to leave the King to grapple with his religious conscience and his political uncertainties.

Harassed by the riot, exhausted by the interrelationships- Laughing, betrayed by some, slandered by others, and not finding that prayer brought solace to so many tribes lations, Louis XVI signed with the thought that he was conjuring from greater misfortunes, for never did a prince desire less knowing that energy is always the final word in all business. We were just waiting for this moment to leave To the Constitutionalists their complete freedom of action. Pius VI had inflamed the zeal of these pastors of souls, which were violently separated from the flock entrusted to their care. By his briefs, by his letters, by his example above all, he encourages, he excites this multitude of bishops and priests faithful until death. These bishops and these priests will endure it while blessing God and bidding their last respects to the Supreme Pontiff.

---

1 This brief is dated September 22, 4790.

In the dispensation of heavenly treasures, Pius VI did not openblie point that he has, even among these Athanases of the Clergy French, sheep who no longer listen to the voice of the pas-teur. While shining the iron above their heads spiritual censures, he grades the punishments according to the offenses; he threatens, and yet his charity does not cease to be gentle, patient, and paternal. He lists them to some the burning coals that sacrilege and the nullity of acts of jurisdiction exercised by them amass on their consciences. To the others, he announces their ruin prochain. It's no longer forty days that are fixed. nevertheless, as by Jonah; Pius VI triples the longanithe prophet's moth. When this period has expired, the punishment will not begin yet; for, cries the Pontiff*, "Then again we will be filled with sorrow, we will weep-" We will groan, we will moan, we will feel our insides to dry out, as if our own members.

The one that Bossuet, in his admirable Sermon on The unit, so aptly named "the leader of the word and of

---

* Brief dated March 19, 1792.

"the conduct," he had pronounced from the pulpit of Pierre. The bishops, the priests of the Church of France, measure the depth of the precipice towards which the JanSenism and Gallicanism drove them* Bishops and Priests bow before this speaking column of the faith, whose oracles are gathered like manna heavenly. They are called upon to dishonor themselves. They must swear an oath to the Civil Constitution of the Clergy, under risk of starving to death, because the salary granted is at The price of perjury. From one end of France to the other, the The clergy rises. They refuse to obey laws that are repugnant to his honor and undermine the integrity of the Headquarters apostolic.

The arena is open to martyrs; they will rush in. singing victory hymns.

The Comtat Venaissin and Avignon were the domain of Sovereign Pontiff. The Revolution seizes him, and immediately Jourdan Coupe-Tête appears at the entrance to the Icehouse. He inaugurates in papal territory the massacres which must, in every century, to make the paper on which they will be told.

There is no longer any shadow of armed resistance, no more throne, no more intermediary powers. The Parliaments are crossed off with a stroke of the pen from the list of con- bodies established. They no longer exist, not even in memory. The ma-

The scribe, who did so much for the Revolution, is destroyed by the Revolution. The priesthood, which fought against it, is Exiled or captive. A few traitors alone or guilty. Timidities, lingering on the path of concessions, hold them. instead, while awaiting their national condemnation to abjuration and marriage. Only these bishops and these relapsed priests, whom the common sense and faith of the people take*

Whether mocked or pitied, they wander in their temples. lonely like lost souls. After disobeying at the Church, they feel struck by the unanimous disapproval Verselle.

At best, they can gather around them some indifference. In the ranks of these ecclesiastics, we count everything that made Gallicanism strong secular, everything that served to constitute the Jansenist party. It was Oratorians like Poiret who took hold, by right of conquest, of the principal parishes of Paris; of the Oratorians again who, like Daunou, Isabeau and Fou- They lend a hand to all crimes. In their resistance In their opposition to the Church, the Oratorians had as allies the Doctrinaires and the Genovefans. They have them as accomplices. of their priestly abjuration.

We wanted to go back to the old canons and to discipline Primitive Pliny. Bishops and parish priests are appointed to the plurality of voices, through the vote of the people. This people apart from that which has been shaped by murder, it sinks senselessly He faded into death like a decrepit old man. takes solemn possession of the disgrace, and, not excusing or rather, honoring only his own excesses, he does not admit He responds only to his passions, to his hatreds. He is As a citizen, he is a voter, he is an informer in his section. as he will be a juror of the Revolutionary Tribunal, in pairs francs per day, all crimes included.

Demagoguery creates a clergy to suit his needs. a clergy he elected, and to whom he imposed his vices, in hastening to adopt all of their own. This clergy, still more quickly ridiculed than condemned, product the effect of a caterpillar on a rose. It can do nothing for He is not for others. The good flee from him, the wicked from him.

They despise them. At most, on the day of vengeance Heavenly and human angers will find hearts to pity him or to teach him how to wash himself of the op-honest in the face of death.

Jansenism had taken the principle of its Constitution. Jansenism was quickly superseded, and Camus himself is indignant at the disdain he sees himself subjected to.
The Jansenist movement feels it has corrupted too much. By what-some of its leaders shuddering at the sight of these simulacra of ecclesiastical elections, where unbelief and debauchery prevail His sister had only one vote in the ballot; Jansenism confesses defeated and outclassed. Like the Girondins, he always the opposite of what he announced, and perhaps of what he wanted, at least in the least gangrenous part of its members.

The bloodshed was abhorrent to the Girondins; they put their eloquence at the service of workers in the as-assassination.

Freedom was their idol, they created tyranny.

Regicide seemed to them a crime and a wrong; they were led to kill the King.

The civil war appeared in their speeches as the most unforgivable of social attacks. Once Having been sidelined or depopulated, they declared civil war.
that they could not even sustain in the plains of the Normandy. These Marius of words, defeated without glory, found their Minturnaean marsh in the abyss of a hopeless despair.

They were heard complaining about the injustice of men and the ingratitude of revolutions. They were indignant at being outlawed by the vulgar culprits they had elevated in power. They sowed corruption, they reapedread in]'ign6minie. They had had the pride of the destruction, the most ridiculous of all forms of pride. They died, and Montaigne's words were once again fulfilled.

Once: "Those who set a state in motion, thus the author of the Essays expresses, are readily the pre-First, absorb into its ruin. The fruit of the trouble does not de-He hardly dies from the one who stirred him; he beats and confuses water for other fishermen.

Fortunately, Providence allowed what was true in Montaigne's time, it became even more so, and more so than never, during this French Revolution, where men

They seem to eat each other like fish.
had consecrated crime, and crime brought shame upon him all what she did for him. She had surrounded herself with figures kneaded in the mud; she had made the most terrifying-tables appeal to the most appalling passions. All the orgies of thought, all the depravities of the intellect-They crowned her with a crown of shame.
the outpourings of her drunken fraternity, she would go, plan-everywhere there were trees of liberty, stunted poplars decorated with ribbons, and which must be adored under penalty of dead. Everywhere their branches produced only guillotines. The guillotine was like the sun, it rose for everyone.

When nature afflicts humanity with one of those winters rigorous and groundbreaking, the ferocious beasts leap from their hideouts, then wandering to the gates of the cities, They seek to devour the first passersby. Under the During the Reign of Terror in 1793, society was condemned to the same phenomenon. She suddenly saw people coming out of certain dives vile creatures surreptitiously named, and who, without this horrible shock, would be forever remained plunged in their native darkness. The Revolution-tion, this tender mother in a red bonnet, unmuzzled these ferocity. She gorged herself on the blood of her sons every day.

And no one resisted, and everyone obeyed the ty-Ranic outlaw. This submission to the executioner does not
This can be explained by the idea that at the time in France it was worth It is better to face a single death than to dread them.
All of them. Few men were chained to servitude, They all chained themselves there voluntarily. As well as under the During Tiberius' reign, the Terror forcibly broke all relations human actions, and the more relentless the cruelty became, the more the Compassion was forbidden!

Through the resurrection and liberation of peoples, that she undertook on a fixed-price basis, we saw the Republic to temporarily and conceptually burn down foreign prisons, and she filled the Temple, the Concier- with victims gerie, les Carmes, l'Abbaye, le Luxembourg and all the palaces and all the churches. She slaughtered men in order to rejuvenate them; she was shedding the blood of France to regenerate it. She banished all memories and changed all the names. The Hôtel-Dieu was called House of Humanity; there was Marat Street, the street of Citizens, the street of the Sans-Culottes, the Lucrece- street Avenged. When the ransacked churches did not become clubs or fodder stores, they made some temples of Reason, Equality, Hymen, of the Old age, nature, or commerce. We changed the names of the cities, the calendar was turned upside down, and at the In France, as with families, nicknames were imposed which were all, in a way, a mockery and an outrage.

It was a source of shame for so many centuries and so many men.

---

[1] Tacitus, Annals, VI, 19.

heroic, erasing everything that consecrated their titles by Respect for posterity. It was a confession that the weight These immense memories weighed heavily on this generation. prepared for all acts of cowardice and ignominy by its emancipators.

Sometimes they dressed in the Greek style, sometimes in the Roman style. This poor France, disinherited from Heaven and the Monarchy. He was forced to embrace atheism for God and to face the guillotine for sovereign pontiff. Silence was a capital crime, and the Denunciation was a patriotically sanctioned profession. The law made it so. All French people suspected of being suspects. They covered up From laudatory adverbs, they decked themselves with enthusiastic adjectives The massacres decreed in the name of the People. He invented only one way to make men equal: It was a matter of cutting off their heads, in order to establish a faster-lying, on deserted ground and in the night of tombs, the grim equality of nothingness.

As in the time when, according to the energetic words of Isaiah, “God, the Lord of hosts, removed from Jerusalem and of Judah, courage and strength, all the strength of bread and With all the force of the water, the people revolted. The great They rose up against the powerful, and the rest of humanity... some against each other; the child rebelled against the old-"lard, and the lowliest of the people against the nobles." They killed The living were exhumed, the dead were dug up. Life was lived in the pulpits. Ajax of crossroads or theater, who, after having tried to diminish earthly magnitudes, dared to defy God himself. They had been carried triumphantly Voltaire and Jean-Jacques in the Pantheon. Marat, too, had its apotheosis, the ultimate expression of extravagance in anarchy. Dugazon, Trial, Ronsin, Grammont,

---

[1] Prophet. Isaiah, 111.

Collot-d'Herbois, Monvel and a thousand other actors, having learned in the acting trade how one de-came factious, were the Corybantes of these bacchanalia of impiety. Saint-Just, Robespierre, Carnot and Barère, fa-makers of little social verses, academic philanthropists half, enjoyed crossing over, on a covered boat of ribbons and roses, the river of blood they made to flow.

One of their disciples, driven by a passion for logic to the point of cynicism, he was not afraid to say: "We must, of-ask those of '93, a broad conscience that does not erase-They do not, on occasion, enter into an adulterous alliance, the faith public order violated, the laws of humanity trampled underfoot the Constitution covered with a veil to do the job
of the Revolution.

She needs all of that so that she can, in knowing the facts, working towards happiness in one's own way universal and social regeneration. We must give it grants excesses of any kind to be perpetrated or glorified to verify. He must be allowed to build mountains of human victims based on piles of corpses. The Revolution, which wants to destroy all abuses, overthrow fanaticism and destroy the family through divorce, has no other conditions to offer. That's the market.
that she puts in your hand; she can do nothing if we don't
He does not allow himself the right to lie and terrorize.

The Revolution is the obscure, gigantic and formidable-daunting image of death. According to Milton, it has a semblance of a crown on a semblance of a head, with a howl similar to that of the infernal dogs that bark endlessly nor It ceases around the belt of sin. It's a monster

1 Social Revolution) by Proudhon, p. 71.

formless, born of chaos and hell. Homer, the regicide.
thus depicted the time of Cromwell. The Committee of Salut Public was careful not to modify its report.
She was the same, with all the filth, as a hundred Years of corruption added to its inherent corruption.
In the third canto of Gerusalemme conquistata, a poem by Tasso that Jerusalem Delivered has made us forget, We read an octave, a dark prophecy, the most terrifying revolutions carried out as a whole and in its Details. The poet speaks thus:

La France adorna or da natura ed arte

Squallida im di vedrassi, e in manto negro,

Ne tempio illeso, o inviolata parte,

Ne loco da furor rimos) integro:

Vedova la corona, ovunque sparta

Le sue sostenze, et il regno affïlitto ed egro:

Délia stirpe real reciso e manco

It's pretty cool, and it's full of anger.

"This France, so beautifully enhanced by nature and through art, one day we will see her pale, defeated and covered of mourning. She will not have a temple that is not violated, not a retreat untainted by fury. The crown will be A widow, her treasures scattered, the kingdom sad and ailing, Finally, the most beautiful offshoot of the royal tree will be cut down.
cut off and the stem struck down, »

It was in 593 that God inspired Tasso with such verses. cruelly prophetic. The poet had seen it all; he had everything revealed, and he announced the calamities to France Futures. The Temple prison, the scaffold of January 21st, the unspeakable miseries of the young Louis XVII, the proscription tion of the dynasty, nothing is missing from this odyssey of misfortunes, not even the fate of Cassandra.
1 Gerusalemme conquistata. (Rome, 4593, in-4°.)

The Parliament of Paris was stirred; it condemned the prophecy.
of a decree of removal, as an infringement of rights of the crown and to the unwavering loyalty of the French.

Two hundred years ago, to the hour, the Par-crushed by the Revolution he had called for vows, his hatred and his inconsistencies, witnessed the fall of the throne. He saw it, he shared its mys-terrible pains, and, on the scaffold, he accused himself of his blind spots.

The nation had legally assassinated its King; it murders his Queen, and a voice, which will rise up to con-
to melt human pride, is being heard in Paris.
She shouts at every intersection the greatest joy of all the joys of Father Duchesne.

Voltaire had introduced these expressions into the familiar style.
low-level or pimp-like actions that one should not encounter counter that in bad places. He used it, the father Duchesne abuses it. In his journal, it is in these terms that he announces the execution of Marie Antoinette: "I saw The female veto's head fell into the bag. I would like...
f...., to express the satisfaction of the sans-culottes, when the arch-tigress crossed Paris in the car at Thirty-six doors. Her beautiful white horses, so well variegated, though well harnessed, did not lead her,

1 “I am accused of being Count of Ferney,” wrote Voitaire on May 20 1760 (vol. LVIII, p. 413 of his Complete Works), that these Jean-f...---- If they come to Ferney, I will put them in the stocks. Don't go
I wouldn't presume to write to you: To the Count, as Luc (Fré-Deric II), but write: To Voltaire, Gentleman in Ordinary to the King, title which I value, a title that the king has preserved for me with the functions; for, Good heavens! What people don't know is that the king is kind to me.
It's because I get along very well with Madame de Pompadour and Monsieur le Duke of Choiseul, and that I fear nothing and that I don't give a damn, etc.

but two nightingales were harnessed opposite Master Samson, and they seemed so pleased with concontribute to the liberation of the Republic, which they seem-they said they wanted to gallop to arrive earlier at fatal place. The g, moreover, was audacious and insoslow to the very end. However, his legs gave out.
what at the moment of making the switch to play by hand hot, no doubt fearing to find, after her death, a torture more terrible than the one she was about to face to suffer. His cursed head was finally separated from his neck.
crane, and the air resounded with cries of: Long live the Republicblique, f »

This extraordinary language, imposed on eighteenth-century France century by its reformers with blows from the guillotine, it is the Cynicism diluted in vocabulary. Licensed assassins They disowned their souls, they dishonored their nature.
they trembled before one another, but they did to tremble before them. We didn't cry, we didn't write.
No, because the eye dried up with fear, and the pen too.
as if a scorpion slept under every stone.

The patriots, the demagogues, who called themselves
The sans-culottes had come with the mission of breaking the chains of fanaticism and slavery. In prisons, they condemned to death by starvation those who did not redeem not at a golden price the right of savage sovereignty that the Revolution was setting prices. The Revolution was creating a sky of 1 We read in the Table of Prisons of Toulouse under the reign of RoBespierre, a decree of 4 Ventôse, Year II, thus conceived and signed: Groussac, Mayor; Michel, secretary: "The prisoners will be forced to pay in the cash box of citizen Estelle, treasurer of the administration, in the twenty-four hours following the publication of this, namely: the prisoners of the Visitation, the sum of thirty thousand pounds, and those of the Carmelites, that of five thousand five hundred pounds; what will be done with them?

iron and a bronze earth, and, by one of these anomalies which she loved to lavish, she presented herself as leader and for the apostle Robespierre, the man who had said: "Kill "This is a method worthy of tyrants."

This lawyer was so cold he could make the marble of the chambers cough. Pulcres. With every sentence that fell from his mouth, we were tempted to believe that he took pleasure in distilling vinegar to ice. He inaugurated the Reign of Terror. After having proclaimed at the foot of the scaffold on January 21st that Louis Capet would be the last of the Kings, he made people shout in all the churches in France that Pie YI was the last Popes.

The Republic, one and indivisible, believed it had its reasons we are for this. Through an operation in which she was seen nearShedding all appearances of legality, she removed churches, gold, silver, iron, marble, in short, everything that she could carry away; the rest was destroyed. She left not on the ground the smallest vestige that could remind us of She has no idea of religion in her heart or mind. She arhe stripped the woodwork and sculptures from the walls and the vaults; she transformed the bells into large coins; she made a clean slate of the priest, the altar, God and the Christian.

On the platform for speeches at the Convention, and as if to more directly associate the law with these saVages impieties, a donkey, wearing a mitre and clothed wearing a cloak, he crossed the Assembly amidst laughter and blasphemies. There were, in every corner of France, an altar to the fatherland, as close as possible to the schatrains jointly by such means as the administration shall deem appropriate, and no"especially under penalty of total food deprivation."

1. Parliamentary History of the Revolution, speech by Robespierre, t. X, p. 66.

false. On these altars of the fatherland, more inexorable and more bloodied like those of Tauris, they presented the spoils of fanaticism, including some brothers and friends had not deigned to accommodate themselves. With songs mo-As queurs, all these treasures of piety and re-knowledge. An honorable mention was a right ac-ropes to plunderers as an incentive bonus.

These destroyers, providentially struck by imbecilecivity, they had believed that by breaking the throne and debasing-By the altar they were thereby tearing away from conscience of the peoples and the monarchical faith and the Christian faith.
Heirs to Philosophy, Jansenism and Gallicasecularism, they were fulfilling the last wish of all these powers of anarchy: they accomplished it without pity and without remorse.

But what was bound to happen, and what no one on earth
What no one would have dared to foresee happened. The churches were no more.
Rich, they were more sacred than ever. They were Naked, they were always full. There was no more pump, the prayer rose over the rubble.

In the intoxication of pleasures and innovations, France had been caught off guard. His nobility, which had not known To live, to learn to die. We had fallen asleep in disbelief in the palaces, Catholics awoke in the prisons and on the scaffold. Like Lauzun-Biron, Custine, d'Épré-Mesnil, Dillon, Mal Esherbes and Beauharnais, each he made a profession of faith out of his repentance, and of his sufferings These women deserve a tribute to the God who forgives.
These gentlemen, these magistrates, these generals, thought that to die for the King was to die for oneself and for the family, which does not die any more than the kingdom. Only they were putting in a kind of last coquetry to the point of dying as they had lived, a rose at the mouth. We would improvise a witty remark in front of the court.

revolutionary. We exchanged pleasantries at the foot of the scaffold; one had to climb it with good taste and fall with grace. He was still the Gallic gladiator, but the a gladiator armed with Parisian nonchalance.

Heavy guillotines were erected in all the cities;
Liberty and Reason carried around more portable ones deep in the countryside. They were massacring in Arras; they were killing by famine in Toulouse; they were slaughtering people in Marseille; they drowned in Nantes; burned in Reims; made of Lyon the Commune freed by all the horrors of a siege; They were tried in Angers; they were shot in Toulon, which was Absolutely the same thing. Everywhere death was welcomed as an expiation or as a blessing. In mar- In a song of torture, the men sang the Te Deuni; The women modulated the Salve, Reaina in chorus.

When this immense hecatomb of nobles, of the people and of the priests was consumed, when the blood had flowed like water, and the number of victims was like the sand of the sea, the Revolution, which had left atheism taking the bit between his teeth, understood that it was necessary to regulate- to raise anarchy. Then the good Lord, changed into a Su- Being first, received a certificate of existence, pending his certificate of civic virtue. Then, since we only needed of a cult, the most natural, the most philosophical possible- It was possible, so everyone was granted the right to make their own. provided, of course, that the Catholic religion, apostolic, Roman, would be forever excluded from choice.

To glorify the persecuting Caesars, their courtiers Imperial authorities kept announcing the extinction of Christ*

Christianism and to have medals struck which were to to immortalize this great act of justice. On these medals we still read: Nomine Christianorum deleto. The Revolution tion had formed the same wish as the Caesars; only her medals were engraved on the ashes and on ruins. The Caesars and the Empire are gone! We search- Let's now consider whether the Revolution has a harder life than them.

But what we discover without difficulty, and not without pain- The terrifying thing is that the history of the Caesars, even if etched in stone, Tacitus and Suetonius, is out of step. In order to accumulate on the Roman world this collection of stupid pride, of senseless cruelties and incredible follies beginning to Tiberius, to end up under Heliogabalus, required the power to... more despotic, exercised for two centuries by a succession of monsters. In a single year, a few sophists, opening a boutique of emancipation in the Paris market, lawyers ignored for their talent and priests too Known for their vices, they surpassed them in excesses. of bloody imagination all the imperial madnesses. Through them, the collective crime reached such proportions, that in the eyes of certain complicit admiraltive, it rose to the sublime heights of patriotism. The adulation was never pushed so far with regard to the Neros and of Domitian, once God's justice had them left to be killed by a vulgar hand.

There is nothing better than what France is doing.
Well, nothing could be worse than what she's doing wrong. It seems that this nation, privileged above all others, must eternally-She is destined to rush headlong into extremes.
all the glories; the Revolutionaries condemn her to She bears all the blame. She takes all the initiative, she suffers.

all the reactions. Of all the men summoned by the Whether by right or by chance, she governs it, she makes gods or scoundrels, depending on her whims of the moment. She
It is pleasing to both humiliations and apotheoses. Between the Capi-sheet metal and the Gemonian Games, there is never any interval for his inconsistencies.

In unspeakable astonishment, Europe had contemp-pled indulging without restraint in immeasurable Saturnalia.
Europe had seen priests who swore allegiance to the law, like the abbot Grégoire, to come and declare from the tribune "that all the Dynasties are voracious races, living only for human flesh, and that the history of the Kings is the martyr-
"Lodge of Nations." She had learned that, after the war, In France, religion and the monarchy were, in
At a more or less recent time, the war established in principle against all religious and political authority, and Europe had folded its arms, without even wanting to de-
to ask where this torrent would stop.

A formidable insurrection against the scaffold had The Vendée uprising broke out in the western provinces.
was standing. Without weapons, without ammunition, without leaders, Without tactics, she advanced into battle, that is to say, into martyrdom, with a sublime courage that will never be surpassed, surpassed; for, as a demagogic writer said:
"There is one point in France where royalism was heroic, the Vendée," and the Vendée was left to its own devices!
His soldiers, like the Maccabees, were still fighting more by their prayers than by their weapons: Per orationes congressi surit; and before these gigantic efforts which ho-would uphold the monarchical principle, the monarchs would tu-

---

1 Monitor, session of September 21, 4792, p. 1125 and 1130.

2 History of the French Revolution, by Michelet, vol. V.

rent. Believing themselves, as if perpetually struck by the lightning, they did not understand that, during and onAfter such a harvest of attacks, it would be necessary to give to Republican France, in expiation of its ouinner tragedies, glory outside, but glory believing that liberty is carried in the folds of the tricolor flag lore. Before being defeated by arms, Europe moNarcissique was terrified by the eyes. Her steps, heavy through sleep, were slow and uncertain. She was sinking. of despair at the sight of this demagoguery to which all Crimes and all manner of happiness came as desired. Demagoguery constantly spawned monsters, and he did not never offered himself a royal Hercules or a monarchical Theseuschic to purge the earth of it. Europe resembled these patricians of old Rome who, through heroism unprecedented in their baseness, presenting their four members to slaves of the Caesars, had the resignation to suicide or binds death in the hot bath, without having the courage to Life in peril. We were silent in the face of annihilation; a The old man alone displayed the fearlessness of all.

Like Louis XIV, instructing his son in the art of regner and formulating for him the true maxims of governmentnement in this masterful style which retains its name, Pius VI was also able to say what the great King wrote on the power a people attributes to itself: "The more you give it grant, so says Louis XIV*, the more he claims; The more you flatter him, the more he despises you; and what he is once in possession is held by so many arms, that It cannot be torn down without extreme violence.

These wise words of advice, given by the grandfather and reproduced in another form by the Sovereign Pontiff, had

1 Works of Louis XIV, vol. II, p. 27.

They were listened to respectfully, but could not be followed. Pius VI then had no choice but to publicly glorify the martyrdom, by denouncing the assassins. This sublime audacity, of which the The Pope appears animated, there is a protest from the Prince and an act of the Pontiff.

“Louis XVI,” he said in this address, “the most mamagnificent perhaps, and certainly the most saintly audaciousLouis XVI, greedy of the Roman Bullary, was condemned to The death penalty, and the sentence was carried out. What

What men have therefore rendered such a judgment? Had these maneuvers prepared him? The National Convention-National, which had established itself as its judge, did it have the right to do so? No or This Assembly, after having abolished the monarchy, the best of all governments, had transported public authority in the hands of the people, incapable to listen to reason and not follow any plan of action, without discernment to appreciate things, settling the most of his decisions, not on the truth, but on his warnings, fickle, easily deceived and easily fooled to incite evil; ungrateful, presumptuous, cruel, and who He makes a game of watching human blood flow, of feasting on it of the torture and agony of his dying victims, as in antiquity he rushed to bloody spectacles of the amphitheater.

Then, amidst her sorrows, addressing this France, which he loved so much, the Pontiff exclaims: "O France! France, which our predecessors proclaimed the mirror of the entire Christian world and the unwavering pillar of faith, you who walked, not in the wake, but at the head of others nations, in the fervor of Christian piety, and the submission to the authority of the Apostolic See, how much to-Haven't you strayed from us today? What an attitude...

This site blinds you to the true religion, and has pushed you to outbursts of fury that place you at the forefront among the most cruel persecutors? And yet could you, Whenever you want to, ignore that this religion is the firmest support for empires, because it is she who re-bonuses and abuses of power by those who govern, And what about the license in those who obey? Also, that's why... those who oppose the rights of royal authority aspire to overthrow it, to the annihilation of the re-Catholic religion.

"Once again, O France! You to whom, you said, he-A Catholic sovereign was needed, because in this way the will-They were the fundamental laws of the kingdom, you had it, that Catholic monarch, and by the mere fact that he was Catholic-"You murdered him!"

The man, the Christian, the prince, each in turn prayed and wept. The Pontiff finally dried his tears; he stood up in his intrepid majesty, then, seized by a sudden and Prophetic inspiration: "A day of triumph for Louis!" he continued; for we have confidence that the Lord, Where did he get this courage that defied persecution and makes it superior to suffering, called it into her bosom, changing for him an earthly crown, alas! if frail, and lilies soon withered, against another crown imperishable, woven from those immortal lilies that adorn the "Front of the blessed."

This is the sublime challenge that an almost eighty-year-old man... genaire, having no support left but a scepter of reed, door, in the midst of the Terror, to the unleashed Revolution-born. Pie YI found in her heart and on her lips words that are a hope, cries of the soul that reconcile with humanity. While the Pope sacrifices himself-

1 finished • "

France was committed to justice and truth, but what was it doing?

What was Paris saying?

On January 21, 1793, the Republic erected its guillotine. tine on the Place Louis XV. At once accusatory, Judge and executioner, she awaits her royal victim there. For On this day of grim expiation, the people of Paris... raised. The Revolution had already made him witness more than one catastrophe. On October 6, on June 20, on August 10, on On September 2nd, she put his hands in the blood. the initial enthusiasm following the storming of the Bastille, the The people have moved on to the deceptive joys of federation. After denying his God and the worship of his fathers, he place opposite the scaffold.

This people, until then the most witty courtiers of kings his masters, borrows from the Revolution everything that will to his malcontentious whims, to his innate taste for barricades, to his eternal need for opposition and his glories from the Marquis de Tuffière shop. The nobles; the Parisian bourgeois received applause for the proscription which leaves him in first place. Someone stripped the clergy of their possessions; efforts were made to ruin them to undermine public opinion through sarcasms of impiety or by apostasy made into law. The Bourgeois of Paris, who likes to reason even with God, approved all with the eye and the hand.

At the dawn of the Revolution, he showed himself to be enthusiastic like poets, greedy like a usurer, credulous or Fearful like children. He joined this large a harvest of disorder and paradox that Philosophy and Jansenism gave rise to it. He took pleasure in bending the majesty of law under the whims of brute force.

In these delirious flights of fancy, the people of Paris, panting of equality, became intoxicated by the pains of an imagined servitude naire. The disordered precepts of all his Jamblithose, affirming only doubt, were translated into catechisms chism, that is to say in a philanthropic novel.

He had been deceived. By a marvel of stupid credulity-In bed, he took pleasure in being deceived and in knowing it; but, the On January 21st, he was afraid of his own work. This fear, which It was a holy remorse, stopped like a last A kind thought for the family home. There, dismayed and speechless before his weeping wife and children,
The bourgeois of Paris felt remorse on their foreheads, tears... my, real tears in my eyes, a cry of des-hope or indignation in the heart. Arranged on the bou-Leviard, and having become a national guardsman again, he lends himself, pale and resigned to everything the Revolution demanded of him, he did of order in honor of crime; he bears arms to villainy escaping power by force.

France, which, through all its forms of courage, committed so many cowardly acts, had allowed himself to be dethroned, imprisoned at the Temple, to judge and execute the most honest man of Kingdom, the monarch taking gentle pride in to anticipate all improvements. In the one hundred thousand citizen soldiers, intelligent bayonets that Paris threw itself onto the pavement, not one in-courageous intelligence to demand accountability from the Gains of the Convention of Abel's blood that they were shedding.

In this multitude that had been pressing in from the prison
From the Temple to the nameless square, there was not a conviction to protest. The attack had something of legality. Those who, throughout the history of France, fu-They always remained hostile to the law, they respected it when she was monstrous. The Parisian, disguised as

The soldier believed himself free from all remorse. Although in revolution it is often more difficult to know its
The Parisian knew this duty, and he He recoiled from his accomplishment. He accepted the disgrace.
which the executioners awarded him as a civic honor. Then,
From this fateful hour, the capital of the Kingdom was marked in the decrees of Providence as the city where, according to the words of an elder, disorder and whirlwind would forever expel all foresight conservative. The Terror quelled popular outrage. areas, and, in those moments, it is impossible to know to what degree of degradation does a people allow to descend his heart. Nevertheless, he always proves to be very patient for the torment of others.

Pius VI had better vision; Pius VII had a more sound understanding. appreciated the situation that the Kings of Europe and that the The French themselves. The sovereigns wondered, as in the 29th chapter of Deuteronomy: "Why the The Lord treated this country in this way, which is why he did "To unleash his fury with such violence?"

And Pius VI replied to them: "Because they abandoned the covenant that the Lord had made with their fathers, when he brought them out of Egypt, and they served and worshiped foreign gods who were unknown to them, and to the worship for which they were not intended.

The Kings of Europe had been caught off guard by the Revolution like children by the rising tide. They initially denied the danger, then they were seen. smiling at the embarrassments that fell to their good brother of France. Finally, caught off guard, some tried to By making a pact with her, the others strengthened themselves in their stA precision to be afraid of them at their leisure. Since

ISi BOOK ONE.

For a long time, the Kings of Europe no longer had any contact with each other. of common link, more center of unity and action, more of an omnipotent moderator, who calmed anger, dissipHe paid off distrust, settled disputes, and acted as guarantor. of good faith as well as of everyone's word.

Violently separated from the Church by Protestantism, or brought about, through the culpable maneuvers of their midnisters, fearing the influence of the Papacy, the princes They had isolated themselves on their thrones. They only understood each other to allow evil to be organized around them, and to make of force against the Roman Siege. By a series of circconstants that history has never bothered to to study or that it sought to obscure, the Chair of Pierre had gradually become unaccustomed to his legitimate influence. time. This influence that it exerted in the Middle Ages turnedconstantly arises for the benefit of the people, including the Popes Interpreters and tutors were formed. They were always able to stipulate, pray or command last for him. Each pontiff then had the right to say and to do what Gregory II wrote to Emperor Leo. }nQySL' entire West, he sent him with a holy freedom, has its eyes turned towards our humility... It tells us look at how the referee and moderator of the tranquil- public order... If you dared to do that, Fessai, you would... would find us ready to carry you right where you are for to avenge the insults of your subjects in the East.

This power, which was a hindrance to the monarchs and a benefit to the people, had most often been exercised by the Pontificate with admirable moderation. His authority was a counterweight and a protection, to some extent- It is also a stimulant. The army of the double prestige of the virtue and spiritual power, it drew the soverains and nations under a common flag, and the Crusades and the Battle of Lepanto, and the Great Leagues They formed at his voice. In the name of the Pope, the Legates They roamed Europe, imposing war or peace. they discussed with the princes, they negotiated with the republicans religious, they served as a link in all the differences surrenders. Feared or respected mediators, they smoothed things over. the obstacles, and everything was done for everyone to consecrate everyone's rights. The entire universe rested safely under science, wisdom, justice, and courage Christian Rome.

Through the thousand twists and turns of history, the Siege the apostolic church had never lacked men to replace to fulfill this great role of universal fatherhood. The famine strong characters and eminent minds is never felt around the Chair of Peter. The E- the church, constantly renewing itself and choosing its pontiffs, his cardinals and prelates at the highest and lowest at the bottom of the social ladder, always has at his disposal extensive capabilities that can meet all needs.

But when Lutheranism and Calvinism had divided Europe and changed its way of being, the Church com- realized that she would gradually have to fade from the political movement. litigious. It was no longer a question of being a Guelph or a Ghibelline, and to discuss with the House of Swabia the prerogatives- issues of the Priesthood or on the ambitions of the Empire. All these rivalries from another age crumbled before a a more pressing need. Rome wanted to preserve the Ca- Catholicism in a dangerous crisis. Rome resigned itself to let kings and peoples debate among themselves the questions purely temporal tions.

His calculated, but deliberate, abstention had the appearances of moral decline. By renouncing the exercise of an authority that fostered power and obedience In sance, the Popes had performed a sacrifice. No one They paid no attention to them. They spoke only in the name of of the power of the Keys; they no longer concerned themselves with anything but matters naturally subject to their examination. This was this moment chosen to accuse the Church of encroaching in the temporal domain. They shut themselves away in the matters of conscience; they kept themselves apart from everything political debate. We never wanted to convince ourselves that This abstention was serious; so they imagined doing fantasy paintings of their past preponderance. The desire was that the kings no longer have any ties with each other. nor agreed: they were taught to distrust the Pope and to be to distance oneself from the Church.

We went further. The spirit of the age, which was in marching and progressing like all the minds of the century forced the kings of the earth and their governments to to humiliate ecclesiastical power and keep it under control, while it will always be wise policy to leave believe that religion is independent. The authority of princes, legislators, and magistrates is only possible, and perhaps sustainable, when these The same peoples have the right to look at Religion as the source and first of all authorities. This thought, innate in the hearts of the multitudes, is for They offer consolation and hope. By the same token, she becomes a support for thrones, for there is only what is powerful which gives strength or which adds to it.

Politics, therefore, brought down the thrones it had claimed. to grant their wish. By frightening them with a pontiff like GréGore VII, or like Julius II, she gave birth to the princes the idea of governing themselves, and especially for themselves. This thought of selfishness should have been forced upon them. tale: they didn't even notice when the danger approached. They were deprived of that constant vigilance active which, in times of peril, united them under the banner of the Church, and pointed out to them the enemy comThey were the ones who had to be struck down with words or with the sword. remained disunited, uncertain, forming only wishes sterile, or only reluctantly lending themselves to impotence healthy combinations. Homogeneity no longer existed in the council of monarchs, she went over to the revolutionary camp revolutionary. The monarchs had disdained or weakened the

the only influence that could subdue the democratic idea; None of them felt the need to resort to Rome,
as at the source of every principle.

For reasons of wisdom that elude the common people, Rome seemed to have lost interest in all the issues political. We had seemed to fear his activity and suspect her dominance; she restricted it to matters of Faith. Especially since Benedict XIV, she had seen herself unjustly attacked, the more she had sought to show herself-very conciliatory and reserved.

Instead of lulling philosophical doubts to sleep, this Their delaying tactics had excited them. To hear them tell it The Revolution, Rome was nothing more than a ghost, but this the phantom could still exert an influence on the multitudes prodigious rise. It was tacitly agreed in the council of Kings that the progress of the century and of civilization-tion opposed any intervention by the Pont-supreme certificate. However heretical England might be, it Pitt did not share this error. He had reflected on the moral and political consequences of the revolutionary event.

He made himself its personal enemy; he sought the means to unite Europe against the preachers of demagoguery.
His tireless perseverance was not concealed.
obstacles of all kinds, including such an alliance surrounded; but he thought he had overcome more than one difficulty by proposing to the common Father to place himself at the head of this holy league.

Pius VI outraged and threatened at the podium of all the clubs and in all the theaters of France, had deemed it necessary to take some precautions in preparation for the invasion anti-Christian. Rather, to safeguard the borders of the Roman state, which was established to house the Holy Apostolic See,
he had ordered military measures and a concentration-assembly of troops around Rome. He had with him Cardinal Maury, a vigorous man, who asked nothing there is no better way than to continue the crusade by force of arms.
His eloquence had made its mark in the National Assembly.

The cardinals in the Pope's inner circle, Albani, Zelada, Antonelli, Gerdil, Busca, old Bernis and the young pre-Latin, Hercules Gonsalvi, were, by their character or by their backgrounds, all willing to support a coalition monarchical. Pitt had been made aware of these dispositions. He knew the vicar's personal courage of Jesus Christ. He knew that extreme evils require to oppose even more extreme remedies; he therefore believed that the kingdom of God could still be of this world. The kings hesitated or trembled. Even those who had weapons in hand, they fought only for the purpose to reach a transaction, the least dishonorable possiblepossible, but, above all, the most profitable to their interests of the moment.

Amidst all these royal collapses, Pitt enterssees that the only way to defeat the revolutionary idea, It is to oppose it with the religious idea. The ambassadors English in foreign courts are ordered to approve to exalt, to cite as a model the attitude and vigor of the Pope. These diplomats are following their instructionstions. Soon the praise of the Holy See and the urgency of reto know the Pope as supreme head and ostensible link of the league against the Revolution are found in the mouth of all British ministers.

•

An informal negotiation opened in London between the the cabinet of Saint James and the émigré prelates, at the head among whom was Arthur Dillon, Archbishop of Nargood. William Pitt wanted to put the big image of the The Papacy faced the Revolution; it hoped to take advantage of it. for his later views. A correspondence without caAn official statement was made on this matter between the cardinal de Montmorency-Laval and Arthur Dillon, then François de Conzié, bishop of Arras, wrote, in May 1794, to Cardinal de Bernis.

"Since my last communications from Germany, he commands the old ambassador of Louis XV and of Louis XVI near the Holy See, I received, upon my arrival Here is a note from Cardinal Zelada, Secretary of State of His Holiness, and I have spoken at length with Mr. Pitt about his content. The minister expressed to me a sincere and proexpresses admiration for the vigor displayed by the court of Rome; but he told me very frankly that, without wanting making a broad monarchical coalition a partisan affair religiously observant, he believed more than ever in intervention The Pope's position is essential in the present circumstances.

With his prodigious common sense, Mr. Pitt fits in very well in the reasons that the Holy Father develops; but he de-would like the Roman Curia to apply to the entire world the measures it has taken with a view to a republican invasion blicaine on the Papal States. Mr. Pitt thinks that he It is impossible to oppose the revolutionary torrent than by throwing the whole of armed Europe against him as a bulwark. His His ideas about this coalition are these. He told me: I don't He is not asking the Pope to personally involve himself in the... leading a political crusade or preaching it as Urban II. Those times are past; and, if I do not regret them not as an Anglican, I can well, in the situation actuelle, not having the same feeling as a man and as a British minister, responsible for to ensure the preservation of a shaken Europe. The coalition-the actions we are working on, in the name of order social, are fought and thwarted by vested interests individuals. In addition to one occasion, I have already seen the courses of the continent to back down in the face of differing opinions and of worship that separates us; I think that a link com-The world should unite us all. Only the Pope can be This center. It has Italy, Spain, Austria, and part of it. of Germany at hand. His authority, momentary-weakened by regrettable causes, can very easily to regain lost prestige, especially when the Prussia and Russia, in concert with England, there-will lay hands.* The uprising in the Vendée, which is more of a religious war than a political war. indicates that in France one could still, in several provinces, to find such devotion. I therefore believe that the Roman Curia could and should play a beautiful role amidst the upheavals.

"Based on the observation I took the liberty of making to him of the age of the Sovereign Pontiff and his way of judging the events, Mr. Pitt added that he understood and approved-had this reservation; that it had been wrong to hold the Papacy in isolation, that she was a force with which he It was always necessary to take into account, and that the governments of-they would reproach themselves for this ingratitude; but, he continued, In the face of common danger, there is no longer time to let ourselves to engage in pointless recriminations. By the agents of the gou-government abroad and by those I sent to Rome, I know the Pope's good intentions and those of the Sacred College. Since the beginning of the troubles From France, the Pope never had a moment of hesitation.

He spoke, he acted with unwavering firmness Praise. Catholicism is destroyed in France. Oh, play on all the theaters, The Pope's Marriage, and all the mothe most odious queries. At the same time, we proposing, in the middle of the Convention, the threat of my assassination.[1] My Life is short, and England is not lacking in it.
men to replace me; but to these men, attack-people like me who adhere to the conservative principles of societies Human beings, we lack a powerful lever.
too divided by personal interests or by views politically, Rome alone can make its voice heard.
biased and free from any external concerns.
Rome should therefore speak out to the extent of its responsibilities.
much more than his affections, which no one doubts.
A papal bull, presented to Catholic courts by legates to Lalere, announcing the holy war, the War against anarchy would produce a great and beneficial effect.
It would arm sovereigns and nations; it would found

[1] In the session of the Convention on August 7, 1793, Citizen Garnier (de Saintes) proposed to decree that Pitt was an enemy of humankind, and that everyone had the right to murder him. – N an indissoluble alliance, the only way to resist the saue vague enthusiasm for demagoguery. I had long conferences with some of your émigré bishops^ There are several still in their mature stages and which... would be quite ready to support our views, if the Pope were to associated. Why wouldn't we use them?

"I replied that, on an order from His Holiness, the
The French clergy were ready to make any sacrifice;
but, I ventured to add, assuming that the
The Court of Rome deems it appropriate to join a coalition Based on this, I believe we should not entrust to émigré bishops held the high offices of legate or nuncio apostolic. One would see in this choice a £rai& framework çaise; and above all, Rome should be left with its iiiib tiative. – That's exactly how I understand it, repli^iile minister, and if the Pope decided to send legates At Catholic schools, I know my country well enough to to respond in advance that they would not be received with more respect is shown in Vienna or Madrid as much as in London itself.
Religious differences fade away in an immense common peril. If the Pope agrees to publish the bull of coalition, an English fleet will cruise along the coasts from Italy to protect the Roman states, and this fleet will also carry an extraordinary ambassador^ of His Majesty near the Holy See to honor the head visible from this indispensable alliance.

"That, in short, is the account of my interview with him." Mr. Pitt. Your Eminence will see that he does not back down from no obstacle, and he knows very well how to overcome them. The The proposal that I am able to transmit has nothing - officially, it's the result of a particular conviction if one might want; but for those who know Mr. Pitt and his tenacity, he there is no doubt about Parliament's support for a semblatant project. Parliament is under the influence of the ministertre, and, like the minister, he professes the deepest Horror for all the crimes with which France is being defiled. I saw Lord Moira, Mr. Windham, Mr. Burke, the most infatigable and the most eloquent opponent of the revolution. They all believe with us that such an august manifestation could have incalculable consequences. But at Rome, where there is counsel, light, and guidance, will beDo we share the same opinion? Sir and HRH the Count of Artois, to whom I had the honor of submitting this project, the apfully prove it by letters. The Venerable Monsignor Asseline, whom I consulted during my brief travels, in desires fulfillment, but without hoping for it, he tells meHe does not believe that the time has come.

"Knowing only by hearsay the character of the personnages and being in regular correspondence only with Monsignor Consalvi and Monsignor Galefïi, precious witnesses I dare not, given the royal affection of Madame Adélaïde, nor to express an opinion, or even to formulate a wish. Business Relations with Rome are always very delicate, and, in my position the exile's condition and especially in that which the august one makes me I would not want to lose the trust of the Count of Artois. that beyond the mountains one could think that a French bishopçais sought to play politics at the expense of Holy See. Our policy is to suffer after to have struggled; Rome's role is to show us the way, to encourage us along the way, and to bless us at The arrival. These reservations made, ex intimo corde, I must do Your Eminence should note that Mr. Pitfc's proposal It seems to me to contain many advantages and very few of disadvantages. The Roman Curia is undoubtedly aware of this.

not the fate the Convention intended for him; one day or The other, the Vatican, will fall prey to our revolutionaries.
And what will become of the Pope? I care little about that.
papacy, knowing full well that it will survive; but the Holy Father touches on old age; the moral pains that afflict it blent can have a deplorable influence on his health.
The Holy City occupied or taken by storm, and the Pope dead.
Where will the conclave be located, where will it meet? All these questions that I am trying to resolve and which, in Rome, must-
The wind often presents itself to minds, making me incline for Mr. Pitt's plan. England, in this circumstance-stance, sees only the temporal interests of Europe, and his own, especially compromised; but today these interests are confused with other, more sacred ones. Wouldn't it be
Is it wise to pay somewhat close attention to it?
Mr. Pitt, while discussing the possibilities with other prelates of his proposal, put forward the idea that in the event of an invasion planned from the heritage of Saint Peter, the Pope and the Sacred Colleges could safely retreat to English ships, which would transport them to Sicily, to Madeira or the Balearic Islands; the chosen retirement location would be protected from a surprise attack by the fleets of brtannic. England has shown itself and continues to show itself every day, towards the French clergy, animated by such a holy and such generous delicacy, that I would think I was doing an insult to humanity, suspecting this of an ulterior motive the people around us, we, the outlawed bishops for our faith, of all kinds of pious homage and care paternal.

"I don't dare to insist further on all these points" Rome is a better judge than I. I pass on to Your Eminence, the main details of my interview with Mr. Pitt, and I beg you to submit them to the Holy-Father, in order to fulfill the mission I am fortunate to have...

"They were disappointed to have been put in charge."

This communication, which was not lacking in insight...
"Neither efficacy nor foresight," Cardinal de Bernis replied.
June 10, 1794:

<(The Most Holy Father, in the last audience which he deigned to grant me, he wanted to read aloud himself voice and before the Cardinal Secretary of State your letter last. In the midst of all the torments that overwhelm her, His Holiness was deeply moved and showed himself to be very-grateful for the sentiments Your Majesty expresses was the interpreter. The Pope wishes you to bear witness to this.

He expressed his sincerest gratitude to Mr. Pitt.
with such eloquence of heart and language that I I can only very faintly convey to you the impression that I felt it. The Most Holy Father appreciates it with a High wisdom, he understands all the dangers that surround him; he...
He knows them, he's been anticipating them for a long time. His unwavering Constance will know how to brave them; he has the martyrdom of duty to to endure: he prepares himself for it through prayer. Mr. Pitt has kindness to offer him, if necessary, guaranteed asylum under the protection of the British flag. His Holiness declares that she would happily accept this honorable asylum, and that the Sacred College would follow him there with full confidence.
But the Pope believes he cannot and should not allow the tomb-beautiful of the holy Apostles whom forced and constrained; his reso-The irrevocable solution is to wait, at the foot of his crucifix, the enemy coming in the name of the Revolution.

"The papal government has taken, to the extent of his resources, the military precautions which were suggested to safeguard his beloved subjects; but

It falls outside his policy, nor his wishes. fomenting wars that are more or less just. More than per-His Holiness deplores the unspeakable excesses of the what revolutionary France indulges in; but these excesses, It is not up to the sovereign Pontiff, who is always a father,
that it is their duty to punish them with temporal weapons;
The Holy See may have the will, but it no longer has the power* While admiring Mr. Pitt's active energy, The Pope resigns himself to the spectacle of evil, and waits to be part of it.
the victim^^98£jei3 im 7^q{ïie«ïJ9«j $& j#q Up tiBjioqmi iBÏSéih^ coalififRP»i^Rfc^0CCUPe Ie gouvernement britan-
The government
The pontifical court is quite willing to adhere to it and to lend it to him, spn competition: for him, it is both a right and an obligation; but For the moment, His Holiness does not wish to go any further before. The Papacy was too often criticized for its interference in the quarrels of kings and peoples so that the Holy-
The seat may still provide material for unacknowledged blame.
stunned or guilty of reprisals. The Pope cannot no longer having to order or wage war, even just war.
He preaches; all that remains for him is to suffer the consequences.
•iiioPjBfiBt'y a Not enough unity, not enough homogeneity among sovereigns, and especially in their councils, for hoping that the papal intervention would be effective desired. Mr. Pitt, who is negotiating with all these uncertainties royal or ministerial, must understand, better than

no one, the sense of dignity of which the Holy Father is animated.

To place the Pope at the head of a coalition, made up of Catholic or non-Catholic kings, and to do to render homage by these kings to the power of the Keys that they had so long disputed or refused him, was a project of uriëTfitffe^titëîligence. The Papacy alone, in fact, could have triumphed over the revolutionary idea. For this to happen, it would not have been necessary to distort his character for a long time or diminish its power over the masses. The project designed His arrival in London was therefore too late. His accomplishment was impossible; for if, at a given hour, it is always- It's easy to shake a people out of their torpor, but it's not The lethargy of princes will never be like this. We had circconscripted the papal initiative. To revive it, he it was important that she could be tempered again in the crucible of the tribeslations, and that terrible events would come to castrate ^pride of the enemies of the Church. That was the thought of fKë VI, he only concerned himself with realizing it in an intimate setting union with the Sacred College at the iùi Tff0(i >' luoonoo

"ul(Lél old Pope does not hide that the days of His reign is numbered. After having had so many words encouragement and perseverance to be given to the EpiScopat and the French clergy, after having supported them in this four-year struggle, crowned by martyrdom or Despite his exile, Pius VI did not believe his task was yet finished. With a voice made more brilliant by the approach of dangers, he extolled those who die confessing their faith; he wants to watch over, like an attentive mother, the becare for all the outcasts. Bishops, priests, nobles and people, wandering across Europe without bread and without clothing The revenues from Saint Peter's estate are greatly weakened. Pius VI imposes upon himself every personal sacrifice. the most rigorous to provide for so many glorious miseries.

He offered royal hospitality to Mesdames Adélaïde and Victoire, aunts of King Louis XVI. To all the exiles that piety or the chance of events leads to the States

To the Church, the Pontiff opens his arms and his heart; he He shares, he gives, he lavishes.

His inexhaustible charity reminds the earth, astonished by so many wonderful results, that watchful eye, which speaks of the prophet Daniel, and whose eyelids did not grow heavy Never. It seems like the miracle of multiplication Bread has become the most common thing in Rome, which was never a stepmother to anyone. Pius VI consoled, he has rescued in his states; it is necessary that his consolations and his Relief extends wherever misfortune occurs. and devotion. His hand, already trembling, never ceases to write. He urges, he implores the princes and the bishops. Italy, Spain, and Germany to form a coalition in holy generosities. He passes his soul into the soul of all the faithful, and, renewing the era of the primitive Church, he wants there to be only one in Christendom one heart and one mind.

At the sight of this benevolent solicitude, imploring of each and every one of the asylums to shelter the outcasts, monetary donations to prevent them from dying of Hunger, the universal Church applauds by imitating her. CatheQueen II of Russia made available to the émigrés well at beyond what the Pontiff's prayers seem to ask. Heretical England opens a credit to the French clergy of hospitality, which she will continue even through the desasters. Since the day she separated from unity, England has only had relations with the Holy See hostile. Pius IX has spoken; England lavishes its treasures to honor a religious consistency that she does not have imitated.

Revolutionary France had little faith in a a similar demonstration. Pius VI provoked it, Pius VI had to to suffer the glorious punishment. Rome was the point of target of all demagogic or impious ambitions. Displaying the flag of the insurrection on the Capitol building hand and place the red cap on the head of Saint Peter the bronze statue seated in the middle of the basilica was the vow of All clubs, the dream of all fools.

Only war could establish the religion of nothingness. in the capital of the Catholic world. They were fighting then. on the Rhine and the Pyrenees. The Vendée military absingle-handedly absorbed and devoured the main forces of the Republic. The Committee of Public Safety, which could well to invent in the Moniteur fourteen fabulous armies, not the It didn't go up as quickly as the scaffold. He slaughteredHe vilified his enemies and his friends; he slaughtered himself or he would banish himself, always to the applause of the people'; but war, to liberate nationalities oppressed or to annihilate kings and priests, was not neither in his intentions nor in his calculations.

1 Bertrand Barère, the Anacreon of the guillotine, who so fiercely beat my-naie on the Place de la Révolution, was the eulogist of all the crimes. He excused them, he admired them everywhere. Nevertheless, Barère was in turn outlawed, and he heard the people, once so hungry for his carma-oratorical magnolias, howling his death with mocking songs. That day, Barère was just by chance; he cursed the people who had raised him, and in his Memoirs, told by two revolutionaries [Memoirs of Barère, published by Messrs. Hippolyte Carnot and David d'Angers, vol. III, p. 28, Paris, .4843), he exclaimed: "With the French people, one must only slander the useful men, only to lose them forever. These Frenchmen, from Paris on-everything is of such a nature, such carelessness, such selfishness, that with pamphlets and newspapers they would lose themselves, and proscribe in six months all the great men of Plutarch, if nature were barbaric enough and generous enough to give it to them as a gift.

Facing the scaffold of January 21st, and all the crimes ordered or legitimized by him Barère, this man presenting you as an unrecognized Aristide and in second-hand Scipio, Barère invoking Plutarch, that's the whole thing Morality and the style of the Revolution 1

The Revolution may have tried to assemble an army without... discipline and lack of organization: this army must necessarily-to appoint a leader and a master. After having decreed Victory or death, we must finish, like the old Sar-Mates, by worshipping a sword. This idea, unbearable. to the demagogues, inspired in them fears that they would not con-They were proud of the guillotine. The Republic killed its generals. so as not to be suffocated in their embraces. Lau&un-Biron, Beauharnais, Custine, Dillon, Lucknetè^ old gentlemen; Bouchard, Beysser, Westermann, and so many other children of the people were in turn his^ She was crippled by her premonitions or her terrors. She had fear of a sword; she suspected she would perish by the saber. It was therefore only against his will that*ëHê undertook the conquest and plunder of the Etenafe nations managers, whose liberation she proclaimed. JîoJfjGfhfiq

It was not given to the Convention and its terrible Committee of Public Safety to begin the Papal States. Following the first victories in Italy of the genei&l BonapaHie is ordered to seize the patrk monk of Saint Peter. The general evaded this order and he proposes an armistice to the Pope. This armistice left the the papal tomb standing, but it inaugurates the spoliation of Rome and its museums. The Church and the State are struck by a enormous wartime contribution. This contribution, inter-fully paid, this was not enough for the Directory, which, having entered two orgies, indulges in the joyful pastime of installing to be in all the churches of Paris the worship of the theoeb eoiôioujJ xuob /libi^O te iffofioînA bi£n< ;q

1 By article 8 of this treaty of 5 Messidor year IV, the Pope must deliver to The French Republic, one hundred paintings, busts, vases or sails, your choice
"1© the sullied Republic, which notably demands the bronze bust of Junius Brtilus-, and relinquishes in the marble of Mareu* BruU;?.

philanthropy, one of whose members, Révellière-Le-Paux is the inventor. He needs the Pontiff's dishonor. supreme and the debasement of the Apostolic See. It is demanded therefore, Pius VI annulled and retracted all his Briefs re-related to the Constitution of the Clergy. >i !<yiobfi ib<

This Constitution lasted only for a speech; it did not is no longer part of the laws of the Republic. Virtual-Although abolished, it only served as a hyphen for to move towards legal atheism. The Directory is not concerned for so little; he has a passion for ridicule and love fanatical about egalitarian rapprochements. Also, by decree dated 8 Ventôse, Year IV, he orders en bloc the fer-measurement of a gambling house, a cabaret, the church Saint-André, an anarchist club and the theatre of rue Feydeau. The Civil Constitution is also his perfectly indifferent to the freedom of citizens and the honor of the country; but the Constitution is a thorn in the side.
under the Pope's bedside table. The Pope must sanction it.
by an act of public apology, even though it does not exist more. And the Directory persists in demanding "that the Saiofr The seat revoked its acts since 1789, as having been surprised in his religion by common enemies. » oqoiq

With a knife to their throats and the Republican army at at the borders of the apostolic heritage, one prayed derisory-Pius VI offered the Revolution this new pledge of Peace and love. The circumstances were so difficult that he did not want to give in to a perfectly natural impulse outrage. Twelve Cardinals were summoned and consulted.
by him. Leonardo Antonelli and Gerdil1, two lights of

*) eh £ mH *

3))ëud ,XL/i jiiiuq^fl fil

1 When in 4773 Clement XIV reserved Sigismund Gerdil as cardinal in petto, he designated it in these terms: Notus orbi, vix notus Utbi;

the Church, two of those men whom the desire for reconciliation tion will never make one weak in the face of duty, etforcefully uphold the immutable principles of politics sacred. The Congregation of Cardinals unanimously declaresstated that "the Directory's request is inadmissible," that this is an attack on the Church at its very foundations, and that the The Pope must suffer martyrdom rather than violate the laws of the Church.

This was to enter into the secret aspirations of Pius VI and to give the august old man the advice he desired. The Sacred College offered him a glimpse of a pro- martyrdom chain, the Pope simply replied: "Let no change nothing to this resolution, and we will support it, even if it cost us our lives.

The Directory declared the Pontiff tainted with fanaticism. The Pontiff had spoken, had acted within the limits of his rights and responsibilities. He didn't want to disavow himself, he could not. It was claimed—as one claims still without proof — that he was surrounded by schemers and factious minds; and that, dominated by some, deceived Because of others, he no longer had freedom of action. In order to restore this freedom to him, the Revolution marched his army on Rome.

At the beginning of his career, Bonaparte, who was not yet neither someone nor something, has only a vague premonitionmoment of its future greatness. Nevertheless, let us prinreligious symbols placed deep in his heart, or calculation of great political significance, Bonaparte, at the head of The Republican army prefers to run to noble combats than to attach his name to the sack of Rome or to the characterizing in these few words the high reputation of the writer and the humilitant of the Bar nabi te.

ruin of the Church. He is loath to improvise as executionerauthor of the Directory's revenges and to associate with sacrilegious vows of unbelief, flattering themselves to finally see The last day of Catholicism. Oppressing the Pope and... to make lawyers a scourge, is a shame to which Bonaparte wishes to withdraw, without compromising his commandate. On October 21, 1796, he wrote to the Cardinal Mattei: "Save the Pope from the greatest misfortunes; Consider that, to destroy its power, I need than the will to do it.

To these threats, which nevertheless opened a port in The storm, Cardinal Mattei replies: "The sovereign Pontiff, custodian here below of the maxims of which Jesus-Christ set the example for his faithful disciples and for the
The whole world has always sought ways to maintain peace and harmony in Christendom, and he has worn of himself to all the sacrifices that moderation more complete was able to allow it. When France, bouraised by the unfortunate events that afflict her with-Then seven years, which saddened his soul and his heart, he remembered that he was by profession the father of Christians; and then-that he saw that the children of the Church were immersing themselves in the most dreadful errors, he thought that the ways of gentleness was the only thing he had to use, hoping that it would please God to cure them of their blindness,
and to lead them to just and reasonable maxims.
It is as a result of these principles that His Holiness, making self-denial of all that is temporal, had lent itself to considerable sacrifices to preserve the peace of the State and the Church with France. The successes of your The Italian army has blinded your government, which, by an intolerable abuse of prosperity, not content with having tondufe»<^gtôs^^

and he still demanded that the Pope perform the sacrff of his anthology and those of its peoples whose administration is con-entrusted to his care, demanding of him the overthrow and the total destruction of the foundations that constitute the principles of the Christian Religion, of YÉvmgm(àëWWëim& of Church discipline. welrfcoo Indasiuq iup te

His Holiness, dismayed by these intolerant claims rables, she gathered herself in the bosom of God to ask-to the Lord that it pleased Him to enlighten him on all this that she had to do in such an unfortunate situation.
It was undoubtedly the Holy Spirit who inspired her in making her remembrance of the example of the martyrs; and, after having feèlfrî cited in vain that the Directory lent itself to condMoîfe reasonable, the Roman Court had to prepare to war: it is up to all of Europe to decide who provoked it.
The death you would frighten us with, my-General, the happiness of eternal life begins.
good people; it is also the end of prosperity.
youths of the wicked, and the beginning of their
]*& remorse has already begun,
"^fr^ctre army is formidable, but you know even you yourself that she is not invincible; we oppose her-will be our means, our consistency, the confidence that gives the good cause, and, above all, Dieri's help, that we hope to obtain. We know very well that the incredulous people and modern philosophers ridicule spiritual weapons; but if it pleased the Lord that Your barrel, in the case of deploying them, your phalanges would undoubtedly a disastrous experience of their effectiveness. I I agree with you that the war you would wage against the Pope would be of little glory to you; as for the peril that you

You wouldn't believe you'd find there, our trust in God does not allow us to believe that there were any others besides for

y#us and pflflr^iliftte^I Jaob Jfôtonètj *[fh WmtmWh&m mWSÂ^Pfà^ which, makes that of Your letter. You desire peace; we desire it. more than you. Grant us reasonable terms. and that might suit our loyal allies, and that you find- You will see both sides willing to subscribe to it. From its On that side, His Holiness will make every sacrifice to obtain it. which will not be contrary to his ffâffl^qQmùtâ an iefc .^iôjÇîft^s let us dare to believe, General, that in your In particular, you are inclined towards the principles that justice Humanity inspires estimable men, and I ^S!ftrteWours delighted by smm^mf^W^MRiM^ to the salutary soul of R#,fif01f 1U03 Bf ^MdmnoBÏm -owiq jsl ibne » Cardinal Matteî. » moo

-name çt tbuo/ aoov Snob Jliofti̇̈ &1 .sèjup

King Pie VI was surrounded by enemies. The Revolution did not ca- It neither fulfills its purpose nor its hopes. The Church, threatened in his rights and seeing his territory invaded, appeals to her allies. She invoked the protection of Austria, and Cardinal Busca, Secretary of State, and Prelate Joseph Albani, conveyed his prayer to Emperor Francis. The The prayer was not heard, or it was evaded by the baron of ïhugut. :orf ô| 6fl(3U?b

At the head of his troops, Bonaparte advances. The vic- the church follows its flags, but in a time when the priests Those very faithful to their God did not find in the Republic French people, rather than persecutors, in a time when the pontoons of the island of Rhé, Cayenne and Sinnamary, are rem- folded every day by these lawbreakers, by principle of conscience, J^onneur, Bonaparte, of his

of his own movement, grants them protection. Pius VI covered the exiled priests with his aegis; Bonaparte them covered with his sword. By a decree dated from Macerata, the 27 Pluviôse, Year V, the victor ratifies the most widely accepted wish.

song of the vanquished.

This attitude was not without danger. It was a decisive one.
so much so with the provisions of the Directory and the hostirevolutionary events, which no one could explain at the time In Paris, demagoguery and impiety were already celebrating the fall of the Roman Siege; in Italy, the general of the ar-The victorious army wrote to Cardinal Mattei: “Some anything that could happen, I beg you, sir, the cardinal, to assure His Holiness that she can remain in Rome without any kind of concern. Prime Minister of the Through religion, he will find, in this capacity, protection for himself and for the Church.

Bonaparte obviously thwarted the plans of the Directorate. Bonaparte thwarted all the projects of adversaries of the Church. The Treaty of Tolentino impoverished it-It is true, he knows. This treaty completed the stripping of her artistic treasures and most of its territory ritual. But, amidst these harsh conditions, faith remained as intact as honor. The Chair of Peter was not overturned. Pius VI was no longer required to fraternized with the constitutional apostasenes, and Bonaparte stopped at the gates of Rome, as for mon-tor that he would always be its respectful defender.

The Revolution understood nothing of such things.
deferences. The Monitor himself sought them in vain-He was unaware of the causes. They eluded him; the Revolution took hold.
his revenge.

The Roman people loved the Papacy, which was their strength.

its glory and its wealth. The Papacy is almost for He has a family inheritance. He proudly counts them all the immortal names emerging from the obscurity of the cloister or the modest functions of the priesthood to arrive at the power-supreme power. But, in this time of upheaval, he lawyers and scholars had met even in Rome, doctors, artists, disgraced nobles, misunderstood tents, idle or ruined, who dreamed of making a fortune-democracy on a pedestal. The Directory could not defeat the Bonaparte's instinctive reluctance to seize the capital of the Christian world. Through sheer artifice and suggestions, the Directory imagined it would be easy for it to triumph, without its general, over Catholicism and the Papacy.

In Ancona, a few French soldiers, encouraged by The commissioners of the Republic get to work; They usher in a new era. Anarchy replaces the conquest; the fanaticism of impiety paves the way for all the excess. Misery was profound in Rome and in the state.
The instigators, whom the Revolution managed to enroll-Gimenter, strive to sow discouragement everywhere and irritation. Pius VI had only a choice of evils, And, by a rare stroke of luck, he had preserved the Church. Pius VI
He is therefore still, and more than ever, the father of the nation.
The people of Transtever and the inhabitants of Monti acclaim him always as the savior of the people; but the agents of The Directory incited the Italians to insurrection, among whom they They make henchmen or accomplices. In the streets of Rome, the Carmagnole and the Ça ira of 1793 popularized their refrains. We read on the walls of the cupboards where the
The wishes of the Revolution are no longer concealed:
Non abbiama pationza,

Non vogliamo (iu cminerza,
We do not want Saint,
Ma egualianza, e liberîa.

Such were the songs that resounded in Rome.
reign of a few fanatics of Italian progress and humanism
The Masonic order was beginning. French booksellers, a A Jew and some Roman patriots form a conspiracy to proclaim the Republic. This plot is discovered; Others succeed him. The Pope is dying; it is necessary to pro-fitter of this moment, then, in anticipation of death Next, arrive, with Brennus shields made of bag and rope.
to replace the tiara with a red cap.

Already, on January 13, 1793, two French citizens, Flotte and Bassville, secretary of the legation in Naples, have,
through demonstrations as unusual as they were odious, tried to provoke the Roman people. The people rise up.
But it's against the agitators. Bassville falls wounded.
mortally. In his final hour, he confesses his guilt and proclaims his repentance. Bassville will nonetheless be eternal-one of those martyred heroes of the Revolution, who exploits lies so well, will always exploit the dead.

On December 28, 1797, events had, despite-The Directory, however, accused them of this.
slowness. In order to hasten them, he had ordered the riot permanently. The riot, led by the students of The French Academy is playing its part. It is attacking the papal troops. The riot, repelled, can take refuge gier in the embassy palace, which she made her Headquarters. Joseph Bonaparte, Minister of the Republic-Duphot, the republican, and General Duphot, leave the palace.

1 Lesjibr.ires were called Bouchard brothers, and the Jew, Isaac Ascanel'i.

is killed in the melee. This death, certainly very explicitcable, and above all very forgivable, provided to the Revolution tion the pretext so long sought. As long as it is a factious minority, the Revolution has as its principle of to demand, to insist on the rule of law. It is necessary that it covers the rights of people and the henchmen it needs. Once victory has been achieved through violence or surprise, The Revolution knows no other decree than its own will. Force, arbitrariness, and terror are the elements constitutive of his power.

Two and a half months before this insurrection, on October 1st... In October, the Directory wrote to Joseph Bonaparte, his Minister Plenipotentiary to the Holy See: "You have Two things to do: 4° Prevent the King of Naples from to come to Rome; 2° to help, far from retaining the good the dispositions of those who would think that it is time that the reign of the Popes should end; in short, to encourage the momentum that the people of Rome seem to be moving towards freedom.

We like to think that the ambassador of the Republic French had not followed such instructions to the letter tions, authorizing diplomatic ambush and transformation a man dressed as an international riot police officer of a sacred character. Nevertheless, the insurrection fomented by the Directory, it erupted in Rome under the protection of The French flag was lowered. Duphot had fallen victim to the less than an imprudence, and, in May 1804, in a dispatch to the First Consul, Cacault, successor of Jo-Sebastian Bonaparte, near the Holy See, is not afraid of to push justice further. "You know, thus that I, he asks Napoleon, have the details of this de-A deplorable event. No one in Rome gave the order. to shoot and kill anyone: the general was im-

I. U

Cautious; let's be clear, he was guilty. There was in Rome

A right of people, just like everywhere else.

The Directory knew this as well as Bonaparte and Cacault; but he needed an accident to legitimize a attack. We have the version of the Minister of the Republic-French republic; Cardinal Consalvi will give that of the papal government, of which he was then the Assessor of the Delia congregaziorie militare, or the Minister of Arms. They are identical. Consalvi, in his unpublished memoirs, ex-explains the death of General Duphot as follows: "This young man, An ardent and great republican, he attempted to incite a revolt.
in Rome to overthrow the papal government. Five about a hundred people had gathered under the windows of the French ambassador (whose name was Joseph) and was brother of General Bonaparte) shouting: Liberty, Long live the French Republic, down with the Pope! Duphot n'hé-Sita did not have to go down, to put himself at their head, and to the
to lead an assault on the nearest soldiers' post:
It was the one at Ponte-Sisto. The soldiers initially held themselves there.
closed in; but seeing themselves insulted and attacked, and not there Finding themselves unsafe, they advanced against the popu-She did not give in; the soldiers felt they were in a awkward position; one of them fires a shot. The fate-kindness, or rather Providence in its hidden designs, He wanted that single blow to reach the middle of this mul-General Duphot, who was in the lead, was laid dead.
The frightened crowd scattered, and the corpse was buried.
the following day.

"This death, although accidental and caused by a an act of pure self-defense on the part of the soldiers, provoked on the side of the victim by the most culpable project, threw the government and the entire city in the largest

PIUS VI AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. i\\

consternation. The result of this attack could not to be universally known at the moment. Also the villains, upon hearing that the assault had been launched, that the revolution had broken out, they rose up in insurrection.
Gunshots rang out. In various places in the
In the city, attempts were made that were unsuccessful, thanks to the promptness of the military arrangements which were taken by the authorities... One of the first things to do was to watch to the safety of the person and the ambassador's palace of France, and in a short time everything regained its appearance ordinary. Nevertheless, the following day, the ambassador left-Frenchman; no prayer from the government, no offer their complete satisfaction could not keep him in Rome.
We had to be, if not guilty, at least responsible.
"Blessed by the fact."

The Pope has nothing left but the freedom to suffer; the Cardinal Doria, his Secretary of State, increased them by aug-overcoming evil through the humility of her prayers. The Royal Court Maine was as innocent as the people and the army of this unforeseen event; it had to be accepted as a case due to force majeure. Doria and Joseph Bonaparte lost Both of them were at the head. The Directory and its Minister of Foreign Affairs foreign, Talleyrand, apostate bishop of Autun, profi-They are suffering from this double weakness.

Cardinal Doria had just succeeded Cardinal Busca, whose vigilance and ferocity demagogues fearedmete. Doria, former nuncio in Paris, believed herself to be in the obligation-mission to serve French interests, even when they were revolutionaries. He served them, and probably at the beyond his wishes. His abandonment of all individual authority-He knew the old cardinals and the young prelates. He left the Holy See at the mercy of a few insurgents, because

u.

uq

the army, which had just loyally done its duty,

found herself accused and disavowed.

The Directory usually didn't have much more energy.
What initiative! He was content to live from day to day.
to proscribe a little and intrigue a lot. It was the immorality diminished by ridicule or shame, and trying to atone for the crime by squandering the for-Public tune. Barely had the news of the general's death broken.
Is Duphot announced in Luxembourg that the Direc-
The village is covered in mourners, and mourning is imposed on the homeland and is quick to adopt concerted measures In advance. The French army is ordered to march.
on Rome. Bonaparte no longer commands it; it will have So, the misfortune of getting there.

Faced with the imminent danger, the Pontiff, even more weakened by moral pain rather than suffering He physically gathers what little strength he has left.
it breathes new life into his government; it surrounds himself with the Sacred College; then, convinced of its futility Faced with all resistance, he ordered his troops to retreat. in front of the French, in order to avoid bloodshed. The

The French enter the capital of the world without a fight.
Christian, and General Berthier, who triumphs, inaugurates the Second Republic through this expansion of the college system:

"Shadows of Cato, Pompey, Brutus, and..."
Cicero, of the Hortensius family, receive the homage of the French free in the Capitol, where you have defended so many times the rights of the people and illustrated the Roman Republic.
These children of the Gauls, with the olive tree of peace in their hands, come to this august place to restore the altars of the Freedoms erected by the first of the Brutus family. And you, people Romain, who have just reclaimed your legitimate rights,

Remember the blood that flows in your veins! Throw your eyes on the monuments of glory that surround you-nent! Reclaim your ancient grandeur and the virtues of "Your fathers!"

In the name of the free and sovereign people of Rome, a delegation of Jews, foreigners and mercenaries from the Revolution, representing the spirits of Cato and Pompey and the Brutus figures mentioned by the future Prince of Wagram.
Vice-Constable of the French Empire, dares to inform Pius VI that he has been stripped of all his temporal rights. He is informed that from that fine day onwards he is nothing more than a simple citoyen. This first insult goes unanswered. The gene-Ral Cervoni, governor of Rome, has the audacity to offer the august victim the national cockade, which will invest him with all civil rights. “I am not familiar with them,” replied Pius VI, no other uniform for me than the one the Church gave me Honored. You have complete power over my body, but my My soul is beyond your reach. I have no need of boarding house. A stick instead of a crosier and a simple habit.
suffice for the one who is to die under the hair shirt and on the
ash. I love the hand of the Almighty striking the shepherd and flock. You can destroy the dwellings-the living and the tombs of the dead, but Religion is eternal. It will exist after you, as it exists-He was before you, and his reign will continue until the end times.

This refusal falls within the revolutionary predictions; it gives the signal for all the looting. In the name of Democracy-Universal Church, a Lazarist, apostate and regicide, John Bassal, and a Swiss Calvinist named Haller, president to these abuses, which do not only affect the public treasury, on museums or on the fortunes of the partiesclerics. The Pontiff is stripped of everything that belongs to him. personal. He is insulted, he is abused, he even goes so far as to... even sharing his clothes in her presence, like The deicides shared those of Christ. He is made to attend to the proscription of the Sacred College. The Roman Republic imitates her mother and her sister from France; she confiscates, she exile, while awaiting permission to slaughter. The cardinals Albani, Busca, of York, Mattei, Gerdil, Antonelli, délia Somaglia, Rinuccini, Braschi, Archinto, Roverella, Archetti and Borgia suffer the fate reserved for Supreme Pontiff.

The citizens, whom a partial disorder improvises, had Flattered to be free, the Revolution arranges to make them more than slaves; she disguises them as extras, The Revolution had given them hope that after having put the By getting their foot in the door of civic infamy, they could put the hand in the spoliations organized by the Directory and by its commissioners. It forces them to contribute as the others to the salvation of the fatherland.

Rome, emancipated but ruined, makes its first ap- the promotion of liberty, equality and fraternity, triple chimera that is unified in death, and which, since the The beginning of the world engenders more martyrs. than executioners. Pius VI, a captive, will travel as far as the Calvary, the path of the cross laid out for him by the Revolution.

There are three perfect phases in the life of this Pontiff- distinctly; they all lead to his glorification. By ascending the throne, by reigning like a father, he is the admiration of his people. An apostolic pilgrim, he trapoured Italy and Germany amidst all due respect Catholics and Protestants. Then, when a ra- The goddess of old age covers her shoulders with white hair.

The Pontiff is called upon to render to God a supreme witness gnage. It seems that, like Saint Peter, having just offered to Jesus Christ the twofold consecration of his love and of His devotion, Pius VI heard, he collected the words which were addressed to the Prince of the Apostles by Christ He himself said: “Truly, truly, I tell you: When You were younger, 9, you used to belt yourself and you would go where you wanted; but when you are old, you will extend the hands and another will gird you and lead you where you will not You won't want to.

And the Evangelist adds: “Now, he says this to emphasize by what death he was to glorify God. And, after having Having spoken this, he said to her, “Follow me.”

The successor of the Apostles acted like Saint Peter, He followed.

In this body weakened by age and suffering, He displays a magnanimity of courage that would make others envious. hero. His pure gold crown was tested in the furnace-Seven times ardent tribulations. Nevertheless, Every word that falls from her lips is sublime; each smile of resignation that the martyr gives to princes and peoples thronging in his path, will be a blessing or a sign of happiness. It was removed harmfully tally, so that, as in the Passion narrative, he There should be no unrest among the people. It is being hidden from all eyes; there was hardly anyone around him who-devoted servants. At the moment he is about to leave Rome forever, one of those Jesuits whom the storm destroyed Perses presents himself to Pius VI. "Speak to me frankly, said the Pope to Father Marotti, secretary of Latin letters:

---

1 Gospel according to Saint John, ch. 21, v. 4 8.

Do you feel brave enough to go up with me to Cal"Vaire?" And Marotti replies: "Here I am, ready to follow the steps and the destiny of the Vicar of Jesus Christ and of my soul Verain L. » •

The peoples, whose eyes had long been accustomed to crimes and disasters, they were not surprised Not much left. However, upon seeing this old man, having strength only to bless, having a voice only To forgive, people are moved by one of these genereuses pities which prepare the restorations and make comto take up the faith. People greeted the Pontiff as he passed by, they kneeled before him; from all eyes flowed tears Tears of tenderness or veneration. More than one At times, even the common Father found himself forced to intervene to rescue from death the satellites that were escorting it and that the outraged crowd wanted to massacre.

Step by step, that is to say, from pain to pain, the victim being dragged to sacrifice passes through All trials. Trials produce hope. Italy, where everything is Catholic, even the sun, has become inbowed before this uncrowned brow, but on which resplendit the triple majesty of old age, misfortune and of virtue. Italy protested against the outrages of exile.

These protests are an insult to the Directory. One of its members, a lawyer, hunchbacked and deformed like a bag of nuts, but theophilanthropist, La Révellière-Lepaux, obtains from his accomplices in the government the trans-The Pope's visit to France. There, at least, they hope, the

1 The Archbishop of Corinth, who was Cardinal Spina; the prelate Caracciolo; two secret chamberlains, Calvesi and Morelli; Father Fantini, his confessor; Abbot Baldassari and Father Pie de Plaisance, composed the wandering house of the imprisoned Pope.

The old leaven of priestly fanaticism will not ferment to refute all their predictions.

The procession of the imprisoned Pontiff enters the In the Alps and in the mountains of the Dauphiné. Deep in this province, which gave the signal for innovations, there there were rough peasants, simple shepherds, and women... tedious, that the conquest of civil equality and of the Religious license must have been charming. The sky is filled with apostasis, the atmosphere becomes imbued with a mocking increduality. The Revolution applauds itself for abducting a dead pope or alive, and to show it to the people as the last vestige-stem of expiring superstition.

The people have grasped the lesson, but in the opposite way. He told him he was free; he uses this freedom to... kneeling by the roadside. It was legislated for him and decreed that there was no other God than the one whose The nation made its own choices at will and in the long run, "no more Pope, No more heaven, no more hell. At the sight of this poor man old man, who can barely raise his hands to bless, this The people yearn for their God; he covers with the most touching Homage to the vicar of this God.

Despite all his constitutional thefts and pillaging at At home, the French Republic is reduced to begging. The shortage of the treasury is something so inexplicable that the Revolution finds itself forced to leave to the charge of its prisoners the costs of their forced transfer. The Re-Evolution is ruthless and shameless. appealed to the base passions of his people, in order to to sorrow the patience of Pius VI; the Pontiff does not intend to... Throughout his journey, he only encountered filial voices: he only meets... respectful tenderness. Authority wants to obey superior orders she received and opposing so many Incredible demonstrations. The authorities remain baffled. in his powerlessness.

On the road that led to Calvary, the God-man found no willing hand to help him to carry his cross. Simon of Cyrene, who was returning from fields, saw this burden imposed upon him. Happier than his Master, the Pontiff-King evokes devotions everywhere. Passion Day precedes Palm Sunday, and Pius VI, dying but consoled and edified, was able to exclaim: "All of this proves that faith is not dead in France."

Her exile and her wanderings awakened her in the hearts.

The common Father, exhausted by pain and defeated by The emotion finally arrives at the citadel of Valence. The paraLysia wins over all its members, and the Directory still wants that he walks. Pius VI does not resist; it is the doctors who oppose this ruthless transfer: they declarerent that the dying man has only a few days left to to live. The Pontiff indeed died on August 29, 1799, at the age eighty-one and a half years old.

The Lord had given this great Pope the knowledge of saints. His feet walked constantly in the way right; he was zealous only for what was good. That is why, as it is said in the Book of Wisdom, God restored his long works venerated in the eyes of all, and glorified them of a final crown of honor.

There was no longer a Pope, there was never to be one again; No more Church, therefore. The Revolution rejoiced, with the Directory, to reign at the Capitol and to command last at the Vatican. She congratulated herself on having dispersed the Sacred College, and thus make any conclave impossiblepossible. The days marked by Philosophy united with Jansenists and civil constitutionalists were arriving at a pace precipitated. The Roman Catholic Church was about to fall apart. like an old wall that no longer (was, when everything at Suddenly the course of events changed with rapidity. providential.

Pius VI died on August 29, 1799. Less than three Months later, the Directory in turn succumbed under the laughingstock of France and before the sword of General Bona-The Directory wanted to corrupt everything; it is dying from His corruption. He sold everything, bought everything, debased everything. He allows itself to be auctioned off and bargained over like an object by chance. It falls into decay, without even giving dung; and, on its ruins, General Bonaparte founded a new government.

On 18 Brumaire, Year VIII (November 9, 1799), anarchy France, in ideas and in deeds, was defeated.
Europe would finally breathe a sigh of relief from this long turmoil.
of immorality. As if to offer a consecration to so much With justifiable hopes, the Conclave met in Venice on December 1st of that same year, which concludes the eighteenth century.

Meanwhile, what was happening to Rome, delivered into the hands of The first joys of his republican liberation?

By calling all peoples to revolt, by pro-proclaiming or offering themselves as the liberators of the nations oppressed peoples, the French demagogues had attributed to themselves a singular mission. They were creating republics where There were kingdoms; they killed the republics by-everywhere they were legitimized by several centuries of duration. Switzerland, Genoa, and Venice have disappeared. The poor-The truth of the Republic of San Marino alone preserved it greedy people afflicted by the Revolution; but a rep-

a Cisalpine republic, a Parthenopean republic, and a Roman republics rise in Milan, Naples and Rome, on the ruins of thrones.

The French Revolution, which organizes within itself the Brotherhood forged by the scaffold, preaching concord to all These sisters are enemies. She cannot keep them alive in Peace, she enslaves them. It is impossible for her to grant their disparate wishes; she conflates them in the same catastrophe stanza. It allows them to no longer have a God; one congratulates them on displaying the utmost disdain for the Re-religion; but, willingly or unwillingly, one must pass under the level of abuses and atrocities. The Revolution takes up arms in support of the peoples it proclaims oppressed; she never delivers them except in Marseilleease. Only she always makes them pay dearly for it map of liberation. One is only a republican at this price.
There. The foreigners, who were playing the role of the old Romans, They subscribed to it without difficulty. Immediately after departure Thus, under Pius VI, the era of civic prosperity began.

The French army was to offer Rome an example of all patriotic virtues; civil war breaks out within its ranks. There are squanderers who enrich themselves, and honest officers who are starving to death with their regiments without pay or clothing. The tax collectors of The army displays a less ostentatious luxury than their plunder.

1 We read in the History of the Abduction and Captivity of Pius VI, by Abbot Baldassari, p. 248, provides the following details on the atrocities committed:

"The agents of the Directory truly displayed a rapacity of Vandals. At the Vatican, they not only seized the paintings, but also... statues, cameos, marbles, columns, they even took juice-than to nails and locks; so that a national Institute, which one imagines-Gina then created, having wanted to hold her sessions in this palace, was forced to have the nails and locks that had disappeared replaced.

Berthier relinquished command to Masséna. The officers violating all forms of discipline and subordination military actions to safeguard the integrity of the flag.
They gather at the Pantheon, which has become their Aventine Hill.
They deliberate, they protest against their general, they acc-accuse them of "banditry and extortion." They say "that the Venetian territory, and especially Padua, is a a fertile field where the most evidence can be gathered numerous examples of his immorality.

The army was building up its reserves, the general made his proclamation He is indignant at being slandered and misunderstood. As Scipio, whom he mentions very little, but whom he quotes frequently, Masséna simply replied: "Let's go to the Capilole to give thanks to the gods for the victories I have won carried. » '

While the general ideally travels the Sa- Way

Thus, this superb residence of Roman pontiffs, where the masterpieces by Raphael and Michelangelo, and everything that Greece and Italy had produced something more curious, which presented itself to the astonished eye as a deserted and devastated dwelling, and this was the work of a civilization that had been so praised! (Botta, Storia d'Italia.) The authors of such Were these acts of vandalism not worthy of a republic that had had the pen-was it their idea to elevate sans-culottes to a virtue? Here is a sample of their imposmodesty. Despite all the looting, despite the enormous taxes paid by the Pope, the new Roman Republic was soon reduced to asking Almsgiving. It was declared in the forty-fourth issue of the Moniteur from Rome, that "the public treasury is empty, the loss and waste of funds
"national, sad legacy of the inept and rapacious administration of the government-

» past circumstances forced the provisional government to resort to the for-"Private funds to obtain some assistance." In memory of all the prosperity bestowed upon the Romans, a medal was struck with these words: Berthier, restorer Urbis; Gallia, salus generis humani.
These enemies of all virtue at least had the merit of having made a "Good epigram."

1 This address, dated Rome 9 Ventôse, was presented to the Directory.
It is inserted in the Monitor.

created, the inhabitants of Trastevere and Monti benefit the division introduced among the French to display the banner of the insurrection. Vial takes command troops, and once again military discipline triumph of despair. Cardinal Albani exercises in The Velletri mountains had a great influence. These mountains loincloths are raised to the cry: Long live the Madonna! Long live The Pope! Murat, with his usual impetuosity, pushes his cavalry upon these masses, advancing towards Rome. He them Having reached Castel-Gandolfo, he routed them.

Romans, leaderless and almost unarmed,
had fought bravely against the French army.
The Italian patriots, who were careful not to take
They take part in the fight, abusing a victory they did not earn.
won. They take up residence in the Capitol as government provisional. Under the name of Emulators of Brutw> they found a kind of Jacobin club. Lucrezias of the counter-gangs and Cornelias of the makeshift variety join it to work-to work towards the emancipation of women. The Revolution, which has only one mold and which, despite the differences in characteristics morals and customs, wants to drown all men there, im-establishes its laws and customs.

The Romans, a wittily caustic people, and wielding the Epigram even better than the stylus, do not con-
never felt like taking these evocations of the seriously past* They had witty remarks to mock things stupid, and acerbic jokes to clear their honor* The Revolution is not fond of familiarizing itself with the licenses of the mind; she is always afraid of being the one victim; She nevertheless let the inhabitants laugh at her resurrections, and she continued her work. As with among all peoples, there was among some Romans the a-death of progress and the desire to reform abuses, love and desire that make everyone tremble with the fever of revolutions lutions. These beings, predestined to sentimental foolishness or to incurable bourgeois vanities, will always the most active instruments in each combination of mess.

All civil institutions of the Pontifical government Tax breaks are eliminated. Their advantages, their abuses even are in perfect harmony with the genius of the few-
The Revolution, which concentrates everything, in order to do everything-Mining creates thousands of civil servants.
National Guard is established; it oversees the return of burdensome taxes that overburden the state. There are no more no more commerce, no more transactions; only misery reigns amidst the ruins. The heritage of Saint Peter is divided, fragmented into departments. It has its own constitution.
based on one of the ten or twelve spares that France possessed.

When all this disorder was regulated and initialed, a A French soldier made the bad joke of returning to Rome, its consuls, its senate, its censors, its aediles, his tribunes and lictors. An Oratorian, more famous Daunou, one of the..., was not known for his impiety as much as for his writings.
commissioners of the executive power in the Papal States Caux, honored with a certificate of civic virtue the seven new consuls. Two used to be enough for to govern the world; it took no less than seven to obey the call from the Directory"

The Roman Republic, barely born, was to be judged very sick, for at his cradle he was surrounded by three me-doctors, combining, with their health functions, the medical-a third of consuls. A midwife, named Angelucci, the presides1; a renegade monk, Faustin Gagliuffi, begins to the head of the tribunate. Of all Catholic institutions Only Propaganda remained standing. An order from one Unusual brevity destroys it. This order is thus conceived:

"Commissioner Halier abolishes Propaganda as "A completely useless establishment."

The senators of Rome, whom a Domitian of the crossroads could have done better than ever to deliberate in order to know What sauce should he put on the turbot, the senators con-
They enshrine in law this firman of a Calvinist.

The Inquisition and the Holy Office are abolished. The tribes-
They will sit and judge publicly. Therefore, we write

In Moniteur2: "The trial of the detainees takes place in the most Big secret. Today all is quiet. Rest is restored.
public affairs, the course of business, are in no way disturbed by the army divisions. Masséna, who did not withdraw, As had been wrongly said, continue to command. He form of clubs and public instruction societies: on Much is spoken and written. The sovereign people do not delay-will not be able to extricate himself from his stupor; but, for The present is still too steeped in ignorance.
The priests are becoming increasingly hypocritical, so as not to let to completely escape their empire. They have resumed their habit long, which they previously disdained to wear. The fanaticks moan, the guilty tremble, and the rich "They pay. That, in short, is the picture of Rome."

---

[1] We read in the Moniteur under the heading of Rome, 1 Germinal year VI, The following news item: "Consul Angelucci, a famous obstetrician-surgeon, enjoys great popularity. He published a notice announcing to his fellow citizens, whom his duties as chief magistrate will not prevent not to assist suffering humanity, when one believes one needs to his ministry as a midwife and surgeon.

[2] Rome, 47 Ventôse year VI {Moniteur).

To condemn such tyranny, accusing herself-Indeed, Tacitus would not have used other terms. Haller and Daunou reign in Rome under the name of seven con-They are ridiculous. They dictate to an inept senate the laws that will promulgate. The tribunate is responsible for announcing each morning to the Catholic universe the regeneration of the city Holy. Rome tears away the swaddling clothes of fanaticism; happiness Being republican makes her forget that she is the capital of Christian world. Everything that was ignoble, proscribed everything that who was illustrious1.

The newly manufactured Cincinnatus, escaped remnants from a nursery of parricides, could well, in their ceremonial speech, awarding oneself such praise;

---

[1] Cardinal Gonsalvi recounts, in the unpublished Memoirs on the various periods of his life, his exile and that of the main figures of Rome.
These Memoirs contain the singular tribute that the Roman Republic took pleasure in restoring equality:

“I was supposed to leave for Civitavecchia, where there were already seven or eight cardinals and various prelates. We were all destined to do sailing to America; we were relegated to Cayenne Island. However-but we did not dare to go that far, and we were only condemned to the deportation to a place of each person's choosing, with perpetual defense, under penalty of death, to return to the states of the Roman Republic.

This sentence was received as a grace of life, granted to the condemned.
born who march to the gallows.

"I choose Livorno, hoping from there to be able to join the Holy Father;
But just as I was about to leave, I was arrested again, thrown into prison from-for several weeks, escorted back to Rome, and finally it was decided to ex-I went to Naples. I had in my hands for a long time the general's order to do leaving that same night, and all together, the individuals designated on a list containing twenty-three names. Given the principles of equality which re-In those republican times, the twenty-three names were jumbled together. mixed. There were eighteen galley slaves, a religious man, two lawyers, and an officer of the old government; my name was thirteenth on that list.

“In Albano, we were taken to an inn, and we had to dinner all together.

But these praises were belied by the facts, beli-tied down especially by proscriptions and terror. Re-Armed uprisings erupt on papal soil. One would have said that the Romans were still harboring this silence of the great-anger and great terrors of which the historian speaks Latin.

The towns of Ferentino, Veroli, Terracina, Ala-Tri and Frosinone rise up to cries of "Long live Jesus!" And Marie! They're being machine-gunned, set on fire, and put in bag.

The countryside does not want to humiliate itself under a yoke Foreigners. They are oppressed in the name of freedom. Equality cults make them slaves to atheism, and in the end
The Republic, even the Roman Republic, is for everyone.
Impoverishment accompanied by dishonor. The countryside organize a war with knives against those who come-They bring them cannon war.

The Romans regained their independence. They did not They don't want foreigners to tyrannize them, fraternal-neither midwife consuls nor renegade tribunes to parody their old story.

They have taken away their Pontiff-King; they fight as the Vendée uprising. They succumbed like her; but Their defeat is still a profession of faith. The day is not far from where the martyrdom of a pope, where the prayers

The blood of some and the blood of others will bring her forth triumphant of all disasters, because the Church has always known how to operate Wonderful things in death. For her, no more night
The darker it is, the closer the light gets.

END OF BOOK ONE.

BOOK TWO.

PIUS VII AND NAPOLEON.

The Sacred College, dispersed, is unable to reunite. — Alliance of Russia, England, Austria and Turkey against the Re- French public. — Souwarow's campaign in Italy — Conclave at Venice. — Manuscript of Cardinal Consalvi. — Election of Pius VII. — The Marquis Ghisleri, envoy from Austria. — His confidential mission to the Pope. — Consalvi, Secretary of State. — Portrait of Pius VII. — His return to Rome as told by Cardinal Consalvi. — Battle of Marengo. — Bonaparte understands that a return to religious principles is necessary. — His pre- First openings in Rome. — The Revolution retreats before the first Consul, and changes tactics. — First negotiations relating to the Concordat. — The First Consul wants to deal directly in Paris with Cardinal Con- Salvi. — Bonaparte and Consalvi. — The Cardinal's account of these negotiations. — Signing of the Concordat. — The Constitutional Church formed into a club. — The policies of this party. — Its lies and doctrines. — Abbé Grégoire and the French Church. — The intruder Vernerey and teaching by the Saints Fathers. — The Pope, condemned to omnipotence, forces the French bishops to to resign from their seats. — The French episcopate and Abbot Bernier. — If- Religious destruction in Europe at the time of the Concordat. — Joy of France Upon the reopening of the churches, Napoleon had himself proclaimed emperor. Negotiations with Rome for the coronation. — Pius VII in Paris. — Meeting of the Grand Sanhedrin. — He declares that the Jews have never been persecuted by Rome. — Napoleon and Pius VII. — The regicide Alquier, ambassador of France near the Holy See. — Alquier's maneuvers. — Address that the The Pope addresses him. — Bonaparte seizes the Papal States. — Excom- communication issued against the Emperor. — Pius VII prisoner. — The car- Dinaux in Paris. — Interview between the Emperor and Cardinal Consalvi. — Account of the cardinal. — Bonaparte's marriage. — Red cardinals and cardinals blacks. — Exile of the black cardinals. — Consalvi at Reims. — The Council of Paris. — Protest of the council demanding the Pope's freedom. — Atti- Study of the French clergy in the face of Napoleon. — Etienne de Boulogne and François d'Aviau. — Pius VII in Savona. — The English want to abduct him. — Account by Cardinal Bemetti. — The Pope's translation at Fontainebleau. Pic VII, isolated, 'signs the so-called Concordat of Fontainebleau.' — Pacca, di Pietro and Consalvi. — Letter from Pius VII to Bonaparte. — Secret address From Pius VII to the cardinals. — Annulment of this Concordat. — Mr. Thiers and his History of the Consulate and the Empire. — Pius VII is released. Fall of Pempare. — Return of the Pope to Rome. — The Pope and Europe. narchic reaction to Napoleon's captivity. — Restoration of the Church. — The Cardinal Consalvi in London. – The Prince Regent and Consalvi. – Consalvi at Congress of Vienna. – Death of Pius VI. – New attitude of the Revolutiontion opposite the church.

The French Revolution, which, through sit-ins and uprisings constitutional, bestowed eternity upon so many ephemeral things mothers, had announced to the whole world the end of the Pontificate supreme, and the eternal enthronement of the Republic Roman. The Executive Directory, meeting in Paris, had constituted the jailer and almost the executioner of an old man, with the avowed aim of hastening the widowhood of the Church. With Pius VI dead, it was humanly impossible for the Sacred The dispersed college convened in conclave. Everything had been Thus prepared, thus resolved long ago. The men tasked in France and Italy with ensuring the success of this the conspiracy displayed such zeal and such threats, that Everything seemed to be working towards their triumph.

The Senate and the Roman People, the famous SPQR of old eagles, so cruelly translated by the ironic so little that rierij were much more protected by the fran- army French than by love or respect for their citizens emancipated. Every morning they crowded the Sacred Way which leads to the Capitoline Hill: unfortunately, one day in the itheir happiness, its consuls, its censors and its The tribunes took the wrong road. Instead of turning towards At the Campidoglio, they disappeared amidst the rubble. of the Tarpeian Rock, closer than ever to the Capitole.

In the eyes of the apostates of Paris and Rome, every master was good; they followed the nearest one without worrying about the better. They had set and multiplied their traps. so that Pius VI would be the last of the Popes, as well as Louis XVI was the last of the tyrants. They were counting on the uncertainty of the princes, regarding the self-serving calculations of their ministers and on the exhaustion of the people. The Kings had never been able to agree, never knew how to unite in a holy brotherhood of efforts, in order to wrest Europe to the convulsions of war and the perpetuation of anarchy shit. But, as Bossuet says with admirable raihis: "The future always turns out very differently than we do not think, and the very things that God has revealed things happen in ways we would never have planned.

After the various attempts against which failed William Pitt's genius, these manners did not even lull plus Christian and monarchical hopes. Faith The Church did not waver; it resigned itself. Deprived of She waited for her pastor in exile or in tears. that Providence saw fit to signal his action. The ProHis evidence did not fail him. Providence made the events serve him. political movements leading to the triumph of the Papacy; the revolutions the resolutions of empires contributed to the accomplishment of heavenly designs.

Since Bonaparte's first campaign, Italy groaned under the yoke of the Directory; but Bonaparte, then in Egypt, could no longer defend its conquest. What until now has been the impossible becomes Suddenly, the simplest and most achievable thing. rivalries, misunderstandings, hidden ambitions, of sad miscalculations had, since 1792, maintained between The cabinets of the powers, a fatal division. Their arwomen, lining up and getting beaten by each other after the others, had not produced a great captain nor a great military achievement. Suddenly, Emperor Paul I, from Russia, places itself at the head of a formidable alliance.

Souwarow, his field marshal, marches across Europe of the race, and, in the plains of Italy, he extends his hand Austria on one side, England on the other. McDonald'sNald, Moreau and Joubert are fighting against this new adversary Saire. After heroic battles, Macdonald is defeated At the Trebia, Joubert succumbs to Novi, and the infidelities the victory forces the Republicans to abandon the country. On September 30, 1799, as a consequence of these successes, as prodigious as they were unexpected, the English, united to the Neapolitans, seize Rome; then a fleet Ottoman forces take control of Ancona.

Long ago, the barbarians of the North crossed the Alps to to sack the city of the Caesars; the ships of the Turk, infestedboth the papal shore and forced Sixtus V to protect Behind thick walls, the Madonna and the pious treasures of Lorette. Today, twenty peoples, astonished by the link who bring them together, march to liberate Catholic Romelique. In this countryside, where everything is wonderful, the fearlessness of the vanquished, as well as perseverance of the winner, there is no trace of ulterior motive or of calculation. Extraordinary thing! The princes forget their disagreements, the ministers no longer remember their Passions: all are fair, all are moderate. Good-Soon ambitions and interests will regain their dominance; But at that moment, everyone is dominated by a thought. higher. It seems as if the sky, deigning to contribute to their work of reparation inspires in everyone a profound sense-administration of justice.

Russians, Englishmen, and Turks improvised-seized the allies of Catholic Austria; by a subsequent not interrupted by victories, they open at the Sacred College the doors of the Conclave. The Cardinals, sheltered by the bayonets Souwarow's nets, emerge from all the places where the de-Magician banished them. They arrive in Venice, where Bonaparte, master of France's destiny through his coup d'état of On 18 Brumaire, he will be careful not to disrupt the election which is getting ready.

The French Republic and its Directory dethroned Pope Pius VI and persecuted the Roman Catholic Church. The Republic-The republic no longer exists in name; the Directory has sunk to universal acclaim, and twenty-two Days later, the Conclave assembled peacefully.

In the midst of this gathering of princes of the Church, all purified in the crucible of tribulations and having all passed through Exile, or suffering, is noted as a secretary from the Conclave a prelate whose name will soon be one of the glories of the Apostolic court: this prelate is Hercules Consalvi. A protégé of the Cardinal Duke of York, Henry IX of a Fictional England, the last of the Stuarts; the most courtier a regular visitor to Mesdames de France, Adélaïde and Victoire, in their misfortunes so nobly borne, Consalvi the par-

[1] It has often been said that Cardinal Consalvi was the son of a peasant of Toscanella. Without attaching more importance than the cardinal himself by chance or by the privilege of birth, we believe we are performing an act of historical justice by letting him recount the origin of his family and his name. This passage is taken from the Memoirs on the various periods of his life. Consalvi explains it this way:

“I was born in Rome on July 8, 4757. I was baptized under the name of Hercules, in the church of Saint Lawrence in Damaso. I am the first of four brothers and one sister, who died in infancy with my three-sixth brother. My parents were Marquis Joseph Consalvi, from Rome, and the Marchesa Claude Carandini, of Modena. My ancestor, the Marquis Gregory Consalvi was not Roman, but from the town of Toscanella.

He was not a Consalvi either, but a Brunacci. The Brunacci family was one of the noblest families of Pisa; it has been extinct for only a few years.
in two women, the last of this family. About a century ago and a half that one of the Brunacci of Pisa came into the ecclesiastical state, and

He ran a brilliant career in the prelateship. He is one of those in Rome who supported the energy of Pope Pius VI, and who, in the most difficult circumstances, held Heading through all the storms.

The events were exceptional; history dictated it.
that men were crowned with the same halo.
It was therefore on Consalvi that she shifted all her interest.
the election. Several French, Italian, or German writers settled in Toscanella; it is from him that my ancestor Gregory descended Brunacci, as evidenced by the testimonial letters of his birth, and those of his ancestors extracted from the parish registers. The family Consalvi, of distinguished status, but not belonging to the nobility Roman, resided in Rome. The last of them, named Hercules, left his inheritance to Grégoire Brunacci, with the responsibility of taking up arms and his family's home, as evidenced by his will. Thus, Grégoire Brunacci became Grégoire Consalvi. Enriched by the wealth of the house-

His son Consalvi, he settled in Rome, where my father Joseph was born.

"Upon the death of the two Brunacci ladies of Pisa, my family could have..."
inheriting part of their property; but the abolition of trusts, decreed in Tuscany by Grand Duke Leopold, had preceded. It renmade this acquisition somewhat dubious.

“I paid no attention to it. The desire to acquire has never been my passion.”
Sion: moreover, my existence, without being opulent, was sufficient for a modest maintenance, thanks to the various incomes from the positions I have held succeasingly. Thus, placed by a favor of heaven outside of Without any vanity or ambition, I never had the idea of doing conto be born that I was a Brunacci and not a Consalvi, when jealousy or The ignorance of my titles led people to speak of my family as a family of new nobility, and not old like the Consalvi were not.
I could easily have refuted these accusations or errors. Convinced as I am, the most precious nobility is that of the heart and of actions, convinced at the same time of the falsity of these allegations, and convinced that I was indeed a Brunacci, and not a Consalvi (which I(and they knew very well), I scorned these rumors, which I could to bring down instantly, by bringing my offspring into the open of the Capitol. I did not change my point of view, when the position
The higher elevation I reached later made the path much smoother for me.
Do it.

Mands have seized upon, each from their own point of view, this Conclave on foreign soil; then in stories, which are sometimes innocent tales, sometimes polite fables ' tics, arranged according to the needs or whims of the narrator- Consalvi, the rating agency, prepares and directs the future selection process with a profound skill. The knight Artaud de Montor, in his History of Pius VII •> Mr. Thiers, in his History of the Consulate and the Empire, make him speak, make him act as the regulator and moderator of all participants pants to the vote. Consalvi was more modest and more veridiculous.

During his exile in Reims in 1812, he wrote about the events in which his name is associated with notes or memories. These memories, which are the true story, history stripped of all embellishments and all the more or less questionable assessments, should not to see the light of day only when the holy memory of Pope Pius VII would be attacked. It is in these terms that, in his will- In a handwritten letter, Cardinal Consalvi made known his last will. It is carried out today, thirty-five years after his death; and one of the rarest fortunes of my writing career will be, after a few others similar joys, having been associated with this a work of historical justice and pious reparation.

The handwritten documents of this great statesman are entrusted to me.[2] I therefore leave the secretary of the Conclave

[1] Cardinal Consalvi died in Rome on January 24, 4824.

[2] These documents, which it might not yet be appropriate to published in their entirety, they are in the Ilalian language, entirely written in the hand of Cardinal Consalvi, signed and annotated by him. The cardinal divided them into four parts.

The first is entitled: Memoirs on the conclave held in Venice in 4800; to explain how the events unfolded. The realsemblance will gain at least as much as dignity from The Church. We are translating from the original text.

"Of the forty-six cardinals existing at the death of ' Only thirty-five people were able to intervene, according to Pius VI. By ma- women, whether from old age or other causes, were em- The cardinals whose names follow were caught: Bathyani (who died during the Conclave), from Frankenberg, of the Rochefoucauld, of Laval - Montmorency, Ranuzzi, of Rohan, Migazzi, Gallo, Sentmanat, Mendoza and Zurlo.

"We waited for Cardinal Hert-" zan, who was also to occupy the position of refeaturing the imperial crown.

"The government of the German emperor appointed the meeting place was the convent of Saint-Georges, in the island of that name; he granted a sum of 24,000 écus Romans for the expenses of the Conclave,

“I had been in Venice for a long time, an exile.” of Rome and accused of the crime of loyalty to the Church and to my sovereign. I had been an auditor of the Rota; I was all naturally appointed as secretary of the Conclave, and The cardinals entered it on November 30, 1799.

"After a few days, the polls seemed to indicate that Cardinal Bellisoni would be elected; he was gathering already eighteen votes; after him came Cardinal Mattei, who had ten.

"Cardinal Albani, Dean of the Sacred College, committed then the fault of allowing Cardinal Hertzan to send

The second: Memoirs or recollections of the concordat signed in Paris on July 15, 4801;

The third: Memoirs on the marriage of Archduchess Marie-Louise;

The fourth: Memoirs on various periods of my life.

a letter, in order to consult the Austrian Chancellery to find out if she would give her exclusive to the cardinal Bellisoni. However, the response from the Viennese court was delayed. a lot. It was a pretext on her part. She desired very keenly that there was no other elected Pope than the Cardinal Mattei. More than anyone else, it was believed, perhaps-to be wrongly disposed to ratify the cession made by the Holy-Seat of the three Legations. This cession was wrested by France at the Treaty of Tolentino. The chances of war gave the three Legations to the imperial army, and the The court of Vienna wishes to add them to its hereditary states. from Italy.

"That is the only great and sole reason that made to postpone the election for several months. This reason would have delayed even further, if the urgent needs of the Church and the fear of scandalizing the faithful The cardinals finally decided on a kind of compromise.

"It was therefore agreed that those who supported the party Cardinal Mattei's choice would determine the decision; but the Pontiff would- The signatory was believed to belong to Cardinal Bellisoni's faction. Things happened this way; and Cardinal Chiaramonti was unanimously appointed on March 14, 4800.

"The new Pope was to be crowned on the eighth day after his election. The governor of Venice pre- appeared to have received neither orders nor a response to his request for this ceremony. Consequently, he declared he could not- see allow it to take place in the basilica of Saint-Marc. He also refused to cover the costs of the Ceremony. The donations and generosity of the faithful made it possible. saw and beyond. The exaltation took place in the church of Saint George, with a huge crowd. The In the evening, the whole city lit up; the government did nothing.

» By order of his court, Cardinal Hertzan insisted a lot with the Holy Father, with the aim of making a name for himself- The cardinal, secretary of state, was an imperial subject.

The Pope, who for several reasons did not accept this choice, nevertheless did not want to begin his pontificate by a refusal of the first request addressed in the name of the gou- government in whose states the Conclave had found hospitality. The Holy Father simply replied, "that, Not yet having a state, he did not believe he should choosing a Secretary of State with whom he felt no affection need; and that, for other matters, he would employ the prelate secretary of the Conclave, continuing his functions tions with the title of Secretary to His Holiness.

"The Viennese court (and here we note in terms very deliberately making this distinction, just and necessary, the court of Vienna and not the Emperor, whose dispositions per- His sonnelles were excellent; but his ministry, that is- that is to say, mainly Baron Thugut/who knew how to forbid access to the emperor's residence to anyone who could give to Her Imperial Majesty information on the true state of affairs. Thugut, in short, acted in the spirit of Kaunitz and Joseph II). The court of Vienna therefore made, from the very first days and through Cardinal Hertzan, very earnest appeals to the Holy Father for the de- to conclude by first undertaking a trip to Vienna.

These requests were not heeded, because in these events Such hasty decisions meant that no one should have tied their hands. side and not expose the Papacy to further affronts "Like in Kaunitz's time."

Consalvi's account, as simple as it is instructive, is ac- It doesn't really work with all the fine speeches and scholars. calculations that history attributes to him; but he reveals to us what

History had never known before; it was the action of José- trying phism, after all the upheavals of which the The world was the stage, to resume against the Church its work of silent persecution. In his Memoirs, which the posterity will only know today, when all the ac- directors of these great historical scenes will have since Having long since descended into the grave, Consalvi hastens to establish a dividing line between the sovereign and the minister. He doesn't want the imperial family to be confused with riale with the court of Vienna or its Chancellor advisors- Lerie. Later in the story, we will see, as the to note Consalvi, with all sorts of authority and precaution, that this distinction was as accurate as necessary.

The cardinal continues in these terms the revelations which History has kept the secret so well:

"Then Marquis Ghisleri arrived in Venice, in qua- His Imperial Majesty's ambassadorial commission. The envoy of Thugut, rather than the Emperor, first made me con- to be born that the government of Vienna, after having forced the French army to withdraw, occupied itself, and to in turn, the former Papal State up to the gates of Rome. After the French left, the rest of the heritage was in the hands of the Neapolitan troops, who also, they pretended to want to retain at least a part.

"The imperial government was, according to the Marquis" Ghisleri, quite willing to return to the Holy See the provinces he had conquered by force of arms, with the exception, however, of the three Legations of Ferrara, of Bologna and Ravenna. These provinces had been de- volumes to the French Republic by the peace treaty of Tolentino; the imperial government understood the con-to serve as having ceased to belong to the Holy See.

Thugut demanded a new investiture by confirming-tion of the previous one, and in compensation for the remainder of the State, which he claimed to be ready to leave to the Holy Father.

"From these strange revelations, we understand what was my surprise. I tried to make Ghisleri feel com-His proposal was indeed superfluous and insulting. Bad-Despite everything I could tell him, he persisted in wanting that it be brought before the Holy Father. I declared to him that the Pope would never condone such an outrage.
Ghisleri persisted in explaining to me the dangers of refusal, and in particular with regard to the restitution of the remainder of the Papal States. Defeated on this point, the envoy of Thugut made another request. His government He would be content, he said, with two of the three Legations. I I persisted in the same refusal.

"I had given this absolute and formal refusal on behalf of the Sovereign Pontiff. Ghisleri himself reported the aforementioned proposals to His Holiness. The Pope responded with a formal demand for full restitution from all States of the Church, including specifically the Legations. A official dispatch, written by me to the Minister Baron de Thugut, and a letter in the Pope's own hand addressed to the Emperor[1], were directed towards Vienna, in order to give no more weight was given to the request. Letter and dispatch did not receive There was never any response whatsoever from the Imperial Court.

"The Holy Father, seeing that he would wait in vain, said to

---

[1] Note in Cardinal Consalvi's hand: "Everything that is said in this written about the Viennese court during the time of the Cuiclave was the work of Minister Baron Thugut, who succeeded in closing all avenues for to reach the Emperor himself.

Ghisleri, in another audience, these remarkable paroles: "Since this restitution is so stubbornly refused, also governed by Religion and by justice, The Emperor should think carefully about this. It is because by putting-both in his wardrobe clothes that are not him, but in the Church, not only will he not be able to get away from it to serve, but they will also transmit the moths to his his own clothes, that is to say, to his hereditary states.

Ghisleri, who knew how to restrain himself, did not respond to this argument of the Holy Father; but, running immediately At my house, he complained about this language, and said with a extreme irritation: "The new Pope is a good spirit"

He is a novice in the field, and he knows very little about power. of the imperial household, because, in order to introduce the ringworms in her wardrobe, she needs a lot, a lot, beautifulcut. "

"The event soon proved the words of His Holiness. Two months had not yet passed, and the battle The Battle of Marengo (June 14, 1800) caused Austria to lose not only the Legations, but also Lombardy. The French victories only slightly diminished the postsessions of the Empire.

"The Austrian ministry feared the involvement of the people and the respectful cheers in the Legations, if the Pope were to cross them. Thugut therefore opposed this that the Sovereign Pontiff should take the overland route. The BelLona, an old, poorly equipped frigate, had to be used for the voyage by sea to Pesaro. This journey lasted eleven days. From Pesaro to Ancona, it continued by car; and at the moment where the Holy Father arrived in this last city, the newThe young woman of the Marengo defeat also succeeded. The consequence of this memorable battle was the cession simultaneous throughout Piedmont and Lombardy up to the Adige.

"The Marquis Ghisleri, at heart an honest and rereligious figures accompanied the Pope on behalf of the Emperor. Upon learning of the disaster, he couldn't help but tell me, with tears in her eyes: "I unfortunately see sto fulfill the Holy Father's prediction; yet she had It seemed impossible and outrageous when I had overheard in Venice.

"The official return of the territory to the Holy See" from Pesaro to the gates of Rome took place in the town of Lorette. A few Austrian troops aloneThey remained garrisoned in Ancona; then soon they returned to Venice by sea. The Pope continued in souverain his journey from Foligno, and he arrived in Rome July 3, 1800.

"The Neapolitan troops, who were still there," came to meet him. His entrance was a true triumph. He went to pray in St. Peter's Basilica, to the tomb of the Apostles, then from there he went to the Quirinal, where on the evening of that same day General Nasalli, at in the name of the king of the Two Sicilies, he restored the territory to him. route from Rome to the borders of Naples. Under pretext to occupy the capital of the Christian world as military post, Nasalli, despite my prayers, did not consent never to withdraw its troops. It took the treaty of Florence came to force the hand of the Sicilian government. Later still, this government decided to evacuate The Duchy of Benevento, an enclave within the kingdom. Neanless so the Neapolitans retained civil power there. No longer daring to prevent the installation of the pontifical authorities In their official capacity, they sufficiently demonstrated, by their actions, this that they would have liked to do in more favorable circumstances favorable.

To prepare for this return, to which Cardinal Consalvi makes us attend, it was necessary to overcome difficulties of every kind. They no longer came from the Revolution French: Josephism, which administered in Vienna and at Naples tried to create a thousand obstacles. Thugut and Acton, claiming to be the interpreters of the Germanic Caesars and the Bourbons of Naples, were stingy with the Papacy who, with no other strength than his moral prestige, had more contributed that their armies contributed to the triumph of the principles social. But the Baron of Thugut, raised in the school of eighteenth-century sophists, successors of Kaunitz, friend of Ghoiseul, of Pombal and of Florida Blanca, condamned the sad pride of not humiliating his reason under the hand of a divine power.

Hating the Revolution more for its effects than for its He felt himself caught in the middle of contradictions because of his causes. the most blatant. By his public actions, he was destined to to condemn or combat demagogic maxims; by its secret aspirations, he desired its success. Minister of a a Catholic and legitimate government, it had for its part- the mission of protecting the threatened Church, and of ensuring the security the rule of the throne. His ideas did not agree with his interests. In this alternative, and in order not to compromise everything compromising at the same time, he began to declare war on the Revolution and the Church.

Thugut was maneuvering the Austrian cabinet on the the most important questions as well as the most delicate. He hesitated when he should have acted; he acted when he should have. He had to remain neutral. He coveted possessions of the Priesthood, at the very moment when the Revolution threw his focus on those of the Empire. Such a policy, For him, the science of paperwork had truly become a skill.

double standards, reflecting the character of Austrian diplomacy an appearance of Josephian slyness, of which she was long steeped in, and which alienated many from noble hearts. The House of Habsburg had as its aim-special mission, in the midst of the turmoil, to safeguard religious and monarchical principles. Thanks to a deviation which, under the reign of Emperor Franz Joseph seph, will be largely bought back, the Austrian Chancellery-The female dog persisted in her conciliatory attitude.
towards the Revolution, and indirect attacks against the 'Holy See. By such a disastrous tactic, obviously Having just left the encyclopedic workshop, Thugut had compromised-He put more than his faith into it; it seemed as if he were striving to expose the honor of his masters.

The Pontiff granted to the universal Church in circumsuch extraordinary constants is, by the purity of its life, by the eminence of his talents, and by a singular An expression of morbid gentleness painted on her face, the height of the misfortunes and glories to which the Providence destined him. Gregory Barnabas Chiaramonti, born born in Cesena on August 14, 4742, he was initially a Benedictine monk. bishop of Tivoli, then of Imola, and cardinal. Parent of Pius VI, honored by his friendship, and having, through happy qualities, won the esteem and almost the tolerance of the me-In terms of songs, Pius VII may have had rivals. He would have been It's impossible to call oneself an enemy, so full is the milk of kindness.
Humanity overflowed from his heart. He did not believe in evil.
His throne, which already possessed the gentle majesty of an altar,
was naturally surrounded by respect and love.
A law of clemency seemed to rest on his lips. He

Typ. Henri Pion.

THE PAPK PIUS VII.

he stole from envy without shrinking from glory, and his
The spirit was so high, that there was never any room for the small things. Chiaramonti proved more worthy of honors that he is ambitious to conquer; honors did violence to his modesty. To see him, and especially to hear him-tender in his apostolic palaces, one arrived very quickly to convince oneself that the kingship of Christ, written on his clothing and on her own body, she radiated even more vividly in his soul.

By taking on the burden of the tiara, this Pope, at with such a clear gaze and such an expressive face, had ac-
He reluctantly accepted a heavy responsibility. He had come to an era of upheaval and crisis where men, Even the best among them stubbornly refused to understand. in order to be excused from doing good. There were crimes of all kinds to atone for, monstrous injustices to re-to prepare, touching misfortunes, noble exiles to consecrate-Pius VII had understood all of this, too, in his encyclopedia. accession clique, dated May 15, 1800, and addressed, according to custom, to all the bishops of Christendom, he does a large share to those who suffer. "We are experiencing, he said, with profound sadness and deep sorrow in his heart-astounding those of our children who live in France; we we would sacrifice our lives for them if our death could to bring about their salvation. A circumstance diminishes and softens the bitterness of our grief: it is strength and constancy that several of you have shown, and which have been imitated by so many people of all ages and genders and of every rank. Their courage in not sullying themselves with a servant illicit and culpable, in order to continue obeying the decrets and to the sentences of the Holy Apostolic See, will remain eternally engraved in our memory, as much as the cruelty, renewed from ancient times, with which one continued these faithful Christians.

It was in Venice, during his dispute with the minister from the Austrian court, that Pius VII, turning his gaze towards France, he tried, with gentle words, to to maintain some, to strengthen others, and to pre-
To prepare for all an era of peace and reconciliation. Oc-cut into the interior of his Rome to heal the wounds-still bleeding wounds that the Revolution brought to The Pontiff makes no secret of his position to either the Church or the State.
Salvation or ruin will not be born solely from France.
The life or death of peoples seems linked to a movement the order of his armies, to one of the thousand shocks that throw
This country is at its extremes. France seemed tired. of anarchy; in its exhaustions as in its shames, She felt a genuine need for order reborn within her. moral and material.

By having fun destroying the idols with his own hands of blood and mud, which she was forced to descend into abjection.

civic and constitutional sacrileges, France
A happy present and confident future.
Under the protection of Bonaparte's sword, new destinies unfold before her, and the First Consul, whose victory at Marengo cemented his authority, desired to con-
to consecrate, through a sincere return to God and his Church, the work of repair that his genius undertakes. He res-respects the Holy See; to ensure it is respected, he says to his messengers: "Treat the Pope as if he had two hundred
"A thousand men under arms."

Four days after the battle, on June 18, Bonaparte wrote to the other two Consuls: "Today, despite I'll tell you what our Parisian atheists might say about it.

grand ceremony at the Te Deum which is sung in the metro-Milan pole.

In order to carry out this act of high politics by-More than courage, one had to be something other than a happy soldier. The next day, Bonaparte crowns the solemnity of his first Te Deum, praying to the cardinal Martiniani to serve as his interpreter with the new Pope. He defeated anarchy; in the hope of consolidating He bases his edifice on Religion. He asks to Pius VII to second his efforts, and to help him restore and to pacify. This unexpected opening, made on a battlefield, had to go straight to the heart of the Sovereign-The Pope. Barely back in Rome, the Pope responds that his dearest wish is granted; then Consalvi, re-dressed in sacred purple and appointed Secretary of State, begins negotiations with the French government.

Twenty years ago, in Y Histoire de la Vendée mid-Literary, we recounted this triumph of the Christian faith On revolutionary impiety, we wrote:

"The First Consul may well have let it be said that he would be a new Monck; but it wasn't a role secondary which was supposed to smile on this general, whose ge-The scope was as vast as the ambition. With ideas ad-admirable in their power and social organization, Bona-Parte thought that on the ruins of anarchy, a child of the Revolution alone could rise. To compress the turmoil of evil passions, and to restore to the France, its rights so long ignored, its duties so Long forgotten, a man of iron and intelligence was necessary. This man needed no ancestor but

[1] History of the Vendée military, by J. Crétineau-Joly, vol. II, p. 460 and following (4th edition).

his victorious sword. He had to, by energy or by the seduction, to draw these desires into its new path rebels for ten years against all yokes. Bonaparte, great an even greater warrior and administrator, he imposed himself on these party factions which, in order to bring about the triumph of misery-unstable constitutions, dragged France along in the wake of their deportations. He took it upon himself to investigate the ruins, to heal the still bleeding wounds, to ren-to restore the country's dignity, to put the government back in the head of civilization, and to rebuild everything on the old foundations that demagogic ideas had shaken-He regulated force to achieve order.

"What the Vendée military had done with the insurgencytion, he tempted him by persuasion, he accomplished it by the au-dace. The prestige of his victories fascinated the people; he dB took advantage of his influence over minds to bring them back to the ideas of faith and monarchy. This soldier, still so young, and whose life was spent in anguish of republican misery or in the intoxication of triumphs, from what source did he then draw the principles that he resurrects with such authority? How can this general, lulled by the sounds of religious apostasy, raised" in scandals of all kinds propagated by images sick ginations, was he able to understand so quickly that there are Things that never die? This is where it's revealed
The influence of the Vendée was fully felt by Bonaparte.
wished to build a new social structure in which he would
the cornerstone; but, without taking into account the obstacles inevitable reactions that the various sects would provoke in him, not-health through all the phases of ridicule before arriving at the negating all forms of worship, he admirably grasped that there was no had no stable power other than that of which the Re-

Religion was the foundation. It wasn't in Paris yet.
defiled by the shameless profanations of the deities of the past tionnaires, it was not the provinces that, with indifference-rence, had let the storms rage above their heads of impiety, the mockery of the cult of Reason, which he asked for advice and support. No doubt, faith was not extinguished in the hearts of populations who had not had the courage to resist tyranny. She slept alone-ment; but in the Vendée, it was vibrant, it had en-fantasized about martyrs, and produced miracles of self-denial and heroism. With each peace proposal that one addressed to the peasants mutilated by the Convention, hunted down like wild beasts by the Directory, these noble pri-Those vilified by oppression had only one answer. This

The answer was a lesson for Bonaparte's genius:
"Give us back our God!" said the Vendéans. It was a protest that seven years of appalling calamities, sacrifices of every kind and unknown glory, could not to stifle. The First Consul saw that this was not by a motive of heroic daring or by courageous madness that the royalists had renounced all happiness servants to face all kinds of misery.

"This man, whose gaze was so penetrating, and who had exhausted a question at the very moment when one was looking for-This man appreciated the scope of his work.
and the moral consequences of the great act of insurrection monarchical union. In order to be at peace on the throne that he reserved for his ambition, and to wrest from the hands of the Vendée, the weapons that previous pacifications had not-had been able to bring her down, he dared to give her complete satisfaction faction. In the midst of this mocking and skeptical society who had trembled under Robespierre's incorruptibility, who had smiled at the corruptions of the Direc-

The First Consul gazed with admiration at these such strong and pious characters of the Vendée standing out with such purity of this painting of all the depravity-human actions. His profound thoughts lingered on some and on the others. On one side, we saw the peoples who had accepted everything from the hands of the Terror, everything, even the denial of God; of P, another, humble farmers who, on the corpses of their families and on the ashes still steaming from their cottages, they required nothing for The only compensation is the freedom to pray to God. Between these two Given the clear divisions, did Bonaparte have any reason to hesitate?
Didn't he know that the apostles of atheism under Chaudepending on the circumstances, they would be either devout or impious.
at his leisure, and that he only had to give an order to be Obey!

"To the generals of the Republic, to the tribunes whom the democracy had shaped its exaggerations of equality, He lavished gold and the promise of noble titles: • it was the salary reserved for these patriotic acts of selflessness, to these lovers of human rights, whose measure he had.
But to the Vendée, to this religious population, that

In his military enthusiasm he proclaimed a people of giants, he surrendered his faith, firmly convinced that he could not-would never be able to rally consciences to his authority as long as This high level of satisfaction would not have been granted to them.
The Vendée and the revolutionary demands had not no other rights to claim. The Vendée proved that her efforts had not been in vain; she proclaimed-He insisted that it was not for the purpose of narrow selfishness.
that she had risen up, but in a thought of moraiireligious and social faith formation. The First Consul to him

He won his case; he resurrected Christian France.
that the blood of the Catholic western provinces had ra-redeemed from the depravities of impiety, and he resurrected her at profiting from monarchist ideas. The alliance of religion and the monarchy is indeed too intimate for a people being simultaneously revolutionary and Christian. The de-Magogy excludes faith.

v It was under the influence of this ever-present thought to his mind because it is true, that Bonaparte treated with the Vendée leaders; he understood their repugnance that they felt compelled to serve a political cause that was not Not theirs. At the dawn of greatness, he even respected these repugnant feelings; but, in agreement with the Royalists on He left the major religious interests to time or to persuasion, the task of winning his loyalties, which he...
viait.

"The First Consul," wrote Abbot Bernier on February 15th February 1800, is an extraordinary man, who feels by-in fact that all the sacrifices made by the Vendéans can be condemned to sterility. When I tell him piety and acts of courage of which I have been more than once The witness's face lights up; one would think he was jealous of These soldiers whom he did not command. He told me more than one times: "I would be proud to be from the Vendée;" and he asks me

It was only for their princes that our peasants thus faced all dangers. I replied that the
The Bourbons certainly had their share of such devotion.
ly, but that the majority of peasants do not fought as well as because their to faith and to their priests. More than once he has already told me: “I I will give them all back: shouldn't we do something?

"For those who have done so much for religion?"

I am certain he will do it: perhaps no man has ever
"So well understood the scope of things."

Without knowing Bonaparte personally, Pius VII, with the sagacity of an Italian and the foresight of a leader
The Church, in general, passed the same judgment; it pre-It is a pleasure to place the same hopes in him. They arrived having come to power just a few weeks apart, They were allowed, while deploring the past, to dear-dear to rebuilding the future. Strangers to the latest They came to put an end to the struggles. Bonaparte Invoking the moderation of Pius VII, the Pope appealed to the soldier's Christian sentiments. Both were studying the means of dominating the Revolution, by weakening its prestige.

The Revolution had seized upon even the most imperceptible things.
avenues of power; she occupied them through her henchmen or by its usufructuaries. While obeying servilely, after having tyrannically commanded, she trembled before the sword, in order to better raise her head in front of the tiara.
The Revolution humbly placed itself at the command of the pre-First Consul; nevertheless, this submission was rather in both form and substance. We were going to meet the Bonaparte's desires; one could guess his wishes, one could enter in his ideas; one could even carve out a place for oneself in the sun of his glory; but, through a series of deceitful obsequious gestures, one hoped to link his goodwill towards the Roman siege. The Revolution had made the sacrifice mo-She was made aware of his cruelties and his licentiousness: she did not consent never give up the hatreds and prejudices that she nurtured hatred against the Church.

In this era of sudden rises and falls sudden again, a civil authority, whatever it might be, did not must have seemed temporary to these men who, since Seven years had broken or degraded everything. A riot happy, a change of opinion or a punch-gnard, could, from one moment to the next, plunge back into the France and Europe in the abyss of demagoguery. With the Church, such guilty hopes were not per-

His marvelous vitality was revealed in the very midst of it.
persecutions. A triumphant Pontiff succeeded a Pontiff who died in exile, to a Pontiff whose coffin, solemnly returned to the Christian Basilica, served From flag to reconciliation. Then, on the ruins amont-concealed around this ephemeral Republic, the Chair of Pierre still dominated the world, as if to attest the sterility of the wishes and efforts of anarchy.

To directly oppose the will of the First Consul, it was losing, without any appreciable benefit, the chances that the future still held in store. It was therefore resolved to obey officially and to obstruct, through all sorts of insecret schemes and calculated distrust, the movement religious figures, of which Pius VII and Bonaparte gave the signal. Impiety pretended to give up the fight. After a camloincloth of public sacrileges and bloody profanations Afterwards, she went back to her tent, but she left on the ground of partisans more tenacious than she. The Revolution had found in Jansenism and Gallicanism secular, having become a constitutional church, allies that failure was no more deterrent than apostasy. Revolution yielded to them the floor; of their inveterate hatred Against Rome, she made herself a shield.

The reconciliation of the Holy See with France was the overthrow of all anti-Catholic projects. BonaThe party has spoken; all that remains is to submit ostensibly blement, and to cover the path with hidden traps which the Priesthood and the Empire must ultimately achieve desired.

A man of whom Bonaparte, Consul and Emperor, had had the idea of making him his independent advisor and monitorprivate tutor, he explained to him, even at that time, the difficulties concerned about his situation. Fiévée wrote to the First Consul [:

"Political Republicans are almost all..." people—quite respectable because of their integrity, but that the The unfortunate results of their attempts were all the more surprising. that they have not converted them; therefore they will do it again whenever they find the opportunity.

"Incapable of making a movement on their own" Decisive for their cause, they are preparing this movement, and When he has an abortion, they appear to justify it with their speeches and by that ascendancy conferred by probity. All the works that today deny the Revolution in his violence, while continuing to praise political principles the techniques that brought them, originate from the hands of the republicans Citizens of opinion. Provided that no one is killed, or that one kills very few, we see them following all the situationstions that can give their opinions a chance;

but they do not belong to any government; their kingdom is not of this world.

"These men are more dangerous than we think;
in all circumstances that could be decisive,
we saw them present themselves as intermediaries between the factions, and prolong the Revolution with false conciliations, which perhaps they were not fooled by. I don't
No doubt the current government has often

1. Correspondence and relations of Fiévée with Bonaparte (1802-1813),
t. I, p. 14 and following.

encountered on his journey, and, if I were bolder, I would have-
I would assert that he must have been more embarrassed by their tempo-measures taken by the most active parties.

"The republicans of interest, I mean the revolution-men consecrated by the blood they shed, have become politicians since they can no longer show their fury.
Called upon for almost every position, some even to trust, being able to guess the plans of the leader
The state, far from showing opposition, they are putting in place warmth to ensure its success; but, in silence, they cause to fail what they seem to support, or, when
This is impossible for them; they are diverting public opinion.
from the joy of a present good to striking her with fears come. This tactic may explain how the first Consul was always an acquirer, through astonishing victories Nantes, a popularity that seemed destined never to end to finish, and of which no trace was found for some weeks later. The message from these men is that one must use Bonaparte, and, to achieve this goal, to exalt all his passions rather than trying to calm them. Foreigners Those who visit France are mostly surprised to see that the
The first Consul inspires less enthusiasm there than in outside. This observation, which is true, and which I had I had the opportunity to do so in England, for several reasons that it would be interesting to look into. I will stop at the most natural.

"The Revolution having exaggerated popular expectations" laires and having produced only greater unease, the
The people, always fooled by those who exalt them, were waiting so many of his flatterers, that nothing can be done for him who approaching what he had been promised.

"He hopes, however, that every government which will happen and bring about the happiness with which he had been flattered. Also, eight days after the general peace!, people were wondering at Paris, what good resulted from it! Such is the people that the Revolution has formed.

The internal situation, captured in the act by a writer deeply versed in the secrets of politics Having left, he thus reveals himself to the First Consul. This situation has its difficulties of all kinds. Apart from the materialists from the Institute, which, after having broken down France, strive to chemically decompose thought, and who shudder with anger at the mere mention of God, he arises from everywhere, from schisms and divisions. The constitutional clergy, on the one hand, persists in its usurpatory tendencies and in this moral disorder which wounds Christian society to the core. On the other hand, the Faithful clergy are beginning to raise their heads. The scaffold and The persecutions decimated him without weakening his zeal. could never separate him from the Roman Catholic communion; This perseverance gives him strength and a title.

Having remained on French soil, the priests had, in the the secret of their charity, words of patience and hope to whisper in the ears of the flock whose guard their is entrusted. When the satiety of crime finally brings a Little peace and quiet, these priests reappear in the midst of towns and countryside; they reappear with a halo sanctified by suffering. In churches without enclosures rooms, without altars, without ornaments, and where every stone the temple is still covered with images of lust They only speak words of peace; they do not preach They say that forgiveness of insults is necessary.

But this clergy has no leaders. The holders of the bishoprics--

---

1 The Peace of Amiens.

Many French citizens died, were exiled, or emigrated. After having worthily borne the burden of the bad days, they wait, in the calm of their consciences, for it to please to the Holy See to reward their devotion with a solemn act of justice. Pius VI encouraged them; his successor Can the emperor on the throne abandon them?

Thus, Fiévée is not afraid to reveal it to him with a rather rare frankness, Bonaparte did not feel master of all his movements. The Revolution dominated him.

born against his will. All the while allowing him to be pacified by victory and to govern by the brilliance of intelligence, she knew nevertheless impose indirect conditions on the one who no one was bothered by him. He had barely arrived at the helm of the business, he had seemed to want to follow the advice that Cardinal de Retz gives: "The great secret of those who Entering the workforce requires first and foremost capturing the imagination men through an action that some circumstances that makes it special.

"In less than a year, he had performed miracles."
According to the word of the prophet, he found the peoples man-kicking up dust like snakes, and terrified (like the beasts that crawl on the earth. By energy acting on his own will, he takes it upon himself to calm these ter-| reurs, and he succeeded. Peace had just returned to the minds, he wants to make it enter into consciences, because He firmly believes that everything that cooperates in the rest of the Church and the liberation of Religion contributes thereby contributing to the salvation of the Empire.

The engineering corps' mission is to preserve or restore,
when he comes too late to create; Bonaparte restored-He knew, then. He always recovered happily when he followed his inspirations; unfortunately sometimes, when the impetuosity of his character and the pride of the victory delivered him, unbeknownst to him, to the suggestions of the schism or demagogic intolerance.

Joseph Spina, Archbishop of Gorinth, was summoned to Paris with Father Caselli, in order to open negotiations relating to the Concordat. The issues to be resolved are as difficult as they are numerous. The questions of per-These sounds clash with matters of principle. The fact is that... every moment encroaches on the law; the lie substitutes for truth, and paradoxes try to beat undermines ecclesiastical power. Eraser in all the important transactions, it rises with every step of the misunderstandings, demands, compromises, uncertainties attitudes, rapprochements and distrust.

Spina and Father Gaselli spoke as con- theologians summoned; Abbot Bernier, the priest of the Vendée Militaire, was the Consul's mouthpiece. Joseph Bonaparte and Crétet do not appear yet. There was no agreement on the things nor about men; suddenly the First Consul, whose very natural slowness tires one's forbearance

Having quickly become exhausted, she decides on a masterstroke. Cardinal Consalvi enjoyed the most intimate confidence of Sovereign Pontiff; Bonaparte wants the Cardinal to come in person in Paris, in order to remove all obstacles and to smooth over all difficulties. On the orders of Pius VII, Consalvi sets off.

The man of the sword and the man of the church will find themselves face to face. We'll see if, as in the holy Scriptures: "The patient is better than the brave, and if He who tames his heart triumphs over he who takes cities.
1 Proverbs, 16:32.

I

N^Sà

Typ. Henri Pion.

CARDINAL CONSALVI

PIUS VII AND NAPOLEON. 257

Although both still young, they possessed, to the highest degree, the genius of politics, the coquettishness of women, and the The consummate caution of veteran diplomats. Like all the great Italian minds that Machiavelli admired, all two are not simple, but half swans, half foxes. Bonaparte is bold by calculation and audacious to cool-headed. With his eyes that flashed like lightning and his His lips, heavy with thunder, reach the sweetness through feigned abruptness or borrowed violence. He threatens victory, in order to seduce more surely. Its austere beauty possesses no less authority than grace. He is armed with sarcasms, stinging like hell-stone nale; it looks like a gold mine, sometimes liking to cover itself of fake stones.

Consalvi, insinuating like a perfume, knows how to make herself a duty never to neglect the art of useful complaisance, provided they are honest. Perfected nature with the most exquisite kindness, he lavished everything to assist within him lies the extreme desire he has to please everyone. In his words as in his attitude, one recognizes the senator. Torius, the decor of a patrician from old Rome. His handsome head, who will never bow down before force or before

Hatred radiates with restrained frankness and serenity. intelligent. Seeing him, you feel that no man has ever been born will not show a wiser application of skill in virtue and calculation in righteousness.

With Bonaparte, he will look at the minor incidents like victims that must be sacrificed to the great business. They both know admirably, when they Those who wish to do so, take the ear of corn in its proper sense; nevertheless the ambitious concerns will never make us forget the Prince of the Church, that all that is done well is done always early enough. When these two men are going to meetworm in the presence, trying by all the charms of the spirit of diminishing their flaws in favor of their qualities In terms of titles, we will see which one will develop the better this temperament of hope and patience, vethe statesman's true temperament.

Most contemporary authors, in analyzing the negotiations that preceded the Concordat, adopted the version that the Intruders and the Jansenists had inInterest in disseminating. The facts are pretty much everywhere. they are the same; they differ only in the way they fuappreciated rent. For almost sixty years, we haven't understood that only one party; that it is finally permitted to the story of giving the other person a voice. Thanks to the namesFrom numerous previous works, we know of what the way the events unfolded and were judged by the Gallicanism and the Revolution. Let's now listen to how Cardinal Consalvi exposes and elucidates them. For it is A serious witness is one who has seen; this is a more serious one. even though he who saw the events and took part in them a certain share. The best of all is the witness who recounts, in the peace of his conscience and in honesty of his heart, the affairs he directed. The cardinal expremium therefore as follows:

“Writing these memoirs almost after” eleven years of intervalle and without having the relevant documents in front of them on the subject, not only will it perhaps lack some facts and circumstances that are no longer present in my mind took hold, but it could still happen that he slipped in some error, an uncertain date or something else seemsNonsense. Nevertheless, nothing will be found there, for sure. that which is very accurate and very true regarding the substance, and finally, it will be revealed with what instructions tions and what fidelity each of the two parties proceeded in this negotiation, one of the most important of the history of the Church.

"Returned to Rome on July 3, 1800, and barely recovered" in the possession of the patrimony of Saint Peter by Austria And in Naples, the Holy Father was immediately besieged by new fears, because, after the Battle of Marengo, the The Republic of Piedmont and Cisalpine Gaul reappeared until... than at the borders of the ecclesiastical state.

"Through Cardinal Martiniani, Bishop of Vercelli, the Holy Father was invited, on behalf of the first Consul, to be sent to Turin Monsignor Spina, archbishop of Corinth in part, inf., to deal with him matters of religion in France. Monsignor Spina, who had followed Pius VI in Valencia, was therefore directed to Turin, with orders to hear and report, con ordine di sentir ee refelaughter. While Spina waited in vain in Turin for to deal with the First Consul, suddenly he is requ'de aller en Paris, où Bonaparte assigns him ren-Dismissed. Monsignor Spina took the road to Paris, em-leading as theologian Father Caselli, general of the Servite order. I no longer remember if he had the time to first apply and obtain a response Answer. In Paris, he received only offers.
unacceptable; difficulties were raised upon difficulties, without nothing real or that could be favorable to Religion.

"But then, unexpectedly, Mr. Cacault arrives in Rome," without any official title, without direct responsibility to negotiate, but nevertheless negotiating and managing the affairs of the Republic-French republic. Mr. Cacault was personally a A rather good man, and already very well-known in Rome. His lan-

This pledge initially gave the Holy Father hopes, because each of his words guaranteed excellence slow preparations of the French government. During this Meanwhile, negotiations with Monsi- continued in Paris.
Gnor Spina. We were hardly making anything but proposals.
unacceptable, and yet the situation was such, in France, that the smallest concession would already have been accepted as a benefit. The government of the Republic opinion argued, he exaggerated this argument to...

to achieve one's goals faster and concede as little as possible.
He kept repeating "that the Pope's persistence in His refusals would produce extremely amoral consequences.
res not only for the Catholic faith, but also for the temporal dominion of the Sovereign Pontiff.

"These threats surprised the Holy Father; she did not de-"
They did not encourage them. The Congregation of Cardinals ad hoc supported him in the lath. Even if it meant risking losing everything In his temporal domains, he was very determined not to compromise on no essential point. If necessity compelled him to do so, He preferred to sacrifice everything else. Monsignor Spina received his instructions in this regard; I drafted them under the eyes and almost under the Pope's dictation.

"Amidst this waiting and uncertainty," Monsignor Spina received no reply. On these en-Mr. Cacault notified that if, within five days, we had not signed the draft Concordat drawn up in Paris, and this without the slightest change, without the most Indifferent to amendments or restrictions, he, Cacault, had to leave Rome immediately and go to Florence, his legation, to General Murat. This departure ipso facto notified the break between the Holy See and the France,

"To obtain a delay, or at least to have While waiting for a reply from Paris, I did all that that it was permissible to do. Mr. Cacault retreated into his instructions, which, he claimed, he was forbidden to to deviate from any point. The Holy Father was content to say with his usual placidity: "I retract my case
"Into the hands of God."

"The proximity of French troops and the malicious acts" the arrangements of some agents of disorder do not gave too much cause for concern in the event of a breakup. Finally Mr. Cacault suggested, then insisted on, the immediate departure for France, the Cardinal Secretary of State. I had to go from my person in Paris; the First Consul demanded it, and We couldn't fail to get along. It was, re-Cacault was farting everywhere, the only remaining evasive means for to prevent the overthrow of the authority of the Holy See.
Whatever one might say, it was a necessary step. However It was agreed that in order not to arouse suspicion among the people or to some dissatisfied people, no trace of a break, the mid-
The French minister would leave in the same car as me.
We were supposed to travel together to Tuscany, and the Things happened thus: I left Rome on June 6, 801, terrified by the heavy responsibility that would weigh upon him on my head.

"After a two-week trip, during which I only took rest in Florence, Milan, Turin and Lyon. I arrived in the early hours of the night, from Rome to Paris, overwhelmed with fatigue and still unaware of what The way we would have received the news of my mission, having vainly awaited en route a response to the communication the action that had been taken by the State Secretariat Monsignor Spina as soon as my departure had been decided.

I went to stay at the hotel where this prelate was lodged with his theologian, Father Caselli, and I couldn't find any subject of consolation in the account they gave me of the state of things.

"My first thought the following morning was to into form the first Consul upon my arrival, and to ask himder at what point I might have the honor of seeing him. I asked him at the same time what costume he wanted me to introduce myself. This request was necessarysaire, because at that time the ecclesiastical habit in Paris, as elsewhere in France, was an absolute thingout-of-use lument. The priests were dressed as the secular clergy; the churches consecrated to God were dedicated to Friendship, to Abundance, to Marriage, to Commerce, to Gardens, to Fraternity, to Liberty, to Equality and others deities of democratic reason. None were visible. outward signs of religion. Republican ideas were still in full possession of all the uses of the sosociety. Everyone was given the title of citizen: he was given to me during the journey, well that I should be clothed in the insignia of the Cardinalate. I had not I didn't think I should leave them for a single day, although I did This demonstrates more courage than prudence. In the capital of France however, and especially in presenting myself both in front of the head of government, it is obvious that the matter required a certain circumspection on my part. tion. I didn't want to give up my clerical garb, but I also didn't want to display the Cardi- insignia nalat to some unpleasant accident.

"To forward the aforementioned requests, the abbot..." Bernier acted as my intermediary. This clergyman had was one of the main leaders of the Vendée, in his struggle heroic against the Republican government. The same ecclesiastical had later been the most active instrument of the pacification of the royalist provinces, when, deprived deprived of all outside help and overwhelmed by the most atrocious violence of an infinitely greater force, they had should consider themselves lucky to be able to accept the conditions peace terms less harsh than those of the new government conSular, in his own interest, had had the wisdom to to offer them. The fortunate intervention of Father Bernier in such an important matter had put him in favor with of the government, which, having decided to appoint a newborn-negotiator, from the very first openings with Monsignor Spina had wisely chosen him over any other, because he combined within himself the knowledge of the subjects clergymen, the negotiator's skill, and reputation of a man who, on the one hand, could not be suspected of Holy See, no less for the purity of its principles than for the cause he had supported, and which, on the other hand For his part, he had every interest in not losing his recent merits that he had acquired from the government to which he had rallied during the pacification of the Vendée. This ecclesiastick, which until that moment had always dealt with Monsignor Spina, having scarcely received the news of my upon arrival, he hastened to visit me, and it was through him that I sent to the First Consul the communication which I just mentioned.

"The First Consul's response was more prompt than someone who desired a certain interval between arrival and presentation, less because fatigue from the journey as well as lack of time for to obtain some necessary or useful information, which could at least serve as a light and a rule for him in an initial interview. Father Bernier returned immediate with this response: "That the first ConHe would receive me this very morning, at two o'clock afternoon, and as for the costume, which I was supposed to come in "Cardinal as much as possible."

"This response, which I found unpleasant because of its excessive..." great promptness also put me in an awkward position by not making no mention of Monsignor Spina, who, not having yet been presented to the First Consul, he I didn't think he was allowed to accompany me, which put me obliged to go completely alone, to my great displeasure, given the novelty and my comcomplete picture of the situation I was in. As for coming as cardinal as I could, I did not feel at- a kind of embarrassment. Although I understood that he wanted me to attend the hearing in great distress red tane, I reflect that the cardinals do not present themselves were in this costume only in front of the Pope, and that it was through abuse only that some cardinals went so far dressed at the court of the sovereigns, of whom they were subjects birth. I therefore resolved not to present myself until... short black dress, with stockings however, the barrette and the red collars, as cardinals usually wear outside their homes, when they are not on duty.

"At the appointed time, the master of ceremonies of the Cour is at my hotel, as Abbé Bernier had told me warned; he took me in his car, and, alone with I arrived at the Tuileries. I was ushered into a sa- along the ground floor, called the ambassadors' lounge The master of ceremonies told me to stay there. for a few moments, until he had given notice of my arrival. I remained alone, seeing nothing around me.

I was left with nothing but profound loneliness. I had probably been indeliberately introduced by this silent and solitary side of the palay, so that at each step my surprise would be greater, and greater also was the embarrassed impression that should naturally be the result. And indeed, the master ceremonies resumed shortly afterwards, and having informed me that I could proceed to the hearing of First Consul, gesturing towards a small door which overlooked the vestibule of the grand staircase of the pa- But I truly felt the same surprise as he did to experience a sudden change of scenery in the theatre when from a cottage, a wood, a prison, or from In any other similar situation, one suddenly moves to dazzling spectacle of the most magnificent court and the more numerous.

"That was the day, as I have since learned, when it took place at the Tuileries the grand parade, which, at that time, renewed every two weeks, and which were attended the three Consuls who represented the government, the heads of state, that is to say the Senate, the Tribunate, the Body legislative bodies, high-ranking palace officials, ministers, Generals and other orders of the State, and a number immense crowds of troops and spectators. The first Con- Sul wanted me to go to the hearing for the first time once in this solemn circumstance, in order to give me- to give, I believe, an idea of its power, to strike me of astonishment, and perhaps also of fear. He will not be

[1] This is the account of the presentation of Cardinal Consalvi to the first frnsul, and their first meeting at the Tuileries. This account comes from the Cardinal himself. Mr. Thiers, always so well-informed about the great events, even down to the smallest details, have a completely different version.
rent, and he arranges things this way:

“Cardinal Consalvi arrived on June 20 (1 Messidor) in Paris. The abbot

It's not hard to imagine that a person arriving in Paris
the previous night, without being warned, without knowing anything customs, traditions, or personal dispositions the images before which she appeared, and which was re-dée in a way as the author responsible for the
the negotiations pursued up to that point had yielded a poor result.
must have felt from such a device, as imposing as it was... expected, a deep emotion and even the most visible embarrassment. Unable to imagine that my first au-I would be given permission in public, and completely ignorant-Regarding the circumstances of this parade ceremony, I I thought that this multitude, which filled the vestibule and the staircase, had rushed over out of curiosity, having learned (without that I could imagine how) my presentation to Tuileries. The sound of drums at the highest marks rooms, staircases, living rooms and anterooms, all filled with richly dressed figures, the great dignitaries silences that crowded there, and that it was impossible not to recognize them by their costumes and attire.
filled me with ever-increasing surprise.

"I finally arrived in a living room where I saw only one person-"
The sonnage who came to meet me greeted me without...
to say a word, then walking with me and preceding me-Dant led me into an adjoining room. I didn't know So who was this character? I learned later.
that it was the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. de Talleyrand, a name all too familiar in the events of the Re-

Bernier and Monsignor Spina rushed to receive him, and reassured himto review the First Consul's arrangements. The costume was agreed upon in to which he would be presented at Malmaison, and he went there, deeply moved by the idea of seeing General Bonaparte. The latter, well warned, took no chances with the i to add to the cardinal's troubles. » History of the Consulate and the Empire, by A. Thiers, t. III, p. 255 and 256.

evolution so that I need to add to it here. I thought that he had just introduced me into the first office Consul, and I reassured myself with the hope that I could Finally, to be alone with him. But what a surprise it was, when—that, as this last door opened, I glimpsed in a vast hall, an immense multitude of characters, disposed as if for a dramatic turn of events! At the back of the In the room, the various bodies were symmetrically arranged. of the State (which were, as I have since learned, the Senate, the Tribunate, the Legislative Body and the high courts of the magistrates), and on the sides, the generals, officers of all ranks, ministers, senior civil servants of the State, and ahead of everyone else, detached and iso-three characters whom I later learned were the three Consuls of the Republic!

"The one who was in the middle took a few steps alone towards I, and it was only by conjecture that I sensed Bonaparte, a conjecture soon confirmed by his attitude of Minister Talleyrand, who, always at my side, introduced myself to him. I then wanted to say something to him compliment him and tell him about the subject of my trip; but He didn't give me the time, because I was barely there. He immediately spoke to me, and said in a tone In short: "I know the reason for your trip to France. I I want the conferences to open immediately. I'm giving you five days, and I'm warning you that, if, at the end of the fifth day, the negotiations do not are not finished, you will have to return to Rome. whereas, for my part, I have already made up my mind about such a hypothesis.

"Such were, without another word, the first paroles that Bonaparte addressed to me, with an air neither affable not abrupt. Then he fell silent, waiting for my reply. I said then: "That the dispatch made by His Holiness of his prince-The chief minister's presence in Paris was proof of the interest she led to the conclusion of a concordat with the government French nement, and that I flattered myself with the hope of being happy enough to finish it within the time frame that he desired.” Either that this first answer did not give him would not have been displeasing, even if he had not conceived an idea of me too unfavorable, seeing that with the grace of God I I was not disturbed by the unusual spectacle. of this imposing apparatus, that is, that he had resolved in advance, to do after our meeting what he actually did, Nevertheless, after this exchange of our first He suddenly got to the point with these words, and for more for half an hour, in the same attitude and in front of He spoke to everyone about the Concordat, about the Holy-Seat, on Religion, on the current state of affairs, and even on the rejected articles, with vehemence and an inexpressible abundance, without anger however nor harshness in language. I answered everything with this that I felt I should say, without any mental turmoil (I repeats, by a special grace from heaven and in no way by my own merit) and leaving no complaint against Rome without a proper justification. This is not the place. the place to report everything he said on this occasion: That is not the purpose of this writing. But I cannot help butsin by recalling only one thing, solely as an indication he gave from that moment of his aversion for the religious society I am about to discuss. He said, therefore "which he could not see without astonishment and scandal" the Pope's union with a non-Catholic power as was Russia, manifested by the restoration the Jesuits at the request of Paul I (who had just finished (by a tragic death). This union, he added, must obviously to upset and offend the Catholic King, thenthat it is designed to please a schismatic sovereign. I replied with great candor that he had been very poorly informed on this matter, given that if the Holy Father had not thought it necessary to refuse the Emperor of Russia the He had not reinstated the Jesuits for his states. acted without the consideration his mother commanded him affection and his high regard for the King of Spain, and that the proof lay within the interval of several months elapsed between Paul I's request and the sending of the Bull, which had only been sent after the The Pope would have made sure that the Spanish court would not find there no grounds for complaint.

"After a few similar responses from me to many other things he told me in that first In a public hearing, he ended by repeating "that we begin-This would therefore immediately halt negotiations, not having he had no time to waste, given the big business he had in "Hands." Then nodding at me like He greeted everyone, then stepped back a few paces to the place where were the two other Consuls and dismissed me from the sort. I then made a bow (as I had done at my entrance) and I left the room, accompanied by Mr. de Talleyrand to the place where he had come to my meeting. From there, the same master of ceremonies ac-He accompanied me and drove me back to my hotel.

"Not a single day passed without Abbot Ber-Denier came to see me. He told me "that he had received from the first Consul ordered negotiations to begin immediately-tasks, which were to be completed within five days, and that, failing a conclusion after this deadline, I could to leave again. He added that the government wished to con-to give in detail the Pope's reasons for the refusal to adopt the Concordat project purely and simply presented in Rome by Mr. Caeault. » It was the same proa proposal that the Pope had rejected when Monsignor Spina I had passed it on to him. I had made known the reasons for his refusal, as well as the reasons for the amendments and the modifications that had been made and that France had rejected. Abbot Bernier "wanted to have from me on this the object a memorandum that he would have to submit to the first Consul the following day.

"Not yet twenty-four hours had passed"
since the moment of my arrival, after a journey faster and the most devoid of any rest, including that of the night, and I had to indulge desires that orders appeared, so as not to give, from the com-At the beginning, there was no cause for discontent, and so as not to not to alienate the mind of the man who was in command and who was already used to encountering no obstacles to his wishes. I reserved my refusals for what would be intrinsic-seque on the subject whenever the matter required it. I I therefore believed I had to go over everything that was... personally, and I promised that it would be done.

"The Memoir, the fruit of a night's vigils, was submitted"
the following day to Abbot Bernier, and through him to Mr. de Talleyrand, who was then to communicate it to the pre-First Consul. The purpose of this Memorandum was to justify the rejection of the draft concordat as it had been sent by the French government, and to show what there is there was something reasonable and fair in the modifications demanded by the Pope. I pointed out there that the Pope, at the same time as he gave in to so many things, not he gained nothing on his side, reduced as he was to being content of the mere re-establishment of Catholicism in France, without none of the prerogatives he had previously enjoyed there, and that he still possessed in all the other Catholic states liques. I concluded that if, for an object as large as the restoration of religion in France, the Pope of-

He was going to consent to all sorts of sacrifices, he could not to be reduced to that of principles, which, in matters of Religion, were invariable and never allowed that error or false maxims were substituted for the truth and the laws of the Church.

"The result of this dissertation was not a happy one. Far from it."
to recognize the reason that guided the Pope in his refusal to subscribe purely and simply to the fran- project
The Spanish; far from admitting the truth and importance of the sacrifices the tricks the Pope was doing by simply being content with the only the change he had made, the minister's report to the First Consul, upon presenting him with my Memoir, was as brief as it is strong and significant, and singularly unique to turn him against me and to confirm his idea that my zeal for the cause of the Holy See was especially excited through my personal hostility towards the government French. Mr. de Talleyrand wrote in his own hand to the margin of the first page of the Memoir I had written These words, which I saw later, were spoken by the First Consul myself, when the Memoir passed into the hands
by Abbot Bernier: “The Memoir of Cardinal Consalvi has pushed the negotiations back much further than any other.
the writings that preceded it.

"Such an unfavorable report, although it greatly displeased-"
The first Consul, however, did not slow down the course negotiations. I have already warned that this document did not have not at all intended to report its content, nor toto delve into the substance of the matters that were discussed there, in reproducing the reasons that determined the Pope and his agents to adopt or reject such and such clause.

Since all of this is located in the offices of the Secret-State silence and detailed relations of the negotiation that she received, I refer you to it. The purpose of this The writing is to give the story, I would say the external one, of the negotiation, and not the internal history of the case, ex-accepted this part of the background, which has too much connection with the interior or with some related event (as we will see later), and that we would not pass, without prejudice to the intelligence of the principles of conduct who guided me in these circumstances. I am content-based on a few observations.

"The work involved in these negotiations could not have been more stubborn; although they were not finished in the five prescribed days, each of the additional days was con-always stunned, like the last one. One can easily imagine What fatigue and discomfort surrounded each conference!

and each report to be written. It was necessary to pass the nights and still find the time to change, to correct what we had written before handing it in. Besides the con-I had two daily meetings with Abbot Bernier with the First Consul in a private meeting.

"Throughout this entire affair, I was able to-"
how to visit the other two Consuls and the minister foreign affairs (at whose house I once dined) and to the ministers of Spain and Austria, without seeing the others and without hardly visiting Paris.

“When I worked with Father Bernier, I was in the most disadvantageous position; for, in everything that presented some difficulty, he always assured everyone that he could not-was not going to decide anything; that it was impossible for him to adhere to my reasons, however obvious they may have seemed to him, obliged as he was to refer it every day to the first Consul. As for me, on the contrary, I was never permission to send a letter to inform and consult the Pope, under the pretext that one should necessarily to conclude the following day. My capacity as plenipotentiary I was told that this exempted me from any recourse to Rome.

when they were afraid of hearing me prove that nothing of Nothing like it had been seen in any treaty, and many less so in matters of Religion, where, lastly Analysis shows that it is the Pope, and not his representative, who is the master and regulator.

"Nothing helped to make these negotiations less bitter, even less likely to obtain better conditions lures for religion, no more all the facilities possible, nor an obvious spirit of conciliation, nor a reasonable eagerness, as well as all sorts of selflessness. Indeed, the Church and the Holy See not only made the most enormous sacrifices of money, territory, prerogatives and rights;
but I never proposed anything in these negotiations temporal object, such as the recovery of provinces lost, the repair or relief of ill-months that the Church had suffered.

"Finally, no effort was spared, certainly,"
No care, no effort, no good manners, no demonstrations of firmness and vigor which could, depending on the circumstances, lead the matter to the

The best possible ending, given the possibilities in which one finds oneself-

France was, the character of the one who governed it and the combined efforts of the unbelievers, the constitutional clergynel, as well as all enemies of Catholicism and of Rome.

"The best testimony to all of this is undoubtedly..." that of the two representatives of Austria and Spain loincloth, and especially the first one. The Count of Cobentzel was, as is known, the minister of Emperor François, sent expressly to Paris to deal with Jes af- He then went onto the rug. He came and pressed me several times. of all his influence to complete the Concordat. He repeated to me- it was constantly said that if the First Consul did not arrange not with Rome, if he definitively broke away from the Head of the Catholic religion, the fire and the resulting ruin would not be limited to France, — although this single loss was incalculable for the Church, — but that the First Consul would want accomplices in his defeat tion, in order to lessen the impression in the eyes of the people and the horror, and to prevent its unfortunate consequences to his authority; that he would gird the hand, as he had said more than once to other governments, and led- Germany, Spain, Italy, and the Switzerland, Holland, and all the countries where his influence was felt Power already boundless and irresistible. The ambassador Austrian listed all the fatal consequences of a such a revolution, both for Religion and for the State. He did- knows how to highlight the immense difficulty, not to say the impossibility of repairing, in such matters, the losses already consumed (as history teaches) and experience), even in the supposition of some change, which at the time did not appear in all its forms points of view that are in a very distant place. It me conspired, for the very good of Religion and the di- towards States, to attempt everything that was decidedly not impossible for the ratification of a concordat without which The universal ruin was irreparable.

"These observations and prayers, all too true and all too based on the current position and the nature of the regulator of common destinies, did not make me for-so much as not deviating from a single line of my instructions nor from my homework. I felt its full force, I discovered its full force. the importance. Nevertheless, they had no other effect than to confirm me in the determination that was imposed upon me the Pope's own orders, namely: not to break the negotiations and not to reject the Concordat, because that I would not have obtained it as well as possible, but not to conclude it either, by going beyond the instructions that had been given to me, and which I have as mentioned above.

"It is always with this perspective in mind that I have continued," for about twenty-five days (I couldn't predict- (to refine further), the conferences with Abbot Bernier, being perpetually assisted by the prelate Spina and the theo- I worked in collaboration with them; they attended all the interviews, gave in common With me, every day, the answers to the proposals of Abbot Bernier, and together they determined the objections to present to him. This is not the place to say what efforts, What anxieties these conferences caused, what obstacles... Incredible keys were found there; what were the claims of the French government, in what ways? Traves was placed the one who acted for the Holy See; for This is not the main purpose of this writing, as I have said at the outset. There is one point, however, that I do not then pass over in silence. It's necessary to justify not so much the one who dealt with the Concordat in Paris (the matter is already made by the reformed concordat project in Rome before my mission, although it was rejected by the Government French, failing several concessions for others objects) that the Holy See itself, which believed itself in the inevitable necessity of adhering to it, after having exhausted all imaginable means and efforts to de- I will turn the French government away from this request. I want to talk about the matter of the resignation of the former bishops.

"The First Consul had declared from the outset that he it was essential to reduce by at least half the number of the former bishoprics in order to be able to endow the new, with regard to the usurpation of ecclesiastical property- that we had to consider irremediable, unless that no one should try to see it as an insurmountable obstacle to the restoration of Catholic worship in France. He had declared again in a stronger and more immutable manner that the new government had no confidence among the titular bishops, supporters of the old government nement, for which they had generally emigrated to the continuation of the expelled dynasty; that he had no intention whatsoever of following price that they occupy the new seats, apart from those who, having resigned, would then be named appointed to new seats by the Government area, to which they would be indebted. Before I had been sent from Rome, the Pope had made efforts unspeakable things to divert the Government from this claim, but the Holy Father encountered resistance invincible. The French Government formally declared- the fact that a concordat would never be made, and consequently that the Catholic religion would not be re-established in France, if the Pope did not get involved in one of the articles keys to the Concordat (as seen in the draft of the government), to have the former bishops given their resignation. In case of refusal, the Pope was obliged to declare their seats vacant and canonically institute on the new sees the bishops appointed by the new the government, in the name of its sovereign authority.

"When the Pope was convinced beyond any doubt that he restoration would only be achieved at the price of this article of the Catholic Religion in the Populous Provinces of France, he had yielded, albeit with the most extreme bitterness, due to the force of circumstances, and this in the opinion unanimous of the Sacred College. He considered the very great good or the very great evil that would result from the restoration the ment or the non-restoration of Religion in this country, not only for France itself, but for the states that it would bring into its party, during- that this decisive defection of the Catholic Church would take place lique. He also considered that, assuming that the an- These bishops refused to contribute to such a good. immense and prefer their own interests to those of Religion, that fact alone made them unworthy of being... for them, disastrous regard for Religion and the Church. Moreover, the history of the Church offered striking examples of this conduct in similar and even less frequent cases urgent.

"These considerations had therefore decided the Holy Father" to accept this article, even before I had left Rome. But I knew how cruelly that thorn tore his heart. I therefore did not let, in the course of the negotiations- ciations of Paris, to attempt all the labors of Hercules (allow me an allusion inspired by the name that I wear) to persuade the First Consul to renounce it. It was in vain that, in our private conversations, I tried to... I forced him to taste one of all the reasons that I could imagine for that purpose. In vain I represented to him- I felt that the ancient Bishops, before him, were recalling them. at the head of their Churches, would have every obligation to him gation, and that this bond, joined to that of the oath they They had to lend him money, they assured him of their loyalty. When I seeing that all these arguments were useless, — he replied- done by others who claim to be drawn from the nature of the heart human, and consequently of stupidity, as he expresses himself. First, there is reason to flatter oneself that they would change their hearts and would attach themselves in good faith to the new government — I tried out a pattern that seemed likely to embed it to wear. I relied on the maxims professed in France. I argued to him that the much-vaunted privileges and the those famous liberties of the Gallican Church were about to receive by this fact a blow which the histories of the country do not contain They certainly provided no example. Have it filed by the Pope, by an act of his supreme authority, four-twenty or one hundred French bishops all together, in case where they would refuse the demand for the resignation of vo- the legal proceedings imposed on them, to detain them without trial, without judgment, to replace them with new ones, if, I was saying, it's not unfair, because of the end we wants to achieve, it is certainly to attribute to the Pope on the Churches of France have an authority such that it is sufficient for to bring down the great colossus of its freedoms and privileges They were so highly praised. And it was true.

"I also pointed out that if the Holy-Siège had been driven by the desire to exercise this supreme authority in a country where she had encountered so many re- resistance, instead of opposing so vigorously, as At the request of the First Consul, I was playing the Pope at the- should have gladly seized this opportunity; but, I added, his just respect for Bishops, so deserving of the Religion, through their conduct during the Revolution, made him... know how to desire the opposite.

"Nothing shook the First Consul. All I could..." The outcome was that the Pope would formulate the Brief according to his wishes. by which he would ask the Bishops for their resignation volontaire. And certainly the Brief was subsequently written in the

the most honorable form, and the most unofficial, and the most affectionate as one could wish for them. But it was imIt is possible to arrive at a point where no mention was made in This brief outline of the necessity where the Pope would be, in the case of a refusal to override by virtue of his supreme authority, in order to achieve the good of the restoration of Religion in France. I had suggested it, so as not to offend them, in the request itself. The First Consul objected that, without this insinuation, none would give the resignation desired outcome, and that then the exercise of absolute power on a much larger number would become more violent and would make more noise.

"What a cost this Concordat has cost the Holy See!" I will only say one thing, which is that the price of all his sacrifices, the compensation for all his concessions, the counterweight to all his suffering was always the certaintystudy of the total extinction of the schism and the abandonment sincere of the constitutional clergy, that the Government French promised in the most solemn manner and the more authentic as the effect of the Concordat, if we parcame to write it.

"Through unspeakable fatigue, suffering, and angoisses of all kinds, finally the day arrived when it seemed that the desired end was reached, that is to say, the conclusionsion, as to the substance, of this same draft treaty amended in Rome, which the French government had repushed before my trip, and which had prompted the order to Mr. Cacault to leave Rome within five days.

"Abbot Bernier, who carried every evening to the First Consul shared the results of the conferences with us and informed us of his membership, when he managed to obtain it, after the pathe most persuasive roles and the greatest efforts, anNonca finally one day (it was July 13th) that the The First Consul accepted all the articles discussed, and that Therefore, we would subscribe to both the following day. similar copies of the Concordat. After its signing and that of the Pope, these copies were to remain in the hands from each of the two contracting parties. He asked me if I wanted to sign alone, then the brother of the First ConJoseph Bonaparte, whom he claimed to place on the same rank that I would sign on the side of the French Governmentçais; that if I wanted to associate with other people in Regarding the signature, I had to indicate how many and which ones. so that the Government can choose a name for it - equal and of the same quality. I replied that I could I will probably sign alone, since I arrived last

My position and my status gave me the right to intervene at any other previous agent; but that I wanted to acknowledge the credit goes to whoever worked on this major negotiation before me, and to cause no one any displeasure. I added that I would therefore have the prelate Spina and the Theologian Caselli. Father Bernier told me he was going to wear my reply to the First Consul, and that, in the morning next, he would come to tell me those that the general would have chosen to sign, which was to take place in the day. He warned me to prepare a copy of the Concordat already agreed to put the signatures there respecttives, like him, would, for his part, make a copy of it similar.

"The following morning, he told me that" The First Consul had appointed Councillor Crétet to to be the equal of the prelate Spina, and himself, Abbot Bernier, to respond to Father Caselli. He added that it did not seem decent to hold the ceremony of the. signing such a solemn and interesting document in a hotel like mine. (I lived, with the two other delegates, at the Hôtel de Rome.) Bernier proposed to me, and it was the First Consul's desire to lead me, with my two colleagues, at Joseph Bonaparte's house. I was there consented, setting aside any non-indiunthinkable. He said he would come and pick us up himself. shortly before four o'clock in the evening, in order to drive us at the agreed place, "• where," he assured, "we would finish with a quarter of an hour, having nothing else to give than six signatures, which, including the compliments, do not "They don't even require that much time." He showed us then the Monitor of the day, where the government had done announce to the public (note this circumstance) the The matter was concluded with these words:

“Cardinal Consalvi succeeded in the object that he…” brought to Paris.

Bernier added that the following day, July 14, where was then celebrating the biggest festival in France, "the PreThe First Consul wanted to proclaim, at a public dinner of three hundred covers and more, the happy news of the signing of this solemn treaty, which prevailed by manyblow to the Concordat of Francis I with Leo X, by the importance of restoring religion in France, after the unprecedented shipwreck of the Revolution which ve-born to burst.

"A little before four o'clock in the afternoon, Bernier"
He arrived, a roll of paper in his hand, a roll that he did not He elaborated, but said it was a copy of the Concordat to sign. We took ours, as agreed, and we went together to the house of Citizen Joseph (as they used to say then), brother of the first Consul.

"He received me with the utmost courtesy."
tesse.

"Although he had been ambassador to Rome, I had not I haven't had the opportunity to be introduced to him, being still only Prelate, in the few days I stayed in Paris, I did not I hadn't met him, despite paying him a courtesy visit.
as to the brother of the head of government, because he reshot quite often in the countryside. So it was the pre-the first time we saw each other. After the first com-With compliments, he invited us all to sit down at the table.
that had been prepared for this purpose, and* he also said himself,
as Father Bernier had done: "We will finish this quickly, having nothing else to do but sign, since It's all over already.

"Sitting around the table, we devoted a moment to The question of who would sign first. It seemed to Joseph Bonaparte that this honor was due to him as brother of the head of state. I pointed out to him, from the mathe gentlest touch and with the necessary firmness in this meeting, that my quality as Cardinal and representative The Pope's order did not allow me to take the second row

in the signatures to be affixed; that in the former government In France, as everywhere, the Cardinals enjoyed knew of an uncontested precedence, and that I do not I couldn't give in on one point, not looking, my no one, but the dignity with which I was clothed. I give back to Joseph, this justice, which after some difficulties, he did very graciously retired, and asked me to sign the pre-first. He was to sign the second, then the prelate Spina, the Councillor Crétet, Father Caselli, and finally Abbot Bernier.

"So we set to work, and I went to take the feather.

"How surprised I was when I saw Father Bernier!"

offer me the copy he had made from his roll as to make me sign it without examination, and by throwing it with my eyes, to ensure its accuracy, I noticed-were aware that this Concordat was not the one whose commissioners-respective managers had agreed between them, of which was agreed the first Consul himself, but a whole at-tre! The difference in the first lines made me examine everything else with the most scrupulous care, and I as-I was sure that this copy not only contained the projet that the Pope had refused to accept without his corrections tions, and whose refusal had been the cause of the order given to the French envoy to leave Rome, but, moreover, that he modified in several places, because certain things had been inserted there-certain points already rejected as inadmissible, before This project would have been sent to Rome.

"A process of this nature, undoubtedly incredible,"
but real, and which I do not presume to characterize,
— the thing, moreover, speaks for itself, — a sem-
The blatant procedure paralyzed my hand, ready to sign.
I expressed my surprise, and stated clearly that I did not

I could have accepted this sheet at no price. The brother of The First Consul seemed no less astonished to hear me to pronounce myself like that. He said he didn't know what to think about everything what he saw. He added that he had heard it from the mouth of First Consul that everything was settled, that there was no more than to sign. As I persisted in maintaining that the exem-"Plaire" contained something entirely different from the Concordat decree.
He could only reply that he had just arrived from the countryside, where he dealt with Austrian affairs with the Count of Cobent-zel; that being called precisely for the ceremony of the, signing the treaty, the substance of which he knew nothing about,
He was brand new, and believed he had only been chosen for legal purposes.
to be conventions accepted by both parties.

“I wouldn’t dare, today, to assert with I wasn't certain whether he was telling the truth or lying.
I would then recognize it more readily; but I have always been inclined, and I am still inclined to believe that he was ignorant entirely of these things, so far removed did it seem to me from all dissimulation in what he did during this internment A good session, and without ever contradicting himself. Like the other one Commissioner, State Councillor Crétet affirmed equally, and protested knowing nothing, and being unable to admit what I was saying about the diversity of the writing up to which I would have demonstrated to them through the confrontation of two copies; I couldn't help but turn around quickly towards Father Bernier.

"Although I have always sought, in the course of the negotiation, to avoid anything that would have tended to suspend the discussion and to give pretext for irritation and the
In a bad mood, I told him that no one was better than him.
could attest to the truth of my words: that I was very-surprised by the studied silence I saw him maintain on this point, and that I was expressly calling on him to tell us shared what he knew so well.

"It was then that, with a confused air and an embarrassed tone-Once he'd had enough, he stammered that he couldn't deny the truth of my words and the difference between the concordats that were proposed to to sign; but that the First Consul had so ordered, and had assured him that one is in control of changing so much that we haven't signed. Thus, Bernier continued, he demands these changes, because, all things considered, it is not not satisfied with the agreements reached.

"I won't go into detail about what I replied to a si strange discourse, and by what arguments I demonstrated How much this maxim, which can always be changed before Having signed was inapplicable to the current case. What I I noted it even more vividly; it was the mode, the sur-I used employees to succeed; but I resolutely protested that I would never accept such an act, expressly contrary to the Pope's wishes, according to my instructions and my powers. I therefore declared that if, on their side, they could not or would not subscribe to the one whose
It had been agreed, the meeting was going to be adjourned.

"The brother of the First Consul then spoke. He tried in the most urgent way to press on the consequences of breaking off negotiations, no less for Religion than for the State, and no less for France, this large part of Catholicism, that for all the countries where its omnipotence was felt influence. We must make, he repeated, every attempt imaginable ways to avoid surrendering to us, who are present, responsible for such cruel disasters. We must succeed in to understand each other and to get as close as possible;
It must be done, that very day, because the conclusion

The Concordat was announced in the newspapers, and that one
The signing must be proclaimed at the grand dinner the following day.

hand.

"It wasn't difficult," he continued, "to understand" what degree of indignation and fury (those are his words)
would become enraged by a character that yielded to no obstacle, like that of his brother, if it were to appear, in the eyes of the public, having inserted in its own newspapers a false news about such a serious matter.

"Joseph Bonaparte therefore implored me to attempt at least, on that same day, an accom-in any way. Seeing me an invincible repgnance to discuss the plan contained - in the copy of the government brought by Abbot Bernier (I had asked myself, in the answers I gave him successively,
as absolutely determined not to touch this plan already rejected by the Pope and definitively excluded from the outset virtue of negotiation), he had no difficulty in to discuss the plan already adopted by my exemto please. He believed that we should try to change him so that it might be hoped that the First Consul agreed to receive it. The weight of the reflections he had-born to do, and the great politeness of his tone and his mannerisms in what he objected to and replied to me, me did, in the opinion of the prelate Spina and the theologian Caselli, who were to sign with me for the Holy See, con-I finally felt ready to begin this work. I resigned myself to it.
less in the hope of succeeding, given my determination unchanging nation of not departing from a point of the the substance of this plan which was rejected after having been accepted, so as not to appear ungraceful and unreasonablenebulous, by rejecting an attempt at accommodation

on such a serious matter, an attempt that was proposed to me with exquisite urbanity.

"So we took hold of the plan of the copy that I had brought it, and we started the discussion towards the Five o'clock in the afternoon. To understand how much She was serious, how precise, how much debated... ceasingly on both sides, how laborious, comp-very painful, it will suffice to say that it lasted, without interruption no break, without any rest, for nineteen hours in a row, that is to say until noon the following day-before. We spent the whole night there, without sending back or neither the servants, nor the cars, as happens when We hope to finish this matter within hours, which is in train. So it was noon. We managed to agree on all articles, with one exception, according to the content of the plan amended in Rome, then accepted in Paris, with what-these non-substantive modifications, and finally rejected inopinned down by the first Consul in the manner that I have described. We had managed to reach an agreement again on all the articles according to the content of the old plan, by means of The new modifications are also non-substantial.

which the Holy See was not to be displeased to the point where things stood.

"But we couldn't agree in any way."
on an article whose amendments by the Government
The French were getting to the heart of the matter, or, to put it better, managed to formulate a maxim that the Holy See could well suffer in fact (as was
